Charlotte Elizabeth, in 1842, wrote, "We shall soon need to exercise judgment in the discerning of spirits. The sixth vial, under which there can be no doubt that we now live, is marked by the going forth of the three unclean devils, of whose miracle-working power we are forewarned." Principalities and powers, p. 297. And Charles Beecher, referring the present, vast "pneumatic or spiritual movement to the category of Rev. 16 : 14," says, "Claiming to be avant-couriers of millenial glory, yet denying, with few exceptions, 'that blessed hope and glorious appearing of our great God and Savior Jesus Christ, they incur the almost certain stigma of false Christs which should precede His coming." (Review of Spiritual Manifestations, p. 73.)

The Jew, whose creed everywhere is, "I believe with a perfect faith that the Messiah shall come," now hails with uplifted head the precursors of His coming. Rabbi Carrillon, of Jamaica Island, affirms that, "there is every reason to believe that the latter days are not far off; let us, therefore, be on the watch and in continual prayer." A European writer says, "Jews who never before thought of a Messiah, begin now to say, These are the days of travail which precede His coming." Mr. Bishop but exhibits the expectations of a vast majority of his nation in proclaiming everywhere the immediate appearing of the Lord. Joseph Wolffe—who with Mr. Bishop are converted Israelites—has preached the doctrine the world over.—Jewish Rabbis, both in England and America, maintain that if Messiah does not come at the end of 6000 years from creation, "The whole world will perish," for "in such case their whole law of types would fail, and the Word of God in their estimation prove untrue." Solomon Herschel, Rabbi of the chief synagogue of the Jews in London, says his people after a close investigation of the subject, think with him, that Messiah's Advent cannot be delayed beyond 1863. Mr. Bishop looks for Him previous to that time. Public journals in 1852, stated that there were then, ten thousand Jews in Jerusalem all anxiously expecting the Messiah. A striking coincidence indeed that the Jew looks for Messiah's first Advent, at the same time the Christian looks for His second.

The Political Statesman and Philosopher, is not blind to the great events now both passing and impending, though in many instances totally failing to apprehend their import.

Sir Robert Peel, in the British parliament in 1842, pronounced "the period which has elapsed since the French Revolution, one of the most memorable periods in the history of the world," and also said that "Every aspect of the present times viewed in the light of the past, warrants the belief that we are on the eve of a universal change."

Hon. R. I. Walker, of this country, styles the coming struggle "the last triumphant battle for the liberties of mankind," while the Hon. Bellamy Storer, of Cincinnati, who is a premillennialist, writes, that, "The hosts are gathering for the battle of the great day. The eastern and western Anti-christ are coming to their end, and none shall help them. What a scene upon the prophetic chart! Let us "he adds," "watch and pray lest we be weary in the good work." (Winthrop's Letters, p. 7.

Hon. William Thorp, of England, says, "The present concussions of the nations, the simultaneous shaking of the Ottoman and Papal empires, the reign and dominancy of infidelity, the extensive propagation of the Gospel beyond the limits of the western Roman empire, the state of feeling and excitement in the Jewish nation, the infidel indifference of the world, the death-like slumber of the Church, and the Midnight Cry that has recently been raised, and that is now ringing in the ears of an infidel world and a sleeping church; indicate that the 1260 years have nearly run out their course, and when ye see these things know that the kingdom of God is at hand. Of that day and that hour knoweth no man, but we may know with certainty by these things that it is fast approaching." (Literalist, Vol. 4. p. 92,)

Hon. Rufus Choate, in 1851, referring to the aspect of the times, said "what that aspect and state exactly is, how wholly unsettled, what shadows, clouds and darkness appear to rest upon it, you entirely appreciate. It has seemed to me as if the perogatives of crowns, and the rights of men, and the hoarded-up resentments and revenges of a thousand years, were about to unsheathe the sword for a conflict, in which blood shall flow, as in the apocalyptic vision, to the bridles of the horses, and in which a whole age of men shall pass away, in which the great bell of time shall sound out another hour, in which society itself shall be tried by fire and steel, whether it is of nature and nature's God or not."

Dr. Dick, the calm philosopher, on these national tumults, writes:—"What is to be the ultimate result, no one can tell. But we know that the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth, and that the present movements are so many links in the great chain of Providence, leading onward to the world's renovation, and to that period when the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh see it together—when wars shall cease to the ends of the earth, and when there shall be nothing to hurt or destroy among all the tribes and families of the earth." (Letter, Boston Atlas, 1852.)

Louis Kossuth, ex-Governor of Hungary, and by birth and connection a member of the Lutheran Protestant Church, in tones of alarm that would well nigh wake the dead, says:—"A terrible crisis, a great and bloody revolution in Europe is unavoidable." He bids us "not to shut willingly our eyes before the finger of God pointing to the 'Mene, Tekel, Upharsin,' written with gigantic letters upon Europe's sky." "Peace, (he cries,) is impossible. There is coming an earthquake of impending war, a hurricane, the scent of which is already perceived in the very air; the events of Europe are pointed out by the finger of God. The alarm bell has rung. War is inevitable; no man in the world has the power to stop its progress. The temporal power of the Pope is about to fall down forever. It will probably fall in the next revolution which is already in the air pointed out by the finger of God. I say this prophetically. I have already read it in the book of Providence, which is made to be a revelation to mankind.—The destiny of mankind has come to the turning point of centuries. There is a cry of alarm upon the ostensible approach of universal danger. The despotic governments of Europe feel their approaching death; the decisive struggle is near. It will be the last in mankind's history. A great crisis in human affairs is instinctively and universally felt to be approaching.—Every man knows it; every man feels, every man sees it. A philosopher was once questioned, how he could prove the existence of God. "Why, (he replied,) by opening my eyes, God is seen every where; in the growth of the grass, and in the movement of the stars; in the warbling of the lark, and in the thunders of heaven." Even so I prove that the decisive struggle in mankind's destiny draws near. I appeal to the sight of your eyes, I appeal to the pulsations of your hearts, and to the judgment of your minds. You know, you see, you feel, that the judgment is drawing near!"

The Post Millennialist, with divines of the highest respectability and authority, though erroneously we think, viewing the Lord's personal Advent as yet far in the distant future, sees the new era of millennial blessedness but just before us, its herald not to be mistaken.

Dr. Bogie in 1839 said, "Reflect what mighty changes occurred in Europe in less than thirty years; what rapid revolutions have taken place within the last six years; changes which no one ten years ago could have imagined he would have lived to see. The next generation will behold more wonderful things, and may see the commencement of the thousand years." (Bogie's Crisis, p. 309.)

Professor Robinson, of this country, in like manner has said that "Before another half century shall have rolled away, there will be seen revolutions in the oriental mind, and the oriental world, of which no one now has even a foreboding. The time is short; the crisis rushes on. Let us awake, and be prepared!" (Elliot's Horæ, vol. 4, p. 269.)

Joseph Steele, of Vermont, in an article on the grand consummation of giving the kingdoms of this world to Christ, truthfully asys, "What question can be of greater practical importance to the Church of Jesus Christ at a time when so many signs proclaim the day near at hand? Already the millenarian sees it at the door." (Biblia Sacra, 1849.

Dr. Arnold, late of England, observed that "modern history appears to be not only a step in advance of ancient history, but the last step; it appears to bear marks of the fullness of time; as if there would be no future history beyond it. • • But without any presumptuous confidence, if there be any signs, however uncertain, that we are living in the latest period of the world's history, that no other races remain behind to perform what we have neglected, or to restore what we have ruined, then indeed the interest of modern history does become intense."

"My sense of the evils of the times that are coming and of the prospects to which I am bringing up my poor children is overwhelming; times are coming in which the devil will fight his best, and that in good earnest." (Modern History, p. 38.)

Professor George Bush says, "we have now actually arrived at the very borders of the period which is to be signalized by the winding up of the grand despotic drama that has for some ages been enacted in trans-atlantic Christendom." (Bush on Mill. p. 88.) Of the new era he says, "We cannot be far from the confines of that grand dispensation." (Hierophant, p. 27.) He has also said, "If we take the ground of right reason, we must believe that the present age is one expressly foretold in prophecy, and that it is just opening upon the crowning consummation of all prophetic declarations."

Dr. George Cheever writes, "It is impossible to look upon a more sublime spectacle than that which rises to the mind of a spiritual observer at the present crisis. A voice like the archangel's trumpet is crying, 'Cast up, cast up the highway; gather out the stones; lift up a standard to the people' Event rolls on after event. As the purposes of God are advancing nearer to their completion, ten-thousand signifiicant events sweep onward in the train. The convergency of all things to the point, becomes more and more rapid. Meaning begins to appear in events before shrouded in mystery. An Omnipotent plan, it is manifest, is in operation, and the trains laid with divine wisdom are fast completing." (Dr. Grant's Nestorians, p. 360.

Dr. Grant in 1841 said, "If this be not the dawn of this millennial Sabbath, it is at least "the preparation before the Sabbath," if we are to believe that the period of the seventh millenary is to be the Sabbath of the world, we should not forget that the Jewish Sabbath from which the analogy is drawn, had its preparation on the afternoon of the previous day, in which all the remaining labor of the week was finished, and that the season of sacred rest began with the setting sun. Upon this hypothesis we must conclude that the work of the world's conversion will be fully accomplished before the end of the present thousand years, now so nearly expired. Hence it is time for the preparation of the millennial Sabbath to begin— • • • Without presuming to define the precise time when this eventful period will close, we are constrained to believe that it is now so near that many, perhaps very many now on the stage will share a part in the closing scenes." (Nestorians, p. 357.

Dr. Nathan Bangs says, "The signs of the times, which now appear in the political and religious horizon, seem to indicate the near approach of that day, when the kingdom of the Lord Jesus shall extend from the rivers even unto the ends of the earth, and he shall reign God over all blessed forever." Presenting the signs he again says, "Let us ask ourselves, whether we have not abundant reason for believing, that God is about to take to himself his great power and reign universal King in the earth:" then defining his millennial views he adds, "I believe the commencement of this happy period is nigh even at the doors." (Adv. and Jour. 1849.)

Archdeacon Browne, of England, in 1835 said, "that the present vast missionary agency and judgment cry had its symbol in the flying angel of Revelation 14: 6, and that he was strongly impressed with the conviction that our lot had fallen under the solemn period emphatically designated in Daniel as 'the time of the end.'"

(Investigator, vol. 5, p. 41.) Thomas Williams in his "Cottage Bible, holds that "the seventh angel announces the millennium," and regards it as proximate. Dr. Spring, of New York, in his published lectures affirms that preparations are now making for the glorious millennial era, which he holds will be introduced by terrible judgments on the world. George S. Faber, also the late Dr. Cox, of England, with a host of other divines, fix the commencement of the millennial epoch in 1864–1866. Dr. Lyman Beecher everywhere affirms, "that the sixth vial is now being poured out, and near its conclusion; that the millennial day is near, even at the doors, that the Lord is soon to come; all men are in expectation of the coming of the Son of man."

Dr. Edward Beecher writes, "The point of prophetic chronology at which the world has now arrived, is the interval between the sounding of the sixth and seventh trumpets." Dr. Baird said in Rochester, 1852, that "No well-informed man can look upon the world as it is without coming to the conclusion that some great consummation is about to take place," while Henry Morris in 1842 asked, "Who does not see, that the knowledge of the Lord has begun to be spread over the whole earth, the spirit to be poured out, and that all things are ready for the great consummating moral change of this world, which is to follow, the sounding of the seventh trumpet?" (Modern Chiliasm Refuted, p. 55.)

Daniel Eddy, of Lowell, in 1848 said, "Time has grown old, six thousand years encircle its weary brow; and with inconceivable rapidity it rushes on to its eternal sepulchre. The great events connected with the winding up of all things are near. The earth wrapped in flame—the heavens bleached and pale with terror fleeting away—the great white throne—the book of remembrance—the saints everlasting rest— the sinner's fiery pillow, are but a step before us!" (Lectures, p. 78.—President Hitchcock, of Amherst, in his work on the new earth, declares that, "In a very short time, far shorter than we imagine, all the scenes of futurity will be to us a thrilling reality!"

Mrs. H. B. Stowe exclaims, "O church of Christ, read the signs of the times! Is not this power the spirit of Him whose kingdom is yet to come, and whose will to be done on earth as it is in heaven?—But who may abide the day of His appearing? • • Christians, every time that you pray that the kingdom of Christ may come, can you forget that prophecy associates, in dread fellowship, the day of vengeance with the year of His Redeemed?" (Uncle Tom's Cabin, Vol. 2. p. 322.)

Dr. Duff, of Scotland, has recently said, "Surely the present crisis is constraining us to arise, and that with our whole heart. Surely it looks as if in response to the sighing of the whole creation groaning in uneasiness and pain through long by-gone ages, for the times of the restitution of all things—surely in answer to the plaintive cry of the myriad martyrs from under the altar, who age after age have been uttering their longing cry, 'How long, O Lord, how long?' He who is seated on the throne on high is now indicating by no ordinary signs that He is to arise and assume His great power, and to manifest himself as really King and Governor among the nations. Surely in the language of one of old, the great Messiah is about to come forth from His royal chamber—about to put on the invisible robes of His imperial majesty, and to take up the unlimited sceptre which His Father had bequeathed to Him. Even now, in the ear of faith, and almost in the ear of sense, we may hear the distant noise of the chariot-wheels of the mighty Savior King, coming forth conquering and to conquer, amid the shaking of the nations from pole to pole.—Every nation has of late been upheaving from its ancient settled foundations; and there will be mightier upheavings still, and that right speedily—all preparing the way for the new heavens and the new earth, in which righteousness will forever dwell."

Dr. Choules, of New Bedford, cries exultingly, "The set time to favor Zion has arrived; the angel having the everlasting gospel to preach to all the nations, is on his flight, and his wing shall never tire. • • • It advances! and we see Messiah's kingdom coming on the earth; the nations are awaking through all the valley of death; ere long the living army shall spring up in countless multitudes, and the anthem shall break forth, rising to the heavens; as with the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, resounding Hallelujah! Hallelujah. The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdom of our Lord, and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever!" (Hist. of Missions, vol. 2, p. 592)

Such are the testimonies of those who believe we have arrived at the very crisis of this world's affairs, and that the grand millennial age is but a hand's breadth of time in the future.

For The Crisis.

Letter from Br. E. Burnham.

NEWBURYPORT, Sept. 14th, 1855.

Br. Merriam:—I write to say for your comfort and encouragement that the last No. of the Crisis is very much admired, and seems to be the "model paper" of what is wanted among us. We want something simple, plain, open, devotional, practical, free, dignified, true, and reasonable. Something giving "meat in due season." Such the last Crisis certainly is. Indeed, from the first, I have ever admired the sweet spirit of your paper. The only thing which I have seen to object to, or have heard objected to by others, is, in some of the numbers a disposition manifested by some of the writers to say too much on small controverted points. I do not mean small in an absolute sense, but in a comparative sense Such as the particulars of the parable in the 25th ch. of Matt. &c. But I doubt not you will remedy this point in due time.

I love to sit down and read a paper that makes me feel that the Lord is at hand! That stirs me up to believe God is true.—That makes earth look small, and the Kingdom look great. That regards man as comparatively nothing, and Christ the Alpha and Omega. O I love a paper that honors God, and does not seek the applause of men. And such a paper I doubt not you will strive to furnish us with.

Do not, my dear Br, let your mind become oppressed and discouraged by the contrary elements you may meet in the discharge of your duties. God will be with you to bless and keep you, and you may be assured also that you have our warmest sympathies in all that grieves you, and our joyful congratulations in all your prosperity

Permit me, while addressing you this hasty note, in this connection, to intreat my Brn. all abroad to stir themselves up to secure as many subscribers as possible for your paper, and be sure in all cases to adhere to the positive rule you have adopted to send in the money subscribed in advance.

Come, dear Brn., let us have one paper continued until the Master comes, free from debt! Let us have one anti-sectarian, independent paper that shall posses its own means of financial life! Let us all put to the work—prepare good wholesome articles for its columns—cheer up the heart of its Editor—make him feel that we love him, not with flattering words, but in deed and truth—and thus strive to help, edify, strengthen and save one another, and glorify our God.

Let me beseech you, my Br., in all cases keep to the rule you have adopted, "advance pay or no paper." That is the only way to keep out of debt. And the good book commands, "owe no man anything!" EDWIN BURNHAM.

For The Crisis.

Letter from Br. C. S. Barnes.

HILLSBOROUGH, Hillsborough Co., N. H. Sept. 8th, 1855.

Br. Merriam:—I consider the Crisis of great price to me on my journey through this wicked world. I think it is as much needed now as ever; and indeed, I do not know how I could be contented without it.

I am glad to see a few yet left who love as brethren; for by this we may know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren. 'He that loveth not his brother, abideth in death.—(1st John, ch. 3d, v. 1.) "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God," &c.

It is over two years since I have been able to labor much, and I never expect to labor much more; but oh! how blessed it will be to be like our Lord, immortal; and never be subject to sickness, pain, or death.

"Fly swifter round, ye wheels of time,
And bring the welcome day."

It is with joy we hail the Crisis again, and the good news that comes with it from our Brn. and Srs. I can say with Sr. Mussey, I do bless the good Lord for this medium through which we can communicate to each other our thoughts, our feel ings, and our views; and tell of our trials, and perils, and dangers; and comfort one another with these words; that Jesus is coming to raise the dead, and give us rest; and to exhort one another, and so much the more as we see the day approaching.

There are a few of us left here yet, who meet in a schoolhouse on Sundays, for the purpose of singing and praying, and trying to comfort and encourage each other, until He who is the believer's life shall appear. We praise the Lord for the hope we have that we shall then be made immortal, and appear with Him in glory; and that we shall stand ready to exclaim, 'Lo! this is our God; we have waited for Him, and He will save us." O, let us be glad and rejoice in the prospect of His salvation.

It is very seldom that we have any advent preaching in this vicinity, and we should be very glad to have any of our preaching Brn. who may be traveling this way, and can, conveniently, give us a call, and stay over the Sabbath, and as much longer as may be thought for the good of the cause.

Yours, in hope of soon seeing Jesus,

CYRUS S. BARNES.

C. S. BARNES.

The World's Crisis.

LOWELL, SEPT. 29, 1855.

The Cheshire Campmeeting.

The Campmeeting at Cheshire commenced on Monday, 10th inst., and continued one week. Brn. in the ministry present—J. Hemmenway, H. Pratt, M. Batchelor, C. Goodrich, Z. Campbell, H. Mc. Culluck, H. Pease, Z. Mayhew, S. Brazee, E. Tefft, H. Thayer, I. Blanchard.

The exercises commenced with a prayer meeting on Monday P. M.

Ev. Sermon by Br. H. Pratt, from John 18: 38. "Pilate saith unto him, what is truth?"

The design of his discourse was to show what is truth. The audience listened with profound attention.

Tuesday A. M. Br. Goodrich preached from Ps. 15: 1. "Lord who shall abide in thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in thy holy hill?"

He endeavored to portray the character of such as would stand in the day of Christ's appearing.

P. M. Br. Pease preached from 1 Pet. 3: 15. "But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts; and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear."

Ev. Br. Pratt preached from 1 Thess. 5: 21. "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good."

The Spirit of God rested upon the congregation.

Wednesday A. M. Sermon by Br. Mc. Culluck, from 1 Thess. 5: 3. "For when they shall say, Peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a woman with child; and they shall not escape."

P. M. Sermon by Br. Campbell from Is. 42: 2. "He shall not cry, nor lift up, nor cause his voice to be heard in the street."

Ev. Sermon by Br. Pratt. He continued the inquiry, "what is truth?" Shewed from the Scriptures that all men would either have eternal life, or be destroyed.

Thursday A. M. Sermon by Br. Batchelor from Hosea 6: 3. "Then shall we know, if we follow on to know the Lord: his going forth is prepared as the morning; and he shall come unto us as the rain, as the latter and former rain unto the earth."

Subject—the plan of redemption.

P. M. Sermon by Br. Hemmenway. Subject—the sect of the Nazarenes. His remarks were highly appropriate, and, we trust, good was done in the name of the holy Child Jesus.

Ev. Sermon by Br. Batchelor on the state of the dead. He showed that God's word was truth in relation to the death of Adam and his posterity; but that the Devil was a liar from the beginning.

Friday, A. M. Sermon by Br. Tefft, from Rev. 7: 1–3. "And after these things I saw four angels standing on the four corners of the earth, holding the four winds of the earth, that the wind should not blow on the earth, nor on the sea, nor on any tree. And I saw another angel ascending from the east, having the seal of the living God: and he cried with a loud voice to the four angels, to whom it was given to hurt the earth and the sea, Saying, Hurt not the earth, neither the sea, nor the trees, till we have sealed the servants of our God in their foreheads."

P. M. Sermon by Br. Batchelor. He endeavored to prove from Scripture that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, and not God himself.

Ev. Sermon by Br. Hemmenway from Rev. 17: 16, 17. "And the ten horns which thou sawest upon the beast, these shall hate the whore, and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh and burn her with fire. For God hath put in their hearts to fulfil his will, and to agree, and give their kingdom unto the beast, until the words of God shall be fulfilled." Subject, the Catholic power.

He explained some of the symbols of Rev., such as the seven stars, seven golden candlesticks, &c., showing that the scenic representations of this book were not to be taken in a literal but figurative sense; and that whenever symbols occur in the Scriptures, they must be explained by comparing Scripture with Scripture.—When a series of prophetic events are presented in Scripture to occur in chronological order, we may, by ascertaining what portion of them has been fulfilled, find our position, and what is to transpire before the end.

He then proceeded to examine the symbols presented in the chapter from which his text was taken, and particularly the beast that is referred to in the 11th v.—"And the beast that was, and is not, even he is the eighth, and is of the seven, and goeth into perdition." This he understood to be atheistical France. He spoke of the decree of the Holy Alliance that none of the Bonaparte family should reign on the throne of France, and the remarkable fact that the present Emperor of France had arisen from comparative obscurity to a position of power and glory that excited the wonder of the world. People may expect Napoleon to be overthrown, but when that catastrophe comes, it will be caused by the appearing of the King of glory.

Saturday, A. M. Sermon by Br. Goodrich from 1st John, 3: 3. "And every man that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself even as he is pure." An excellent text, and I was informed a good sermon, but I was unable to attend.

P. M. Sermon by Br. Hemmenway from 1st Tim. 4: 10. "For therefore we both labor and suffer reproach, because we trust in the living God, who is the Savior of all men, especially of those that believe."

This discourse was highly interesting and instructive in respect to the doctrines of the Bible, showing how Christ was the Savior of all men by redeeming them from the penalty of the Adamic law—how He saves believers from sin, and will bring to them eternal salvation at His second appearing by giving them immortality in the Kingdom of God. The view of the subject which he presented was striking from the fact that it entirely sweeps away the position occupied by the advocates of universal salvation in its highest sense, and that it beautifully illustrates the principle of the atonement, and the manner in which infants can be saved.

Ev. Sermon by Br. Pratt from Matt. 24: 3. "What shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?"

1. He noticed and met objections that are frequently offered to prove that we cannot know the time of our Lord's coming, and shewed from the testimony of Scripture that the coming of Christ was the next great event in the prophetic chain.

2. He endeavored to show that Matt. 24th referred not only to the destruction of Jerusalem, but also to the Second Advent of our Lord.

3. That the events marked in Matt. 24th are all in the past with the exception of those immediately connected with Christ's personal appearing in the clouds of heaven.

4. That John's testimony in relation to the seven seals was in harmony with Matt. 24th.

5. That the Parable of the ten virgins (Matt. 25,) was fulfilled by the movements of the Church in 1844 and 1854. He closed with an earnest appeal to the sinner to make preparation for the coming judgment. Congregation large and attentive.

On Sunday morn we designed to have a love-feast, but in consequence of a heavy rain were obliged to repair to the tents. About the time appointed, however, for public exercises the storm subsided, and Br. Pratt preached from Dan. 12: 1. "And at that time shall Michael stand up, the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people; and there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time: and at that time thy people shall be delivered every one that shall be found written in the book."

He first inquired who Michael was, demonstrating from the Scriptures that it was the Son of God who was to rule over Israel, or stand up for the children of Daniel's people. He remarked that although we had made mistakes in endeavoring to ascertain when Michael would commence His reign, yet every effort had given us additional light.

In referring to the connection of the 70 weeks with the 2300 days, he made some very pertinent and striking remarks. As if addressing the Prophet, "Daniel," said he, "how did you know that was Gabriel who appeared to you in the vision of the 9th ch.? Why, I heard his name called aloud, and he touched me and set me upright." If the 2300 commenced, as he believed in B. C. 445, they would end in the spring of 1856.

He traced down cursorily the delineations of the 11th of Daniel and showed the clear development of the prophecy in the history of the world. Alluding to the "raiser of taxes," (v. 20,) and the "vile person," (v. 21,) he inquired, "why is God so particular here? Ah (said he,) it is because He is coming to an important point in the history of the world," viz. the first Advent of our Savior who was put to death under the Roman administration.

The king who should do according to his will, (v. 36,) he observed could not be either the Mohammedan or Catholic power, for both of those powers were to be partially broken prior to the end, but this king was to prosper till the indignation be accomplished. He brought very convincing arguments to shew that it referred of infidel France.

P. M. Sermon by Br. Hemmenway from Gal. 4: 22–31. He threw out many interesting and instructive thoughts in relation to the two Covenants shewing the superior excellence of the New Covenant over the old; the former granting but a small section of the earth for an inheritance, and the latter granting the entire globe; the former granting blessings of a temporal nature, the latter blessings of an immortal nature. He remarked that the spiritual Jews, or heirs by faith, would possess the whole earth, and the son of the bond woman should not be heir with the son of the free woman; there could be no place therefore found for the literal Jew to step his foot upon the new earth.

The last evening we spent together was one of deep and thrilling interest; it was, as one Br. remarked, like the house of God and the gate of heaven. We talked much on our own experience and the dealings of God's hand with us; and more especially in relation to the circumstances under which we embraced the Advent faith. Two members of the Baptist Church were present, and were deeply interested; one of them took an active part and seemed to be much blessed.—There were present three colored Sisters from the state of New York, one of whom was baptized on Sunday morning. In the evening her daughter made some appropriate remarks expressing her great joy at the conversion of a Mother for whose salvation she had so fervently prayed. She had formerly been a member of a Presbyterian Church, but while identified with them she could not feel the freedom to call them Brn. and Srs. She afterward united with a Methodist Church, but still could not call them Brn. and Srs., but now said she, I can say Brn. and Srs., and added, "I cannot compare it to any thing but a slave just stepping on to the soi of freedom."

We continued our meetings till a late hour, and it was difficult to break asunder from each others society, and take the parting hand, perhaps to see each others' faces no more until the Trump shall summon the elect to the mount of God. O may we all so live that no man take our crown—that no opposing influence shall bar us out from the presence of God in sweet and hallowed communion day by day—that our faith may be confirmed unto the end, and we obtain the blissful inheritance among the saints in light. O that heavenly land of rest from all our toil, blooming with Eden's bowers! radiant with eternal glory! vocal with the melodies chanted by immortal tongues!!—May we all be there.

The place of encampment was highly interesting for its romantic scenery and lofty elevation.

As I stood gazing at this towering eminence from a distance, I could but be reminded of the Mount of Sinai to which the children of Israel came, and from which they received the law. The clouds resting on the summits of the highlands reminded one of the cloud in which Sinai was enveloped.

But the lightnings were not playing around these mountains in terrific flashes, nor did the thunders cause the mount to quake; the fiery vengeance of the law was not there found, but the peace of God rested on the encampment—the soothing tones of the Gospel trumpet were heard in melting strains, and we hope the love of God and the tender solicitations of a Savior's grace which were there presented to the impenitent sinner, will be long remembered, and the seed sown take root in a good soil and bring forth some thirty, some sixty and some an hundred fold.—O that the public mind might be disabused in relation to the great, sublime, soul-stirring themes that cheer the heart of the Advent believer on his pilgrimage to glory. How blessed, bright, attractive the landscape in prospective! O there is no end to these contemplations. May the community in that section be aroused to an investigation of the word, understand the Scriptures, and be nurtured up in good doctrine and strengthened unto eternal life.

The meeting was characterized throughout by orderly and peaceable conduct on the part of the congregation notwithstanding many were of the Catholic persuasion. The people of the place had not enjoyed the privilege of listening to the advocacy of the Advent faith prior to the Campmeeting and therefore their minds were in a more favorable condition to hear with candor the preaching of the word, inasmuch as they had not rejected the light and hardened their hearts against it. The discorses delivered on the occasion were therefore listened to with deep and profound attention, and although there were very few individuals who had been interested in the subject, it is to be hoped the instruction received will be productive of good results. May the Spirit of good that pervaded the meeting still rest down upon that place, many souls be enlightened in the knowledge of divine truth and impenitent sinners be converted to the living God and wait for the consolation of Israel.

P. S. Being absent from most of the meetings, and also suffering from indisposition while present, the above report may possibly not be correct in every particular.

Light from the Law of Moses. Mal. 4: 4.

By Br. J. Lyle.

Dear Brethren:—I wish to speak to the scattered children of the way we have come thus far—it is a way of trial—but it leads to the celestial city.

There are several passages that seem to clearly set forth the Advent message which broke upon the world in thunder tones about a dozen years ago.

I will only refer to three places at present; Jer. 15: 21; Hab. 2: 1–4; Rev. 10 ch. Doubtless these inspired penmen represented the last development of the Church in her mortal state. Here is presented "the joy and rejoicing" of the friends of the heavenly Bridegroom, as they go forth to meet Him. Habakkuk intimates the disappointment of the virgins, and shows them the duty of standing upon the watch-tower until further orders are given from above, and the Revelator describes the prostrate church ceasing from her affliction of disappointed hopes, and doing again the very work that had brought her into such sadness.—"Thou must prophesy again" is the divine order to all who stand on the watch-tower waiting on the Lord to see, "what He shall say."

The book of Daniel contains a prophecy of the rise and fall of kingdoms until the coming of Jesus to reign on the earth. Prophetic time is connected with the vision, but it was sealed or "shut up" till the "Time of the end."

That the time of the end began about 1780, I believe. Can any one disprove it by fair scriptural and historical evidence?

Who can look back on the past 75 years, and read of the supernatural darkening of the sun and moon, having witnessed perhaps with his own eyes the falling stars, and deny that these are the very signs the Savior spoke of as indicating His speedy return to earth? And when we see the moral signs, answering the divine predictions of the last days, can we doubt that we are on the verge of the judgment? Then when we consider the mighty movement which has shaken all Christendom in relation to the contents of this very book of Daniel, are we not compelled to know that it is now unsealed? Every sign which was to occur within the time of the end has appeared, and the very next in order is the sign of the Savior coming with power and great glory.

The 10 ch. of Rev. brings the Advent movement of the time of the end to view; here the little book which had long been sealed, is opened, the subject of which it treats is the closing up of this world's probation. The message is prophetic time, it is good news to the friends of Jesus, yea, sweeter than the honey comb. But the vision tarries, this produces bitterness; the disappointed Church is brought low and becomes an object of ridicule to her enemies. But the prostrate Church is aroused once more by the divine command, "Thou must prophesy again." Yes, she must go through a second edition of the movement. Has anything like this taken place? Yea, verily. It has been repeated thus far to the very letter. Let us compare the movement of the past two years with that of 1843–4. Mr. Miller and his fellow watchmen held forth the word of prophetic time, thousands were moved by it, and the fruits of God's Holy Spirit attended their labors. The Lord was expected before that year ('43) would end; but when it closed the whole of the Jewish year was claimed, which extended to the spring of 1844. A few I believe had fixed their minds upon certain points during this period, (such as the pentecost) but all passed by, and the general conviction was that the prophetic numbers had run out and they expected the Lord daily. The argument they presented in favor of their position was, that the round numbers of Daniel had ended, but the definite point, the day, was contained in some of the types: thus they held on through the summer searching for light from the sure word; at last the "Tenth day of the seventh month" message went forth as on the wings of the wind. The whole Church united and came up to the point in Oct. of 1844 with one heart, as though their salvation depended upon it. It went by, the Bridegroom tarried; thus ended the first movement, and for years time was lost sight of. "They all slumbered and slept" on the subject of prophetic time.

Now let us look at the second movement. Two or three years ago, some of the watchmen saw light on the 1260 years; then it was proved that the 2300 days corresponded with the 1260, 1290 and 1335 years of Dan. It was proclaimed that, according to the evidence that Scripture and history afforded, the Lord would come in 1854, as those numbers could not be seen to extend beyond that year. The mistakes of the first arrangement were clearly shown; it was also shown that we had been in the tarrying time, and Scripture had made provision for one disappointment, and taught that the solemn message must be repeated.—All the arguments were shown to rest on a more solid foundation than the first, and to confirm our position we had the state of the nations before us, answering the Scripture testimony in every particular. Jesus was expected in 1854. It went by—then the Spring of '55 was claimed because the darkening of the sun allowed this extension. During all this time some have fixed their eyes upon certain points, (Passover, &c.,) but the Spring has passed, Summer has passed, and what is our position? We cannot avoid the conclusion that the round numbers of Daniel's prophecy are in the past, and if the definite day is ever known, it must be found in the types of the law of Moses. Will the Church come up to a point this fall in the same manner she did in '44? I think, as far as faith is concerned, she will; but alas, the number will be like the Israelites coming out of Egypt—but few will imitate Caleb and Joshua in going up to possess the goodly land.

Ques. But what type can the Church now have to unite upon as she did in '44?

Ans. The same as she did then, viz., The 10th day of the 7th month, or Feast of Tabernacles. It is the only unfulfilled type that has a bearing on the coming of Christ, and every argument that was based upon it eleven years ago, stands good for it this present Autumn.

But in order to receive the light of God's word on this subject, it is necessary for us to sit down with the Bible in hand, and patiently and prayerfully examine the three great type feasts of the law of Moses, viz., the Passover, Pentecost, and feast of Tabernacles. I think every candid searcher after truth will see that the first two of these feasts have been strictly fulfilled in every particular, yea, to the very day shadowed forth in the type, and that the other feast must have its anti-type in the revelation of Jesus to judge the world. If so, the fall must be the season, just as certain as the former types were fulfilled to the very letter. I beg of every reader of the Crisis to examine the references here presented in connection with these three great feasts.

1. The Divine command to observe them. Ex. 23: 14; 34: 23; Lev. 23: 4; Deut. 16: 16, 17.

2. Passover references, Typical.

Ex. 23: 15; 34: 18, 25; Lev. 23: 10–15; Deut. 16: 1–9.

Anti-typical. Matt. 26: Mark 14: Luke 23; 24: 1.

3. Pentecost, or Feast of weeks references, Typical.

Ex. 23: 16; (first clause,) 34: 22; Lev. 23: 15–22; Deut. 16: 10; 26: 1–12.

Anti-typical. Matt. 27: 53; Ps. 68: 18; Eph. 4: 8; —see margin, (Ps. 133: Acts 2: this was the early rain which Jesus sent when He ascended—"He gave gifts to men,") Rev. 14: 1–5. These are the multitudes of captives whom Jesus released and led with Him on high.

4. Tenth day of the seventh month—or Feast of Tabernacles. Typical references: Lev. 23: 23–44. Deut. 16: 13–16; 31: 10–12. 2 Chron. 8: 12, 13.—Ezra 3: 1–7.

Antitypical: Matt. 13: 36–44—(this is the final ingathering.) Heb. 9th and 10th chapters: mark the 28th v. of the 9th ch.

Perhaps it will be needless for me to present an argument to prove that the second Advent of our Savior will fulfil this type to the very day of the season of the year in which it occurs—space in this paper would forbid it—but I will remark that the same arguments presented in 1844 by such able minds as Br. A. Hale (see his letter to N. Whitney on this type) stand good as ever, and better than ever, for they apply to this fall with tenfold more harmony in regard to events which have since occurred.

I remark in conclusion that the Church were not disappointed in the full sense of the word until the fall of '44 passed away. Then commenced the tarrying time of Matt. 25. Nor can we truly say that we are disappointed to the degree that was experienced in the first part of this movement until we go over all the ground which certainly reaches a few weeks in the future. Will we be disappointed at the coming aniversary which is in the latter part of October next? O ye children of well tried faith, keep on the track, beware of seducers, you have the truth—sell it not. Look around you, see the indications of earth's dissolution everywhere—every event of the 6th seal is behind us but the rolling together of the heavens as a scroll!

The kings of the earth are being gathered to Armageddon—"Blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments."

Oh may the prayer of Jesus prevail in our behalf in this hour of temptation.—"Holy Father, keep through thine own name those whom thou hast given me, that they may be one as we are."

For The Crisis.

☞ Br. Merriam:—I want to call the attention of the Brn. and Srs. to the case of Br. J. W. Brittan, who has been sick with the Rheumatic fever for several weeks past, in Vt., and has just been able to return to his home at Westboro.

He is not able to go out to preach, nor in fact to do anything for the support of himself or family as yet.

I thought if the Brn. and Srs. knew of his distress, they would feel it a duty to administer to his wants.

Br. Brittan is too well known among Adventists to need any remarks on his Christian character. It is hoped that all who feel as though they could help him will do so. They may direct their favors to Eld. J. W. Brittan, Westboro, Mass.

In behalf of our afflicted Br.,

SALEM, Sept. 23, 1855.

☞ I hope those who have a competence of this world's goods will administer to the necessities of our beloved Br. and his interesting family, according to their several ability.

Different Sentiments.

It is well known that there are conflicting views at present existing among those who have been believers in the '54 time. Some articles appear in this paper from which individuals may dissent; but let patience have her perfect work. If the Lord should come within a few weeks or months, it will not harm us to be exhorted to prepare for that event; if there should be a longer delay, those who now believe the round numbers of Daniel's years are ended, and that the Midnight Cry has been given, will of course relinquish the idea. Let us strive and pray that the union of the Spirit may be preserved in the bonds of peace.

TENT MEETING.

☞ There will be a Tent Meeting held in Lanesville, Ct., to commence Friday, Oct. 12. Particulars next week.

The Seven Hills.

"But I will sing above all monuments,
Seven Roman hills, the world's seven wonderments.
* * * These seven hills which be now
Tombs of her greatness, which did threat the skies."

SPENCER.

Modern Rome can scarcely be said to rest upon the sevenhilled base of the ancient city; scarcely two-thirds of the space within the present walls are now inhabited, and the most thickly peopled district is comprised within what was anciently the open plain of Campus Martius.

On the other hand, the most populous part of the ancient Rome is now but a landscape; it would almost seem, indeed, as if the city had slipped off its seven hills into the plain beneath. A remarkable change too has taken place in the surface of the site itself; in the valleys the ground has been raised not less than fourteen or fifteen feet; this is strikingly observable in the For.m, where there has been a great rise above the ancient level, owing partly to the accumulation of soil and rubbish brought down by the rains, but chiefly, as there is reason to believe, to that occasioned by the demolition of ancient buildings, and the practice which prevailed of erecting new structures upon the prostrate ruins. The portico of the Pantheon, in the Campus Martius, was formerly ascended by seven steps, only two of which now remain above the surface; this is a trifling elevation when compared with the increase in the Forum and other parts of the ancient city, but it is remarkable as being almost entirely the gradual work of time and nature, unaided by the hostile attacks of the barbarians, or the domestic violence of the Romans themselves.

Dr. Burton recommends the traveller who wishes to survey the seven hills at one view, to ascend to the top of the Palazz Senatorio (or Palace of the Senator,) in the Capitol. "He will here command a prospect which surpasses in interest anything that the world can furnish.

The natural features of the country are themselves beautiful, and if nothing was known of the history of Rome, the ruins would still rivet his attention."

The Seven Hills are distinctly discernible, but their boundaries are not so marked now as they were formerly, owing to the accumulations of soil before mentioned in the valleys. From this spot the spectator will observe at once, that Rome does not now occupy exactly the same ground which it did formally; it has, in fact, travelled northward, and the Campus Martius, which, in the time of Augustus, was an open space, contains the most populous part of the modern city.

Of the Seven Hills, the Capitoline, the Verminal, and the Quirinal, are still partially occupied with modern buildings; the Equaline, the Coelian, and the Aventine are for the most part covered with gardens. Indeed the latter two seem rather to belong to a country deserted by its inhabitants than to form parts of the area enclosed within the walls of a city. The Aventine never was much built upon. Virgil has imparted to it a poetic interest, by placing in it the den of Cacus, a sort of human monster, who used to steal the cattle of the neighborhood, and whom it was one of the labors of Hercules to discover and punish. The cave, says a modern writer, "we are gravely informed, is still extant on the steep side of the Aventine, that overhangs the Tiber; and some of our active friends scrambled about in search of it among the thorns and brushwood that fringe its perpendicular bank, at the imminent peril of breaking their necks, and to the actual demolition of their clothes; but though they found holes in abundance, they never met with any that could contain a single ox, or that by any stretch of courtesy could be dignified with the name of cave, so that the abode of Cacus, as far as I know, remains undiscovered to this day."

The desolation of the Palatine is one of the most remarkable features of Rome.

"This mount" says Mr. Forsyth, which originally contained all the Romans, and was afterwards insufficient to accommodate one tyrant, is inhabited only by a few friars. I have gone over the whole hill, and not seen six human beings on a surface which was once crowded with the assembled orders of Rome and Italy.—Raphael's villa, the Farnesian summer house, Michael Angelo's aviaries, are all falling into the same desolation as the imperial palace, which fringes the mount with its broken arches."

☞ Br. Merriam:—Br. Charles Goodrich, on his way home from the Cheshire Camp Meeting, had the misfortune to lose his horse. As he is in indigent circumstances, having nothing to depend upon, if he labors in the vineyard, but the generosity of the Church, and many of his appointments lying off the route of public conveyance, if any of God's stewards feel it a duty and privilege to help him after a godly sort, they are informed that his P. Watch.

BY WILLIAM SHEPHERD.

Wake, ye sleepers, and behold!
Lo, the consummation's near;
See! the heavens now unfold
Signs—that Christ will soon appear.

Mark! In regions of the East
Glares the sword in battle dread,
Hastens fast the awful feast,
When the birds of air are fed.

List! the booming cannon's roar,
'Mid the lightning's vivid flash—
Lurid smoke-clouds upward soar—
Shells are hurled with deadly crash!

See! the slain lie far and wide,
Weltering in their purple gore;
Hosts are falling side by side,
While the cry is still for more!

On the plains of Megiddo,
When the angry nations meet,
Christ shall come and overthrow,
Trampling them beneath His feet.

Heavens then shall quick depart,
Rolled together like a scroll,
Noted in prophetic chart,
While ten thousand thunders roll.

Up, then, up! ye drowsy ones!
Faithful on the watch tower stand,
Panoply of God put on,
Jesus' coming is at hand.

ELIZABETH CITY, N. J., Sept. 1855.

THE QUEEN'S VISIT. The great event of the season is over, the Queen's visit, which has kept all Paris on the "tip-toe" of excitement and expectation, is at last ended; and yesterday at mid-day, her Majesty made her exit from the French capital with a brilliancy and display that far exceeded that of her entrance. Again was the route which she was to follow through Paris to the railway station hung with flags and lined on either side by solid columns of French bayonets; again was the whole military force at the command of the Emperor in Paris, and all the dignitaries of the land, marshalled forth to honor her departure; and the magnificent state carriages drawn by six and eight horses, and preceded and followed by mounted bands of music, and companies of mounted guards with drawn swords, made a sight so brilliant and magnificent, that it would be difficult to excel it even in this country, where the wealth and resources of a great nation are at the command of one man.

But among the fetes given in her honor, the grand ball given her by the City of Paris at the Hotel-de-Ville last Thursday night, stands out in bold relief, and it must be long before she can lose the remembrance of that magnificent fete. The entertainments at the Hotel-de-Ville have lately become proverbial for their splendor, but the ball given to her Majesty of England far exceeds in beauty and magnificence all that was ever before witnessed there.

The exterior of the Hotel-de-Ville, which in itself is a fine palace, presented a scene of the most striking character; the whole facade was hung with flags of different courts, whilst below the windows were displayed shields of crimson velvet having the cipher of the Queen and that of the Emperor interlaced; from the summit of the centre tower floated in the breeze the broad standards of England and France; whilst below, in front of Henry IV's statue was erected a wide tent with blue draperies to receive the royal guests; the whole front was brilliantly lighted by jets of gas which threw forth a radiance bright as day, and eight gigantic pyramidal stands, placed two by two, presented a brilliant mass of colored lamps harmoniously blended; whilst opposite, at the extremity of the wide space in front of the building, were placed an equal number similarly disposed But all this was nothing to the untold brilliancy and splendor that struck the eye of the beholder at every turn inside; the splendid suits of rooms at the Hotel-de Ville are said to be the finest in Europe; but on this occasion, all that gold and labor could do to turn them into an earthly paradise had been done; and wander where you would, you saw at every step some new wonder; and rich furniture and hangings of velvet and gold, and statutes, and fountains playing amidst masses of flowers that half concealed them, and filled the rooms with their sweet perfume, met the eye at every turn; the whole lighted by innumerable chandeliers of great beauty, and reflected by numberless mirrors. GUNPOWDER. The Rochester Union closes its account of the explosion of the powder mills of Messrs. Crombie and Harlow, near that city, previously announced by the telegraph, as follows:—

"The buildings destroyed were four in number, viz., two cylinder mills, corning house and press. They were situated a few rods apart, and heavy embankments of earth raised between them. There were probably four or five hundred kegs of powder in the building at the time of the explosion. These mills have exploded four times in the last eighteen months, and the new mill had only been in operation six weeks. The proprieters had procured the most approved machinery for safety, and employed none but the most experienced men, having hired some at the east, who had worked at powder making for 30 years. Yet with all these precautions their property has been swept away as by a single breath.

We understand the proprietors expected to close their mills in a few days, they being unable to procure saltpetre, not a sack of which article can be procured in the eastern cities.—The demand for Russia has caused it to advance in price one hundred and fifty per cent. in the last sixty days, and Russian agents in New York and Boston bought by sample all that will arrive this year from Calcutta.

It is said that there is but one powder making firm in the United States that has stock to run more than sixty days longer. They must close then, or sooner, and await the result of the eastern war, or bid against the Czar of all the Russias for that indispensable ingredient for powder, saltpetre.

Latest from Norfolk and Portsmouth. Baltimore, Sept. 23. The steamer from Norfolk brings us intelligence to noon on Saturday. The weather had been exceedingly unfavorable, and nothing can be more appalling than the present prospect of affairs.

Mr Ferguson, the President of the Howard Association, died on Saturday morning, and his death adds greatly to the despondency of the people. The physicians say that the disease has lost none of its malignity.

At Norfolk on Thursday there were forty interments, and on Friday twenty eight, while thirty orders for coffins had been left with undertakers up to ten o'clock on Saturday.

At Portsmouth, on Thursday there were twenty-two deaths, on Friday twenty-five, and on Saturday about thirty.

Acting Mayor Holliday was taken to the Hospital yesterday. It is estimated that there are now about 2,200 persons in Portsmouth, of whom 2000 are either convalescent or still sick

Acclimated physicians and nurses are much needed, but the athorities hope no more will come from the North who have not had the fever, otherwise they will only furnish fresh victims.

Yellow Fever at the South. New Orleans, Sept. 21 The yellow fever is making terrible havoc at Natchez, Vicksburg and Waterproof In the latter place nearly all the inhabitants are sick.

22d. The deaths by the fever at the Hospital for the past week were only forty-four, which is a gratifying reduction as compared with the previous six or eight weeks We have alarming reports of the ravages of the fever in the towns on the river. The accounts from Memphis to-day represent the fever as raging there with much violence, and the citizens were leaving in great numbers.

EUROPEAN NEWS.

EXTRACTS FROM ENGLISH PAPERS RECEIVED BY THE BALTIC.

The Danish Sound Dues. The following is the precise text of the Danish note addressed to the American Minister at Copenhagen, in reply to a communication in which notice is given of the intended cancelling of the treaty which existed between the United States and Denmark:

"Conformably to the wish which you expressed to me on the 14th of August, I have the honor of announcing to you that I received on the same day the communication containing the notice that the President of the United States had announced the termination of the treaty of amity, commerce and navigation which was first concluded on the 26th of April, 1826, between Denmark and the United States, for a space of ten years, and for 12 months after its being so notified I sincerely share in your regret at seeing a treaty expire which has so long benefitted the inhabitants of the United States as well as the subjects of His Majesty; but I am charged to observe to you, that my government cannot admit the connexion which is established by the government of the United States between the suppression of the Sound dues and the treaty in question, which in reality regulates the rate at which the Sound dues are to be levied on American vessels, but of which the existence of the right on which that charge is founded is quite independent. As the government of the United States has assumed the initiative in the termination of the treaty, the government of the King my august master hopes that overtures will be made to it for concluding a new treaty, calculated to maintain the commercial relations which have hitherto so happily existed between the two nations, and to prevent the consequences, as disastrous as inevitable, of the definitive extinction of this treaty, a consequence which would cause the vessels of the United States in passing the Sound and the Belt to be treated as vessels of non-favored nations.

Accept, &c., 'SCHEELE.'"

Jerusalem. A letter from Jerusalem, of the 18th ult, in the Moniteur, says: "The civil discords which for several years have constantly desolated Palestine, lately assumed such a serious character as to call for the employment of force Certain powerful sheiks of the cantons of Napolese and Hebron broke out in open revolt, and committed deplorable excesses Fortunately, however, there was no ensemble in their movements. The mountaineers of Napolese were promptly pacified, and Kamil Pache was able to concentrate all his efforts against the sheik Abdurrahman-Amer, who kept Hebron, as it were, besieged. On leaving Hebron, Kiamil Pacha was to pass along the plains between Ghazza and Kamleh where considerable outrages have been committed and some blood shed. He will, it is said, reach Jerusalem in about a fortnight"

Miscellaneous. A society is being formed, under the name of Society of the Immaculate Conception of the Virgin, which, under the name and cloak of religion, has for its object to overthrow the existing institutions, and to establish such as will respect the rights of the church. The association will be extended into all Catholic countries

Cholera is prevalent in many parts of Italy. So violent is the disease, especially at Cataneu, in Sicily, that there is a regular panic. Every one is escaping into the open country or woods, and trade is completely stagnant

Progress of the Siege A very heavy bombardment commenced on the 18th, and continued until the morning of the 20th of August, particularly by the English batteries, and was designed rather to act as a diversion in favor of the French working parties, than anything else. And this it proved to be, eminently; the French succeeding in doing in the course of a few hours what it would have cost successive days to have done under other circumstances, if indeed they could ever have done it. Their foremost parallel, which had begun at the two ends, could not be completed, owing to its near proximity to the Malakoff As soon as a gabion was put up, a storm of projectiles was hurled against it and the working parties. This difficulty has now been surmounted, and the extremities are connected; and they have enlarged the trench so as to contain more men.

Constant and great activity was displayed in the work of preparation. Great numbers of mortars, particularly, were going forward into the batteries, French and English, and the impression prevailed in camp that in future bombardments these effective instruments of destruction were to be used much more freely than ever, it being found that a vertical fire is much more effective on such earthworks as the Russians have raised, than a horizontal fire. A number of old guns, also, had been sunk in the earth to be used for sending shells in all directions; and it was understood that all the old guns about the lines were thus to be used, and that even such as had been buried as useless were to be dug up and put to this use. Among other arms to be employed, two solid 68 pounders had recently been dragged to their positions by the sailors of the naval brigade, and one of them had been made to bear directly on the bridge across the creek, and on the mole head where the Russians land their provisions from the north side of the harbor. A trial of this gun on the bridge had proved perfectly successful, cutting the bridge in two and killing a number of soldiers who were crossing at the time.

The Allies continued to receive deserters in considerable numbers, particularly Poles. In the 5th Division, which had recently arrived in the Crimea, it is said that two-thirds of the men and officers are Poles, and an intimation has been received from an anonymous writer in Polish, whose letter was brought in by a Tartar, that the great mass of them would desert to the allies if there was a Polish Legion organized in the allied army.

Accounts from Algiers to the 30th of August indicate that the warlike preparations against Sebastopol are not confined to the land. The mail steamer from France arrived at Algiers on the 24th with two gunboats in tow, bound for Sebastopol. On the 26th a steam frigate arrived from Toulon, with one of the floating batteries, of which we have heard so much, in tow; and on the 29th both left for Sebastopol. On the 29th another steam-frigate arrived, towing another floating battery. Three of these terrible floating batteries are before this in the waters of the Crimea. "The Devastation," armed with 24 guns of the heaviest calabre; the "Tonnante" and the "Lave," each mounting 16 guns. These are propelled by steamers of light draught, and are supposed to be destined to enter the harbor of Sebastopol and co-operate with the batteries in the grand attack on the forts and fleet. Or it may be that they are to operate in the Danube.

On the great preparations of the last ten weeks the hopes of the besiegers are fixed, and the fire that will open when the time comes will be unexampled in the history of warfare.

The Struggles of Papacy.

When, at the close of the last year, Pope Pius Ninth, in the presence of the dignitaries of the Catholic Church, whom he had summoned to attend him at Rome, and with more than the usual pomp and circumstance which that church employs in its great ceremonials, promulgated the "glorious dogma" of the Immaculate Conception of the Virgin, the friends of Catholicism ostentatiously proclaimed that the church had gained new strength, that all dissensions were healed, that the progress of heretical opinion within the pale of the church had been checked, and that a career of greatness and glory was before her such as she had not seen since the days of Loyola

But these expectations, whether well or ill-founded, have not yet begun to be realized. The adjustment of the old quarrel which had for centuries divided the Dominican and Franciscan orders, and upon which former popes had carefully avoided pronouncing any decision, seems to have been a desperate stroke of policy on the part of the present head of the Catholic Church Alarmed at the indifference and laxity of discipline which prevailed in some quarters of his religious dominions, and the insubordination which had begun to manifest itself in others, the Holy Father hoped, by the declaration of this new dogma to infuse new life and vigor into the Church, and to bring back the recreant to a sense of duty. But so far from this end being accomplished, the Church of Rome was never probably in a more pitiable condition than at present. Hitherto she has been successful in resisting the attacks which have been made upon her doctrine and her dominion, and has evinced great recuperative power. But she has protected and strengthened herself by the unscrupulous use of spiritual and carnal resources, of which she cannot now avail herself. The inhuman and bloody acts by which she has attempted to put down heresy from the time of the Albigensian Crusade, she dare not repeat in the present age, the machinery of Jesuitism has lost its efficacy, the bulls and allocutions of the Pope have ceased to command respect, and even excommunication itself no longer bears dismay and terror in its train.

In Spain, hitherto regarded as the stronghold of Papacy, the country of Loyola the founder of the Jesuits, and Dominic the founder of the Inquisition, the only country of Europe where the influence of the great Reformation did not penetrate; the country whose conquests have added so greatly to the dominion and power of Catholicism in the new world—in Spain the allocutions of the Pope have recently been disregarded and despised, and the Pope was only saved from being burnt in effigy by the populace, by the laggard intervention of the civil authority. The Spanish Cortes seems to have undertaken in earnest the work of reforming the abuses of the church in that country. For years immense quantities of valuable lands have been held by monasteries and various ecclesiastical corporations, and the revenues of these lands have gone to enrich the immediate proprietors and support them in luxury, while the working priests have been subsisting on scanty incomes. These lands have now been "disamortized," by a law similar to the old English Statutes of Mortmain, which forbid the conveying of land to ecclesiastical bodies. They have also been sold by the government, who have undertaken to support the clergy by pensions. Some restraint has been imposed by the government on the ordination of priests, the authorities declaring that while they concede to the church the power of ordination they cannot consent to the making of such numbers "idle, useless, and miserable clergymen" These proceedings of the government have, of course, aroused a most strenuous opposition on the part of the Pope He has remonstrated most earnestly through his Nuncio, M Franchi, and he has issued his allocutions containing the most direful denunciations, but all to no purpose. Even in Spain his prestige is gone

In Piedmont there has long been a quarrel between the Pope and the government It originated shortly after the revolution of 1848 The liberal constitution, which was adopted about that time, was decidedly in conflict with the supremacy which had been maintained by the church, and the legislative authority proceeded to enact laws to carry out the provisions of the constitution, and consequently to restrain the papal authority and influence within the kingdom. The ecclesiastical censorship was abolished, and the press was made free, a movement which the Pope exerted himself strenuously to resist, and which the church has always resisted, because the free discussion of her doctrines and the questioning of her prerogatives which resulted from the removal of restrictions upon the press, is a more serious blow to her interests than any other influence than can be brought to bear against her. But this was but the first step on the part of the Piedmontese government towards diminishing the power of Rome An act was soon afterwards passed abolishing the ecclesiastical courts, in which the Church had for a long period claimed to exercise exclusive jurisdiction of all matters whatever in which ecclesiastical personages were concerned Another act was passed to relieve the Universities from Papal influence, by depriving the Priests of the supervision and control they had exercised over the theological teaching in those institutions; and in addition to this law it was subsequently enacted that no one should take holy orders who was not a graduate of one of these Universities. The Jesuits were expelled from the kingdom, the religious Association of St Paul was suppressed, the revenue of the bishops and clergy of the island of Sardinia were regulated, and the suppression of the monasteries and convents completed the work of the reformer. To check the progress of liberal sentiments, which in their advancing career are sweeping away all the old abuses by which the Church has maintained her supremacy and increased her power, the Pope has directed all his exertions. But his allocutions have as little efficacy in Piedmont as in Spain, and his threats of excommunication are regarded as mere impotent ravings.

In his distress the Pope has called upon Austria to aid him. But Austria refuses to interfere in the quarrel; and it is rumored that she has not yet signed the Concordat recently entered into with Rome, because she has serious thoughts of suppressing the monasteries and confiscating the church property within her own borders. But even if she is influenced by no such considerations in refusing to take the part of Rome, her present relations to the German powers forbid her to adopt such a course. The policy of the Austrian government now seems to be to Germanize the Empire, by opening up communication between the German States and the most remote points of its territory, by establishing German schools and universities, and by the introduction of the German language and German habits and customs. But it will be difficult for Austria to carry out this policy if she sides with the ultra Catholic party. That party is by no means popular in Germany; and indeed the Catholic Church itself has now, but an insecure footing in the German States

The Pope, then, is in truly a pitiable condition. His best beloved daughters, the Goneril and Regan of his affections, have rebelled against him, and, like King Lear, he stands alone, "a poor, weak, infirm, despised old man." In Rome itself his power is upheld by foreign arms, and he is in a state of continual apprehension lest some popular outbreak should compel him once more to become a refugee. The policy of the ultra Catholic party has failed to infuse new vigor into the Church and to establish a more rigid discipline; but with the progress of liberal ideas of government and the increase of popular intelligence and independence of thought and action, the power and influence of Papacy seems to be passing away.

In this country the Catholics have been seriously alarmed at the Know Nothing movement; and at one time the Catholic leaders used all their influence to prevent the emigration of Catholics to this country. It is to be regretted that they did not continue their efforts in that direction; but recently we believe the apprehensions in regard to the safety of the church, which were excited by the Know Nothings, have been quieted, and Catholic emigration is no longer seriously discouraged, though the "Tablet," the organ of the Irish Catholics at Dublin, still trembles at the name of Know Nothing. But the Catholic religion has already gained a foothold here. It is the Catholic religion in its mildest form, to be sure. The Church of Rome never has dared to assert, still less to exercise, the most dangerous of its prerogatives in this country But even in its mildest form, we regard Catholicism as a great evil, and as detrimental to the best interests of our country. The spirit of Catholicism is inimical to free institutions, to the general spread of intelligence, and to the advancement of the great body of the people. Catholic countries, it is true, have been renowned in arms and arts and literature, but popular liberty has never prevailed in Catholic countries, and the great mass of the people of those countries have been kept in ignorance and allowed no voice in public affairs When the popular sentiment is aroused and the popular voice is heard, we find that Catholicism, as in Piedmont and Spain, is stripped of its worst features. Therefore it is that the Church of Rome detests a free government. Under such a government she knows she cannot maintain herself without adopting a most conciliating, and to her a most humiliating course. But she plants her standard even on the uncongenial soil of a Republic, and she is ever watchful for opportunities to strengthen her position and advance her interests It becomes a Protestant people to exercise a like vigilance, and to see to it that the dangerous influence of Papacy is checked, if not subdued, in our free land.—[Boston Traveller.

The Danish Sound Dues. The Paris correspondent of the New York Tribune writes a length in relation to the present position of England and France in regard to the abrogation of the Danish Sound dues, and the effect of the notification by the American government of the termination of the treaty under which the tax is levied. A special Danish Commissioner had been in Paris some three weeks, endeavoring to arrange a treaty of alliance with France and England, by which Denmark should be protected in her unjust imposition upon the commerce of the world, the consideration being that she shall take an active part in the present war. What progress has been made in the negotiations the correspondent cannot state, but the following extract from his letter probably embodies what of information or conjecture there may be in the unofficial circles of Paris:

"The Danish government is determined not to submit to our demand, for to yield to the United States would be to give up the principle on which it bases its claim, and all nations would at once enjoy the same right. Denmark is deeply involved in debt to Russia, and France is holding out to her the idea that if she will join the alliance, the success of the allies will be proportionaly insured, and at the close of the war such a settlement will be made as will release Denmark from her ties to Russia. Without the Sound dues Denmark would soon be so completely insolvent that her independent existence as a nation would be in imminent peril. Do not these facts very clearly point out the probable termination of the negotiations which are now going on in the Cabinet of the French Minister of Foreign Affairs?

Russia, knowing that the sympathies of the United States are with her in the present contest, and anxious to embroil so powerful a nation in a quarrel with her enemies, will not only be willing but will rejoice to see her dependency (for such Denmark is) separate herself from her and join the Allies. Russia will then expect, by losing the neutrality of a small State, to gain the active co-operation of a powerful one; and to accomplish this the Russian Cabinet will bring to bear the whole force of its consummate diplomacy.

Neither France nor England desires a war with the United States, either on their own account or that of others, and if the Emperor of France (who now controls the government of both France and England) believed seriously that the United States would go to war against Denmark, as an ally of France and England, he would be the last man to enter into such an alliance. But it so happens that the Emperor of France believes—and I have the best evidence for making the assertion—that the United States is too weak in her President and Cabinet, too weak in her slavery dimensions, to boldly face the menaces which an alliance of this kind would offer her. He is instructed to believe by his faithful M. Sartiges at Washington, that in the face of a positive stand on the part of Denmark, which is in a very good position to defend vigorously the passage of her Sound and Belt, backed by the governments of both France and England, the unwarlike, conservative and timid Mr Marcy would yield upon some technicality which would be accepted as an equivalent for the point yielded.

The Emperor believes further (and I will be excused for saying that during a four years' residence in France I never yet met any Frenchmen, however intelligent, who could comprehend the institutions or the people of the United States), that the moment any serious calamity happens to the country, such as threatened war against the powerful nations of Western Europe, that that moment will be seized upon by the South to declare her independence of the policy and the dictation of the North, and that she will take immediate steps for secession and a dissolution of the Union. He does not believe that this event will occur, but he believes the fear of it will operate so forcibly upon the nerves of the feeble Government which is now in power at Washington that Denmark will obtain all she demands without arriving at such an extremity, and France and England will come off principal gainers by the operation, in the aid which they will get from Denmark against Russia. The war once concluded, and the services of Denmark no longer required, it is quite probable that the Emperor of France might be among the first to declare the Sound Dues unjust and their payment by France a burden which she could not tolerate.

It is the decided sentiment of every American I have met that the United States should neither yield the position she has taken, agree to a Congress of Nations, nor take the initiative in the renewal of the treaty between the two countries. It is her right, par excellence, aside from any question which may exist between her and Denmark, to take the initiative in any steps for the abolition of the barbarous restraints to which the commerce of the world is subjected by ancient customs and prejudices; and on such an occasion as this she ought to assert her rights.—[Boston Journal.

On every side the vast material for warfare bears witness to the gigantic struggle going on in the Crimea; it is hard to realize that one is yet so far from the scene of strife, and not within hearing of the cannon. Malta is the grand Mediterranean depot for coal and provisions; a sort of half way station where all must stop; hence war ships are incessantly steaming in and out; transports of every nation are lying in the harbor, and Zouaves and Redcoats chat in amicable groups on the various quays An American clipper loaded with horses has just been towed out by a steam frigate; by the way, a French officer on board indignantly assured me it was needless to tow the Yankee, for once inadvertently unfurling her sails, she ran into her convoy and seriously damaged her. Most of the time, the number of the French troops in port is double or treble that of the garrison, and I have heard more than one resident express his anxiety lest Louis Napoleon should avail himself of the opportunity to prove treacherous to his allies, and wrest from them this important stronghold. He has long viewed with jealous eye the English preponderance in the Mediterranean, and his past career shows him equal to anything for his own advancement. But a few minutes ago a line of battle ship entered the harbor crowded with wounded soldiers. She passed so close, we could see the poor fellows lying and limping about the decks, with bandaged heads and limbs. The berths below probably held mere living torsos, too mutilated to bear much semblance to the human form divine. As if in mockery of this sad scene, a magnificent man-of-war, densely packed with troops destined for the Crimea, steamed out immediately after, decked in gala flags and streamers, with a fine band playing martial airs. Every moment these conscripts gaily shouted huzzas, which were replied to by the English soldiers on the ramparts.

The War in Asia. Intelligence from Asia Minor is reported to be more favorable to the Turks. According to a Turkish bulletin, the Russians advanced on the 4th of August against the entrenchments of Kars, and attacked a battery. An artillery fight ensued, which lasted two hours, and the Russians retired, leaving 100 dead. Allowing for exaggeration, it would seem that no general attack had been attempted.

Erzeroum is said to be completely relieved.

At Keipe Keni, a village on the road to Kars, a skirmish of Cavalry took place. Afterwards the Russians broke up from before Erzeroum and retired on Kars, across the Soghanli Range of Hills.

Letters say that Omar Pacha will not go to Kars, but will move on to Tiflis, with the twofold object of menacing the communication of the Russians with Georgia, and cutting off their retreat—and also of presenting an opportunity to the Carcassian and other mountain Tribes to join him.

Christain Soldier.

I'm called to be a soldier,
My Captain leads the way;
He wins in every battle,
And never lost the day;
The foe is fierce and mighty,
And spreads his terrors wide;
But our advancing army
Bears on him like a tide.
Chorus——Fight for the kingdom,
Fight for the kingdom,
Fight for the kingdom,
We're sure to win the day.

Our Captain is Messiah,
Great David's greater Son!
We're fighting our last battle——
Soon fighting will be done.
Our foe is the old Dragon,
Whose mouth cast out a flood
Against the man-child Jesus,
And martyrs of our God.
Fight for, &c.

The Kingdom is the Savior's,
By God's blest will conveyed;
The olden kingdoms have become Decrepit and decayed.
Their Ruler knows his time is short,
He trembles for his doom,
When all his host of every clime,
Shall rush into the tomb!
Fight for, &c.

In vision, lo, the word of God
Leads forth an army strong,
On horses, rushing forth to war
With a victorious song;
No foe can face this valliant host,
Their victory is decreed;
The beast no more, on Eden's shore,
Shall crush the woman's seed.
Fight for, &c.

Our fighting once all over,
We'll lay our armor down;
Then march into the city,
And each receive a crown.
Then blessings from our Captain,
And greetings from each friend.
We'll shout our conflicts over——
Then tears will have an end.
Fight for, &c.

The World's Crisis.

By William Shepherd.

Thrones, principalities and powers,
Not based upon eternal truth,
Shall in a few, short, fleeting hours,
Fall like a thing of little worth;
And in the greatness of His might,
The Lord shall then maintain His right.

Kings, princes, dukes and prelates, all,
With wicked rulers of this world,
Shall, as a fragile vessel, fall—
And tyrants from their thrones be hurled;
When wrong at last shall cease to be,
And right her glorious triumph see.

Great Babylon of ancient fame,
With towering temples, grand and fair,
Shall soon have neither place or name—
And fearful is her doom to bear;
'Mid thunders of the Judgment Day,
She'll sink—a wreck—and pass away!

Now mark! The conflict dread is nigh,
The awful Armageddon day;
The armies of the earth and sky—
Behold! they meet in dread array!
Death, Satan, and his host, now fall,
Lo! Jesus triumphs over all!

Then soldier, haste thee to the fray,
And gird thy heavenly armor on;
Let no vain fears thy heart dismay,
Through faith in God we overcome;
The Cross of Jesus all who bear,
Shall soon a crown of victory, wear.

For The Crisis.

Letter from Br. Abraham Flavell.

Newark, N. J., Sept. 12, 1855.

Dear Br. Merriam:—After passing through a severe trial of faith—arraigned up to the Judgment as I was on prophetic time, with a blooming hope of immortality, and my hands stretched out to grasp the mighty prize—to have such high-toned feelings brought down by disappointment to a calm and patient resignation to the divine will, is a work which no power can accomplish but His who said to the troubled waves, "Be still!"

But we have an Almighty Friend whose promises meet all the trying circumstances to which humanity is subject.

We must not consider the trials into which we have been brought by the providence of God, as though some strange thing had happened unto us; it has been the experience of the Church throughout her history, and especially so, in connection with any great change through which she was about to pass.

It seems to be a part of the divine plan that God should bring His people through such a state of moral training as will enable them to trust in Him under all circumstances; in the valley or on the mountain, in sickness or health, in poverty or riches. As the eagle, when the time comes to teach her young ones to fly, tears their nest to pieces and spreads forth her wings beneath her fluttering family, so God deals with His Church. He takes every human prop from beneath their feet, and leaves them either to rest on the Divine promise, or fall.

The great danger when brought into such trying circumstances, is, the want of faith in God's providence in the past, and also a failure to rely on His guidance in the trying hour.

In whatever light we view the past movement, it bears the marks of its heavenly origin. The Virgins went forth with their Bibles in hand, devouring the contents of the "little book," their message spread far and wide, until all Christendom trembled before the solemn proclamation of the Judgment. The power of God attended the message in a very remarkable manner. The Spirit was given just in proportion as men and women believed it; its enemies were composed of all classes and grades of the wicked, from the lowest state of human depravity to the proud Pharisee standing on his dignity, pretending to have the keys of knowledge. We might trace the divinity of the message in the judgments which have fallen on its opposers, and the numerous signs that accompanied its proclamation.

But we pass on to notice the failure of the first message; the last point looked to was the fall of 1844. The Bridegroom tarried and the virgins experienced a bitter disappointment, the enemies of the truth had a complete triumph, the pulpit and the press preached the funeral sermon of Millerism, and the virgins themselves could hardly believe it possible for the message to have a resurrection.

But the time arrives when the Church has to "prophesy again," and the solemn message is brought to life. The cry is made and all the virgins arise and trim their lamps. Some trim for light to overthrow the message, and others for light to sustain it: but all are engaged in another close investigation of the Bible. But the time on which the cry was based runs out and does not bring the event expected.

This constitutes, in my opinion, the last trial of God's people; and it is now, as it was in the former message; where the trial of His people commenced, the trial of their opposers ended.

The question now is, do those periods on which the cry was based carry us to the end, or coming of Christ? I have always believed so, but I am now forced to change my views. If the periods carry us to the revelation of Christ, how could any say "our lamps are gone out" before that event comes?

Some perhaps will say we do not understand the periods. I am bold to say if we do not understand them, that they never will be understood. If the 70 weeks is a key to the 2300 days, they must unavoidably end in the spring or summer; and I am well convinced that they all ended this last spring or summer. But is the definite point of time marked in the Bible for the Savior to come? I think it is, as the law contained a shadow of good things to come, and our Lord says: "till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law till all be fulfilled."

The law contained three great feasts in the year, when all their males were commanded to appear before the Lord; Ex. 23: 16, 17. Ex. 34: 22, 23. Deut. 16: 16.

Two of these feasts have been fulfilled in a most remarkable manner. Our Lord was slain on the very day and hour that the lamb in the type was killed, and He rose from the dead on the "day after the sabbath," the very day the first ripe sheaf was waved. Lev. 23: 11. The types contained in the law for the passover have been strictly fulfilled.

The next is the feast of Penticost: between those two feasts was the reaping time. At the end of seven weeks they were to bring an offering of the best of all their fruits and present them to the priest, this was called the feast of general first fruits; and I have thought for many years that this was a type of the general resurrection, and it is only since the passing of the time that I have seen the light on this passage.

The first ripe fruit of the barley harvest was fulfilled in the resurrection of Christ—there was nothing visionary about the fulfilment, it was substantial fruit both in the type and the antitype.

But was the first of all the fruits to be fulfilled in like manner? namely, in a literal resurrection, and an offering of them to the high priest? Has this had a fulfilment? I believe it has. In Matt. 27: 52, 53, we have an account of "many bodies of the saints which slept, arose and came out of their graves after his resurrection and appeared unto many." Rom. 8: 29, 30. "For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the first born among many brethren.—Moreover whom he did predestinate, them he also called: and whom he called, them he also justified: and whom he justified, them he also glorified."

In this passage Christ is "the first born among many brethren;" this agrees with Matt. "many bodies of the saints," &c., and also with Heb. 12: 22–24. "But ye are come—to the general assembly and church of the first born," &c. Thus Christ is the first born among many brethren. Eph. 4: 8–11. "Wherefore he saith, When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. (Now that he ascended, what is it but that he also descended first into the lower parts of the earth? He that descended is the same also that ascended up far above all heavens, that he might fill all things.) And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers;"

This reads in the margin, "he led a multitude of captives." See also Rev. 14: 1–5.

"And I looked, and, lo, a Lamb stood on the mount Sion, and with him an hundred forty and four thousand, having his Father's name written in their foreheads. And I heard a voice from heaven, as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of a great thunder: and I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps: And they sung as it were a new song before the throne, and before the four beasts, and the elders; and no man could learn that song, but the hundred and forty and four thousand, which were redeemed from the earth. These are they which were not defiled with women; for they are virgins. These are they which follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth. These were redeemed from among men, being the first fruits unto God and to the Lamb. And in their mouth was found no guile: for they are without fault before the throne of God."

Mark the 4th verse:—"These are the first fruits unto God and the Lamb."—This was a literal resurrection, and an offering of the first fruits unto our High Priest, fulfilling the type.

From the above Scriptures we learn that the Bride is now with Christ, and we have more proof of this by the parable of the 25th of Matt. Both the Syriac and Douay version render the first verse—"went out to meet the Bridegroom and the Bride." In the 45th Ps. there is more evidence on this point.

From the above and other evidences with which I will not enlarge this article, I come to the decided conclusion that all that is required in the law of types, both in the feast of the passover, and the feast of Pentecost, has been fulfilled. Here are two of the greatest and most important events in the history of the Church fulfilled in accordance with the types, of two out of the three great feasts of the year, when all the males were called together.

It is worthy of notice that all these three great feasts have to do with the harvest; at the passover, the first ripe sheaf, at the pentecost, the first of all the fruits of the field, and at the feast of Tabernacles, the ingathering of all the harvest from the field, the two first have been fulfilled, but the last yet remains to be fulfilled.

"Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil. For verily I say unto you, Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled."

In the seventh month, we have the types of the blowing of trumpets, the freedom of all bond-men, restitution of all forfeited land, the high Priest coming out of the most holy place to bless the people after the atonement was made, the gathering of all the harvest from the field, and all unfulfilled.

There is no truth more self-evident than this; that the 2300 days—admitting they commence with the 70 weeks, must end in the Spring or Summer; and that the unfulfilled types are all in the seventh month, which forbids the ending of those days and types at the same time in the year.

This arrangement leaves room for some to say "Our lamps are gone out," from the fact that the cry was based on the prophetic periods.

There is another point which favors the fulfilment of the fall types, viz., the year being changed at the coming of Israel out of Egypt. Ex. 12: 1, 2. In Coverdale, it reads, "The Lord said unto Moses and Aaron, in the land of Egypt, This month shall be with you the first month, and in it ye shall begin the months of the year." This leaves no room to doubt that the year was changed at the coming out of Egypt. In the books of Moses there is another year referred to in several places, and no intimation of its introduction. It ends at the feast of Tabernacles. See Ex. 23: 16; 34: 22; Deut. 31: 10.

The question is, which of those years was the original; one is spoken of as being introduced, or as having a commencement at the coming out of Egypt, the other is merely referred to as having existed previous to that time. The only just conclusion we can arrive at in the matter is, that the fall-year was the original one, and like the covenant made with Abraham before the law was given, we went back again both to the covenant for its final fulfilment, and to the current year in which it was made.

With all the intelligence engaged in the movement of 1843–4, when their reckoning had run out in the spring of '44, they all rallied on the types of the seventh month, evidently showing that they looked more to the types than to the periods for the exact point of deliverance.

According to Rev. 10: 11, we have to go over the same ground again. So far the present movement answers to the former as face to face in a glass. Shall we fill up the last point? I can only speak for one. After all my disappointments I have not the shadow of a doubt that both those movements on time were of God. They had the heavenly seal stamped upon them, and I believe Jesus will come at the same place between the tenth and twenty-third of the seventh month this fall. The first day of the month will be the 9th of October, the tenth day will be on the 19th, and the twenty-third will be about the first of November. I believe the solemn hour for which we have long looked has at last come. How few are ready for such a change! May the very God of peace sanctify His waiting Church, and prepare her for the solemn events that are just at the door.

Mewburyport, Sept. 17, 1855

Br. Merriam:—Several of my friends in the Lord, in various parts of the land, have solicited me to write to them personally, and tell them where I am, what I am doing, and what about "the cause," so far as I know. Now, to write so many letters will take too much time and cost too much labor; so I have concluded to write a pretty long letter to you, for the Crisis, and thus I shall help you fill up your paper, (with not very interesting matter, I allow,) and speak to all that desire it, at once; and speak more, and plainer too; and so "kill several birds with one stone." Moments, you know, are valuable, and as to the labor of writing, I never did like it. Perhaps I, and others, ought to take up the cross oftener in this department. Sometimes I think it is a pity that many more persons do not write, and sometimes I wish a good many would think longer, before they write at all. And so I have written a number of articles heretofore, which I thought, at first, would do; but when I had let them lay till they got cold, they looked so mean I cast them into the fire. Some of us love to preach, and can do it easily; but we do not seem to have the gift of writing to much account. Nevertheless, let all write who have anything good to write.

Well, what shall I say? You wish to know where I am. Here, in the same spot where I have been, part of the time at least, for several years—old Newburyport, on the banks of the lovely Merrimack river; and here I think it likely I shall make a home for the present. It does not make much difference where we are, if we are only good.

I think this is rather a pretty place.—To be sure, the people are rather stiff, here. They all seem to have particular churches to go to, and they go to them.—They seem to have particular ministers to love, and they love them. They seem to think they must keep on believing pretty much as they always have believed; and act, and think, and feel about as "the old people did," in religious matters. But it is a moral, temperate, orderly, quiet, clean, literary, benevolent city. I love Newburyport. It suits my taste. But you know my taste is not like that of others. My friends say I am odd from every one else. I conclude the reason is, every one else is odd from me.

There is an Advent Church here, containing some good people. I used to preach for them some in former times; but I do not nowadays—I have said and done so many naughty things in the "time" movement. Poor me. Why are we men? Why did not the Lord make us Angels? and then we should not do wrong. O yes, part of them sinned and fell when put on probation. Well, what a world!

What am I doing? Why I am endeavoring to serve the Lord with all of my soul, body, and spirit. I pray part of the time, sing some, read the Bible and other good books as much as my weak eyes will permit; and the rest of the time do what I have to do for the care of the family, and travel round and preach the word as a door may open, among any "class or clan." Well, it is blessed to serve the Lord. His way is pleasant, His yoke is easy, His burden is light, His commandments are not grievous. O let us praise His condescension, to make known to His feeble creatures His holy will, and devote ourselves entirely to His service as a whole thank-offering.

You wish to know about my tour west. I never think it worth while to present a journal of my travels and adventures, in a public paper. I think sometimes when I read ministerial journals, we like to appear. But some of you gave money for the mission, and you have a right to know how it was used. I will tell you in brief.

I was gone from home more than three months; traveled several thousand miles in New York, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Iowa and Wisconsin; preached many times in places where there were Advent Brn., and an "Advent cause;" and many times in new places, where they did not know much about the Advent truth.

I baptized several, saw many moved by the truth, some of whom I hoped would continue in the right way. Part of the time I was sick, but most of it well—part of the time homesick, but most of it happy. Sometimes I worked as hard as I well could, and at other times fear I was too slack. I had money enough, with what I received on the journey, and some left to give to others. I am glad I went—glad I did some little good—sorry I did not do more—glad I did not do any worse than I did, and glad I am in New England again.

I love New England, with its mountains, hills, rivers, woodlands, groves, fields, and diversified scenery generally—its cultivation, literature and religion. But I long for that better country. That land of the blest and the free. That home of the weary Pilgrim. O blessed land! There will the scalding tears of sorrow no more fall, or the riven, anxious heart be sad.—There the changeless glory will be alike for all, and all shall be eternally glad.—There shall be all the gathered ones forever with Him who loved and loves them, and whom they love. The labor there is done, and rest, unending rest, is given.—No more then the eye is pained with grievous seeing, or the ear with hateful hearing. The jarring sound confused, from the ruthless battle field, then is hushed, and the horrid sight of garments rolled in blood oppresses no more the soul. There while endless ages roll. Then "the fruit of the earth shall be excellent and comely; and the branch of the Lord shall be beautiful and glorious" for the nations of the saved. Come, heavenly state, immortal splendor, come! O "come and reign, Jesus, on thy throne!" Come and deliver groaning creation. Come and give joyful liberty to the sighing bondman; open the prison doors to the wasting captives, and fill the children of want with plenty.

"Peace shall wave her sceptre high,
And Love's fair banner greet the eye,"

In the West, there is a field for immense labor, while time shall last. But men are wanted there who are not afraid of trifles. To do much, they must be men full of faith, and the Holy Spirit; who can endure cold, heat, wet, dry, mud, dust, long journeys, and the want of many conveniences peculiar to a longer settled country. But there are noble souls in the West; those who will do almost anything human nature can do, for the good of Zion. I thank the Lord that there are men who are moved to enter and cultivate that mighty field. May the blessing of the Lord be upon Mansfield, Howell, Morgan, Chapman, Fen, Calkins, Pratt, Campbell, and others there. Some families in the West I shall always remember with the deepest affection. How kind they were to me! Such was the case with Br. Mansfield's of Laporte Co., Ill., and also Br. Butts', and Amos Wells', Br. Scott's of Hancock Co., Br. G. W. Ruggles' of Rock Island Co., Br. Twombly's of Brown Co., and many others.

I stopped, on my way home, several days with Br. John Howell. He is settled down in Dunham, Mc. Henry Co., Ill.—What a good time we did have together. He has a fine moral field to cultivate, and the people love him. He told me to tell you all that he is getting to be quite "an age to come" man. Well, so we keep thinking—some think one way, and some another. I wish I could know just what is right, I would think that way, with all my soul. I wish Br. Howell would write some such good articles for the Crisis as he used to do. Come, John, put to, and help.

You wish to know what about "the cause?" Well, the cause is of God, and it will stand. Do you believe it? To be sure, we have had several breakings up since we embarked in this enterprise; but the Master is yet on board, and the ship shall not be engulfed in the wave.—Some have gone to their farms, some to their merchandize, some to politics, some to foolishness, some to sectarianism, and some to fanaticism; and grieved the spirit, and wounded the truth to many, and brought shame and condemnation to themselves. But the Lord has a people left who yet keep the word of His patience, who know how to be "not slothful in business, fervent in the Spirit, serving the Lord." I feel encouraged. There is all abroad, with the candid and the true ones, a desire and effort for the "unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace." The Editors of the several papers are now standing in a better relation to each other, I think, than they have done for sometime before this. Good. To be sure, some have gone out from us into divers and strange notions, and think we are very naughty, and foolish virgins, and all that. Poor human nature! But the Lord is Judge in Zion. Men and women never seem to me so supremely foolish, and ridiculous, as when they imagine they are peculiar favorites of heaven, and possess an uncommon share of the "great power of God," and look upon others as a great way behind and below themselves. How different this spirit from that which dictated the following:—"Let each esteem others better than themselves." O yes, "blessed are the meek—Seek meekness—In lowliness of mind—Submit yourselves one to another—Easy to be entreated—Be kindly affectioned one to another—Be courteous." Such is the doctrine of the word.

But I must draw to a close. I love you all very much. I am striving to be good, so that I may live with you in the kingdom. I beseech you to be humble, meek, simple, holy, and diligent. Do not try to "make a show" in the world, for the world passeth away, and the fashion thereof perisheth. Confess all open errors and mistakes, like any honest person. Do not palm off any human blunders on to the Almighty. Remember "God is not a man that He should lie, or the son of man that He should repent." He will not be trifled with. "Holy and reverend is His name—God is not mocked—Let God be true, and every man a liar." Let us tremble before Him. Let us not speak of Him as an equal. Let us tread softly before Him. "He is of one mind, and who can turn Him." Let us exalt the name of the Lord; let us exalt Him in the highest, and praise His name together. "O come, let us worship and bow down; let us kneel before the Lord our Maker."

For The Crisis.

Letter from Br. Edwin Burham.

Newburyport, Sept. 18th, '55.

Br. Merriam:—It seems to me that we ought to make more of a stir, among ourselves, about that book, called "The voice of the Church," prepared by Br. D. T. Taylor, and published by Br. H. L. Hastings. Are our Brn. aware that it is one of the very best works ever published on the "Advent question?" It contains a vast amount of matter, for the size of it, in the shape of history, poetry, devotional expressions, and theology, blended. The arrangement of it is in fine taste for general reading, and particularly so for the student.

When no one was found to incur the financial responsibility of publishing it, Br. Hastings came forward, and took it on his own soul, for the good of the cause.

Br. Taylor has never received one cent for all his labor, in the matter, and Horace is under some heavy responsibilities for it. We know the men. They are men of God. Neither of them have ever given us an unkind word during all the "late movement," and thus have they made it manifest, to us, that they possess the meekness of Christ.

Let us all turn and help by taking one book each.

The three poisons. A physician of New England of facetious disposition, having several friends one day at his house, said to the company, "Gentlemen, will you help yourselves; here are wine, brandy and arsenic—all are poisons; some slower in their operation than others, but equally sure, take your choice."

A Voice of Warning from the Four Winds.

(Concluded.)

The Pre-millennialist and Adventist in solemn and stirring tones everywhere announces the swift approaching judgment and kingdom of God heralded by unmistaken signs and fearful inflictions of wrath on the anti-christian nations, and ushered in by the personal coming of the Son of Man, followed by His everlasting reign over the renovated world.

Macauley, the talented essayist and historian; a member of the British parliament, in 1831 thus wrote; "The Christian believes, as well as the Jew, that at some future period the present order of things will come to an end. Nay, many Christians believe that the Messiah will shortly establish a kingdom on the earth, and reign visibly over all its inhabitants. Whether this doctrine be othodox or not, we shall not inquire. The number of people who hold it, is very much greater than the number of Jews residing in England. Many of those who hold it are distinguished by rank, wealth, and ability; it is preached from pulpits, both of the Scottish and of the English church. Noblemen and members of parliament have written in defense of it—who expect, 'that before this generation shall pass away, all the kingdoms of the earth will be swallowed up in one Divine Empire.'" (Essays on the Jews, p. 668.)

Among English writers of this century who hold such views are Alexander Dallas, A. M., Dr. Joseph Wolffe, the converted Jew, Henry Melville, Dr. Alexander Keith, Edward Irving, Hon. T. Erskine, Mr. Burgh, Edward Monroe, Bishop Van Mildert, of Durham, Mr. Fry, Mr. Girdlestone, Mourant Brock, A. M., Ridley H. Herschell, pastor of a church of converted Jews in London, Hon. G. T. Noel, Mr. Hoare, William Hooper, Hugh Mc. Neil, A. M., Mr. Marsh, John Cox, Viscount Manderville, Mr. Hawtrey, William Rodgers, A. M., Joseph Tyso, William Dalton, the Maitlands, H. M. Villiers, Edward Auriol, William Pym, A. M., C. J. Goodhart, J. W. Brooks, Mr. Madden, Mr. Sirr, T. R. Birks, Mr. Begg, W. R. Freemantle, Thomas Hill, Edward Bickersteth, J. H. Stewart, Henry Woodward, A. M., Dr. George Croly, William Wogan, Esq., George Duke of Manchester, F. E. Paget, Mr. Lillingstone, Mr. Freree, Frederick Fysh, A. M., Matthew Habershon, Esq., T. P. Platt, Dr J. A. McCaul, Granville Penn, Dr. Hales, Edward Gillson, B. A., Mr. East, John B. Sumner Bishop of Chester, Charlotte Elizabeth, and Dr. Ebenezer Elliott, whose immense Apocalyptic Commentary which advocates pre-millennialism has, in its fourth edition, received the approval of Sir James Stephen, the two Bishops of Winchester and Calcutta, Sir Lancelott Shadwell vice chancellor of England, and the Archbishop of Canterbury.

In Scotland, George Gilfillan, Dr. Candlish, William Cunninghame, Esq., author of a score of works on prophecy, the lamented Dr. Chalmers, William Anderson, W. H. Hewitson, who with Dr. Kalley and Gonsalves, was missionary at Madeeia, James Scott, Andrew and Horatius Bonar, and Dr. John Cumming, the great pulpit orator and brilliant author at London.—The London Quarterly Journal of Prophecy, edited by the Bonars, and the Scottish National Church, both advocate the doctrine of Christ's speedy personal Advent.

On the Continent, Dr. Capadose, of Amsterdam, Hengstenburg the commentator, also Prof. L. Gaussen, of Geneva, with many others are pre-millennialists, as also the entire Christian body of Jansenists in Paris, and Molokaners in Russia.

Mourant Brock, of England, in a sermon on Glorification (see p. 11) says, "It is not merely in Great Britain that the expectation of the near return of the Redeemer is entertained, and the voice of warning raised, but also in America, India, and on the continent of Europe. I was lately told by one of our German missionaries that in Wirtemburg there is a Christian colony of several hundreds, one of the chief features of which is the looking for the second Advent. And a Christian minister from near the shores of the Caspian Sea has told me, that there is the same daily expectation among his nation. They constantly speak of it as 'the day of consolation.' In a little publication entitled 'The Millenium,' the writer says that he understands in America about three hundred ministers of the Word are thus preaching the Gospel of the kingdom; whilst in this country, he adds, about seven hundred of the Church of England are raising the same cry."

In the United States, Mr. William Miller, Dr. David Nelson, Elon Galusha, R. C. Shimeall, Edward Winthrop, A. M., Prof. N. N. Whiting, Elisha Putnam, Lorenzo Dow, Charles K. Imbrie, Thomas Wickes, Wm. King, of Utica, also Mr. Dickson, J. S. C. Abbott, A. B. Chapin, Edwin Burnham, Dr. Stephen W. Tyng, Dr. George Duffield, Henry Mooer, Dr. Thomas, D. Campbell, Josiah Litch, William Ramsay, Mr. Lillie, Henry D. Ward, Nathan Lord, president of Dartmouth College, Mr. Lord of Montpelier, John K. Lord, Mr. Lebagh, H. F. Hill, F. G. Brown, Charles Beecher, J. V. Himes, Bishop Chase, Prof. Weethee, Dr. R. Hutchinson, Bishop McIllvaine, Bishop Henshaw, George Storrs, Bishop Hopkins, and a host of others too numerous to mention, have all assisted in sounding this solemn cry, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh." Seven periodicals are devoted to this work, and the most noted of these, viz., David Lord's Theological and Literary Journal, is read by nearly five thousand clergymen, and many others, of the various Christian denominations in this country. And the language of every pre-millennialist is with Dr. Elliott that "our present position is but a short distance from the end of the now existing dispensation," or as David Lord says, "Christ is within a brief period to come from heaven in person!"

The foregoing is a thrilling, and all-important "warning from the four winds," to every son and daughter of Adam, to flee the last great and mighty storm which is now gathering over our heads. Yet, while it is a solemn warning, which should fall in thunder tones on the ears of a careless world, it is a sure harbinger of redemption to the saint—a voice of consolation to the weary pilgrim, wafted on the breeze of heaven, from all parts of the earth, bringing the glad tidings, that just beyond the gathering storm, is the long desired, peaceful Kingdom of our Lord.

In the language of Bonar, we say:—"Weary of man's rule, we long for God's. Sick at heart with this world's scenes of evil—man spoiling man; man enslaving man; man wounding man; man defrauding man; man treading upon man; we long for the setting up of the righteous throne. Oh, what a world will this be, when man's will as well as man's rule shall be exchanged for Christ's rule and will; when God's "will shall be done on earth even as it is done in heaven!"

It is our joy to think that this kingdom is near; and that there are no centuries of sin and wrong still in reserve either for the Church or for the earth. Its nearness is our consolation. The hope that it will come, cheers us; but the thought that it is coming soon cheers us more. For both faith and hope are fed by the thought of nearness. We do not fret at delay, nor grow faint and disconsolate. Yet in some respects our feelings are not unlike those thus described by one of other days;

> * * * "So tedious is this day,
> As is the night before some festival
> To an impatient child that hath new robes,
> And may not wear them."

Our bridal robes are ready, and we long to put them on. Our priestly-royal raiment is also ready, and we desire to exchage for it these weeds of poverty, and shame, and widowhood. Yet 'in patience possess we our souls.'

We are on the daily look-out for a kingdom, lifting up our heads knowing that our redemption draweth nigh. It will not tarry. The signs of its approach are multiplying. The shadows are still passing and repassing along the grey cliffs, but their increasing rapidity of movement shows a momentous change at hand.—Kingdoms are still rising as well as falling, but the deep force of the vibrations—the brevity as well as the abrupt oscillation—betoken a crisis. At this crisis the world's movements are brought to a stand. Then touched by a Divine hand, they recommence. A better order of rule begins."

Again, in the language of Baxter:—"Hasten, O my Savior, the time of thy return; send forth thy angels, and let that dreadful, joyful trumpet sound; delay not, lest earth should grow like hell, and lest thy church by division be crumbled all to dust; delay not, lest the grave should boast of victory, and having learned rebellion of its guest, should plead prescription, and refuse to deliver thee up thy due. O hasten that great resurrection day when thy command shall go forth and none shall disobey; when the sea and earth shall yield up their hostages, and all that sleep shall awake, and the dead in Christ shall first arise; when the seed that thou sowedst corruptible shall come forth incorruptible; and the graves that received but rottenness, and retained but dust, shall return thee glorious stars and suns. Return, O Lord, how long! O let thy kingdom come. Thy desolate Bride saith, Come! For thy Spirit within her saith, Come! The whole creation saith, Come, waiting to be delivered from the bondage of corruption. Thyself hath said, Surely I come. Amen; EVEN SO, COME, LORD JESUS."

Kind reader, our design in compiling this testimony is to call your serious attention to this subject of a coming world's caisis. Some great event is just at hand. Two hundred witnesses herein proclaim its imminence.

Do you discern the signs of the times? Do you know what this crisis is? And are you prepared for it? This is the question of questions. If it should be a long dark night of loathsome tyranny with bloody persecutions and faggot fires as some fear, are you ready for the martyr's cruel fate—for a martyr's crown? If it should be the battle of the great day of God Almighty, are you equipped for your work in the terrible strife? And do you know what will follow that awful battle? If it should be the temporal millennium and the conversion of the world as many fondly hope, are you prepared with a pure heart and clean hands to enter into the work of the Lord? And if it should be the new heavens and new earth—Paradise restored—are you sanctified by the blood of Christ and made by Him meet for a place therein? But if that mysterious crisis should bring from heaven in flaming fire the Son of God to judgment and to his kingdom as Adventists announce, are you ready to stand before Christ's solemn tribunal in that great day? Will you think of these things?

Are you a Christian? Do you search the Scriptures concerning these things?—Others have and think they can decide correctly on this coming crisis. Have you? And are you not mistaken about its nature? Think, look again. It may be the judgment. If so are you in the line of your duty? Prove your own self. Have you faith in Christ? Do you love His appearing? Do you watch and pray always? Have you done your duty to your family—to the church—to the world? Are you clear from the blood of all men? Can you not save one more of the unprepared—win one more sinner from everlasting burnings? Try. The Master cometh with the crowns. Let no one take yours.

Are you unconverted to Christ? What shall I say to you? Will it avail to say anything? Shall I succeed where others have so often failed? One more appeal, sinner. Wrath is coming. Jehovah says it. We who have watched every sign, think that wrath is nigh—very nigh. Do you know it is not nigh? O dare you trust yourself to meet your slighted Lord unsaved, and in your sins? What will He say to thee, poor soul? But perhaps you answer. He may not come yet and I will wait and see what this crisis is?—Alas, do not peril thy soul in such a risk! Do not thus insult thy Savior! Better be ready fifty years too soon than be one minute too late. Come to life's waters.—Come now, for thou hast no promise of a morrow. The last lingering notes of the silver trumpet of the Gospel are falling on thy ears. The woe-trumpet's dreadful blast, trembles on the lips of the Angel! Hasten to Christ, repent, believe, be saved. Be quick, for that day hasteth greatly!—Haste, sinner, haste! Hasten to thy only refuge! Tarry not lest thou be consumed. PREPARE TO MEET THY GOD!

For The Crisis.

The Use and Abuse of the Tongue.

BY PARKER TANDY.

The tongue, though a little member, boasteth great things. No one member of all the human frame has so much importance attached to it as the tongue. The Holy Scriptures take great notice of the tongue, and well they may; for it is the representative of the man. It is out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaks. The tongue is the glory of the man, if he only make a right use of it.—Let us hear what King David says on this important subject.

"O Lord, thou hast turned for me my mourning into joy; thou hast put off my sackcloth, and girded me with gladness; (why?) to the end that my glory (that is, my tongue,) may sing praises to thee, and not be silent." Again, the sweet singer of Israel says:—"Awake, up my glory, awake, psaltery and harp." Again:—"O God, my heart is fixed; I will sing and give praise, even with my glory."

The tongue was made, no doubt, especially to honor and glorify God; and when it answers this very important end, it is emphatically the glory of the man. But when a man perverts the use of his tongue by engaging in vain, wicked, and trifling conversation, such as jesting, blackguarding, tattling, lying, profaning the name of God, &c., his tongue has become his shame.

The tongue is said to be a fire. "Even so the tongue is a little member, and boasteth great things—Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth! And the tongue is a fire, a world of iniquity; such is the tongue among our members (when left to loose reins,) that it defileth the whole body, and setteth on fire the course of nature; and it is set on fire of hell.—For every kind of beasts, and of birds, and of serpents, and of things in the sea is tamed, and hath been tamed of mankind; but the tongue can no man tame; it is an unruly member, full of deadly poison. Therewith bless we God, even the Father; and therewith curse we men, who are made in the similitude of God.—Out of the same mouth proceedeth blessing and cursing. My brethren, these things ought not so to be."

The ancients had a curious fancy, that the hedge of the teeth was made close in order to repress evil speech. Agreeably to this, a French adage says, "That is a good set of teeth which keeps in the tongue."

Are there not tongues that work deceitfully, that had rather lie than to speak the honest truth, regardless of the consequences? God forbid that there should be any such in all the Advent ranks.

What does Inspiration say on this point? "Thy tongue deviseth mischief like a sharp razor, working deceitfully. Thou lovest evil more than good, and lying rather than righteousness. Thou lovest all devouring words, O thou deceitful tongue! God shall likewise destroy thee forever; He shall take thee away, and pluck thee out of thy dwelling place; and root thee out of the land of the living. The righteous also shall see, and fear, and shall laugh at him; and shall say, Lo, this is the man that made not God his strength; but trusted in the abundance of his riches, and strengthened himself in his wickedness." O my God! how many there are of this class!

There are no outward sins so easily committed as the sins of the tongue. So we may readily see the indispensable necessity of setting a double watch over our tongues. Many people say things in pure friendship, which are misrepresented by evil persons and turned to wrong account, and thus do much harm.

Others say things in jest, not meaning any harm, and it is taken in earnest, and made a bone of contention; many real friends have been severed in this way.—Much evil is done through envy, malice, jealousy and revenge. But a much better way is, to let our yea, be yea; and our nay be nay; for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil.

How important to keep the tongue from evil, and the lips from guile. By a single word the fortune of many years may be ruined forever! By a single word the good name of a saint may be destroyed! By only one single word of the unruly member, originating from an evil heart, the soul may incur the penalty of death! What does Christ say about idle words? "O generation of vipers! how can ye being evil, speak good things? For out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. A good man, out of the good treasure of his heart bringeth forth good things; and an evil man, out of the evil treasure of his heart, bringeth forth evil things." "But I say unto you, that every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of Judgment." "For by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned!" There are, probably, more offences given by an improper use of the tongue, than in any other way. "If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body." But be assured, the man who does not bridle his tongue, is not a christian. For says the Apostle, "If any man among you, seemeth to be religious and bridleth not his tongue, this man's religion is vain." "Words that are fitly spoken, are like apples of gold, set in pictures of silver." But on the other hand, words that are improperly spoken, are like sharp arrows; or as Solomon says; "Like the piercing of a sword." "But the tongue of the wise is health." "Truth shall be established forever; but a lying tongue is but for a moment." "Deceit is in the heart of them that imagine evil; but to the counsellors of peace, there is joy."

A man may say, my tongue is my own, I will use it as I please. It is true that God has in great kindness given us a tongue; but he has not given us any liberty whatever to use it for unholy purposes. The wise man says; "Rejoice, O young man, in the days of thy youth; and let thy heart cheer thee, in the days of thy youth; but know thou, that for all these things, God will bring thee into judgment!" There is probably no gift in nature, that is calculated to confer a greater blessing on man, than that of the tongue, if it be only employed to the glory of God. And there is no natural gift that can bring a greater curse, than a tongue employed for evil purposes.

In conclusion permit me to say with the Poet,

> "Let us resolve before the Lord;
> Now will I watch my tongue,
> Lest I let slip one sinful word,
> And do my neighbor wrong.
> And if I'm e'er constrained to stay
> With men of lives profane,
> I'll set a double watch that day,
> Nor let my talk be vain.
> I'll scarce allow my lips to speak
> The pious thoughts I feel,
> Lest scoffers should occasion take,
> To mock my holy zeal.
> Yet, if some proper hour appear,
> I'll not be overawed,
> But let the scoffing sinner hear,
> That I can speak for God."

Yes, "Let every one, that knoweth the name of Christ, depart from iniquity;" and by well doing let us "Sanctify the Lord God in our hearts; that we may be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh us a reason of the hope that is in us with meekness and fear."—Amen. PARKER TANDY.

For The Crisis.

A Varied Reverie.

BY EDWIN BURNHAM.

Well, what a strange, confused, changing, varied, fading, groaning, sighing, dying, weeping, sorrowing, smiling, laughing, joyful, driving, listless, solemn, ridiculous, foolish, wise, good, bad, blessed, cursed, important and unimportant world this is! How peculiar was the beginning of it!—Angels waited, wondered, looked—all heaven was expecting—and the great "I Am" gave the fiat, and lo, instantly "it was done;" the Eternal One gave the commandment, and behold, "it stood fast!" Creation existed. One week passed, and heaven was garnished with its orbicular lamps, earth diversified with enchanting scenery, Paradise located in holy wisdom's chosen place, man walked abroad in the image of his God, animated nature all began to move, established order promised universal harmony, Jehovah was pleased, and approvingly pronounced His general benediction—"Behold, it is all very good!" Thousands of years have passed away.—What sights I see! what sounds I hear! Whence comes this loud, commingled cry of anguish? this groan of the dying? this wail of the bereaved? this sigh of the stricken? this complaint of the fallen? this prayer of the oppressed? this entreaty of the prisoner? this call of the needy? this lament of the broken-hearted? this sound of confused noise from the battlefield, rendered horribly sickening by general carnage, and garments "rolled in blood?" this fearfully blasphemous imprecation of the wicked, and piteous expostulation of the holy? O sin! what woe has followed, is following, and shall follow in thy train! Why were thy devastating flood-gates lifted? why did the Almighty permit thee? Hush, my presumptuous spirit—be quiet in the dust.—"Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?"

"He knoweth the end from the beginning—Justice and judgment are the habitation of His throne—He giveth not account of any of his matters—Who by searching can find out God?"

The sun, moon and stars fill the heavens with beauty, and bless the earth with light and heat; the clouds distill refreshing showers to cheer the vales and plains; the breezes waft reviving influences from different points; the rivers roll in majestic grandeur to the mighty ocean; the seasons alternate in wonted harmony; animation teams through heaven, earth and sea, from invisible minuteness to amazing magnitude of organization; whirlwinds play; hurricanes rave; lightnings dance; thunders bellow; earthquakes jar; oceans roar; seas rage; floods overwhelm; fires devour; storms dismay; pestilences destroy; volcanoes overflow; startling phenomena affright; planets roll in their orbit; days, nights, times, seasons—earth, heaven, sea—creation—all declare Jehovah's work, and wisdom: "but lo these are but parts of His ways, and the thunder of His power who can understand?"

Whence this soft, melodious, cheerful enchanting song I hear? this celestial music divine? this harping of the cherubim? O heaven designs good for man! A Savior is born which is Christ the Lord. Go pay Him homage, shepherds—wise men—Angels! Sing, O ye heavens, and be joyful O earth! life, light and love come streaming from the gracious throne. Now man shall live. Lo Jesus dies—the sinner's hope! O my stupid soul, arise and praise thy God. O for such love to sing

A Voice of Warning from the Four Winds.

(Concluded.)

The Pre-millennialist and Adventist in solemn and stirring tones everywhere announces the swift approaching judgment and kingdom of God heralded by unmistaken signs and fearful inflictions of wrath on the anti-christian nations, and ushered in by the personal coming of the Son of Man, followed by His everlasting reign over the renovated world.

Macauley, the talented essayist and historian; a member of the British parliament, in 1831 thus wrote; "The Christian believes, as well as the Jew, that at some future period the present order of things will come to an end. Nay, many Christians believe that the Messiah will shortly establish a kingdom on the earth, and reign visibly over all its inhabitants. Whether this doctrine be othodox or not, we shall not inquire. The number of people who hold it, is very much greater than the number of Jews residing in England. Many of those who hold it are distinguished by rank, wealth, and ability; it is preached from pulpits, both of the Scottish and of the English church. Noblemen and members of parliament have written in defense of it—who expect, 'that before this generation shall pass away, all the kingdoms of the earth will be swallowed up in one Divine Empire.'" (Essays on the Jews, p. 668.)

Among English writers of this century who hold such views are Alexander Dallas, A. M., Dr. Joseph Wolffe, the converted Jew, Henry Melville, Dr. Alexander Keith, Edward Irving, Hon. T. Erskine, Mr. Burgh, Edward Monroe, Bishop Van Mildert, of Durham, Mr. Fry, Mr. Girdlestone, Mourant Brock, A. M., Ridley H. Herschell, pastor of a church of converted Jews in London, Hon. G. T. Noel, Mr. Hoare, William Hooper, Hugh Mc. Neil, A. M., Mr. Marsh, John Cox, Viscount Manderville, Mr. Hawtrey, William Rodgers, A. M., Joseph Tyso, William Dalton, the Maitlands, H. M. Villiers, Edward Auriol, William Pym, A. M., C. J. Goodhart, J. W. Brooks, Mr. Madden, Mr. Sirr, T. R. Birks, Mr. Begg, W. R. Freemantle, Thomas Hill, Edward Bickersteth, J. H. Stewart, Henry Woodward, A. M., Dr. George Croly, William Wogan, Esq., George Duke of Manchester, F. E. Paget, Mr. Lillingstone, Mr. Freree, Frederick Fysh, A. M., Matthew Habershon, Esq., T. P. Platt, Dr J. A. McCaul, Granville Penn, Dr. Hales, Edward Gillson, B. A., Mr. East, John B. Sumner Bishop of Chester, Charlotte Elizabeth, and Dr. Ebenezer Elliott, whose immense Apocalyptic Commentary which advocates pre-millennialism has, in its fourth edition, received the approval of Sir James Stephen, the two Bishops of Winchester and Calcutta, Sir Lancelott Shadwell vice chancellor of England, and the Archbishop of Canterbury.

In Scotland, George Gilfillan, Dr. Candlish, William Cunninghame, Esq., author of a score of works on prophecy, the lamented Dr. Chalmers, William Anderson, W. H. Hewitson, who with Dr. Kalley and Gonsalves, was missionary at Madeeia, James Scott, Andrew and Horatius Bonar, and Dr. John Cumming, the great pulpit orator and brilliant author at London.—The London Quarterly Journal of Prophecy, edited by the Bonars, and the Scottish National Church, both advocate the doctrine of Christ's speedy personal Advent.

On the Continent, Dr. Capadose, of Amsterdam, Hengstenburg the commentator, also Prof. L. Gaussen, of Geneva, with many others are pre-millennialists, as also the entire Christian body of Jansenists in Paris, and Molokaners in Russia.

Mourant Brock, of England, in a sermon on Glorification (see p. 11) says, "It is not merely in Great Britain that the expectation of the near return of the Redeemer is entertained, and the voice of warning raised, but also in America, India, and on the continent of Europe. I was lately told by one of our German missionaries that in Wirtemburg there is a Christian colony of several hundreds, one of the chief features of which is the looking for the second Advent. And a Christian minister from near the shores of the Caspian Sea has told me, that there is the same daily expectation among his nation. They constantly speak of it as 'the day of consolation.' In a little publication entitled 'The Millenium,' the writer says that he understands in America about three hundred ministers of the Word are thus preaching the Gospel of the kingdom; whilst in this country, he adds, about seven hundred of the Church of England are raising the same cry."

In the United States, Mr. William Miller, Dr. David Nelson, Elon Galusha, R. C. Shimeall, Edward Winthrop, A. M., Prof. N. N. Whiting, Elisha Putnam, Lorenzo Dow, Charles K. Imbrie, Thomas Wickes, Wm. King, of Utica, also Mr. Dickson, J. S. C. Abbott, A. B. Chapin, Edwin Burnham, Dr. Stephen W. Tyng, Dr. George Duffield, Henry Mooer, Dr. Thomas, D. Campbell, Josiah Litch, William Ramsay, Mr. Lillie, Henry D. Ward, Nathan Lord, president of Dartmouth College, Mr. Lord of Montpelier, John K. Lord, Mr. Lebagh, H. F. Hill, F. G. Brown, Charles Beecher, J. V. Himes, Bishop Chase, Prof. Weethee, Dr. R. Hutchinson, Bishop McIllvaine, Bishop Henshaw, George Storrs, Bishop Hopkins, and a host of others too numerous to mention, have all assisted in sounding this solemn cry, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh." Seven periodicals are devoted to this work, and the most noted of these, viz., David Lord's Theological and Literary Journal, is read by nearly five thousand clergymen, and many others, of the various Christian denominations in this country. And the language of every pre-millennialist is with Dr. Elliott that "our present position is but a short distance from the end of the now existing dispensation," or as David Lord says, "Christ is within a brief period to come from heaven in person!"

The foregoing is a thrilling, and all-important "warning from the four winds," to every son and daughter of Adam, to flee the last great and mighty storm which is now gathering over our heads. Yet, while it is a solemn warning, which should fall in thunder tones on the ears of a careless world, it is a sure harbinger of redemption to the saint—a voice of consolation to the weary pilgrim, wafted on the breeze of heaven, from all parts of the earth, bringing the glad tidings, that just beyond the gathering storm, is the long desired, peaceful Kingdom of our Lord.

In the language of Bonar, we say:—"Weary of man's rule, we long for God's. Sick at heart with this world's scenes of evil—man spoiling man; man enslaving man; man wounding man; man defrauding man; man treading upon man; we long for the setting up of the righteous throne. Oh, what a world will this be, when man's will as well as man's rule shall be exchanged for Christ's rule and will; when God's "will shall be done on earth even as it is done in heaven!"

It is our joy to think that this kingdom is near; and that there are no centuries of sin and wrong still in reserve either for the Church or for the earth. Its nearness is our consolation. The hope that it will come, cheers us; but the thought that it is coming soon cheers us more. For both faith and hope are fed by the thought of nearness. We do not fret at delay, nor grow faint and disconsolate. Yet in some respects our feelings are not unlike those thus described by one of other days;

* * * "So tedious is this day,
As is the night before some festival
To an impatient child that hath new robes,
And may not wear them."

Our bridal robes are ready, and we long to put them on. Our priestly-royal raiment is also ready, and we desire to exchage for it these weeds of poverty, and shame, and widowhood. Yet 'in patience possess we our souls.'

We are on the daily look-out for a kingdom, lifting up our heads knowing that our redemption draweth nigh. It will not tarry. The signs of its approach are multiplying. The shadows are still passing and repassing along the grey cliffs, but their increasing rapidity of movement shows a momentous change at hand.—Kingdoms are still rising as well as falling, but the deep force of the vibrations—the brevity as well as the abrupt oscillation—betoken a crisis. At this crisis the world's movements are brought to a stand. Then touched by a Divine hand, they recommence. A better order of rule begins."

Again, in the language of Baxter:—"Hasten, O my Savior, the time of thy return; send forth thy angels, and let that dreadful, joyful trumpet sound; delay not, lest earth should grow like hell, and lest thy church by division be crumbled all to dust; delay not, lest the grave should boast of victory, and having learned rebellion of its guest, should plead prescription, and refuse to deliver thee up thy due. O hasten that great resurrection day when thy command shall go forth and none shall disobey; when the sea and earth shall yield up their hostages, and all that sleep shall awake, and the dead in Christ shall first arise; when the seed that thou sowedst corruptible shall come forth incorruptible; and the graves that received but rottenness, and retained but dust, shall return thee glorious stars and suns. Return, O Lord, how long! O let thy kingdom come. Thy desolate Bride saith, Come! For thy Spirit within her saith, Come! The whole creation saith, Come, waiting to be delivered from the bondage of corruption. Thyself hath said, Surely I come. Amen; EVEN SO, COME, LORD JESUS."

Kind reader, our design in compiling this testimony is to call your serious attention to this subject of a coming world's caisis. Some great event is just at hand. Two hundred witnesses herein proclaim its imminence.

Do you discern the signs of the times? Do you know what this crisis is? And are you prepared for it? This is the question of questions. If it should be a long dark night of loathsome tyranny with bloody persecutions and faggot fires as some fear, are you ready for the martyr's cruel fate—for a martyr's crown? If it should be the battle of the great day of God Almighty, are you equipped for your work in the terrible strife? And do you know what will follow that awful battle? If it should be the temporal millennium and the conversion of the world as many fondly hope, are you prepared with a pure heart and clean hands to enter into the work of the Lord? And if it should be the new heavens and new earth—Paradise restored—are you sanctified by the blood of Christ and made by Him meet for a place therein? But if that mysterious crisis should bring from heaven in flaming fire the Son of God to judgment and to his kingdom as Adventists announce, are you ready to stand before Christ's solemn tribunal in that great day? Will you think of these things?

Are you a Christian? Do you search the Scriptures concerning these things?—Others have and think they can decide correctly on this coming crisis. Have you? And are you not mistaken about its nature? Think, look again. It may be the judgment. If so are you in the line of your duty? Prove your own self. Have you faith in Christ? Do you love His appearing? Do you watch and pray always? Have you done your duty to your family—to the church—to the world? Are you clear from the blood of all men? Can you not save one more of the unprepared—win one more sinner from everlasting burnings? Try. The Master cometh with the crowns. Let no one take yours.

Are you unconverted to Christ? What shall I say to you? Will it avail to say anything? Shall I succeed where others have so often failed? One more appeal, sinner. Wrath is coming. Jehovah says it. We who have watched every sign, think that wrath is nigh—very nigh. Do you know it is not nigh? O dare you trust yourself to meet your slighted Lord unsaved, and in your sins? What will He say to thee, poor soul? But perhaps you answer. He may not come yet and I will wait and see what this crisis is?—Alas, do not peril thy soul in such a risk! Do not thus insult thy Savior! Better be ready fifty years too soon than be one minute too late. Come to life's waters.—Come now, for thou hast no promise of a morrow. The last lingering notes of the silver trumpet of the Gospel are falling on thy ears. The woe-trumpet's dreadful blast, trembles on the lips of the Angel! Hasten to Christ, repent, believe, be saved. Be quick, for that day hasteth greatly!—Haste, sinner, haste! Hasten to thy only refuge! Tarry not lest thou be consumed. PREPARE TO MEET THY GOD!

For The Crisis.

The Use and Abuse of the Tongue.

BY PARKER TANDY.

The tongue, though a little member, boasteth great things. No one member of all the human frame has so much importance attached to it as the tongue. The Holy Scriptures take great notice of the tongue, and well they may; for it is the representative of the man. It is out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaks. The tongue is the glory of the man, if he only make a right use of it.—Let us hear what King David says on this important subject.

"O Lord, thou hast turned for me my mourning into joy; thou hast put off my sackcloth, and girded me with gladness; (why?) to the end that my glory (that is, my tongue,) may sing praises to thee, and not be silent." Again, the sweet singer of Israel says:—"Awake, up my glory, awake, psaltery and harp." Again:—"O God, my heart is fixed; I will sing and give praise, even with my glory."

The tongue was made, no doubt, especially to honor and glorify God; and when it answers this very important end, it is emphatically the glory of the man. But when a man perverts the use of his tongue by engaging in vain, wicked, and trifling conversation, such as jesting, blackguarding, tattling, lying, profaning the name of God, &c., his tongue has become his shame.

The tongue is said to be a fire. "Even so the tongue is a little member, and boasteth great things—Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth! And the tongue is a fire, a world of iniquity; such is the tongue among our members (when left to loose reins,) that it defileth the whole body, and setteth on fire the course of nature; and it is set on fire of hell.—For every kind of beasts, and of birds, and of serpents, and of things in the sea is tamed, and hath been tamed of mankind; but the tongue can no man tame; it is an unruly member, full of deadly poison. Therewith bless we God, even the Father; and therewith curse we men, who are made in the similitude of God.—Out of the same mouth proceedeth blessing and cursing. My brethren, these things ought not so to be."

The ancients had a curious fancy, that the hedge of the teeth was made close in order to repress evil speech. Agreeably to this, a French adage says, "That is a good set of teeth which keeps in the tongue."

Are there not tongues that work deceitfully, that had rather lie than to speak the honest truth, regardless of the consequences? God forbid that there should be any such in all the Advent ranks.

What does Inspiration say on this point? "Thy tongue deviseth mischief like a sharp razor, working deceitfully. Thou lovest evil more than good, and lying rather than righteousness. Thou lovest all devouring words, O thou deceitful tongue! God shall likewise destroy thee forever; He shall take thee away, and pluck thee out of thy dwelling place; and root thee out of the land of the living. The righteous also shall see, and fear, and shall laugh at him; and shall say, Lo, this is the man that made not God his strength; but trusted in the abundance of his riches, and strengthened himself in his wickedness." O my God! how many there are of this class!

There are no outward sins so easily committed as the sins of the tongue. So we may readily see the indispensable necessity of setting a double watch over our tongues. Many people say things in pure friendship, which are misrepresented by evil persons and turned to wrong account, and thus do much harm.

Others say things in jest, not meaning any harm, and it is taken in earnest, and made a bone of contention; many real friends have been severed in this way.—Much evil is done through envy, malice, jealousy and revenge. But a much better way is, to let our yea, be yea; and our nay be nay; for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil.

How important to keep the tongue from evil, and the lips from guile. By a single word the fortune of many years may be ruined forever! By a single word the good name of a saint may be destroyed! By only one single word of the unruly member, originating from an evil heart, the soul may incur the penalty of death! What does Christ say about idle words? "O generation of vipers! how can ye being evil, speak good things? For out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. A good man, out of the good treasure of his heart bringeth forth good things; and an evil man, out of the evil treasure of his heart, bringeth forth evil things." "But I say unto you, that every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of Judgment." "For by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned!" There are, probably, more offences given by an improper use of the tongue, than in any other way. "If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body." But be assured, the man who does not bridle his tongue, is not a christian. For says the Apostle, "If any man among you, seemeth to be religious and bridleth not his tongue, this man's religion is vain." "Words that are fitly spoken, are like apples of gold, set in pictures of silver." But on the other hand, words that are improperly spoken, are like sharp arrows; or as Solomon says; "Like the piercing of a sword." "But the tongue of the wise is health." "Truth shall be established forever; but a lying tongue is but for a moment." "Deceit is in the heart of them that imagine evil; but to the counsellors of peace, there is joy."

A man may say, my tongue is my own, I will use it as I please. It is true that God has in great kindness given us a tongue; but he has not given us any liberty whatever to use it for unholy purposes. The wise man says; "Rejoice, O young man, in the days of thy youth; and let thy heart cheer thee, in the days of thy youth; but know thou, that for all these things, God will bring thee into judgment!" There is probably no gift in nature, that is calculated to confer a greater blessing on man, than that of the tongue, if it be only employed to the glory of God. And there is no natural gift that can bring a greater curse, than a tongue employed for evil purposes.

In conclusion permit me to say with the Poet,

"Let us resolve before the Lord;
Now will I watch my tongue,
Lest I let slip one sinful word,
And do my neighbor wrong.

And if I'm e'er constrained to stay
With men of lives profane,
I'll set a double watch that day,
Nor let my talk be vain.

I'll scarce allow my lips to speak
The pious thoughts I feel,
Lest scoffers should occasion take,
To mock my holy zeal.

Yet, if some proper hour appear,
I'll not be overawed,
But let the scoffing sinner hear,
That I can speak for God."

Yes, "Let every one, that knoweth the name of Christ, depart from iniquity;" and by well doing let us "Sanctify the Lord God in our hearts; that we may be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh us a reason of the hope that is in us with meekness and fear."—Amen. PARKER TANDY.

A Varied Reverie.

The sun, moon and stars fill the heavens with beauty, and bless the earth with light and heat; the clouds distill refreshing showers to cheer the vales and plains; the breezes waft reviving influences from different points; the rivers roll in majestic grandeur to the mighty ocean; the seasons alternate in wonted harmony; animation teams through heaven, earth and sea, from invisible minuteness to amazing magnitude of organization; whirlwinds play; hurricanes rave; lightnings dance; thunders bellow; earthquakes jar; oceans roar; seas rage; floods overwhelm; fires devour; storms dismay; pestilences destroy; volcanoes overflow; startling phenomena affright; planets roll in their orbit; days, nights, times, seasons—earth, heaven, sea—creation—all declare Jehovah's work, and wisdom: "but lo these are but parts of His ways, and the thunder of His power who can understand?"

Whence this soft, melodious, cheerful enchanting song I hear? this celestial music divine? this harping of the cherubim? O heaven designs good for man! A Savior is born which is Christ the Lord. "let rocks and hills their lasting silence break." Let nature all adore.

Hark, hear that joyful shouting! how loud those peals of gladness! Is it the morn of Jubilee? Has it come at last?—Start from your heavy slumbers, ye patriarchs, prophets, wise men, and martyrs of our God! Now comes your glory, and your song. Gather, O gather, ye scattered, broken, mangled, bleeding, wasted, sighing, chosen family of the kingdom!—Now comes your rest. The dream of earth is finished. O daughter of Zion, divorce that long worn habit of sackcloth and ashes, and robe thee in eternal beauty. Thy King is come! Hail Him welcome to His throne! Come, heaven-invited guests, come to the marriage supper of the Lamb! How glorious the vision that spell-binds my soul! The adorable Redeemer rides, in flaming grandeur, the Apocalyptic war-horse, to drive asunder the opposing nations—thousands of thousands of seraphic attendants acclaim his triumphant march—uprising saints immortal pour unmeasured hallelujahs at his feet—the New Jerusalem reveals its shining ramparts—Creation sings again her primal song—the thrones of earth are not—the Son of David reigns—and Zion eternally is glad. Haste, Lord, to fill the whole earth with thy glory. Amen, and amen. EDWIN BURNHAM.

NEWBURYPORT, Sept., '55.

The World's Crisis.

LOWELL, OCT. 6, 1855.

Tracts.

We have now published entire the tract entitled, "A Voice of Warning from the four winds." Through mistake of the printer it was introduced as being written "for the Crisis," but it was printed by Br. W. Pratt, and may be obtained by applying to Eld. H. L. Hastings, Peace Dale, R. I. Price 5 cts single. $3,00 per hundred.

It is to be hoped our Brn. will enter with spirit and energy into the work of distributing tracts. Much light and instruction may thus be communicated to our fellow men at a trifling expense.

Those who were engaged in the anti-slavery enterprise, some years since, found it required the living voice of the Preacher to stir the masses, and create a sudden and powerful interest on the subject. But one convert made by deliberately poring over the subject in the closet, and weighing carefully the arguments pro and con, was worth more than ten that became interested by the thrilling appeals of an orator. Study and retirement is more favorable for the investigation of truth, than places of excitement. The institution of the ministry is the great instrumentality in the hands of God for the enlightenment and conversion of the sinner; but the press is a most able coadjutor in the work. Through this medium truth is presented not merely to be glanced at with the mind's eye, but scrutinized, analysed, weighed deliberately, and thus embraced or rejected as the balance of testimony may seem to require. When thus the judgment becomes convinced, and the mind settled, it is not afterward easily thrown from its balance.

In reprinting the tracts which have recently appeared in the columns of the Crisis, I have designed to supply the Readers with interesting matter, and also to enable them to form a just estimate of the value of the works; so that if they would do good they may furnish the same in the form of tracts. Let us all "labor while the day lasts; for soon the night cometh when no man can work."

For the Crisis.

Still a few more thoughts gathered from the Sacred Oracles on the subject of Sacrifice.

BY SR. B. MATHEWSON.

There is danger, of even good men who usually possess a sacrificing spirit, sometimes withholding more than is meet—thus it was with David, on one occasion of his numbering Israel. I am aware the idea has obtained very generally, that he sinned in numbering Israel. But is it not more probable that his sin consisted in not numbering them according to the law of God? that is, offering a sacrifice on the occasion. Ex. 30: 12. "When thou takest the sum of the children of Israel after their number, then shall they give every man a ransom for his soul unto the Lord, when thou numberest them; that there be no plague among them, when thou numberest them."

It is apparent such sacrifice was binding according to the law of God; and this is expressly said to be, to prevent any plague among them. It is plain inference therefore that his crime was withholding what was due the Lord.

As soon as penitential emotions took possession of his heart, he evinced positive determination to make a sacrifice of that which cost him something—though king Araunah pressed him to accept the sacrifice as a present. David refused with ardor—saying, "Nay; but I will surely buy it of thee at a price: neither will I offer burnt-offerings unto the Lord my God of that which doth cost me nothing. So David bought the threshing-floor and the oxen for fifty shekels of silver." 2 Sam. 24: 24. And thus the plague was stayed.

Another evidence he did not sin in barely numbering Israel is, that God had previously commanded Moses to number them—when they were in the wilderness of Sinai—again just prior to their entering the promised land, Num. 1: 1; and 19: 26, 63. Joshua, Jehoram and Solomon also numbered Israel apparently, to divine acceptance. David himself had a few years before numbered them with impunity. 2 Sam. 18: 1. I think this sufficient to prove he did not call down the vengeance of heaven by numbering them—but by withholding from God.

Would it not be well for us to inquire whether we have withholden any thing from God, when a cloud intercepts a free communion of our souls with Him?

Notwithstanding this little cloud of parsimony obscures some radiance that beams on the generally sacrificing character of this godly man—penitence soon produces a reaction on his mind similar to that of other good men that have been overtaken in a fault—like an obstruction thrown across the deep full river—hindering a momentary overflow, only to prepare a greater rush and deeper flow! A little dam of temptation could not long confine the deep benevolence of a soul like David's—contrition so deepened and widened his liberality for God—he immediately conceived the noble design of building Him a house—for which he receives the high encomium of Heaven. "And the Lord said unto David my father, Whereas it was in thy heart to build a house unto my name, thou didst well that it was in thy heart." 1 Kings 8: 18.

Yet on account of his being encompassed with wars, he was not by Jehovah deemed a proper man to build the house of God. 1 Kings 5: 3. But God appreciated his motive, and promised his noble design should be executed by his son!

It appears that David discarded the idea of dwelling in a permanent and spacious house, when the Ark of God dwelled within curtains! 2 Sam. 7: 2; and he immediately made preparations for building a house where the beauty and glory of the Lord might be manifest!—that His name might be glorified among those nations that worshiped other gods—when they saw His superior beauty and power manifested as it was within these spacious walls even to their eternal senses! Says David, "let Him be known among the heathen," &c.

When time and the enemies of the Lord had impaired this noble structure—these godly Kings of Judah—manifested their devotion to God and their spirit of sacrificing by repairing it; and indeed this duty was considered of so much importance, that no labor or sacrifice was considered too great. It also inspired the liveliest strains of devotion. "Blessed be the Lord God of our fathers, which hath put such a thing as this in the king's heart, to beautify the house of the Lord which is in Jerusalem:" Ez. 6: 27. It appears to have been the most prominent work of those kings to repair and beautify the house of the Lord. It was the prerogative of the king to ordain pecuniary means—by desiring voluntary contributions from the people—the business of the Priests to oversee and cause this work to be accomplished. So we see all the family of God shared in this laborious sacrifice, 2 Kings chap. 12. And is it thus now? should the entire family of God be engaged now in making additions and repairs to this temple? The Apostle affirms that the Most High does not dwell now in temples made with hands! Let us inquire then what is the place of His rest? Does God now recognize a temple on the earth?

Paul answers this question in a number of places in language most conclusive; two or three will serve our purpose.—"Know ye not that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy: for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are." 1 Cor. 3: 16, 17. "For ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people." 2 Cor. 6: 16.

If we closely observe the teachings of the New Testament, we shall see God now requires the same spirit of sacrifice, and laborious effort on the part of His children to beautify, repair, and make such additions to His temple as they are capable of.

Inspiration has settled the question beyond controversy, that the children of God are now His temple, where He delights in manifesting the glorious graces of His Spirit!

The question now arises how are we to repair, beautify and make additions to this temple?

Ans. "As we have opportunity let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith." Gal. 6: 10. By doing good, we understand the putting forth active exertion with the motive to benefit. By an adherence to the first clause of this text, we pave the way for making additions to God's temple! Who does not know, that kind words and acts have often been the first inducement to win the sinner from the natural forest to a voluntary hewing and squaring by God's instrument that is sharper than any two-edged sword? and thus prepared he is added to the house of God! The Captain of our salvation has commanded us to let our light shine in such a manner before men that they may behold our good works! How can we place our good works before their eyesight more effectually than by addressing them with kind words and in real acts of beneficence? Will not such deportment be likely to make them feel there is a divine excellency in the religion of Jesus Christ, cause them "to glorify our Father which is in heaven?"

It is a source of deep regret, that promising trees which would afford a beautiful addition to this temple, are suffered to remain in the natural forest by the shade, human nature has cast over that part of the building now standing as a light and sign to the world. I allude to the disagreeable and somewhat irritable manner of some professed Christians who seldom wear a pleasant aspect and cheerful mien! they manifest no real delight in the service of God; thereby causing youth and the inexperienced to imbibe false notions of Christianity, like the little lad, who did not wish to go to heaven if grandpa was going, fearing a continuation of that disagreeable fault-finding manner.

They manifest, (though unintentionally perhaps,) a spirit of ingratitude. We seldom hear them giving thanks—but instead, uttering a kind of complaint on account of lack of temporal or spiritual benefits—they constantly desire an addition to their stock, but seldom return to give glory to God! The Giver of all good will have a grateful acknowledgment of the blessings He confers on His children, or He will cease to bestow them. Let such commence immediately to offer the sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving for what they already enjoy, and perhaps, ere long, they may be compelled to bear a similar testimony to that of a sister sometime since, who stated in childlike simplicity "she did not pray as much as some for want of opportunity—the Lord was so bountiful, it took her all the time to thank the Lord for the mercies He bestowed on her." A grateful spirit and sanctified good nature then will not only beautify God's temple, but pave the way for additions. Every embellishment, or addition we make, will cost a sacrifice. There are different kinds of sacrifices mentioned in scripture—but sacrifice always implies cost! either mental or physical. The fruit of our lips is recognized as a sacrifice, Heb. 13: 15; Hosea 19: 2; and many can attest the truth of its being a costly one, especially when they first commenced witnessing for God and His truth before their fellow men! This is a very important sacrifice, and one that conduces much to the beauty and glory of the house of God. Whoever therefore withholds this sacrifice, is highly culpable and must expect the blight and mildew of heaven upon themselves, because in thus doing they rob God. I think I have shown in a previous article the necessity of every one sacrificing something for God. In the light of scripture our salvation makes it necessary thus to do. Look where we will and we find those who sacrifice little or nothing for God and His cause, know but little or nothing of His grace! Therefore heads of families should properly instruct each member in this important duty, and render each capable of doing something for God. Let the first capabilities of childlike inocence be made to understand this essential duty!

Will not a recollection of the poor widow—the favorable reception of her farthing—the enconiums passed on her sacrificing conduct by the Master—forbid our excusing ourselves with a plea of inability?—Is it not a mistaken idea of kindness and benevolence for religious teachers to say, A and B should do nothing? they are not able, &c. Did Christ or His Apostles do thus? Does the Bible contain a rebuke, caution, or example relative to the poor being excused from sacrificing to God? I have never found anything of the kind in the law or Gospel. But the law, Gospel, and common sense teach us to give according to our ability. Acts 11: 29.—Where one has only a cup of cold water, a box of costly perfumery is not exacted or expected, of course. Says Paul:—"For if there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not."—2 Cor. 8: 12. Does Paul in giving a standing order for Church contributions excuse the poor? Nay, he says, "Let every one of you lay by," &c. 1 Cor. 16: 1. Has there not been a mistake among Christian Churches in not rightly appreciating the sacrifice of the poor?—Jesus set us the example of estimating a farthing highly when given by the poor with the real spirit of sacrifice! Let every one, old and young, rich and poor, be encouraged to make a sacrifice of such things as they have, for God, for the lasting benefit it will confer on their own souls. Is it not obvious that THAT in which we take an active part will be more indelibly written on the memory, and excite a livelier interest in the subject? We have understood ere this, the commandment to do good unto all, but especially goodness is required towards those who are of the household of faith. This is understood to imply repairing and beautifying the Holy Edifice, or Church of God.

Let us for a moment consider the kind of ornaments that grace this temple.—Paul mentions nine in one catalogue, (Gal. 5: 22, 23,) which are of importance, viz., Love, joy, peace, long-suffering, Gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness and temperance.

Let us look with care into the Gospel mirror, and see whether all these are in their place. If not, let us interest ourselves immediately to see how many we can replace, both upon ourselves, and that part of the building contiguous to ourselves, and finally, as far as we can possibly have an influence.

Love is the first ornament mentioned by the Apostle, and should ever occupy a conspicuous place. It will operate like an inventive genius—imparting skill and method in arranging these ornaments. I witnessed a circumstance a short time since, proving the utility of love where there was a lack of knowledge. A young mother, possessing very little knowledge of medicine or physiology, saw her dear child apparently near its dissolution. I was pleased and instructed to see her love give such an impetus to her small stock of knowledge as to make the little sufferer comparatively comfortable, and finally result in his recovery. Love should always be the motive power of the Christain. It is altogether the safest propelling power—we should let it actuate our every endeavor in repairing and decorating the Temple with the brilliant graces of the Spirit.

When the Gospel mirror discovers a lack of these precious gems on a part of the house not occupied by ourselves, we should be careful to abide by the golden rule of our Master. E. g., should we see one lack patience, let us approach him with that faithful tenderness we should desire if in his stead. This may be a costly sacrifice, but must not be omitted unless we expect the Bridegroom to consider us a detractor of His beauty, for which He is very jealous. It should be a ravishing thought with those who are incapable of building, that they are capable of ornamenting so grand an edifice as the Temple of God!! It would appear impossible that we should become so poor as not to be able to serve in this employment.

I am aware these jewels may have a kind of latent existence which calls for the most faithful burnishing! For the modus operandi of this work, I would refer to 2d Pet. 1: 13, and 3: 1, that is, putting each other in remembrance of the necessity of having all these ornaments glisten resplendently! Beloved Pilgrims, who will be the most active in this part of the work so necessary to the glory of God's house? I entreat you, never indulge a temptation to withhold this sacrifice—the Master calls for it—the Spirit and Bride call for it—do not then withhold it as you value the glory of God's house! Expedition in this work is very necessary, for the great examination day is just upon us—when every part of the building will pass the closest scrutiny of the Judge—then every man's work will be made manifest.

Yours in the hope of the Gospel,
B. MATHEWSON.

For The Crisis.

Letter from Br. J. W. Crabtree.

BOSTON, Sept. 28, 1855.

Br. Merriam:—I value the Crisis much. It has been a source of comfort and intelligence to me. I am satisfied that it is one of God's heralds to this lost world, and also a vehicle of comfort and edification to the Brn scattered abroad, who yet wait for their Lord. And I pray God it may continue until our absent Lord shall come.

I am glad in God to see the spirit of union its writers have manifested in the last two numbers; for where there is union, there is love and strength. I love the truth as it is in Christ, but I must say I do not love contention when it makes division; for there is no division in the body of Christ. Neither do I love to see contention upon doctrinal points, and the love and fellowship of the Gospel left out. I think that in all cases where our Lord preached the words of truth, and His message was not received, He left them and removed to another city; and upon one occasion He could not do many mighty works on account of their unbelief. His directions to His disciples were that when their peace did not abide, they should leave their instruction and testimony, and remove to another city. And are not these directions binding in relation to those who bear the present truths of the Lord's speedy coming? We can only do our duty and the will of God, and leave the results with Him; for we know that Paul may plant, and Apollos water, but God gives the increase. And we may be comforted with the promise of our Lord, that those that labor shall receive wages, even eternal life in that kingdom where sighing and sorrow shall have fled away—where death shall never enter—where God's people shall be at rest from their labors and trials. Then shall the sleeping millions arise and sing, "O death! where is thy sting? O grave! where is thy victory?" The weary pilgrim sighs, "O come!" and many a sad heart would gladly join with God's servant upon the isle, and exclaim, "even so, come, Lord Jesus. Amen."

In this time of trial all we can do is to hope on—pray on—and fill up these moments to the glory of God. Let us serve Him with a pure motive, and a true heart, and when He who is to come shall appear, He will save us with an eternal salvation. But let us patiently wait till deliverance comes.

J. W. CRABTREE.

For The Crisis.

"A word to Women—Cause of disobedient Children."

In a late number of the Crisis, we find an article with the above caption referring to the irreverence and disobedience of children.

That this is the case we are very far from attempting to deny, but the cause to which the writer attributes it, viz. the conduct of mothers, is matter of question.

In the first place, man claims to be master of his own household from the authority of God's word. He requires of his wife and children, reverence and obedience. Here we wish to inquire if there is no duty enjoined on man? Is there no responsibility resting on him? Is he under no obligation to his wife and children? As a husband, is he not to respect his wife as the weaker vessel? and as such to aid her in whatever she has need, especially in the discipline of his children? Or, has the custom of leaving women to take care of themselves and families become so prevalant, that men are exempt from any care or concern about them? Do the Scriptures no longer require that man should render to his wife due benevolence, and love her as Christ loved the Church and gave himself for it, that he might present it to himself a glorious Church? I ask, where is the husband treating his wife with due respect, ruling well his house, that is not reverenced and obeyed as is fit in the Lord? It is very natural for children to treat their Mother as the Father does his Wife. Is the Church under obligations to reverence and obey Christ? And for what? Because He first loved her, and gave himself for her that He might present her spotless to himself, that her beauty and glory might be manifest; and she be to Him a crown.—And does she not live under His influence? and is she not nourished and cherished by it? And is there not a union existing between Christ and the Church that should characterize the efforts of parents, especially in the education of their children? If this were the case, and Fathers ruled well their own household, all might be benefited by their example; and we trust the state of society would be exceedingly improved; and Mothers be saved from the stigma of being the principal cause of the alarming state of society; and have less reason to "fret and scold," as the writer observes, which does no good. How many feeble women are left all day without any one to help them to care for the little ones, or aid in other important duties; and this almost from year to year. Their strength is overtaxed; they have but little or no time for the intellectual culture of their children; hence the unfavorable state of society, which without some remedy must grow worse and worse. For The Crisis.

Letter from Sr. M. A. Cotton.

PITTSFIELD, Mass., Oct. 1st, '55.

Dear Br. Merriam:—I have felt impressed for a few days to write a letter for the Crisis, and have prayed for wisdom to guide me. If the Lord would have me write, it will feed some one; and if not, I have no desire to. I never felt so exceedingly small as I have of late.—The more I see of the world, its pride, vanity, its professed wisdom; the more I seek to be guided by that wisdom which comes from above—to have my mind adorned with Paul's ornaments, instead of the accomplishments of the fashionable. Those only are truly wise who fear the Lord. Men seek the wisdom of this world, to obtain honor of men. But christians seek the wisdom of God, and consequently obtain the honor of God.

Where are we in this world's history? Oh, where are we? Just upon the verge of time! When I see men contending for worldly honors, my heart yearns after them; for I see what is coming—God have mercy!

Oh my Brn. and Srs. do be faithful a little longer—hold up your heads—fear not the frowns of an ungodly world but pity them—pray for them—Although they think you fools, take it all joyfully, remembering you are no better than your Master. Read over occasionally His sufferings. And if you have not the privilege of meeting with those of like precious faith, read yonr Master's sermon. Strive to follow His example, obey His commandments; and soon, oh soon, you will be gathered into that blissful, peaceful kingdom, to go no more out forever.

Your Sr. seeking for immortality in Christ. MARION A. COTTON.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Sr. S. J. Ingraham.

LOWELL, Sept. 25, 1855.

A few weeks since I was called in Providence to visit my Father who was then lying very ill. With a disconsolate heart I returned home; for I feared the disease would prove fatal. Alas, my fears were soon realized, and my beloved Father now slumbers in the dust. I am deeply afflicted, but trust I feel a childlike submission to my Heavenly Father's will.

How many hours, seated by my Father's side, have I spent in reading the Crisis: but those seasons are passed away never to return.

Should this letter meet the eye of my Brothers and Sisters, let me say to them, exhibit the same kindness to others as did our dear Father to us, and all around. Love the Lord; keep His commandments; be not ashamed of the words of Jesus; but bear the cross, that when He comes, you may "have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city. God grant that we may be an unbroken family in the Kingdom of heaven.

I desire the prayers of the Church that this affliction may work for my good by driving me to the throne of grace. I am resolved to strive with all my powers to gain that heavenly land where "Sickness and sorrow, pain and death,

Are felt and feared no more."

Brn. and Srs., be of good cheer; "our God will come," and at the appointed time we shall realize the consummation of the blessed Hope. Let us all be in readiness for the joyful event.

"Give joy or grief, give ease or pain,
Take health or friends away,
But let me find them all again,
In that Eternal Day."

S. J. INGRAHAM.

CHRIST IS MINE. A gentleman took a friend to the roof of his house to show him the extent of his possessions. Waving his hand about, "There," said he, "is my estate." Pointing to a great distance on one side, "Do you see that farm?—Well, that is mine." Pointing again to the other side, "Do you see that house? That also belongs to me." In turn, his friend asked, "Do you see that little village out yonder? Well, there lives a poor woman in that village who can say more than all this." "Ah! what can she say?" Why she can say, CHRIST IS MINE."

The Blind Girl.

"Shall I see in heaven?" said a fair blind girl;
"Will the streets of gold, and the gates of pearl,
Be unfolded there to my wonderng sight?
Will my home in heaven, dear mother, be light?

Shall I see in heaven? will my Savior's face
Meet my unveiled eyes in that glorious place?
And the shining ones with their harps of gold,
The ransomed of earth, shall I there behold?

Shall I see in heaven? will my mother there
Be known by her child in that world so fair?
Amid the bright forms of the countless blest,
Shall I see you, dear mother, and know you the best?"

"O yes, darling child, no dimness of sight
O'ercloudeth the eye in that land of light;
The darkness of earth will have vanished away,
There shineth forever the brightness of day."

Family Worship.

What can be more beautifully appropriate than the worship of God in families?

Here is a little company of human beings joined together in the most intimate connection—dwelling under one roof, fed at one table, supplied with the necessaries of life from sources of income that are common to them all, feeling themselves to have altogether common interests, common wants, and common exposures. It is granted that they all ought to worship God; is it not appropriate that they should worship Him together? Each of them ought to thank God for his daily food, and daily to ask God for the needed supply.—But the family take their food together.—It is supplied from a common store, and spread upon a common table, and the daily gatherings around that table are the recognized symbol of their close intimacy. Is there any other scene which ought to be sanctified with prayer, if not that where a family most frequently look in each other's faces—where the responsible providers distribute the liberal provision—where parental love lavishes itself upon its objects—and where the children not only have their bodies nurtured, but their minds and manners cultivated?

A prayerless family meal is a most unchristian, a most ungodly thing, and seldom does that graceless spirit whose plainest name is fashion, show her impiety more planly than when, at a social entertainment, she whispers that, as the family table would be too narrow for so numerous a company, so the family custom of giving thanks at table is too homely for so splendid an occasion: just as if the larger and costlier provision did not need the divine blessing, and did not call for thanks, as much as the ordinary meal; and just as if an unblest meal, partaken by a numerous company scattered through the ample spaces of a parlor, were any more Christian than the same thing at an ordinary table.

Nor is it only at table that families should worship. Sheltered by one roof, the family have laid them down in peace and slept, and awoke in safety, because the Lord hath sustained them. Coming from their several chambers, they meet and exchange their affectionate salutations, glad to feel," We are all here." It is a common protection they have shared. They have together been kept from the assassin, from the fire, from "the pestilence that walketh in darkness." Should not they kneel together, and give thanks to their heavenly Guardian? They are going forth too to duties, and to dangers, and they need a common guidance; shall they not ask it together? And at the close of the day, have they not equal reasons for united prayer and thanksgiving? They have all been led and kept by one Providence, and they all need to commit themselves to one divine Guardian. On both occasions it is appropriate, besides the prayer, to read the divine word together, and to unite, if they are able, in sacred song.

There will of course be mornings when all have not come from their chambers in the glow and the joy of health; there will be evenings when the family will sadly gather, returning from a new grave. Thenceforth, at the table and at the fireside, there will be "one vacant chair."—All families must have these days of sorrow. To whom shall they tell it? On whose friendly strength shall they lay it? There is no such other place for a bereaved family to soothe and comfort themselves as their family altar. Is it the father that is gone? Nowhere else will they find such comfort as kneeling, in their tears, at the family altar, and pouring out their prayers from their broken hearts, through the channel perhaps of a feebler and softer voice than that to whose manly tones they were accustomed.

Or has one of the little ones been taken? The table must henceforth lack the light of his happy face—the house will no more ring to his merry laugh; but there is no sweeter memory, when you see the white hands laid together on the still breast, than that you had seen them folded on the edge of the table at the giving of thanks, or on the chair by your side at the daily worship.

In joy and sorrow, amid all the varieties of domestic experience, they who live together may most appropriately and beneficially worship together.

Baxter's Estimate of Affliction.—Richard Baxter prosecuted his manifold labors as an author and preacher, under the constant embarrassment of bodily weakness and disease. His comment upon the case of the man whom the Savior healed at the pool of Bethesda, is not less affecting than singular.

"How great a mercy was it, to live thirty eight years under God's wholesome discipline. O my God, I thank thee for the like discipline of fifty-eight years; how safe a life is this, in comparison with full prosperity and pleasure!"

PARTICULAR NOTICE.

☞ In regard to the finances of the Wilbraham Camp Meeting, I have received a collection of about $2,40, from New Britain, and one more dollar pledged. I have sold $3,00 worth of knives given by Br. Grant; and have taken a counterfeit three dollar bill. About $25,00 deficit still remains, and if my Advent Brn. do not feel it their duty to help me out of this difficulty, I shall have to bear it. I thought I had enough to bear at the meeting. Every one knows that prudence and economy were used to reduce the expenses of that meeting to about $70. The lack was on the boarding tent: from the whole number of boarders there were between 50 and 60 free ones, there being 44 preachers, some of whom had families. On Saturday and Sunday it was rainy, and hundreds were prevented from coming, or we should have taken up much more in our collections.

Now the shortest way would be for the ministering Brn. to make the statement to their several congregations, and take up a collection. In this way the burden would not be felt. But if the Brn. who are well off do not feel willing to help me out of this trouble, just keep still as you have done, and you will not be troubled with another notice of the kind, if I do not get a dollar more.

☞ PLEASE ATTEND TO THIS. All persons owing for the Hymn Book, will please send the amount as soon as they can; and let it be done at once. The bill for paper, also the printer's and binder's bills, must be paid. Besides, I owe one hundred dollars, borrowed money, invested in the above work.

Will friends help me at once?

The Journal of Commerce of yesterday contains a letter from the Mayor of Norfolk, written on Sept. 18, from which the following is an extract:—

"Our friends, who had means, have all left us, and forgotten us in our deep distress, but God has raised up friends for us abroad; the good Samaritans from abroad have looked piteously upon us, and have placed at the disposal of the Howard Association more than $100,000 up to this time, and have thereby saved us from a great deal of suffering; without this aid we must have perished. The expenses of the Association must have been very great; averaging $2,500 or $3,000 a day. The need of the Association has not ceased, and cannot till the disease ceases. We had hoped that the fever for the last few days was on the decrease; but our hopes are gone. The disease is raging with equal violence as heretofore; not at the hospitals, for no one will go there, unless some stranger who has no home. But the suffering and misery in private houses is beyond description.

We have no papers published among us.—Both editors of the Beacon, Cunningham and Gateswood, dead. All hands at the Herald and Argus Offices, also News and Courier, down sick. Several of our valuable people have lately died. Wm. D. Delany, Esq., our late worthy and estimable Mayor, breathed his last this morning. Between now and frost, a space of 60 days at least, unless a kind Providence should interpose and arrest the disease, I fear that the greater part of the remaining population, about 5000, will be swept off

Norfolk is the most complete wreck you ever saw, or could imagine. 2000 or 2500 of the population have been swept off, and while the obscene and profligate that filled our lanes and alleys, have been removed like Autumn leaves, the very stamina and bone of our society, the mechanics, merchants, physicians, lawyers, ministers, all are gone. And still they fall."

The Fever. New Orleans, Sept. 26. There were 43 deaths at Vicksburg during the week ending yesterday, out of 170 cases. At Canton there are many deaths daily, and at many other points on the river the fever is raging with more or less violence.

☞ A fearful accident occured at Albany on Sunday, 23d. A bridge leading from State st. to a pier in the river while a hundred persons were upon it, on the occasion of a fire, suddenly fell and the crowd were thrown 20 feet into the water, or upon some logs, &c, together with the ruins of the bridge. A few persons were injured, but none seriously. A bridge in the same place fell fifteen years ago, and no less than twenty lives were lost. [Boston Transcript.

How Long the War has Lasted. The war in Europe is already two years old. The Russian ambassador left Constantinople on the 22d of May, 1853, and on the 14th of June the English and French fleets received orders to anchor in Besika bay. On the 26th of June, the emperor of Russia ordered his army to occupy the principalities. On the 14th of September two French and English war steamers, from the fleet at Besika bay, went to Constantinople.—On the 27th the Porte declared war against Russia and invited the English and French fleets to Constantinople. On the 2d of November the emperor of Russia declared war against Turkey. The French declaration of war was made in the month of March, 1853.

EUROPEAN NEWS.

EXTRACTS FROM ENGLISH PAPERS RECEIVED BY THE AMERICA.

On Saturday, the 8th inst., being a twelve month since the landing in the Crimea, and 316 days since the opening of the siege, the allied batteries made a final and victorious assault on the Malakoff Tower The assault was preceded by a terrific bombardment, and a dispatch from Gortschakoff, permitted to transpire at Berlin, says:—"Our works suffered much. Precisely at noon of the 8th the whole disposable force of the besieging armies moved forward in a fourfold attack. The extreme right of the French attack was directed against the Little Redan, which they carried, but had to abandon from a fierce charge of the Russians. The second and principal assault of the French was against the Malakoff, which, after six repulses, they carried by storm, and decided the fate of the day. A third attack, made by the British against the Great Redan, completely failed,—for although they succeeded in gaining a temporary possession of the salient angle of the works, they were speedily driven back, and the British loss is numbered at 2000 killed and wounded. The fourth portion of the assault was made by the French, under Gen. Desalles, against the Central Battery, but they also failed."

The other events of the siege are embraced in the following official despatches:—

Capture of the Malakoff. Crimea, Sep. 8—11 P. M. [From Gen. Simpson.] The allied forces attacked the defences of Sebastopol this day, at 12 o'clock. The assault on the Malakoff has been successful, and the work is in possession of the French. The attack of the English against the Redan did not succeed.

Six hundred and fifty soldiers and twenty seven officers were taken prisoners in the Malakoff.

Evacuation of the Southern Side [Report from Gen. Simpson.] Sebastopol is in possession of the allies. The enemy during the night and this morning evacuated the south side, exploding their magazines and setting fire to the whole of the town. All the men of-war were burnt during the night, with the exception of three steamers, which are plying about the harbor, and the bridge communicating with the north side is broken down. Our casualties are great. During the night the Russians have sunk the remaining line-of-battle ships in Sebastopol harbor.

Branchier Redoubt, Sept 9—3 A M.—[From Gen. Pellissier.] Karabelnaia and the south of Sebastopol no longer exist. The enemy, perceiving our solid occupation of the Malakoff, decided upon evacuating the place, after having destroyed and blown up by mines nearly all the defences. Having passed the night with most of my troops, I can assure you that everything in the Karabelnaia is blown up, and from what I could see the same must be the case in our left line of attack.

Crimea, Sept. 10—11 P. M. (Subsequent from Gen. Pelissier.) I inspected to-day Sebastopol, and its lines of defence. The mind cannot form an exact picture of our victory, the full extent of which can only be understood by an inspection of the place itself. The multiplicity of the works of defence, and the material means applied thereto, exceed by far anything hitherto seen in the history of war.

The London Post says:—The English loss in the assault on the Redan was 500 to 600 killed and 1400 wounded, including 141 officers.

The Paris Moniteur says:—To the morning of the 11th 4500 were wounded, including 240 officers, who had gone to the ambulances. Dead not ascertained, but probably short of 2000.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times writes that five French generals were killed, besides ten superior officers. It is also affirmed that Generals McMahon and Trocheau had died of wounds, and that Gen. Bosquet was either killed or wounded.

Gen. Pelissier is created a Marshal of France.

France and England. Paris was illuminated on account of the news from Sebastopol.

A grand national Te Deum was celebrated by the Emperor at the Church of Notre Dame.

Queen Victoria sends an address of thanks to her army, and directs Gen. Simpson to congratulate Marshal Pelissier on his brave victory.

Throughout France and England the rejoicing is immense.

Armistice and Capitulation. Paris correspondence says:—Gen Pelissier telegraphed for instructions in case Gortschakoff should ask to capitulate, and the reply reported is that the Russians must surrender at discretion, lay down their arms, and give up all the fortified places in the Crimea, including Odessa, with all the munitions of war, and without doing any previous damage thereto. But Gortschakoff has not yet asked for terms.

France. An attempt was made on the Emperor, by a man named Belleonani, who fired two pistols at a carriage supposed to contain the Emperor, but only contained some of the ladies in waiting on the Empress. The attempt was made at the door of the Italian Opera. The assassin was arrested, and being considered insane, was sent to an asylum.

Russia. The telegraph from St. Petersburg says the Czar intends leaving on the 13th for Moscow and Warsaw, attended by Count Nesselrode, and it is thought will arrange an interview with the King of Prussia.

The allies are still supposed to be meditating an attack on Revel.

There is no news from Asia. The Russians interrupt communications.

Latest by Telegraph from London to the Agent of the Associated Press. London 11 A M. Paris correspondence says it is reported that 25,000 men have embarked at Balaklava for the north of Sebastopol; also that the Russians are in full retreat towards Perekop.

The Paris Debats has an editorial, discussing whether Sebastopol is tenable by the allies while the Russians are masters of all the forts on the north side, and fronting the sea. The Debats asserts that it is quite tenable, the possession of ports Cherzourg and Balaklava superseding the necessity of entering the harbor.

The Baltic. A despatch from Dantzic of the 14th, says;—"The blockade ships are expected to be ordered home on Monday next.

London. 11 A. M. It is rumored at the clubs to day that the allies found 1200 guns within the lines of Sebastopol, also that the Russians were falling back on Backschairi, but French rumors say that Gortschakoff will certainly hold the north side to the last extremity. Also, that the allied Admirals have sent a despatch saying it is not expedient to enter the harbor of Sebastopol until Fort Constantine is silenced. Probably the allies would attack.

The War in the East. The spectacle presented by this bloody conflict, in proportion as it proceeds, becomes more and more sad and revolting. It has been said that as the ages roll on, as mankind become more and more civilised, war is gradually divested of its horrors, and that even the invention of new and more destructive engines of death has the effect of making the actual carnage less. The history of events in the Crimea for the last year, unfortunately for those who take this view, does not show that war has become less wasteful of human life, or that men have become more reluctant to pursue war to its bloodiest extremities. A long interval of peace had led those who hoped well for the human race to imagine that the day of such conflicts as devastated Europe in the early years of the present century would never return. The instinct of brutal ferocity, it was thought, had been weeded out of the human heart, at least to such a degree that the peacefully-disposed would always be able to hold in check the fiercer spirits who panted for war. The events of the last year have broken up this delusion. All the horrors of the time when wars were prosecuted for ends of conquest have come back upon us. Man is still, in spite of the boasts of civilization, a beast of prey. At Sebastopol, tigers and wolves have been springing at each others throats, and tearing each other in pieces. They are just so far tamed as to obey their keepers who hold them in leashes, and lead them up to the horrid combat.—[New York Evening Post.

Spain and the Pope. There has been no little fault found with some persons in this country, for asserting that the Roman Church and Pontiff meddled with Governments and politics in other countries.

Any reader can judge of this matter for himself, after perusing the following

The Spanish Ministry has lately published an important exposition addressed to the Queen, of the relations subsisting between Spain and the Romish government, together with the correspondence which has been carried on between the two governments since December last. The exposition begins with the remark, that the allocution of the Pope, in the secret consistory of the 26th of July, with respect to the ecclesiastical affairs of Spain, obliges the government to manifest to the nation, on whose side have been prudence and moderation, and on whose side aggression.

The Ministers say:

Your Majesty's Government desires that even the confidential charges and instructions (documents which it is not customary to publish) should see the public light on this solemn occasion.

Its impartiality will thus be notorious, and the admonition of His Holiness, unjust in its substance and violent in its form, will receive the most complete reply.

The Government does not recognize, as no independent Government has ever recognized, the right which the Holy See seeks to arrogate to itself of declaring null the laws made by your Majesty with the consent of the Cortes; of appreciating falsely the state of our country, establishing a sort of divorce between your Majesty and the nation and the Government; or of placing in doubt the legitimacy of the acquisitions of the estates which were ecclesiastical, alienated in virtue of civil laws to which the Holy See itself had already given its assent and approbation.

What are the Sound Dues? As these dues may possibly give rise to a serious dispute between the United States and Denmark, it will be interesting to know what they are. The "Sound" is a narrow strait lying between the Island of Zetland, belonging to the Danes, and the Swedish coast, and gives entrance to the Baltic sea. The fortress of Cronburg Castle commands the passage, and extracts a payment from all vessels entering the Baltic; the ships of Denmark herself have to pay, as well as foreign tonnage. The origin of this exaction is, that in ancient times Denmark undertook to build and sustain certain light-houses along the coast, for which the Hansetowns agreed to pay toll.

England, France Holland and Sweden pay a duty of one per cent. on every cargo entering the Baltic. Other countries, including the United States, pay one and a quarter per cent.; even Danish ships are taxed to this rate. In the year 1826, a treaty recognizing this duty was concluded between the United States and Denmark. This treaty, however, according to one of its stipulations, may be dissolved by either of the parties, provided they give one year's notice of their intention.

During the Presidency of John Tyler, our Government determined to put a forcible end to the imposition. Mr. Upshur, then Secretary of State, fitted out a fleet of merchantmen and vessels of war, under Commodore Stewart, which he designed should force its way into the Baltic, and thus at once rid the United States of the Sound duties. Mr. Upshur's sudden death, however, by the explosion of a cannon, just as the fleet was ready to start, delayed the exhibition, and it was finally abandoned. Other attempts were made to abolish this tax. While Denmark was at war with Schles-wig-Holstein, Mr. Flenniken, the United States Minister, offered on the part of his government to pay Denmark $250,000 for a ten years' suspension of the dues; his death prevented the proposal coming to a head.

Finally, on the 12th of April last, the United States notified the Danish Government of their intention to cease paying the Sound duties, and the stipulation of the treaty will accordingly expire next spring. Should no amicable arrangement of the question be arrived at in the meanwhile, we may then expect to see our vessels passing the Sound under warlike convoy. A serious conflict will then most possibly arise,

The Danes are much alarmed upon this subject, and fear the United States will seize upon their West India possessions, the Islands of St. Thomas and St. Croix. They are believed to be soliciting the good offices of the French Government.

The Sound Dues. Berlin, Sept. 5. The question of the Sound-dues, raised by the United States, promises to be exceedingly annoying to the Prussian Government. The convention concluded between Prussia and Denmark on the 26th May, 1846, expired on the 1st July, 1851, and it merely required due notice to put an end to its stipulations. Nevertheless, and notwithstanding the complaints from the commercial interests, there has never been any great anxiety to get rid of these Dues. The payment, it is true, is exceedingly burdensome and unpopular; but as Russia, foreseeing that Denmark would one day be hers, has always been in favor of their continuance, that has been sufficient for all sound-thinking men here to uphold them as salutary and necessary. Now, however, it is easy to foresee that the United States will refuse to pay the Dues after the 14th April of next year; and therefore, that from the moment when any one of the states whom Denmark has been taxing refuses payment for the future, the others will scarcely be able to submit to it in the face of public opinion.

The blow which Russia has received, in the capture of a portion of the most formidable stronghold in the southern part of her dominions, will be felt to be a heavy one. But we must not deceive ourselves by assuming that the fall of the southern side of Sebastopol will terminate the war. Russia, doubtless, will be stunned and staggered by the blow; but it will not prove fatal

She will sufficiently recover from its effects to renew her warfare with the Western Powers.—For that we must be prepared. She must be punished yet more severly before she will be brought to her knees to sue humbly and imploringly for peace. The allied forces must therefore vigorously follow up the advantages they have gained. The Czar must be met and vanquished in other parts of his dominions, as well as in the Crimea. The latter lies, indeed, at the extremity of his empire. The war must be brought, in earnest, nearer to the heart of his dominions. It must be brought close to St. Petersburg, if not to the very palace of that city. There is no reason why it should not be carried to Cronstadt. It ought to have been carried thither before this time. Let it be so now—Better late than never. When the Czar hears the roar of our cannon in the imperial residence in St. Petersburg, and sees Cronstadt in ashes, then, and not till then, will he be fain to prostrate himself at the feet of France and Great Britian, and gladly and gratefully accept of whatever terms of peace they may be pleased to propose to him.—[London Advertiser.

The Piedmonts of Turin states from Venice that the number of persons arrested in that city and province for political motives during the month of August last was 414.

The Battles. We have given the accounts of the sanguinary battles in the Crimea. No event since the day of the battle of Waterloo, has produced such undisguised expressions of satisfaction throughout the British empire. In every town and city of any importance, there are bonfires, illuminations and public rejoicings at the news of the extermination of the southern part of Sebastopol, after an attack and loss unparalleled in history, and after a defence which has scarcely a likeness in the annals of war, with the whole issue of the great consequences before them

Size of the Russian Fleet Destroyed at Sebastopol. According to the Courier des Etats Unis, the Russian flag counted at Sebastopol, in the month of September, 1854 17 ships, 5 of 120 guns, the remainder of 84 guns; four frigates of 60 guns; four corvettes or brigs; twelve steamships; and eighty-two ships of inferior rank; in all 108 ships, carrying 2,200 guns. This colossal armament was destroyed by the Russians themselves, to prevent it from falling into the hands of their enemies.

Affairs of Italy.

The following extract will be found interesting, although written some time since:

Turin, Monday, June 25, 1855.

The intelligence from all parts of Italy clearly indicates that the despotic Governments of the Peninsula grows daily more nervous as the protracted events of the war threaten to involve all Europe in the struggle At Rome an attempt has been made on the life of Cardinal Antonelli, the Pope's chief adviser. It appears a band of the secret societies of Italy had long since sworn vengeance against the Cardinal, and a few days since they put this threat in practice. One Defelice tried to stab Antonelli coming out of the Vatican, but made a vain effort, and was arrested and is now going to be tried by the Sacred Consulta, a sort of inquisition, which still exists in Rome. No doubt he will lose his life. The affair has created a great stir in Rome, and proves the powers that be are not safe from the hand of the assassin. It is a very painful state of things, brought about by the ignorant Governments of Southern Italy.

The Government of Naples is so much alarmed by the progress of the war, and the sympathy which the people express for the Western Powers, that it is now forbidden to speak on the subject, and the police have orders to punish all who report events of the Crimea, by flogging in the first instance, and then they are to be tried as for a State offence. This is an advance, if it be put in practice, on the worst features of the Neapolitan Government Meanwhile, the Court and the King sympathize with Russia, and his Majesty supplies the Czar with sulphur to make his powder.

It is said that the Italian despotic Sovereigns, fearing for the safety of their thrones, will form a grand army-league, like the Kings and Princes of Germany. Austria and Naples are to be the head of this Union, and it is proposed that in case of revolution all are to join and help each other. But the French, who have still a force in the Roman States, are opposed to this, and will not allow any such contract. So there is again material for a rupture. Altogether things look very threatening and revolutionary. I don't think we shall have a permanent power in Europe for many a day to come.—[Correspondence of the New York Daily Times.

Obituary.

Died in Falmouth, Me., Sept. 20th, Stephen Henry, son of Br. Eben C and Sr. Sarah Field, aged one year and seven months.

This is the fifth child that has been torn from the fond embrace of this dear, afflicted family by the cruel hand of death. But they have been so often called to mourn, they sorrow not as those who have no hope; for they rejoice in the sweet promise that "their work shall yet be rewarded," and their children "shall come again from the land of the enemy." May the blessed hope of the Gospel continue to cheer these afflicted friends till they reach that land where "there shall be no more death."

Died in Sandisfield, Sept. 17th, M. Grant, aged 17 months, infant son of Br. Lyman Waters.

The bereaved parents were intending to have started for their home in Penn. the day the little one sickened; but death, our enemy, has robbed them of their pleasant little son, and far from their home they have laid him down to sleep. Yet they have the promise, "The children of thy servants shall continue," and in the morning of the resurrection, he will come forth to die no more.

"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

"Oh sorrow not, ye stricken ones,
As those who have no hope in God,
For the beloved—who has gone
To rest beneath the quiet sod.

But fling away your doubts and fears,
Cling to the promise of the word;
Believe—for Jesus soon will come,
Then he you loved will be restored."

Lewellyn Eugene, youngest son of William and Mariah Lyman, died April 15th, 1855, aged nine years, five months, and twenty-six days. He died in the faith of soon entering the Kingdom

The following lines were written by his brother, G. A. Lyman.

A bright-eyed boy with golden hair,
In waving curls around his brow,
With beaming smiles had promised fair,
When he to manhood's prime should grow,
To be his parents' hope and joy:
But death has claimed that bright-eyed boy!

So have I seen at dawn of day,
A blossom on its parent tree,
All bright with dew-drops, fade away,
When wild winds sang a symphony;
But in a better land than ours,
Shall bloom again these fading flowers.

NEW HAMPSHIRE CONFERENCE.

The undersigned, appointed a committee at the last N. H. Conference holden at Loudon Ridge, Sept. 1854, "to call the next N. H. Conference at such time and place" as they might deem proper, would give notice that there will be a State Conference of Adventists, to convene at Lake Village, Thursday, Oct. 18, at 10 o'clock A. M., and continue over the Sabbath.

It is hoped that the Brn. will come together at this meeting with the "fruit of the Spirit;" and the happy result be similar to that which attended the late Camp meeting at Wilbraham, where ministering Brn. of different views were brought together in love, after a long time of absence.

It is also hoped that ministering Brn from all parts of the State will try to be present; and although we have been in some measure separated in our labors for a few years past, yet it is hoped that all party feeling on both sides, and ALL sides, will be laid aside, and we once more come together, not for strife and debate, but for mutual assistance and the general good of the cause of Christ.

We must all very soon give an account of our stewardship.

The Brn. at Lake Village are few in number, yet they are disposed to do what they can to entertain the Conference, although they will not be able to take care of many horses; but arrangements will be made to keep horses on reasonable terms.

Let there be a general rally, and all who attend, both ministers and laymen, be willing to make some sacrifice to save souls from death.

It is no time to linger—"up, get you out of this place," and hasten, for our eternal all depends upon keeping our lamps trimmed and burning. Come, Lord Jesus. Amen

Lines addressed to Mrs. Caroline Brown, on the death of two Children.

Here, side by side our loved ones lie;
Our hearts are sad—we mourn—we sigh,
O Lord, thy kingdom soon restore,
When death's sad works shall be no more.

We long to have the monster slain,
We long to have Messiah reign;
We long to clasp each lovely one,
Where pain and sorrow never come!

How oft are we reminded
That death has still the power
To take away our loved ones
In an unguarded hour.

And you, with other mourners,
Must meekly bear a part;
And murmur not at trials,
Although they break your heart.

Your little Irville's left you,
Your lovely, only boy;
Yet, bear this night of sorrow—
The MORNING bringeth JOY!

You'll listen for his foot-step,
You'll think you hear his call,
While still and calm he sleepeth,
Within death's silent hall.

The little robes of childhood
Which once your darling wore,
In all their graceful beauty,
Will deck his limbs no more.

But see! the Conqueror cometh
To triumph o'er the grave,
And bring us back the loved ones
For whom our hearts so crave.

Then, Mother, cease thy weeping,
And bid thy grief depart;
The Morn of Resurrection
Full soon will cheer thy heart!

The Earth grows Old.

The Earth, like a garment is growing old;
Vegetation decays 'neath the soil,
A withering blight nips the fruit on the vine,
And the laborer mourns o'er his toil.

The Earth, like a garment is growing old,
The nations are gathering for war,
Anguish, and fear, and sufferings untold,
Are felt in our land, everywhere.

The Earth, like a garment is waxing old,
But rank grow the thistle and thorn,
And the weary Pilgrim on every side,
Is met with derision and scorn.

He can bear it all—for the Earth grows old,
His Lord cannot tarry long;
"I shall soon overcome!" in rapture he cries,
"I shall join in the victor's song!"

Roxbury Tent Meeting.

Dear Br. Merriam:—Agreeably to appointment we met in Roxbury to hold a Tent Meeting, on Saturday the 22d inst. When I arrived, found some gathered in the saw mill, (as the tent was not up,) listening to a discourse from Br. Bassett of Bridgeport. His text was 2 Peter 1: 20. "Knowing this first, that no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation." His discourse was comforting to the saints, gathered from Litchfield, Waterbury and New Milford.

In the evening, with the help of the Lord, I preached from John 18: 38.—"What is truth?" Had the aid of the Spirit of Truth, while discoursing on the subject.

Sunday morning—had an old fashioned love-feast in which we broke the loaf.—The feeling of those that spoke on this occasion accorded with the language of Br. Denny of Waterbury. "I have prayed as did Job, "hide me in the grave." But I am not ready to die yet; for I believe the Lord will come this fall. We could all say, come, Lord Jesus, we hope it will be so; but can see no conclusive evidence.

Next in order, we had preaching by Br. Munn from Prov. 3. 6. "In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths. Most of us, if not all, were satisfied that God had directed our paths, in the movements of the Advent Church.

P. M. Preaching by Br. Munn from Rev. 11: 18. He gave the chronology of the text, spoke of the two first woes, shewed their fulfillment in the past. After preaching, we administered the emblems of a crucified Savior.

Between the close of the afternoon service and preaching in the evening, we had a prayer meeting where we began to see the fruits of our labor. Backsliders were aroused—sinners moved and the Church in some of her members was quickened.

Ev. Br. Basset talked on the last part of the 11th of Daniel. He spoke one hour; then I in my weakness, yet made strong by the Spirit, talked an hour from 2 Pet. 1: 14. Had liberty in speaking, feeling that the Church needed coarse food; but that which would cause them to grow, if received, at the close of the meeting.

My heart was made sad to part with those whom I loved in the Lord; but we must part for a while, soon to meet on Beulah's happy shore. O blessed thought!

Monday. Passed sweetly at Br. Stoddard's and Munn's.

Monday eve. Had what Br. Munger calls a "digging out time." Most of the Church were in a low state; but we betook ourselves to prayer, and ere we left our knees, the Lord heard our supplications. When the meeting closed our hearts were all gladdened to see the unity of feeling that was manifest.

Upon the whole, it was the best little meeting I ever attended. I believe God was glorified; and certain it is, our souls were blessed. Truly we were richly repaid for all our labors.

O Brn., let us not get weary in well doing. Comfort the saint—alarm the sinner—induce the backslider to return—and all with the spirit and words of Jesus. Amen.

Your Br. G. A. BARKER.

For The Crisis.

Letter from Br. William Shepherd.

ELIZABETH CITY, N. J.,
Sept. 24, 1855.

Dear Br. Merriam:—I send you enclosed———to aid in furnishing the Crisis to some of the Lord's "hidden ones," who live "as having nothing, and yet possessing all things"—the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of God's eternal kingdom which He hath promised to them that love Him. Jesus says, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal. But lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through, nor steal. For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also."

Again:—"Sell that ye have, and give alms; provide yourselves bags which wax not old; a treasure in the heavens that faileth not." Luke 12: 33.

Does it not seem that this instruction of our Lord was most emphatically intended for the Church just a little while preceding His return? Look at the connection: it is when she is under the similitude of men that wait for their Lord, when he will return from the wedding. If this be so, do the words of Jesus have that practical bearing upon us which they ought? Do we at all times live as though we were taking heed to beware of covetousness, believing in our hearts that "a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth?"

"Strive to enter in at the straight gate; for many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in, and shall not be able." And why will they seek to enter and shall not be able? for the very simplest reason possible; because they will not obey Jesus' teachings. Here is where so many will come short; seeking to save their lives, yet through disobedience will lose them, rejecting the counsel of God against themselves, like some of old; not giving heed to the Savior's instructions.

O may God arouse the Church to such an active, practical, working, holy, and determined "going forth" as shall fully meet the demands of His dear Son, that when He cometh she may be hailed with the happy plaudit, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." Yes, God help us to stand in a waiting position; and if found in that attitude, we shall be found with but little baggage to encumber us"

In the words of the Apostle, let us "lay aside every weight and the sin that doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus," &c.

Dear Br. there certainly is meaning in this "going forth" of the virgins which I never saw till now; it brings us to the edge of the wilderness typified by the Israelites in one of their last encampments at Etham, just previous to their deliverance. (See Ex. 13: 20.) Consequently, it brings us to that critical state of things which should most emphatically try our faith. O let us look to it, then, that we have no desire to return as did the Israelites; but that we trust in the living God and press forward toward the mark, for the prize of our high calling in Christ Jesus, having our conversation as becometh His glorious Gospel, that we "come behind in no gift, waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."

O let there be such a "going forth" that the Church may be filled with all the heavenly fruits of righteousness to the praise and glory of God. Let their be such a going forth" that she will be mighty in the Scriptures, and filled with joy, peace and the Holy Ghost. Such a going forth as will render her a living epistle known and read of all men, potent through God to the pulling down the strong holds of Satan, Such a going forth as will cause wicked men and devil's to fear and tremble, and will warn and alarm the world of the impending crisis—the Judgment day—and peradventure lead some poor sinners, at least, to gospel repentance that they may be saved in that day. Such a going forth as will leave nothing undone that should be done; bringing the Church to that divine description, "Beautiful as Tirzah, comely as Jerusalem, terrible as an army with banners," which shall enable her with holy boldness to claim the promises of God and win His constant approval. In a word, a going forth which shall place her in a position to enjoy blessings present, and realize in future all that is contained in that glorious benediction of the Apostle Paul, namely, "And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." Let there be such a going forth as this—that God may be glorified—His truth extolled—His Son honored—the Gospel made effectual—saints refreshed and quickened—sinners brought to repentance and reformation—the world warned. O may the God of Abraham help us. Amen.

And now, Peace be with the Brn., and love with faith, from God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.

The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with thy spirit, Amen.

Your Br. in Christ waiting for His return from heaven.

Sings of The Times.

BY ISAAC ADRIAN.

There are but few living expositors of the sacred page, who do not assign the present epoch for the outpouring of the last apocalyptic vial, although they may differ in regard to final results. If it be true that the seventh Angel is about pouring his vial of accumulated wrath into the air, those now living must witness scenes of terror and slaughter, such as no former age has ever beheld.

If thine eyes can discern the contents of that Holy Book, then count the number of the awful phenomena which are to follow the outpouring of this seventh vial, and see each phenomenon dyed in the blood of the millions of the apostate nations. That consumptive power marked by divine precision, as the blasphemous harlot, and traced in historic record by the long trail of human bones and martyr's blood, is now to receive its exterminating blow. If indeed the last outpouring is already in the air, we stand upon the threshold of a mighty drama such as no age has ever witnessed, or the imagination of man ever conceived.

It would not be a difficult task to find in the present state of the world a plausible indication to say the least, that these events are about to sweep in awful grandeur over a doomed world. The presence of universal discontent, the absence of all harmonious action in the moral and political world, the evidence of distraction in every social relation, and the upheavings of humanity in every department are powerful manifestations in favor of this prophetic picture. The world is being moved from its very foundation, while every law of nature seems loosed from its ancient moorings and driven by every furious wind over the raging billows of chance. What power is sufficient to quell the night tempest or turn this universal chaos into harmony and order? None but the Almighty. O Sovereign of the universe, is there one drop of mercy left for this poor world, or hast thou turned thy face away and doomed all things to death? Thanks to His name who has secured His Church from this last cup of wrath. They long ere this had drank their cup of woe, poured out by kings leagued with the harlot power, and now the scene must change. The outside world are subjects of this last catastrophe, and now must drink their cup down to the very dregs, and wring them out. They must drink, and fall, and rise no more.—Lo streams of blood already run like rivers—peace has fled the earth—the counsels of the nations call her name in vain—the fields groan with the burden of the dead, and shrieks of dying agony are wafted up to heaven on every breeze, while panting warriors strain their bloodshot eyes for other victims of their rage.

Does not the day of God roll on? will not the proclimation, ere the lapse of many months, go forth to all the fowls of heaven to come and eat the supper of my God?

Dear Br., the last, the awful hour is coming; these thoughts are not the result of heated imagination, but have their foundation in sober truth. Oh may we be ready to stand when He appeareth.

Yours with respect, ISAAC ADRIAN.

Faith—An Incident.

In a pleasant town not far from Boston, surrounded by all that wealth of purse and true excellence of character could purchase, there dwelt a family whose sky of serenity was once suddenly broken by a cloud of unexpected darkness, gathering from a little spot to a large portentou gloom, spreading itself over their whole dwelling, and threatening to involve for awhile every object near and dear to them in its obscurity.

The beloved head of this family, the pious servant of his great Master, the faithful steward over much and many, was called upon to bear a sore and heavy burden. For disease in an appalling shape had fastened its grasp upon his victim, and now death, or the deep stroke of a surgeon's knife, were alternatives that met the anxious inquiry of the meek sufferer.

Acutely sensitive, of a peculiarly nervous organization, and not susceptible to the influence of ether, a thought of submitting to the operation for removing a tumor of the carbuncle species, was one of dread and terror; but the day, the hour, had come, when to delay longer with any safety had become impossible. The physician, a fellow-laborer in the vineyard with his patient, and a kinsman also, with all earnestness besought Mr. J——to yield to his advice. He had not to point to the Balm in Gilead, nor to the Physician there, for a spiritual communion was in existence beyond the need of words. It was with this earth's probation that he had to do, and he strove to cheer his drooping friend by calling to mind the devout man who was chosen by the Lord as a subject for still greater evils than that before them. "I know that to die, would be gain for me," said Mr. J——, "but now—just now, my family, my children, do so require my presence, I would live; and yet that dread alternative!" It was evening, and he stated his intention of submitting on the morrow, but the physician, true to his conviction, expressed a necessity for the performance of the operation that very night!

The patient could not be lulled to insensibility by ether, nor drugged by opiates; and in the full consciousness of all he was to meet, like the martyr holding his hand in the flame, ten o'clock came to bring with it the surgeons and the assembled family, who, by his request, were to be near him, while, in the strong light of the Sun of Righteousness, there stood his gentle wife to hold in her own hand a light by which the operators might see to pierce and probe the wound upon a side whereon her trust had loved to lean so long.

The purpose of this relation is to show how beautiful and how sure a thing is faith.

Mr. J——was a Christian—a man every way calculated to render Christianity attractive. His suavity of manner won toward him persons of various ages in life. I once heard a gay young man say that he should desire no higher pleasure than to be in such society a week; and his younger sister assured me I should admire him, "For," said she, "he has a poem on his lips for every subject one can suggest, and like Sophocles, he ought to be surnamed the Bee, from the sweetness of his verses!"

And now, through that trying hour, was he supported by his faith. It did not benumb his senses, neither did it check one emotion of his heart. But it raised him above the sharpness of his physical trial, and with his spiritual eye steadily fixed upon his Divine Master, whose image he had striven to reflect in his own life, he felt that the words of the Savior had been uttered unto him, as to the blind man, "Thy faith hath saved thee."

An Immediate Answer.

While pastor of the church at H——, I became acquainted with a case of spiritual depression of the most painful interest.

Mrs. W——was a member of the Presbyterian Church, and for years maintained an eminent Christian character. Her lovely spirit enchained the affections of a large circle of friends.

Gradually there arose over her the clouds of doubt as to the reality of her conversion, which with slow but certain progress spread despondency over her heart, till at length she sunk into despair. Every smile of the Savior's face seemed to be hidden, every ray of hope blotted out. At first she suffered in melancholy silence; but declining health soon gave evidence of her soul's anguish. Her pastor visited her frequently, but without any apparent result. Many kind friends conversed with her, seeking to encourage her with a relation of their own experience, but nothing seemed to meet her case.—Still the worm gnawed at her heart, thick darkness shrouded her soul, and, at last, she was laid upon her couch, weary and heart-broken, to die.

One night about midnight I was awakened by a knock at my door, and learned that Mrs W——was not expected to live till morning, and wished to see me. I hastily went with the messenger, and found her surrounded by her anxious weeping family. Her face was fearfully calm, but the sunken cheek and the strangely staring eye showed the ravages of her heart-sickness.

I spoke to her in a cheerful tone, but it brought no smile to the white cheek. I spoke of Calvary, but she wept not.—Opening the Bible, I tried to draw from that ever-flowing fountain of consolation, the most cheering words of comfort and of promise. I asked her if she could believe them; she said, "Certainly I believe them, but they do not meet my case." I said to her, "Shall I pray with you?" She replied, "You may, if you wish." I knelt with that afflicted family, and in the silence of that midnight-hour we poured out our hearts for her to Him who is touched with the feeling of our infirmities. As I prayed a trembling hand was laid upon mine, and when I arose a sweet smile illumined her face as, waving her hand, she said, "It's all gone, it's all gone," and then the gushing tears choked her utterance.

In prayer that night of gloom was dispelled. By prayer the sunlight of a Savior's face returned, and the fountain of bitter waters which was wasting the heart was broken up, and poured itself forth in joyous tears.

Then there was joy in that household. Health returned, when the heart's wound was healed; and for years that once afflicted one continued one of the happiest Christians that I ever knew.

"Come, ye disconsolate, where'er ye languish,
Come to the mercy-seat, fervently kneel;
Here bring your wounded hearts, here tell your anguish,
Earth has no sorrow that heaven cannot heal."

For The Crisis.

Letter from Br. E. W. Watson.

Brethren and Sisters:—I can say, for one, I am resolved, come what may, to serve the Lord with all my heart—to forsake the world, the pleasures and luxuries of this life—to set my heart on things above, and to live daily more devoted to my Heavenly Father.

I long for that day to dawn when the earth shall be cleansed by fire from its pollution and curse, and the saints enter into that rest that remaineth for the people of God; O Brn. and Srs., let us all so live that when our Lord shall appear, we may have it said to us, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world: For I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took me in: Naked, and ye clothed me: I was sick, and ye visited me: I was in prison, and ye came unto me. Then shall the righteous answer him, saying, Lord, when saw we thee an hungered, and fed thee? or thirsty, and gave thee drink?—When saw we thee a stranger, and took thee in? or naked, and clothed thee? Or when saw we thee sick, or in prison, and came unto thee? And the King shall answer and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Matt. 25: 34–40.

May we all come up on higher ground as we see the day approaching, and manifest by our lives that we are the children of God. While in this world of sin and sorrow, let us look to Him who is ever ready to extend a helping hand and lead us onward to the Kingdom of God.

Yours truly in Christ,

ELHANAN W. WATSON.

For The Crisis.

Letter from Br. G. Dillabaugh.

Br. Merriam:—I see by the Crisis of the 8th inst., that you have numbered me in the category of the ministering Brn. who attended the Wilbraham Camp Meeting. This is a mistake; I am not filling that office. I never have assumed the title of minister, or Teacher of public assemblies. My seat is with the lowest; a hearer, and not an instructor. Freely I have received the truth, and most cheerfully I converse, upon every suitable occasion, with both saint and sinner, on Israel's hope, for which Paul was bound in chains. The ever blessed and soul-stirring truths concerning the soon coming of Messiah, and His glorious reign on David's throne, together with the necessary preparation to meet that event, is my whole theme. O, I love it; the truth is precious to me.—But it is truth I love to listen to; I have searched my Bible for myself, and I think I understand the Gospel as it was preached to Abraham, by the Prophets, Jesus and His Apostles. But I am far from believing that all who assume the title of "Minister" do preach the Gospel, and I will not except Second Advent Ministers, either. Indeed, I think that some might be better employed in making tents, or engaged in some other honest calling, than in the work of the Ministry.

Why such diversity of opinions now? When disciples were made to Christ under the Apostles' preaching, they all believed the same things, and spake the same things; and so it would be now, if men would first learn to be scribes well instructed unto the kingdom, and capable of rightly dividing the word of TRUTH.

But let these remarks suffice on this point.

I am happy to state that I was highly pleased with the spirit of union that seemed to characterize the meeting, as there were representatives from almost all classes of Second Advent believers. Indeed, the friends I met with at that meeting, seemed to manifest the Spirit of my Master, and they were a praying people.

O may the God of Israel impart sustaining grace to each one in these days of peril, to war the good warfare, fight the good fight of faith, and finally obtain Eternal Life in the kingdom soon to come.

G. DILLABAUGH.

Be Firm.

Let the winds blow, and the waves of society beat and frown about you, if they will; but keep your soul in rectitude, and it will be firm as a rock. Plant yourself upon principle and bid defiance to misfortune. If gossip, with her poisoned tongue, meddle with your good name—if her disciples, who infest every town and hamlet, make your disgrace the burden of their song, heed them not. It is their bread and their meat to slander. Treat their idle words as you would treat the hissing of a serpent, or the buzzing of many insects. Carry yourself erect; and by the serenity of your countenance, and the purity of your life, give the lie to all who would berate and belittle you. Why cower and tremble in the presence of the rich? Why

"Crook the pliant hinges of the knee,
That thrift may follow fawning."

Why care for the frowns of an artificial society? No! no! friend, fear them not—fear them not! Build up your character with holy principles; and if your path be strown with flowers, let it be beautiful with light of a divine life; and you will leave behind you a noble example, which will be to the world a perrenial flower, whose leaves will be a healing to the nations, and its fragrance the panacea of the soul. HOW TO DESTROY A CHURCH. Refrain from attending conferences, prayer-meetings, church-meetings, and concerts of prayer. Read religious publications but little, and the Bible no more. Be irregular in your attendance on public worship on the Sabbath, and regularly engaged in every (lawful?) way to make money on week days. Enter your closet with an unburdened heart, and retire confused by the rush of worldly thoughts through your mind. Converse not with your family on religion, or with any others. Pray not with your family. Those professors who observe these rules will do more to destroy the Church than Fourierites, Jews, Universalists, and Deists. If you disbelieve this, read Rev. 3: 16; Judges 5: 23; 1 Cor. 5: 58.

PRAYER. Prayer—prayer—prayer—the first, second, and third elements of the Christain life, should open, prolong, and conclude each day. The first act of the soul in early morning should be a draught at the heavenly fountain. It will sweeten the taste for the day. If you can have but ten minutes with God at that fresh, tranquil, and tender season, make sure of those minutes. They are of more value than much fine gold. But if you tarry long so sweetly at the throne, you will come out of the closet as the high priest of Israel came from the awful ministry at the altar of incense, suffused all over with the heavenly fragrance of that communion.

THE SCRIPTURES. "There are no songs," says Milton, "comparable to the songs of Zion: no orations equal to those of the prophets, and no politics like those which the scriptures teach."

The Day of Judgment.

BY B. P. HILDRETH.

The most startling description, of the most solemn events recorded in Scripture, after having been frequently and constantly presented and pressed on the minds of sinners, to awaken and convince them of their danger, when rejected, become like seed sown by the way-side, being speedily devoured by the fowls of the air. Such after a while become so hardened that they are less likely to take a solemn view of their own lost state, than those whose privileges have been less abundant; and become not only opposers, but revilers and despisers both of those who would labor untiringly to save them, and of the word of truth, which they have so long reluctantly been forced to hear from the lips of the faithful. But there is a class whose conscience is not seared as with a hot iron. To most of the readers of the Crisis, the subject of the day of Judgment soon to come, is as familiar as the light of the sun. It is set forth as prominent, and as clearly and frequently revealed as any other, both in the Old and New Testaments. It is called indiscriminately, the day of Judgment, the day of the Lord, the great day, and frequently, that day; as if all must be familiar with the Scriptural declarations connecting the great day of God Almighty. When it is connected with the characters of saints or sinners, it is, with reference to the latter, called the day of vengeance, the day of perdition of ungodly men; with reference to the former, the day of redemption, the perfect day, &c., and as there is a class who I trust have not yet passed the Rubicon, whose eyes may fall on these lines, I have thought that a presentation of the most remarkable texts so abundant in the Bible, in reference to the Judgment, and kindred subjects, might not be wholly unprofitable; and if it should strike some poor careless sinner with surprise and lead him to repentence, my labor will be amply rewarded. To me no word nor subject, (excepting redemption,) ever struck the mind with so much awe and solemnity, as that of the day of Judgment; for in it, every son and daughter of Adam must 'appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things done in his body according to that he hath done; whether it be good or bad.' 2 Cor. 5: 10.

The subject is fraught with the most tremendous consequences to every soul out of Christ, and he who neglects it, runs the greatest conceivable hazard, and expo[illegible]self to instant destruction. Who, [illegible]oul in the most intimate communion w[illegible] God, is prepared to hear that irrevocable voice out of heaven, "IT IS DONE." The terrors of the last trumpet fall on an astonished world; the fearful morning breaks in livid light, but to discover the hideousness and deformity of the lost.—O what shall a man give in exchange for his soul? Who can abide the day of the Lord? "For behold, the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, and all that do wickedly shall be stubble, and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." Mal. 4: 1. This is not an unmeaning strain of declamation, designed to frighten from one sinful pursuit to another; but it is inspired truth, calculated to alarm the conscience, and lead the sinner to flee from the wrath to come, by forsaking sin, and taking hold of the promises of God.

"Now consider this, ye that forget God, lest I tear you in pieces, and there be none to deliver." Ps. 50: 22.

Not only the most notorious offenders will be doomed to lie down in sorrow, but those who forget the goodness and mercy of Him who created them. Not only so, but every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment. "The Lord knoweth how to reserve the unjust to the day of Judgment, to be punishsd." 2 Pet. 2: 9.—(Alas! for that day is great, so that none is like it.) Jer. 30. 7. "The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels in flaming fire; taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and the glory of His power, when He shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe, in that day." 2 Thess. 1: 7—10. The times of ignorance God winked at; but now commandeth all men everywhere, to repent. "Because He hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness, by that man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead." Acts 17: 30, 31.

Some will hail that long-expected day with rapture, and lift up their heads with joy that the time of their redemption is come.

"It is finished;" said the bleeding, agonizing Savior on the cross, when He gave His life a ransom for many. What is it, says the sinner, that is finished? It was the work, the unparalled work of redemption. He suffered the pains and penalties due to man for sin, and opened a door of hope to every soul who will repent and believe the Gospel; for those who come to God must believe that He is, (i. e., exists,) and that He is the rewarder of all them that diligently seek Him. Light is sown for the righteous, and he enjoys it in the approving smiles of a Savior's countenance; and though outward troubles oppress, inward peace soothes, while grace reigns; and thus he pursues his course day after day, looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ, "who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body; according to the working whereby He is able to subdue all things unto himself."

But the wicked man, on the contrary, sustains a relation to God, which is of all things the most dreadful. He is unwilling to learn that God has power sufficient to search out all his wickedness; a determination to punish that wickedness, and sufficient justice to execute that determination. Self-willed and presumptous, he heeds no warning, but stumbles on till he meets "the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgment of God." Rom. 2: 5. A fearful judgment enshrouds him, and he cannot escape. Vainly he calls on the mountains and rocks to hide him from the face and frown of the Judge!—His fate is decided, his sentence pronounced, "depart ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels."

Sinner, what shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? Will you barter the love of God and the joys of heaven for the short lived pleasures of a dissolute life? Will you relinquish the blood of Christ and his righteousness for the pitiful pursuits of earth, and chase the phantom called happiness till that day shall overtake you as a thief? Says the Savior, "There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth, when ye shall see Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and all the prophets in the kingdom of God, and you yourselves thrust out." What friend will be there to deplore your fate? What potent charm can turn aside the storm of inevitable ruin, then to be poured on your head? O sinner, be wise for yourself, and though you believe not me, believe the word which God has graciously given, that you may escape all these things which shall come to pass, and at last, stand in peace before the Son of Man.

For The Crisis.

Letter from Sr. M. C. Webster.

CONCORD, N. H., Sept. 29, 1855.

Dear Br. Merriam:—While contemplating the great, glorious subject of the second Advent of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, my heart seemed moved to pen a few thoughts relative to the same. A portion of the golden rule as given by our Savior in Matt. 7: 12, ("Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them; for this is the law and the Prophets,") has rested with some weight upon my mind for the last few days.

Having been a reader of the Crisis since it was first published in '53, I have ever delighted in reading the heartfelt communications written by our dear Brn. and Srs., scattered abroad; both the learned and the unlearned. On receiving each No., I have eagerly perused its pages, and have feasted on the glorious truths therein contained. I have often felt a desire within my heart to mingle with the scattered flock in speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God through your valuable paper; but a consciousness of inability has in all past time prevented.

But while I think of the golden rule, as given by our great Pattern, and have a desire to acquiesce in all His righteous requirements, my former excuses, which I have ever felt were reasonable, have at length failed me. I now for the first time attempt writing for the Crisis.

I was identified with the Advent people in the great movement of '43 and '4, yea, I was with them in the heat of the battle; ready to face the enemy at every point. My heart is moved, mine eyes weep, when I take a retrospective view of the past.—Oh how was my entire being interested in the preaching of the Lord's coming in '43 and '4. With my Brn. and Srs., I journeyed east, west, north and south, to unite my feeble testimony with theirs in saying, "the Lord is coming! The Lord is coming!" How did we see the mighty fall, the stout-hearted bow; sinners trembled, saints rejoiced, the world was moved. I then believed, I still believe, that God, the mighty God of Jacob was in the work. With the light we then had, with evidence before us which was so conclusive that our enemies could not gainsay or resist it, we could not have been acquitted, without giving the note of warning. I do believe God's blessing attended His people during that mighty movement. I think I can now safely say, (while reviewing the past,) that I did believe without a doubt that the Lord would come on the tenth day of the seventh month, in the fall of '44. With faith unwavering, with a hope like an anchor, strong, we came up to the time.—Never shall I forget the day. I walked in the open field, with eyes uplifted, I gazed up into heaven, believing that in like manner as the Disciples saw their Lord ascend, and a cloud receive Him out of their sight, so He would come again, at that time. But alas! I, with thousands of others, was doomed to be sadly disappointed. The day passed—the sun set as usual—our Lord did not come! What a moment of trial was this to all who believed in heart that the Lord would be revealed on that day!

But to the sequel. How was the enemy of the souls of men then armed and equipped to slay and to destroy! What inroads were then made in the Advent ranks! Many made shipwreck of their faith, and were led to believe a lie, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils. But—GLORY TO GOD—in the midst of all this devastation and death, He had a people standing in awe, and sinning not; communing with their own hearts upon their beds, being still; not murmuring at the past, not desiring to go back into Egypt, notwithstanding they had been disappointed in the time of entering the promised land. This dear people still believed God—they still loved His word—and I verily believe that the faith of God's dear children in that hour of peculiar trial and temptation, was accounted unto them for righteousness. O! may I be permitted to say that I trust through the goodness or grace of God, alone, I was kept from denying my Lord and Master, or renouncing His holy word during this moment of peril. That which I could not understand, I felt a perfect willingness to leave with Him who saith, "What I do thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter." Here let me say that I never saw a moment during the entire trial after the passing of the time in '44, that I regretted having embraced the Advent faith. I felt a consciousness of having walked according to the best light we had. I never regretted any sacrifice that I was enabled to make. I truly felt the peace of God resting upon me in such a manner that I was often led to say, "all is well, all will work for good."

In the fall of '45, I, with my companion and son, removed to Savannah, Georgia. That has been my place of residence for the last nine years prior to the one just past. There I truly felt like one alone, and yet not alone. O here let me say, glory to God, I have found Him present everywhere. But in respect to persons, not a kindred spirit could I find in all that region, with whom I could freely converse on the glorious subject of the return of our Lord and Master to earth again. My words would seem to them like idle tales. The Advent doctrine had never been preached in that region.

Here the inquiry may properly be made, Did you not, at that time, after witnessing so sad a disappointment as to the time of the Lord's coming, and not fully understanding the past, and not being enabled to clearly contemplate the future, feel like giving it all up? and with your companion and son (who were not believers,) did you not feel like entering again into the world with that spirit and animation you were wont to do prior to receiving this truth?

The answer I cheerfully give. Oh! no. I have never seen a moment since I believed and was fully baptized into the spirit of the Second Advent of our Savior, that I could give it up. I had taken too long and steady a look, by the eye of faith, into that bright and better land, to be easily charmed back to earth again. If not deceived, I had tasted the good word of life, and the powers of the world to come, which did enable me by the grace of God, to behave and quiet myself as a weaned child. Let the glory be given to Him who hath saved me.

During my entire stay at the south, I never heard a real Advent sermon preached except when I was permitted to visit this my native land. And here let me assure you, that whenever I was let loose, I was at once seen running to my own company. It has ever been my privilege since I embraced the Advent faith, to let the world know that the sect everywhere spoken against, yea, the Advent people, are the people of my choice. The reason why they are the people of my choice, is this; because I believe that in the main, they advocate the great and sublime truths of the Gospel of the Son of God.

In the last great movement on the definite time of the Lord's coming, I was not personally engaged as in the former; being a resident at the south, where the doctrine was not promulgated. I did not enjoy the privilege of meeting with those believing in this time, till the fall of '55. But notwithstanding I was not in person with my Brn. believing thus, yet in heart, I was with them. I received the various publications sent me, viz., The Fulfilment of Prophecy, or a Prophetic History of the World; The Lord soon to Come, and The World's Crisis; all of which were welcome messengers to me, in that land of great drouth; especially the World's Crisis. On receiving that, I truly felt to thank God and take courage. The spirit of the paper seemed to me to be a sound within a sound; a tone within a tone. I have ever prized it as an advocate of truth, and I prize it still.

The evidences given in the various publications sent me, and the light that I was permitted to receive from other sources, seemed to my mind conclusive, that the time, yea, the set time to favor Zion would be the year 1854.

I received the evidence with joy unspeakable. My heart beat high, in anticipation of seeing Him, who is to me the one altogether lovely, and "the chiefest among ten thousands," with all my Father's children, at that point of time. Feeling grounded and settled that we had at length obtained the truth, and that this argument was a perfect binder to the great move of '43 and 4, I felt a desire in my heart to once again visit my native land where this great truth was being preached. I accordingly with mine only son, left my companion and home at the South, Aug. 5, '54, for this region. In a few days after leaving Savannah, that dreadful scourge —the yellow fever—made its appearance in that place. In a few weeks my dear husband, with many others, fell a prey to death. Oh! what a moment was this to me when the intelligence came that the partner of my sorrow and joys, the companion of my youth, was no more. God's grace seemed my only support in this moment of affliction and sorrow. His potent arm seemed to be underneath me, and I heard, as it were, a voice saying, "be still, and know that I am God." My faith in the Lord's speedy coming was all to me at this moment. I felt that all who slept in Jesus, would soon be brought again from the land of the enemy.

As soon as practicable after the death of my husband, myself and son attended the Advent meetings. The first was at Exeter, N. H., the second at Manchester, where I trust my son sought and found the Lord; and in a few days he, with others, was baptized by my brother, J. Couch, in this place. I then felt that life had come out of death, and I could rejoice in the midst of affliction. I then realized that truly behind a frowning providence, God had been hiding His smiling face. We had now come up to the point of time when all eyes were directed to the tenth day of the seventh month, as being the time when the great High Priest would come out of the holy of holies to bless His waiting people. I verily believed these things were so. With step unwavering, with confidence firm, I, with my brethren and sisters, came up to this point. What a moment in our history was that! Another disappointment we thought could not come; having had, as we supposed, the going forth to meet the Bridegroom, the tarrying of the same, the sleeping and slumbering of the virgins; the Midnight Cry, the arousing from sleep and trimming of lamps, also the going out to meet the Bridegroom. The preaching of definite time in '44, we believed to be the going forth; the preaching of definite time in '54, we believed to be the going out; and as there is but one tarrying brought to view in the parable, it seemed conclusive (if the right application had been made) that the Bridegroom must appear at this time. But alas! we looked, we watched, we prayed, we wept,—our Lord did not come! Oh! what a mighty shock did we feel!

My dear brethren and sisters under whose observation these lines may fall, will know what I mean. Here, as in our former disappointment, the enemy stood, doubly armed, and equipped, with all his forces brought to bear upon the Advent ranks. And oh! sad to relate; desolation, division, and spiritual death, show the work of an enemy. But here let me say glory to God, notwithstanding all the disappointments and trials of the past, He still has a people saying in their hearts, "though He slay me yet will I trust in Him;" though sadly disappointed, yet not discouraged; though cast down, yet not destroyed; and that which they cannot fully understand, they leave for a hereafter to develop. If I ever felt called upon to praise God for grace sufficient for me, and strength equal to my day, it has been since the passing of the time. I have felt as in '44, that with the conclusive argument we had before us, we could not have been justified, without believing and proclaiming it to the world. I believe God has blessed His people in the work. I believe we had better be many times mistaken in seeking after truth, than not to seek at all. That we have been mistaken, and misapplied some Scriptures, seems too clear a case to need comment or remark; and yet I do not feel that God has condemned His honest children, notwithstanding their mistakes; for they have done the best they could.

While reviewing the past, and thinking on the evidences of the Lord's second Advent, I have been led to enquire what has failed us? I am at once constrained to say that not one jot or tittle of positive testimony as given in the word of God relative to Christ's coming, or the time of His coming, has failed us. The promise made by God to Abraham and his seed is as immutable as the pillars of heaven. The fulfilment of the promise made by our Saviour to his disciples, that if He went away, He would come again, is yet in the future, and will as certainly be fulfilled, as that He came the first time. The declaration made by the Angels as the disciples stood gazing up into heaven, ("This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven,") is yet to be fulfilled. O! glory be given to the Most High; the foundation of God stands sure; the Bible is yet the book of books. What, then, has failed us? Inferential evidence and human deductions only have failed. I believe the great Advent movements in the main, has been under God's special direction; and that He has truly called out a people here to wait for his son from heaven. With this dear people I stand, or fall; with them let me suffer reproach, if reproach is their lot.—The real, literal and personal coming of the Savior, and the events connected with this coming, are interwoven with my whole being. Give it up I cannot, I know not how; I could as well have given it up when we had a definite point of time, as now. I really believe that we are still on the track of truth, and that the Lord is soon coming; for "signs there's no mistaking, proclaim Messiah near." But a little more remains to be done, and the times of the Gentiles will be fulfilled; the days as given by Daniel, will end and he will stand in his lot, with all whose names are written in the Lamb's book of life.—Here a thrill of joy seems to pass through my mind while I hear, as it were, a voice saying, we are almost there.

An item in my experience seems appropriately revived in my mind at this time. During my whole term of residence at the South, I was under the necessity of making some ten or twelve trips at sea, in all of which my sufferings were intense. But how was my heart cheered at different points, while my companion or son would come to me and say (as they were enabled to watch on the upper deck of the vessel) "we are almost there."

This intelligence would at once arouse me from my sick couch, and I would eagerly enquire, where are we? With animation of countenance the answer would at once be given: we have arrived at such a point; such land is in sight; the captain says, we are about so many miles from our destined port, and shall reach the harbor in about so many hours. This intelligence like an electric shock would arouse my entire being; I would at once make an effort to arise and adjust my garments, that with them, I might view the land, and know for myself that these things were so. If my first attempt to arise and prepare to go on deck failed, I would make the second, and so on until the work was accomplished. I would never give it up until mine eyes were permitted "view the landscape o'er," and know of a truth that we were nearing our desired haven. When once on deck and the fullest assurance was that we were almost there, my former sufferings were at once lost in the distance. So does the dear saint whose sufferings have been large and severe, (when the faithful Watcher's or Watchmen, who have really stood on the watch-tower, come to them and say, "we are almost there," forget the same.

O! Glory to God! I believe the faithful ones have thus done, and that His dear children have aroused from their sick couches, have made a mighty effort to adjust their garments, and mount the upper deck, and there stand ready to enter the harbor. Yes, glory to God, I believe He now has a people in such a case as this. They have left the world; they have left a cold, formal church; they have left the mystical teachings of modern times, and stand upon the literal interpretation of God's word. The land promised to Abraham and His seed they can clearly see; they know its location, they know its boundaries, they also know its rightful heirs; and with steady faith and a firm grasp on God's eternal truth, they with one voice say "we are almost there." Glory to God, dear brother, we are almost there. Your arduous toils and labors of love will soon be o'er. The different landmarks which we have passed are too prominent to be mistaken. That we are nearing the harbor is a fact too clear to admit of doubt by those who are standing above the mists and fogs of the present day. Oh! that we may adhere strictly to the teachings of our great Pilot, and yield the management of the ship entirely to Him, in the moment of peril and danger, is the sincere prayer of your sister, hoping for perfect redemption through Christ at His appearing and kingdom.

MIRIAM C. WEBSTER.

The World's Crisis.

LOWELL, OCT. 13, 1855.

"Hath the rain a father?" Job 38: 28.

On awaking one morning recently, and hearing the sound of rain pouring itself musically on the roofs of the buildings, I was at once reminded of the above saying of the Patriarch Job, and of the different passages in Psalms where the sweet singer of Israel speaks of the wonders of creating wisdom, the glory of creating power, and the riches of creating love. The Bible is indeed our standard of truth, and guide in relation to the character and government of God; but we may derive additional evidence of divine goodness and wisdom by contemplating on the works of God, and surveying the operations of His hand. O what an unfathomable depth of wonders on wonders untold! With what an ocean of intelligence is all creation replete! How glorious the plan—how sublime the movements of God's hand as exhibited in the natural universe around! If Job, David, Solomon and Isaiah contemplated on these exhibitions of divine skill in the sovereign Architect of the universe, can it be unworthy our attention to regard the operation of His hand in the works of creation and providence, as well as of grace? Nay; far otherwise; it is ennobling to the mind, and exalting to our devotional feelings to contemplate the wonders of creating love. As we study into the economy of nature, and behold the intelligent plan unfolding in all its complicated parts, and shewing that one great, designing mind must have arranged the entire system, it gives play, and energy, and expansion to the intellectual powers, and elevation to the spiritual feelings of the Christian's heart. It developes the love and faithfulness of God in providing for the wants of His creatures.

Human life depends much on vegetation for its support, and the vegetable tribes depend for their subsistence mainly on the nutritive principles contained in the soil that produces them. Now all the nutritive principles in the world could be of no possible use to vegetation without some solvent medium through which they may be introduced into and embodied in the organism of the plant. A vegetable has no power to grasp like an animal its prey, to masticate, or pulverize and appropriate the several ingredients of the soil to its own growth and development. Plants, being fixed and motionless, need some help to feed and nourish them, or they wither and die. Now the infinite wisdom of the divine being has contrived a plan by which their appropriate food which He has been careful to deposit in the earth, should be conveyed to them, and by the action of their vital organs become a constituent portion of their structure. This is accomplished by means of a solvent principle that dissolves the lime, soda, &c., found in the earth, and holds them in solution, as sugar or salt is held in water, and thus conveys the nutritive elements to the minute fibres of the plants through which they are introduced into the circulating juices, spread out in the leaves, exposed thus to the sun and atmosphere, and ultimately become incorporated in the body or fruit of the plant or tree. Let us now consider some of the difficulties attending the supply being given to vegetation through the medium of a solvent principle.

1st difficulty. Every agriculturalist must have observed how laborious is the work of watering a few garden vegetables by means of a watering pot, and dwellers in our cities know the labor and expense of watering a few streets by artificial means, what then would be the labor and expense of watering the entire earth?—What engine could have been devised by human skill to scatter the refreshing dews or copious showers over the islands and continents of the entire globe? and what reservoir could have been furnished by human art for an adequate supply?

When God undertakes, the means are not wanting; nor the power lacking for the accomplishment of any purpose He may choose to effect. The work of watering the earth must be done, if He has to create for this purpose a boundless ocean occupying some 3-4 of the globe, and unfathomable in its mighty depths.—The work must be done if He has to create an engine that will scale the loftiest mountains, that will bear on its bosom millions of tons of the precious burden, and move on its errand of mercy over the plains, the forests, and the hills, diffusing its fertilizing gifts all around. But O what agency is gigantic enough—what elements of nature are powerful enough for the accomplishment of the herculean task?—Human agency finds it hard to raise aloft a single ton's weight; what then must be the power that is capable of bearing into mid-heaven thousands, nay, millions of tons? Human agency could scarcely water an acre of soil, what stupendous machinery, what untiring enginery then shall water sufficiently the habitable globe?

Let us now look at the plan of the infinite intelligence. Through the action of the sun's rays upon the surface of the mighty deep, and the absorbent qualities of the atmosphere, a portion of the waters of the ocean is taken up into the air, and borne aloft in mid heaven, and thus we have an element acting as an engine of strength to accomplish this grand design.

2d Difficulty. As the waters of the ocean are so impregnated with salt as to be unsuitable for drinking, and destructive to vegetation, and as the clouds derive their supply mostly from the great deep, will not the rain destroy our springs, wells, &c., and likewise all the productions of the soil? It would seem this difficulty must be insuperable, but an Omniscient mind has forseen and met the difficulty.—In the process of separating the water into vapor, the saline particles are left behind, and the water is consequently fresh.

3d Difficulty. If the vapors are constantly ascending from every river, pond, lake, sea or ocean, will not the atmosphere be so filled with vapor that the entire heavens will be shrouded in darkness and gloom, and the sun be hidden from our view, not only in storms, but at all other times, and thus the world become a dreary abode for the residence of man?

This difficulty is obviated too by the fact that the ascending vapors are made invisible to the eye, and consequently do not obscure the sun.

4th Difficulty. The vapor is raised from the surface of the ocean, seas, &c., in an invisible state, but of what avail is invisible vapor in watering the thirsty earth?

To meet this, the Lord has so constituted the water, that its particles may be separated by caloric (latent heat,) to such an extent as to be rendered invisible to the eye; but when the vapors ascend to the upper regions of the atmosphere, the cold temperature which there prevails extracts again that caloric, and the vapors become visible in the formation of clouds.

5th Difficulty. God having provided an element broad as the earth, and powerful as the imagination can conceive, to bear its burden of blessings for the earth, we have an engine and the means of loading it; but by what possible means shall it be unladen again? How can the waters which are borne aloft to the aerial regions, overcome the power of this mighty engine, and descend to water and fertilize the earth?

The Lord is never at a loss to accomplish His purposes, however difficult and impossible it may appear to man. The clouds being formed, the Lord sends the winds of heaven, and propels them against the mountains, or against each other by counter currents, till one particle of vapor meeting another, and still another, &c., the cloud, or visible vapor is converted into water, which overcomes the resistance of the atmosphere, and falls to the earth. How admirable the plan; for the same principle of gravitation, causing the heavier bodies to take the lower place, by which the invisible vapor, being lighter than air, rises to the upper regions of the atmosphere, that same principle causes the rain drops which are heavier than air to descend to the earth! Thus marvellous are the works of God, and thus varied the operations of His hand. "In wisdom hast thou made them all."

6th Difficulty. We have now the mighty engine of the atmosphere created, and laden, and the means of discharging its burden; but what power shall set in motion the ponderous vehicle, so that it shall transport its burden to the ends of the earth? Can there be a self-moving power to inanimate matter? and can it direct itself into every portion of the globe?

This difficulty, also, our Heavenly Father has provided for. In some portions of the earth the atmosphere becomes heated and rarified so that it rises, and air from the colder regions rushes in to supply the vacuum. Thus the whole atmosphere is set in motion, and this great vehicle of blessings, as it were, marches and countermarches over the thirsty plains, pouring out its rich blessings—it wheels in circling eddies around the mountains—ascends all heights—traverses all lands—visits every island—and blesses the earth with a profusion of the rain of heaven.

7th Difficulty. The body of water held in suspension in mid air is immense. Let the clouds be condensed into water, and it would seem such a flood descending upon the earth must inevitably dash to pieces every tender plant, destroy the produce of the earth, and even the fabrications of man, for water is a heavy substance; and even when it rushes violently down the channels of our rivers, it foams and dashes, and often sweeps away the strongest barriers erected by man; what then must be the force and violence of a rushing tide descending perpedicularly from the heights above!

This difficulty also is obviated; for such is the actual operation of these physical laws, that when each drop becomes of sufficient size to counterbalance the resistance of the air, it is of course at an equilibrium, neither rising nor falling—When more is accumulated, it begins gently to descend, the atmosphere resisting its motion all the way, until with almost the gentlenes of a falling feather, it lights upon vegetation so that not a leaf is injured, not the most delicate flower marred, scarcely an insect harmed.

8th Difficulty. When a heavy storm occurs, it would seem it must cover large quantities of lands, and produce a flood of waters, so that men and animals would be drowned, and vegetation destroyed.

This difficulty is also provided for.—The Lord has so constituted the elements of the earth that they absorb the descending rain as it falls. As it descends gradually there is sufficient opportunity in general, for "the earth to drink in the rain that falleth oft upon it," and thus the soil becomes saturated, and danger from this source removed.

9th Difficulty. If the water falls copiously upon the earth, and is absorbed by it, the earth, it would seem, might become one vast quagmire, and no solidity would remain in the ground upon which men and animals could move, or even stand.

But the Lord foresaw all these difficulties, and made ample provision for each, although some partial inconveniences may be suffered from this cause, as was the case last year at Balaklava. Some elements of the earth more easily commingle with water than others; but the Creator has so mixed and tempered the materials of the soil, that the rain is usually absorbed, and yet but little inconvenience suffered.

10th Difficulty. If the rain be poured in such abundance on the earth and penetrate into the soil below, it would seem the waters of the ocean must ultimately be drained, and disappear in the bowels of the earth.

To meet this difficulty the Creator endowed the water with a peculiar property by which it becomes a fluid and flows easily, and is therefore prepared to make its way on any descending ground back to the place whence it proceeded at first. Why water should flow, and any pulverized substance should not, it is impossible satisfactorily to determine. Who can tell what makes water flow? Is it because of its particles being so minute? why then do not other subatances flow, and why should water be solid at a temperature of 33 degrees and flow at 34?

All the philosophers in the world cannot comprehend why a liquid should flow; but the great Designer of creation understood and executed the wondrous plan.

11th Difficulty. The surface of the earth is exceedingly uneven, and consequently the water will flow hither and thither according to the position of the soil, and it would appear it must be obstructed in its course, and never find its way back to the ocean.

But this last difficulty must be met if the Creator has to heave up the foundations of the earth to mountain height. From the summits of these highlands the earth has a gradual slope toward the ocean, so that streams rushing from the mountains, and uniting in their course with a multitude of streamlets and brooks, are formed into majestic rivers, and fall at length into the great reservoir which is again replenished, and prepared to furnish an exhaustless supply of the rain of heaven.

I cannot help digressing here, for a moment, to refer to the industrious course and persevering efforts of the exiled waters to gain their native home in the mighty deep. Day and night, with incessant motion, they journey on. Obstruction after obstruction meets them in their way; but with untiring industry they move on, sometimes with a slow and gentle motion, on account of the unfavorable passage; at other times rushing down the cararact with resistless force. But whatever obstructions the waters meet, or whatever channel they may have to run, their course is onward—they never tire nor stop to rest, till they are again at their home in the great deep. An excellent model for the Christian's imitation.

Thus we find how wonderfully God has arranged the economy of nature. System meets system—plan meets plan. The materials of earth are adapted to supply nutrition for the germinating plant—the water is adapted as a solvent principle to convey the nutriment to the fibres of its roots—the atmosphere is adapted to the work of conveying the waters of the ocean, &c., to the soil—the ocean is furnished with abundant supplies of the necessary element, and the sunbeams are adapted to act on air, water, earth, plant, flower and fruit.

How adorable the Being whose wisdom devised, whose power executed, whose hand still sustains the system of material things!!! Every object which meets the eye bespeaks the goodness, and power, and wisdom, and glory of God; and whoever loves the Maker can but feel an interest in the works of his Father's hand; and whoever carefully and prayerfully reflects on the wonders of creating wisdom and love, can but feel a veneration and awe at the sublimity and grandeur, as well as an admiration at the amazing displays of beneficent design in the creation of a material universe. Who then can believe without positive testimony of Scripture, that the stupendous fabric of nature teeming with untold and ineffable wonders, filled with the marvellous displays of divine goodness and infinite wisdom—I say who can believe that this stupendous fabric is to be taken down and destroyed, leaving a blank in the universe of God? That this mighty theatre of divine displays—the projection of an omniscient mind—the result of omnipotent power, prompted by boundless love, guided by unerring skill—should all be finally dashed and wrecked by the hand of its Sovereign Architect, and vanish away "like the baseless fabric of a vision," who can believe? Creation was originally like one vast mirror to reflect the glory of God. It stood forth as an everlasting embodiment of the wisdom, power and glory of its Author—a perfect, harmonious, amazing, incomprehensible system of wonders on wonders.—Every object shone with the lustre of the divine image. Nature was all radiant with the love, and grace, and beauty, and excellency of the Divine Architect. After the fall, sin brought devastation and woe, disorder and confusion into the works of God. The moral declension of man brought a physical declension upon the kingdom which was designed for his possession. But thanks be to God—everlasting honors to His reverend name—there is a promise of a restoration in the moral condition of man, and also a restoration of the physical condition of his residence. There is to be a regeneration not only of the heart and of the entire man, but also a regeneration of the heavens and earth when the Son of man shall sit upon the throne of His glory. Who can conceive, when the earth is restored to its pristine beauty, what charms, what loveliness, nay, what enchantment will sit on every object within those precints which are to be filled with the glory of God?

The following extract we take from a correspondent of the New York Times:

The Progress of Spiritualism.

The Spiritualists of New York have lately had a grand frolic on Long Island. Three hundred of the believers, of both sexes, were transported on three steamboats to Flushing, where, after receiving some material consolation in the shape of a good dinner, with its accessories, they yielded themselves to spiritual influences, and indulged in vagaries such as might well become a convocation of lunatics. The spirits were on hand in great numbers; for they are always ready to come when the faithful call them. Their method of manifesting their presence was not always in good taste; but then it is useless to dispute concerning the taste of spirits.—Some of these spirits exhibited pugnacious propensities, and there were several pretty severe rough-and-tumble contests between spiritual and material combatants. One young man is said to have resisted bravely; but at length the spirit suddenly tripped him up, and he was vanquished. In one instance these spirits were so ungallant as to attack a female; but, owing probably to the interference of the gentlemen, they were compelled to desist. Other spirits of milder and merrier proclivities, incited some of the company to dance; and jigs, rigadoons, fandangoes and spiritual polkas were the order of the day.—Those who could not dance contented themselves with contortions and intricate twistifications of body and features, and the whole scene must have somewhat resembled a Camanche powow.

After those things came the higher spiritual manifestations. Speeches were made on spiritual subjects by two or three learned professors, and by Mr Smith, the man of razor strop notoriety, who having sold all his strops and not being able to announce that he has "one more left," has taken to spiritualism, and turned medium. A very "nice young man," by the name of Ambler, somewhat famous in spiritual circles, then recited a poem under spiritual influence, the chief merits of which are said by the critic of the N. Y. Times to have been sound and gesticulaion. After the poem, a circle was formed, composed of nearly seventy persons, and the "developed" mediums took their position inside.

Mr Smith, one of the "developed," had an imaginary letter to read, but was not equal to the task; several of the mediums attempted to read, but it was too much for them. At length the best developed medium in the country, Mr Randolph, achieved the airy document. It was from a person in the other world who had done a good many wicked things while in this, and warned those still here to behave themselves. The reading of this letter so exhausted Mr Randolph that he was fain to leave the circle and lie down on the ground and recover his strength. Some very ridiculous antics were then performed by the whole crowd, and the spiritualists returned to their homes.

Such is spiritualism, and such is the way in which some well-meaning persons are ready to believe that spirits inhabiting a higher and holier sphere manifest themselves when they revisit this earth. It is "the pity of it" that there are many well meaning persons who have become the victims of this monstrous delusion. If there were no honest but weak minded people whom the spiritualist leaders could seduce into their ranks, their occupation would soon be gone. But as long as there are such people, they can ply their trade of imposture and humbug with much profit. The profession of a "medium" is becoming to be a calling as generally recognized as that of a physician or lawyer. There are various grades of these mediums, who hold circles or give private sittings to order, at prices to suit the means of all classes of society. Spiritualist editors, authors, and orators are becoming numerous in various parts of the country, and pecuniarily many of them "make a good thing of it." They are spreading abroad their demoralising doctrines, ingeniously dovetailed with the worst features of socialism, and it must be confessed they are making fresh converts every day. In our own community spiritualism numbers more followers than appears on the surface. They have not yet become bold enough openly to avow their sentiments on this subject; but when they have gathered sufficient strength, we shall not be surprised to see a spiritualist party springing up among us, who will claim a voice in political as well as spiritual matters, and we shall have spiritualistic "circles," to choose our candidates for offices by spiritual dictation, as well as political conventions. The evil is a great and growing one, and it is the duty of the press and the pulpit and of individuals, as far as their influence extends, to raise a voice against it and use earnest efforts to put it down.

The two following articles we cut from the Christian Era, a Baptist paper published in this place:—

FALL OF SEBASTOPOL. This strong hold of Russian power, this guard of seas, and tower of defense has at last fallen into the hands of the allies. We have not believed it would be taken, and the intelligence of its fall somewhat surprised us. But what have the allies gained? About what Napoleon did when he marched his armies into Moscow, beneath the smoke and cinders of the incendiary. The Russian army has retired, and can retire—but will the allies dare follow?

That the allies have gained a glorious victory, that they have obtained immense advantages in certain respects is admitted. But what they have gained, Russia can afford to lose. The possession of Sepastipol is not of the same consequence and importance to her as to her foes, and the war is seemingly no nearer its end then when it commenced. The allies might as well attempt to conquer the deserts of Arabia, or put chains to the blue waves of the Mediterranean Sea, as to follow the Russian armies to their capital. The fall of Sebastopol will put a new face upon the war, will change the position of the parties, and develop the energies of both sides, but whether it will materially effect the great Empire of the North remains to be seen.

The Christian has an interest in this war. It has moral bearings. It is a war, long ago predicted, and involves the destruction of the Moslem power. Whichever way it terminates, it will open doors for the ingress of truth, and speed the day when Christ shall reign on earth.

KINDLE FIRES. Some people would put out all the fires of love, and extinguish every flame of brotherly feeling if they could have their way. They deal in denunciation and abuse of their brethren, who are more consistent than they are, and divide and distract, rather than heal.

Now we say kindle fires! Not the fires of hate and revenge; not the fires of ill feeling; not flames of discord between pastors and churches, but flames of love, and hope, and holiness.

We need warm fires kindled here in Lowell—fires of love which shall melt down cold icy mountains which rise between denominations, between individual churches of the same denomination, and between Christians of the same church.—Kindle fires, kindle fires of love and truth, of mercy and goodness, of love and glory. Kindle fires!

BIBLE AND NO BIBLE. Tell me where the Bible is, and where it is not, and I will write a moral geography of the world. I will show what, in all particulars, is the physical condition of that people. One glance of your eye will inform you where the Bible is, and where it is not. Go to Italy—decay, degredation, suffering, meet you on every side. Commerce droops, agriculture sickens, the useful arts languish. There is a heaviness in the air; you feel cramped by some invisible power; the people dare not speak aloud; they walk slowly; an armed soldiery is around their dwellings; the armed police take from the stranger his Bible, before he enters the territory. Ask for the Bible in the bookstores; it is not there, or it is in a form so large and extensive as to be beyond the reach of the common people. The preacher takes no text from the Bible, and you will be pointed to some case where it reposes among prohibited books, side by side with the works of Diderot, Rousseau, and Voltaire. But pass over the Alps into Switzerland and down the Rhine into Holland, and over the Channel to England and Scotland, and what an amazing contrast meets the eye! Men look with an air of independence; there are industry, neatness, instruction for children. Why this difference? There is no brighter sky—there are no fairer scenes of nature—but they have the Bible; and happy are the people who are in such a case, for it is righteousness that exalteth a nation.

WAAT IS GOD? In an early meeting of one of the committees of the Westminster Assembly, the subject of deliberation was to frame an answer to the question, "What is God?" Each man felt the unapproachable sublimity of the divine idea suggested by these words; but who could venture to give it expression in human language! All shrunk from the too sacred task in awe-struck, reverential fear. At length it was resolved, as an expression of the committee's deep humility, that the youngest member should make the first attempt. He consented; but begged the brethren first to unite with him in prayer for divine enlightenment. Then in slow, solemn accents, he thus began his prayer: "O God, thou art a spirit, infinite, eternal and unchangeable in thy being, wisdom, power, holiness, justice, goodness and truth." When he ceased, the first sentence of his prayer was immediately written down and adopted, as the most perfeet answer that could be conceived; as, indeed, in a very sacred sense, God's own answer, descriptive of himself. This individual, it is supposee, was George Gillespie.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Br. J. Weston.

LOWELL, Mass., Oct. 8th, 1855.

Dear Br. Merriam:—I have not for some months written for the Crisis, and some, where I have gone laboring, wish to know where I am. I am still looking for the Lord. I believe that God has been with us in the past, and that it was necessary for '54 to pass that the foolish virgins might have opportunity to say, "our lamps are gone out."

I have just returned from a five weeks tour in Vermont; and I find, though the love of some waxes cold, the most of them seem to be standing on the truth and waiting for the coming of the Savior.

The idea that the days have ended, gains no disciples where I went.

DR. FRANKLIN AND THOMAS PAINE.—When Paine was writing his infamous Age of Reason, he sent part of it to Franklin for his opinion respecting it. In the reply of the latter, he tells the skeptic, "That probably he (Paine) is indebted to his religious education for the very habits of virtue on which he prides himself;" and he closes by advising him to employ his talents on some other subject: "For," he adds, "among us, it is not necessary, as among the Hottentots, that a youth, to be raised into the company of men, should prove his manhood, by beating his mother;" concluding with the remark, "If men are so wicked, even WITH religion, what would they be WITHOUT IT?"

FATAL ACCIDENT ON THE BOSTON AND MAINE RAILWAY. This forenoon, between 8 and 9 o'clock, as the train from Haverhill to Boston was passing through Melrose it ran over a cow; the engine was thrown off, and Moses Abbott of George's Boston & Lawrence Express, and the messenger of Richardson's Boston & Haverhill Express were both killed. Eight passengers had legs broken. We have no further particulars. Mr Abbott was a faithful and popular business man and a worthy citizen; his untimely end will be deeply lamented by all who knew him.

EUROPEAN NEWS.

EXTRACTS FROM ENGLISH PAPERS RECEIVED BY THE PACIFIC.

The U. S. mail steamer arrived at New York on Wednesday morning, Oct. 3d, giving additional information from the grand battle-ground of the Crimea.

The loss of life has been fearful, particularly among officers.

The retreat of the Russians to Perekop was contradicted. It was expected they would be unable to hold the north of Sevastopol for want of provisions.

Nothing decisive was known in regard to the next move of the Allies.

Four thousand cannon, fifty thousand balls, and immense stores of gunpowder were taken possession of by the allies at Sevastopol.

The Czar Alexander in an address to his army, says: I rely confidently on your courage to repel all future attacks, and in a letter to the King of Prussia, states, he will accept no conditions of peace derogatory to Russia.

The Czar, in company with the three Grand Dukes, has signified his intention of proceeding to the Crimea.

The Turks still hold Kars, having repulsed the Russians on the 7th of August.

Rejoicings in England, Ireland and Scotland. The English papers abound with accounts of the rejoicings of the people all over the kingdom at the news of the downfall of Sebastopol. These were not confined to the large cities and military stations, but seem to have extended to the smaller towns and hamlets even. The news was telegraphed from London, in every direction, immediately on its receipt. But in many places it was thought to be too good to be true, and the rejoicings were withheld until the arrival of the London papers, or further confirmation was afforded. When this was obtained, the people everywhere seem to have run riot with joy; shouts filled the air, flags waved from private as well as public houses, cannon and small arms were fired, bells were rung, bonfires were made, and last of all, in several places the poor Czar was burned in effigy. We have some thirty different accounts now before us, chiefly additional to those referred to yesterday, of these rejoicings, in as many different towns of England, Scotland, and Ireland.

Railways in Turkey The establishment of railways in Turkey will be more effectual, perhaps, than the armed protection of England and France, in opening that country to civil liberty and Christian civilization A correspondent of the London Times writes as follows:

"The construction of a railroad from Constantinople to Belgrade has been decided on by the Sultan The line will be granted by adjudication to a company. The period is not fixed. Mehemet Kepresli Pasha, President of the Council of the Tanzimat, who has manifested the greatest activity ever since his acceptance of office, is now occupied with the cahier des charges, most of the articles of which have been settled definitely. This measure, so long expected, will produce a complete revolution in the economic laws of Turkey. The question of property will naturally be agitated, and the right of Europeans to hold possessions is a necessary consequence of the establishment of railways. Thus Turkey will have railroads before having ordinary roads."

Earthquakes in Albania. Letters from Scutaria, in Albania, of the 28th ult, mention that the population of that place and of the surrounding country is made more anxious by the frequently recurring earthquakes than by the events of the war. For the last twenty days shocks of earthquakes have been experienced almost daily, with loud rumblings, continuing from 15 to 20 minutes, and causing vast mischief. In one village 90 houses have been reduced to ruins; and, in connection with these shocks, the volcanic crater, visible some time since in the bed of the river Dwina, but which closed again in three days, is now reopening. In Valona and the adjacent country, particularly at Monastir and Batoglie, the cholera rages with much violence, and the major portion of the alarmed inhabitants have fled into the woods.

The Courier de la Vienne states that at the last fair at Bellac, an extraordinary panic took possession of all the oxen, which, with the rapidity of a flash of lightning, overturned the barriers and took to flight in all directions, knocking down every person in their way. The fair, which, a few minutes before was covered with numerous beasts perfectly quiet, suddenly assumed somewhat the appearance of a field of battle, beople wounded, and unfortunately, some killed, lying about in all directions. The number of the former is said to be from sixty to seventy, and of the latter three or four.

Turkey. The following extract from Le Presse d' Orient and Journal de Constantinople, was received by the last mail:—

Numerous disorders and outrages having for some time past been committed during the night in the streets of Constantinople and Peru, the Porte has just addressed to the representatives of the friendly powers a memorandum, in which, after referring to these circumstances, it invites the legations to make known to their respective governments that the local police, intrusted with the public security, has received orders to arrest and commit every person, who, without absolute necessity shall be found after midnight in the streets of the capital.

A Phenomenon. A singular phenomenon was lately remarked at Brenets on the frontier of Switzerland. About half an hour before sunset, myriads of insects, supposed to be winged ants, were seen to rise from the banks of the Dobs, in dark triangular swarms, and to fly southwards, occupying a space of nearly a league in extent. They were sufficiently compact to intercept the view of the country at intervals. A similar phenomenon was observed near Paris, on the 26th of May last, only the insects were seen to fly in columns instead of triangles.—Galignani.

HIGHLY IMPORTANT NEWS.

Halifax, Oct 9. The mail steamship Canada, from Liverpool, Sept. 29, arrived here at 7 20 P. M.

St. Petersburg, Sept. 26. Prince Gortschakoff reports, under date of 23d inst., that "The Allies had landed 20,000 men at Eupatoria, and that he [the Allies] has now 30,000 men on the Russian flank. Yesterday the Allies attacked our infantry, who retreated to the heights over Rusta"

Another dispatch from St. Petersburg, Sept. 28, says: "Prince Gortschakoff reports, under date of 26th, that on the previous day, 33,000 of the enemy had debouched from Eupatoria, and occupied the neighboring villages on the left flank.

The Cossacks had taken twenty-five prisoners, who were foraging at Kertch.

The War. Sebastopol, Sept 16. The Russians are fortifying the north part, and are constructing new batteries. The French are advancing their cavalry, and a column of infantry toward Bakshiserai by the Baidar Road.

Sebastopol is to be razed, and the basins filled up.

A fearful tempest has occurred at Sebastopol, accompanied by heavy rain.

On Sept. 17, Prince Gortschakoff reports from Sebastopol, that "The Allies have attempted nothing yet on the north side The enemy is concentrating his forces between Balaclava and the Tchernaya, and constantly reconnoiters our left wing."

The Allies are actually preparing for a campaign. From three hundred to four hundred deserters, most of them Poles, have arrived at the Allied camp. They relate that the demoralization of the Russian army was most complete, and that such was the conclusion from the first moment of the attack; that the soldiers, exhausted with fatigue, remained for twenty-four hours without provisions. The loss of the Russians is estimated at 18,000 men.

A correspondent of the Paris Patrie, under date September 26, says: "Ever since their retreat, the Russians have continued to fire shells at us, and it would be a mistake to suppose that our armies in Sebastopol are beyond range of the enemy's batteries on the Northern shore and on the plateau. The balls from Fort Constantine reach beyond Strelitzka bay, and they can very easily throw their projectiles into the town. As to the batteries of the other forts, some of the guns in them are so powerful that they can carry shot right over the town and do execution in the advanced siege works, but although the Russian fire does not cease, it is not very active.

The Artillery and Engineers in Sebastopol are everywhere at work. Fort St. Nicholas, which was left almost intact, has been fortified, and its cannon already replies to the enemy. Any attempt of the Russians to return to the place is wholly out of the question.

The Grand Duke Constantine arrived at Nicolaef on the 20th.

It was said the Czar himself would shortly visit Nicolaef to superintend the winter Crimean campaign.

A letter from Berlin dated 23d, says: "Various circumstances at St. Petersburg seem to indicate that Prince Gortschakoff will soon evacuate the forts to the north of Sebastopol, those forts being only strategic points, but great preparations are being made by the Russians for a winter campaign."

The Russian Treasury had received large sums of money through Berlin. English war material was constantly passing through Prussia for the army.

On September, 17, the Turkish troops at Constantinople, intended for Asia, had been sent to Eupatoria.

The War in Asia. Dispatches received from Vienna state that Kars is greatly straightened for provisions, the garrison being obliged to eat horse flesh.

The Anglo-French contingent will go to Trebizond, and be placed under the command of Omar Pasha

Advices from Trebizond dated the 6th inst. announce that the Russians had abandoned Erzeroom, and are at Malagulemia

The Baltic Dantzic, Sept 28. The steamer Bull Dog has arrived with mails. All the high pressure blockships have left for England. The weather here continues unsettled.

The Times' Paris correspondent writes on the 27th that the Baltic fleet will winter at Kiel.

Naples A circular has been given to the police authorities throughout the kingdom of Naples, saying that although Mazza has retired from office, the policy of the government will be the same, and that no change is to take place in the conduct of the police towards politicall suspected persons.

By order of the King, the Minister of War, Prince Eschitalli, who opposed the arbitrary proceedings of Mazza, had also been dismissed

Austria. The Austrian Government has caused the publication of the following announcement in its acknowledged official organ, the Austrian Correspondenz:

"The new state of things may give occasion to a diplomatic contest, to a sanguinary strife between Russia and the Western Powers, but will in no way affect the mediatory attitude of Austria."

Letter from Italy.

The following letter from Italy, written by a correspondent of the Independent shows how the elements are working in the seat of the Beast:—

ITALY, August 21, 1855.

Gentlemen:—There is some agitation in Italy; by this word agitation you will not understand anything like meetings held, speeches made, fiery articles filling the columns of newspapers. By the word agitation I mean a waking up of patriot hopes, secret preparations made in view of coming events; and on the part of our governments symptoms or uneasiness and anxiety which are manifested by the extraordinary measures which are taken in order to prevent and to repress any attempt contrary to the present order of things. The recent speech of Lord Palmerston in the House of Commons, so severe upon the Roman and Neapolitan Governments, the almost unanimous concert of attacks of the French press against the King of Naples, despite of great efforts to prevent their becoming known, have been very widely circulated where they were most dreaded, and the people have begun to think that perhaps England and France, who have, in former times, either suffered or done themselves the greatest injury to Italy, might become, somehow or other, the instruments of her deliverance. And so they may, in my opinion, when their political interest demands it. Austria has been first to take the alarm. While the Austrian Government is hypocritically causing to be said in all the Vienna papers that Austrian troops are diminished in Italy, and whilst it sends away pro forma, a few companies of soldiers from either Tuscany or the Legations, it is pouring thousands upon thousands of troops into Lombardy and into Venetia. Already these two provinces contain nearly eighty thousand men. When the complications of war shall compel the allied powers to fight against Austria they will find her better prepared in Italy than they expect, and unless they raise the cry of Independence! for Italy, they may be greatly disappointed in their expectations Judging from the tone of the few newspapers allowed to be published in Italy, the Governments are very much afraid of committing themselves or taking sides by their expressed sympathies with any of the belligerent parties—a clear indication that they are more in favor of Russia than of France and England. But their chief care now is evidently to watch their own, and maintain among themselves, per fas et nefas, the beautiful state of things which now exists. In these conservative efforts Naples yields to none, in the way of precautionary measures against insurrection and revolution, as is shown by a most extraordinary document lately come to light, and which inspires more contempt and hatred for the Neapolitan Government than anything which might be said by its bitterest enemy.

This document is a most confidential circular issued some time ago by the Minister of the Police and sent to the judges an police officers. The rules and advices given to these agents in order to discover anything thought, felt, or done by them contrary to the wishes of the Government, are so base and immoral that it will be hardly believed to be possible that even the King of Naples could approve of such abominations. And yet it is a fact. After having stated that the state of European politics has awakened in "the impious hearts of wicked demagogues the most insane hopes, and has caused them to spread false rumors which have discouraged many of the faithful royalists," the minister proceeds to exhort his agents to keep the most careful watch over all suspected persons. He then directs that they make themselves thoroughly acquainted with the life, relatives, friends, and correspondence of the suspected, and when anything is discovered to have been done or said by them, contrary to the will of the Government, to have them arrested and punished by the Committee of Bastinadoes

If any of the suspected show some boldness "or wear a 'hat of an extraordinary shape,' or let all his beard grow," he is also to be seized and beaten with the stick, by that noble commissione delle legnate. Then follow a series of rules with which judges and policemen are exhorted to imbue deeply their minds, and from which I glean, totidem verbis, the following sentences: "Unceasing vigilance in following the suspected; inquire into all they do, either in their home or out of it; in town or in the country. Which of them read the official newspapers; where and when they read them; what comments they make upon Eastern affrirs; whether they have intercourse with influential persons and whether their intercourse is public or secret Listen attentively to their conversations Inquire if the royalists are discouraged or terrified; by whom, and by what means. Seize adroitly and carefully the letters of the suspected and transmit them to me at once. Make a complete list of all those who wear singular dress or a long beard, and send it to me, with notes indicating when the person has begun to alter his dress, or has allowed his beard to grow Notice carefully the houses frequented by the suspected; know why they frequent them, especially at night, and keep a list of the names of those whom they visit. Stimulate the zeal of those who denounce the suspected," etc. It is well that the civilized world should know such documents, in order that their infamy may excite a feeling of disgust for the shameless princes, who are capable of maintaining their power by such means, and in order, also, that free and happy people in other countries may not blame too hastily those Italian patriots, who, incapable of bearing the debasing and insufferable yoke, attempt to throw it off before the day has fairly come to it successfully. The nightmare of the King of Naples is the name of Murat, and it is a fact that most of those in the Kingdom who wish for the overthrow of the King Bomba, their "adored and august master," as he is styled in the circular above quoted, are favorable to a Muratist revolution, which would introduce amongst them, at all events, a state of things better than the present one. When the condition of a man cannot be worse than it is, who will wonder if that man wishes for a change, and will gladly welcome any!

From the extreme south, let us turn now to the extreme north of Italy, toward constitutional Piedmont. Great things are quietly accomplished there In spite of the opposition of the priests and of the threats of excommunication of the Pope, the law against the convents has passed, and is now being steadily carried into effect, not, however, without difficulty. According to the provisions of that law, an estimate is to be made of all the properties of any kind, belonging to the suppressed convents, in order that their value may be known, and used for better purposes than before. When the Government's agents present themselves at the door of the convents to fulfill that formality, they always encounter the greatest opposition; monks and nuns barricade their doors in such a manner that every convent becomes a little fortress which can only be entered by breaking open the doors or opening a passage through the wall. Inside of the convents every door is locked, everything to be seen by the magistrates is hidden, and the meek monks and nuns who have taken upon themselves the vows of poverty, show the greatest desire to retain, and the greatest reluctance to part with riches which are not their own, and which, as trustees, they have shamefully squandered. According to the Pope's Monitorio, all those who have taken part in making the Convent Bill, all who help in carrying it out, are excommunicated ipso facto. At first his Holiness had spoken of excommunicating in the Sardinian States upon a much larger scale, and of laying the whole Kingdom under an interdict; but when he heard of the little effect produced by his threats among the people of Piedmont; when, also, he was warned by his savior Bonaparte not to foster agitation and perhaps civil war in an ally's dominions, he grew more calm, and instead of an interdict, he contented himself with issuing a monitorio, and kept, for a better opportunity, the thunders he had been preparing. Now the question has arisen and it has been discussed in the newspapers, whether or not the King of Piedmont was personally excommunicated.—Some, especially of the liberal party, said he was, of course, having signed the law, and they invited him to seize upon the opportunity to undertake a reformation of the church—pointing to England and saying that there they had a church without a Pope—and why could not Piedmont enjoy the same advantage! Others said the King could not be excommunicated, because, being a constitutional King, he was not responsible, and could not be held accountable for the deeds of the houses and the ministry.—The question is not yet resolved, and I should think Vittorio Emmanueli cares very little for whatever solution may be given to it

One word before I close about evangelical affairs at Turin You remember the account I gave you of Desanctis's reconciliation with the Waldensian church, and of the bright hopes of peace which gladdened the last Waldensian Synod of La Tour, when Descanctis declared his willingness to give up all opposition, and to accept the professorship offered to him in the theological school of La Tour. Now Desanctis has entirely changed his mind. A few days after the Synod, where he had openly declared that he was with the Waldensian church, would serve her as a faithful minister, etc., he wrote an incredible letter in which he not only declined accepting the professorship, "because his wife went into hysterics when he told her he would accept," but also made a declaration of principles so full of the views of the Plymouth Brethren that one cannot understand how, in so short a time, his views may have undergone so complete a change. In this, as on many previous occasions, he has shown the fickleness of his character; and he has made, upon all those who understand the state of evangelical affairs in Italy, the imprssssion that very little is to be expected from him for the promotion of Gospel truth in these countries. Indeed, his recent action and his present efforts are doing more harm than good in Turin, where he is causing a division among Christians, where, more than anywhere else, union is needed. L P.

THE FINAL BOMBARDMENT OF SEBASTOPOL.

Crimea, Sept 5.—At dawn on the morning of the 5th of September, the French opened fire The air was pure and light, and a gentle breeze from the south-east, which continued all day, drifted over the steppe, and blew gently into Sebastopol The sun shone serenely through the vapors of early morning and wreaths of snowy clouds on the long lines of white houses, inside those rugged defences of earth and gabionade, which have so long kept our armies gazing in vain in this "august city." The ships lay floating on the waters of the roads, which were smooth as a mirror, and like it reflected them, and outside our own fleet and that of the French, equally inactive, and not quite so useful to us, were reposing from Kazatch to Constantine, as idly as though they were "painted" upon "a painted ocean"

The ravine between our right and left attack is visible till it is closed up by the sweep of the hills on which the attacking batteries are placed, and by the ragged height seamed with rifle pits, craters of bombs, zig-zags, and the works of our Quarries Battery Behind the Redan are visible the long line of the dockyard and arsenal buildings, and the barracks, which have been rendered uninhabitable on the near side by our fire—the great sheers, the floating bridge across the roads to the north side, the two lines of men-of-war—the Twelve Apostles and five two deckers, frigates, and steamers. Then on the right lie Malakoff, Mamelon, and the White Works, and Mount Sopoune peering beyond over them and the north side—the citadel, the Russian camp, Inkermann, its batteries, and the plateau of the Belbek forming the back-ground, which is defined still further by a strip of blue sea.

Suddenly, along the earthen curtain between Nos. 7 and 8 Bastions three jets of flame spring up into the air and hurl up as many pillars of earth and dust, which are warmed into ruddy hues by the horizontal rays of the sun. The French have exploded three fougasses to blow in the counterscarp, and to serve as a signal to their men. Instantly from the sea to the Dockyard creek there seems to run a stream of fire, and fleecy, curling, rich white smoke, as though the earth had suddenly been rent in the throes of an earthquake, and was vomiting forth the material of her volcanoes.

The lines of the French trenches were at once covered as though the very clouds of Heaven had settled down upon them and were whirled about in spiral jets, in festoons, in clustering bunches, in columns and in sheets, all commingled, involved together by the vehement flames beneath. The crash of such a tremendous fire must have been appalling, but the wind and the peculiar condition of the atmosphere did not permit the sound to produce any great effect on our camp; in the city for the same reason the noise must have been terrific and horrible. The iron storm tore over the Russian lines, tossing up, as if in sport, jets of earth and dust, rending asunder gabions, and "squelching" the parapets, or bounding over among the houses and ruins in their rear. The terrible files of iron, about four miles in front, rushed across the plain, carrying death and ruin with its heavy and irresistible wings the Russian flanks, and searched their centre to the core.—A volley so startling, simultaneous, and tremendously powerful was probably never yet uttered since the cannon found its voice. The Russians seemed for a while utterly paralysed—their batteries were not manned with strength enough to enable them to reply to such an overlapping and crushing fire; but the French leaping to their guns with astounding energy, rapidity, and strength, kept on filling the very air with the hurling storm, and sent it in unbroken fury against their enemies. More than 200 pieces of artillery of large calibre, admirably served, and well directed, played incessantly on the hostile lines. In a few moments a great veil of smoke—"a war cloud rolling dull"—spread from the guns over on the left of Sebastopol; but the roar of the shot did not cease, and the cannonade now pealed forth in great irregular bursts, now died away into hoarse murmurs, again swelled up into tumult, or rattled from end to end of the line like the file-fire of infantry. Stone walls went down before the guns at once, but the earthworks yawned to receive shot and shell alike However, so swift and incessant was the passage of these missiles through the embrasures and along the tops of the parapets that the enemy had to lie close, and could scarcely show themselves in the front line of defences.

For a few minutes, then, the French had it all their own way, and appeared to be on the point of sweeping away the place without resistance; but, after they had fired a few rounds from each of their numerous guns, the Russian artillerymen got to work, and began to return our Allies' fire. They made good practice, but fired slowly and with precision, as if they could not afford to throw away an ounce of powder. The French were stimulated rather than impeded by such a reply to their astonishing volleys, and their shot flew with increased rapidity along the line of the defences, and bounded in among the houses of the town

Our Allies are pounding away with exceeding warmth, at everything within range of them Our Quarry Battery, armed with two mortars and eight cohorns, just 400 yards below the Redan, plies the suburb in the rear of the Malakhoff vigorously, and keeps the top of the Redan clear. Redan and Malakhoff are alike silent, ragged and torn. At most the Redan fires three guns, and the adjoining batteries are equally parsimonious. The parapets are all pitted with shot and shell, and the sides of the embrasures are greatly injured, so that the gabions are sticking out, and are tumbled down in all directions.

After two hours and a half of furious fire, the artillerymen of our Allies suddenly ceased, in order to let their guns cool and to rest themselves. The Russians crept out to repair damages to their works, and shook sandbags full of earth from the barquette over the outside of their parapets. Their gunners also took advantage of this sudden cessation to open on our sailors' batteries in the left attack, and caused us some little annoyance from the "Crow's Nest." At 10 o'clock, however, having previously exploded some fougasses, as before, the French re-opened a fire, if possible more rapid and tremendous than their first, and continued to keep it up with the utmost vigor till 12 o'clock at noon, by which time the Russians had only a few guns in the Flagstaff-road and Garden batteries in a position to reply.

From 12 till 5 o'clock p. m., the firing was slack; the French then resumed their cannonade with the same astounding vigor as at dawn and at 10 o'clock, and never ceased their volleys of shot and shell against the place to half-past 7, when darkness set in, and all the mortars and heavy guns, English as well as French, opened with shell against the whole line of defences. A description of this scene is now impossible There was not one instant in which the shells did not whistle through the air—not a moment in which the sky was not seamed by their fiery curves or illumined by their explosion. Our practice was beyond all praise. Every shell burst as it ought and the lines of the Russian earthworks of the Redan, Malakhoff, and of all their batteries were rendered plainly visible by the constant light of the bursting shells. The Russians scarcely attempted a reply.

At 5 o'clock it was observed that a frigate in the second line near the north side was smoking, and as it grew darker flames were seen to issue from her sides. Men and officers rushed to the front in the greatest delight and excitement, and as night came on the whole vessel broke out into one grand blaze from stem to stern. In spite of the efforts of the Russians, the flames spread and soon issued from the ports and quarter-gallery. At 8 o'clock the light was so great that the houses of the city and the forts on the other side could be discerned without difficulty. The masts stood long, and towered aloft like great pillars of fire; but one after the other yielded; the decks fell in about 10 o'clock, and at midnight the frigate was burnt to the water's edge.

Sept. 6. Last night a steady fire was kept up all along the front, to prevent the Russians repairing damages At 10 P. M. orders were sent to our batteries to open as soon as there was a good light the following morning, but they were limited to fifty rounds each At 5 30 the whole of the batteries from Quarantine to Inkermann, opened with a great crash. The Russians were silent as before. The cannonade was maintained as it was yesterday There were three breaks or lulls in the tempest; from half past 8 till 10, from 12 till 5, and from half past 6 till 7, the fire was comparatively slack. Captain Shone, R. A., was killed yesterday in the batteries by a round shot. He was a brave and much esteemed officer I regret to have to record, also, the death of Captain Buckley. Scotch Fusileer Guards, who was shot through the heart as he was posting his sentries. This gallant young officer was shot through the neck at the Alma, but did not go home He was a most promising young officer. The firing continued as before and the enemy seemed greatly distressed They are strengthening their position on the Belbec, and evince a disposition to rely on the north side. However, they have large masses of men in the town. The bombardment was renewed and lasted all night.

Sept. 7.—The cannonade was resumed at daybreak, the Inkermann batteries firing briskly. A council of Generals was held today at head-quarters, the sick were cleared out of the field hospitals, and it gradually oozed out that the assault would take place tomorrow at 12 o'clock. The firing was tremendous all day, but clouds of dust which a high wind from the north drifted into our faces rendered a view of the place impossible.

NEW HAMPSHIRE CONFERENCE.

The undersigned, appointed a committee at the last N. H. Conference holden at Loudon Ridge, Sept. 1854, "to call the next N. H. Conference at such time and place" as they might deem proper, would give notice that there will be a State Conference of Adventists, to convene at Lake Village, Thursday, Oct. 18, at 10 o'clock A. M, and continue over the Sabbath.

It is hoped that the Brn. will come together at this meeting with the "fruit of the Spirit;" and the happy result be similar to that which attended the late Camp meeting at Wilbraham, where ministering Brn. of different views were brought together in love, after a long time of absence.

It is also hoped that ministering Brn from all parts of the State will try to be present; and although we have been in some measure separated in our labors for a few years past, yet it is hoped that all party feeling on both sides, and ALL sides, will be laid aside, and we once more come together, not for strife and debate, but for mutual assistance and the general good of the cause of Christ.

We must all very soon give an account of our stewardship.

The Brn. at Lake Village are few in number, yet they are disposed to do what they can to entertain the Conference, although they will not be able to take care of many horses; but arrangements will be made to keep horses on reasonable terms.

Let there be a general rally, and all who attend, both ministers and laymen, be willing to make some sacrifice to save souls from death.

O Brn., is it so? It is! O let us make a full consecration of all we have and are—rid ourselves of the blood of souls, and be prepared to stand before the Son of man. It is no time to linger—"up, get you out of this place," and hasten, for our eternal all depends upon keeping our lamps trimmed and burning. Come, Lord Jesus. Amen

For The Crisis.

Are there Tidings?

Are there tidings from the Savior?
Will He come to earth again?
Come to bless his waiting people?
Come on David's throne to reign?

Come to heal the broken hearted,
And to let the oppressed go free?
Come to loose the captive's fetters?
What a glorious liberty!

Yes! we've tidings from Messiah
Who now sits at God's right hand,
Soon He'll come in clouds of heaven,
Guarded by an Angel band.

How delightful to behold Him
Coming from the parted skies,
While His glory is unfolding
To the gaze of myriad eyes!

He'll not come the infant Jesus
Who was once of lowly birth,
He'll not come the poor and humble
Nazarene, who walked on earth.

When He comes, a crown of glory
Shall be placed upon His brow,
And ten thousand saints around Him,
Shall in meek submission bow.

O, we feel how great the blessing
That our Lord is soon to come—
Raise the dead and change the living,
Bringing all His children home!

Many a cloud our path has shrouded,
Dark and lone has been the way,
When by earthly friends forsaken,
God alone has been our stay.

Straight the gate—the way is narrow—
Few there be who enter in,
None can enter but the faithful,
None but those who conquer sin.

Help us, Father, to be faithful,
Keep us, lest from thee we stray;
Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly,
Turn our darkness into day!

Selected for The Crisis.

God will take care of His own.

Shadows may be in the heavens,
Gloom on the earth may lie,
Every star may be hidden
Deep in the frowning sky;
Yet though all be dim and dreary
As the darkness of midnight lone,
Whatever event be coming,
God will take care of His own.

Loves of the heart may be stricken,
Friends may fail around,
Evil tongues may whisper
Words that shall sharply wound;
Dear eyes may look coldly,
The way may be very lone,
But however rough the pathway,
God will take care of His own.

Let truth be fearlessly spoken,
Let life be earnest and brave,
Pass no wrong unchallenged,
Thrust no right in the grave;
The world may hate to madness,
Still ready its martyrs to stone,
But however rages the tempest,
God will take care of His own.

Go on in the way rejoicing,
Courage of faith is born;
Angels will guide the true-hearted
Up to the gates of morn;
Up to unspeakable glory,
Those who in life have shown
Faith in the promise paternal—
God will take care of His own.

For The Crisis.

Type and Antitype.

By William Shepherd.

Impending Crisis—Hour of the Church Redemption — Israelites Escape from Egypt and Deliverance at the Red Sea—And the Churches Triumph now Impending — Points of Similarity briefly considered.

"Unto the Church of God scattered abroad, to them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus, called to be saints with all that in every place call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord, both theirs and ours. Grace be with you, and peace from God our Father and from the Lord Jesus Christ. I thank my God always on your behalf, for the grace of God which is given you by Jesus Christ, that in every thing ye are enriched by him, in all utterance, and in all knowledge. Even as the testimony of Christ was confirmed in you: So that ye come behind in no gift WAITING for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ: Who shall also confirm you unto the end, that ye may be blameless in The Day of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Beloved of God,

That we are living, we are dwelling,
In a grand and awful time, needs not any unusual acumen to descry, and that these convictions may be satisfactorily confirmed in our minds, we have only hastily to glance at the awful state of Europe, and listen for a moment to "The noise of a multitude in the mountains, like as of a great people; a tumultuous noise of the kingdoms of nations gathered together; the Lord of hosts mustering the host of the battle."

Hark! the waking up of nations,
Gog and Magog to the fray;
Hark! what soundeth, is creation
Groaning for its latter day.

It is a divine maxim, "in everything consider the end;" for in that is involved the eternal destiny of man. Acting on this maxim, we proceed to show that there are many features connected with the salvation of the Israelites under the hand of Moses at the Red Sea, which evidently prefigures the redemption of the Church now in waiting. That portion of the type (if we may so speak) under consideration, is found in Ex. 13th, 14th and 15th chs. A few points, only, we design to notice, and those we shall hurry over, trusting in God that what little may be said will prove as beneficial and effectual to His people, as though volumes had been written. We place the similarity of features in parallel columns that you may observe more readily the force, beauty and harmony that exists.

FIRST FEATURE OF SIMILARITY.

Exo. 13: 20—22. 14: 19, 20.	John 8: 12. Thess. 5: 4. 2d Peter 1: 19. Isa. 60: 2.
And they took their journey from Succoth, and encamped in Etham, in the edge of the wilderness. And the Lord went before them by day in a pillar of cloud, to lead them the way; and by night in a pillar of fire, to give them light; to go by day and night; He took not away the pillar of the cloud by day, nor the pillar of fire by night, from before the people. And the angel of God, which went before the camp of Israel, removed and went behind them; and the pillar of the cloud went from before their face, and stood behind them; And it came between the camp of the Egyptians and the camp of Israel; and it was a cloud of darkness to them, but it gave light by night to these.	I am the light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life. But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief. We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day-star arise in your hearts. For, behold, the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people: but the Lord shall arise upon thee, and his glory shall be seen upon thee.

Here is a conclusive indication that in the ushering in of the glorious despensation for which we look, the people of God will have abundance of light, while the world and mere nominal Church will be in total darkness, or, as the Scripture expresses it, "gross darkness."

SECOND FEATURE OF SIMILARITY.

Exo. 14: 5—14.	Rev. 17: 11—14; 22: 9. Luke 18: 7, 8; 12: 32.
And it was told the king of Egypt that the people fled: and the heart of Pharaoh and his servants was turned against the people, and they said, Why have we done this, that we have let Israel go from serving us? And he made ready his chariot and took his people with him: And he took six hundred chosen chariots, and all the chariots of Egypt, and captains over every one of them. And the Lord hardened the heart of Pharaoh king of Egypt, and he pursued after the children of Israel: and the children of Israel went out with a high hand. But the Egyptians pursued after them, &c.—And when Pharaoh drew nigh, * * * they were sore afraid: and the children of Israel cried out unto the Lord. And Moses said unto the people, Fear ye not, stand still, and see the salvation of the Lord, which he will shew to you to-day: for the Egyptians whom ye have seen to-day, ye shall see them again no more for ever.	And the beast that was, and is not, even he is the eighth, and is of the seven and goeth into perdition. And the ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings, which have received no kingdom as yet; but receive power as kings one hour with the beast.—These have one mind, and shall give their power and strength unto the beast. These shall make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them: for he is Lord of lords and King of kings: And they went up on the breadth of the earth and compassed the camp of the saints about and the beloved city, and fire came down from God out of heaven and devoured them. And shall not God avenge his own elect, which cry day and night unto him, though he bear long with them? I tell you that he will avenge them speedily. Nevertheless, when the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth? Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom.

That the analogy may appear more striking, let us bear in mind that Moses is a type of Christ, while Pharaoh and his people stood as representatives of Satan and the enemies of God. We shall find that the devil and his host lose none of their malicious and deadly hatred in the closing scenes of conflict between them on the one hand and Jesus and his Church on the other. See 1st Peter 5: 8, and Rev. 12: 12, and more especially the 20th ch. and 9th vs., where his last desperate struggle is brought to view. But let us hasten to the catastrophe contained in the THIRD FEATURE OF SIMILARITY.

Exo. 14: 23—31.	Rev. 11: 18. Mark 13: 35. Rev. 1: 7. Matt. 24: 30. 2d Thess. 1: 6—9. Rev. 15: 4.
And the Egyptians pursued, and went in after them to the midst of the sea, even all Pharaoh's horses, his chariots, and his horsemen. And it came to pass, that in the morning watch the Lord looked unto the host of the Egyptians through the pillar of fire and of the cloud, and troubled the host of the Egyptians, And took off their chariot-wheels, that they drave them heavily: so that the Egyptians said, Let us flee from the face of Israel; for the Lord fighteth for them against the Egyptians. And the Lord said unto Moses, Stretch out thine hand over the sea, that the waters may come again upon the Egyptians, upon their chariots, and upon their horsemen.—And the waters returned, and covered the chariots, and the horsemen, and all the host of Pharaoh that came into the sea after them: there remained not so much as one of them. But the children of Israel walked upon dry land in the midst of the sea; and the waters were a wall unto them on their right hand and on their left. Thus the Lord saved Israel that day out of the hand of the Egyptians. * * And Israel saw that great work which the Lord did * * and the people feared the Lord, and believed the Lord, and his servant Moses.	And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldst give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldst destroy them which destroy the earth. Watch ye therefore; for ye know not when the master of the house cometh, at even, or at mid night, or at the cock-crowing, or in the morning, (Watch.) Behold, he cometh with clouds; And they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory. Seeing it is a righteous thing with God to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you; And to you who are troubled, rest with us; when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, In flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ: Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power; When he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe (because our testimony among you was believed) in that day. Who shall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name? for thou only art holy; for all nations shall come and worship before thee; for thy judgements are made manifest.

What we wish to impress on the mind in the foregoing feature is three particulars, namely:—"Clouds," "Fire," and "Morning Watch." We observe these distinguish the catastrophe in the type in a remarkable manner, and the same will also distinguish the catastrophe impending. We are fast approaching that eventful epoch, "The Morning Watch," when the Lord shall look down again upon His enemies, and the enemies of His church "through the pillar of fire and the cloud," trouble the wicked host, and finally destroy them with a sore and quick destruction; while at the same time He will deliver His saints, who will triumphantly sing, not only as the delivered ones in the type, "the song of Moses;" but in higher and richer strains, "the songs of Moses, the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb." Hallelujah!

And now we come at once to the triumphant scene subsequent to the catastrophe, and notice how beautifully the events accord in this the last particular which is the FOURTH FEATURE OF SIMILARITY.

Exo. 15.	Rev. 15: 1—3; 19: 1—7. Isa. 25: 6—10. Rev. 14: 3.
Then sang Moses and the children of Israel this song unto the Lord, and spake, saying, I will sing unto the Lord, for he hath triumphed gloriously: the horse and his rider hath he thrown into the sea The Lord is my strength and song, and he is become my salvation. * * The Lord is a man of war: the Lord is his name. Pharaoh's chariots and his host hath he cast into the sea: his chosen captains also are drowned in the Red Sea. The depths have covered them: they sank into the bottom as a stone. Thy right hand, O Lord, is become glorious in power: thy right hand, O Lord, hath dashed in pieces the enemy. And in the greatness of thine excellency thou has overthrown them that rose up against thee: thou sentest forth thy wrath, which consumed them as stubble. Who is like unto thee, O Lord, among the gods? who is like thee, glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders? Thou in thy mercy hast led forth the people which thou hast redeemed: thou has guided them in thy strength unto the holy habitation. Thou shalt bring them in, and plant them in the mountain of thine inheritance, in the place, O Lord, which thou hast made for thee to dwell in; in the sanctuary, O Lord, which thy hands have established. The Lord shall reign forever and ever. Sing ye to the Lord, for he hath triumphed gloriously.	And I saw as it were a sea of glass mingled with fire; and them that had gotten the victory over the beast, and over his image, and over his mark, and over the number of his name, stand on the sea of glass, having the harps of God. And they sing the song of Moses the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb, saying, Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty: just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints. Who shall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name? * * * thy judgements are made manifest. And after these things I heard a great voice of much people in heaven, saying, Alleluia; Salvation, and glory, and honour, and power, unto the Lord our God: For true and righteous are his judgements: for he hath judged the great whore, which did corrupt the earth with her fornication, and hath avenged the blood of his servants at her hand. And again they said, Alleluia. * * * And I heard as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying; Alleluia; for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth. Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honour to him: for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready. And in this mountain shall the Lord of hosts make unto all (his) people a feast of fat things, a feast of wines on the lees, of fat things full of marrow, of wines on the lees well refined. And he will destroy in this mountain the face of the covering cast over all people, and the vail that is spread over all nations. He will swallow up death in victory. * * * And it shall be said in that day, Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, * * we will be glad and rejoice. * * For in this mountain shall the hand of the Lord rest. And they sung as it were a new song before the throne.

Thus we have hastily run over those four features as presented in the type and antitype, shewing the concordance existing therein. The Scriptures quoted show a striking similarity between the deliverance of the children of Israel at the Red Sea, under the hand of Moses, and the impending crisis—the redemption of the children of the kingdom under the hand of Jesus our coming Deliverer and King.—Brethren, let us dig deep—there are many sparkling jewels yet that may be brought out of the rich mine of God's word: with a little labor and the divine assistance we may obtain them, thus keeping in exercise those gifts conferred upon us which God designed, "for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ, till we all come in the unity of the faith, and the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ." Being knit together in love, let us endeavor to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace, laboring to build each other up in most holy faith, praying in the Holy Ghost, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus with eternal life. Brethren, time emphatically is short—the Lord truly is at hand.

Thrilling scenes lie just before us,
Wondrous to behold and grand;
Let nothing from the faith decoy us;
That redemption is at hand.

The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost be with you all. Amen.

Elizabeth City, N. J., Sept., 1855.

P. S. The Lord willing, in our next we shall consider "The Star and Magi," of the first Advent in its connection with the "Morning Star" and the second Advent of our adorable Redeemer.

Anger.—Anger is like rain, which breaks itself upon that on which it falls.

Selected For The World's Crisis,

By Edwin Burnham.

The Arguments for embracing Divine Revelation arise from—

1. The wonderful mechanism of the human frame. Ps. 139: 14-16, and Eccl. 12: 1-7.
2. External and internal evidences of Scripture.
3. The phenomena or wonders of nature.
4. The analogy of art.
5. Animal instinct.
6. Powers of conscience.
7. March and triumphs of Christianity.
8. Universal consent.
9. Extraordinary judgments.
10. Accomplishment of Prophecy.
11. Miraculous phenomena.
12. Infidelity has no substitute or equivalent to offer for what it would rob the world of.
13. Infidelity is but another name for blasphemy—murder—suicide—robbery—libertinism—treason—rebellion —slandering—lying—persecution—and every other description of crime.
14. Finally; personal religion, or the life of God in the soul of man, founded on the Scripture axiom, "He that believeth hath the witness in himself; he that believeth not God, hath made (or called) HIM a liar. Such is the horrifying blasphemy of Infidelity.

Arrogance and evils of Infidelity.

Among the various evils to which both civil and moral institutions are exposed, none present so bold a front as infidelity. Its professed object is to strike at the root of that superstructure which was founded upon the Rock of Ages, and which has stood ever since the Christian Era began.

This huge monster in human form has stalked over every part of the civilized world—he has planted daggers in the hearts of men and women—he has hurled his venomous shafts against that fabric which was reared by an Omnipotent arm; but they have as yet fallen harmless at its base.

Instead of alleviating the wretched condition of man, he has ever been active in scattering the seeds of discord, disease, ruin and death. He has poured out the vial of his wrath upon the Church of Christ, an institution which has stood unshaken, while others have crumbled around it, and yet shall stand, even till time itself shall be no more.

When he is willing to lend the hand of charity—to sympathize with the afflicted, to give to the poor—to relieve the disconsolate widow and the starving orphan—to set the captive free—to instruct the ignorant—to leave his native land, and sacrifice his life and his all in the cause of philanthropy, for the redemption of a lost world—then, and not till then, can we give the least countenance to the flimsy theory of infidelity, nor even then, until its claims to common sense are better established than they have ever yet been, for even common-sense exclaims, "away with such a theory from the earth."

Ask the infidel what he has done to ameliorate the condition of man? He will find it difficult to reply. Ask him what he has not done? He must tell you that he has not accomplished his grand project of convincing the world that Christianity is a mere whim, the Bible a fiction, religion a dream, and Jesus Christ an impostor. He will tell you that he has not yet succeeded in taking the blood-stained banner of the cross from the friends and disciples of Christ, which was unfurled on Calvary—that he has not yet wrested from the Christian's grasp those most powerful of weapons in the moral world—right reason and—the Bible. Such are not among the proud and triumphant boastings of infidelity! When his pride is gratified—when his project is accomplished—when he has brought all mankind to bow at his altar—then the world may hail horror and eternal night.

If Infidelity has done nothing to alleviate suffering humanity, what has it not done towards scattering fire-brands and death in the world? Has not every path in which it has trod been strewed with thorns, and crimsoned with blood?

Let France tell the horrid tale! Let the martyrs who died in the ranks of the Savior, answer! Let the Waldenses who were butchered to a man, answer! By its paralysing influence, Europe has been involved in wars the most terrific ever waged on this globe.

If such are the kind, benevolent and philanthropic exertions of infidelity, how dare her advocates, with such an air of triumph, assert that the Book of Inspiration is a mere "cunningly devised fable?" Only cause man to think that he is an unaccountable creature, that death is an eternal sleep, and that he is to sink into a state of annihilation, and you strike at the very root of his virtuous affections—you destroy the nobler and the finer feelings of the heart—you convert man, rational man, into a brute—you put the dagger of the assassin into his hands, and he vies with his brother murderer in perpetrating wicked deeds.

Is not this sufficient to show that the principles of infidelity are fallacious? If they are true, how is it that its advocates do not remain firm in their belief unto the end? How is it that in the hour of dissolving nature they shrink at the approach of death? Then they have no arm on which to lean, no guide to the realms of bliss. The very theory of the infidel involves him in doubt and uncertainty! he regards the present, but is regardless of the future; he attributes his own existence to chance, and like one of the ephemera which flit in the morning sunbeam, only for an hour, and then dies—he too lives but a day, and then sinks into oblivion.

Talk not to him of the future—he knows nothing about it; it appears to him a dark, inextricable mass! Death to him is a leap into annihilation. If he be right, if he possess a spark of humanity, if the love of gratitude glow in his bosom, why in the name of common sense does he not break from the embrace of his friends and go into heathen lands, sacrifice his life and his fortune in teaching those who are sunk in the depths of ignorance and superstition, to demolish both their idols and their altars? He has never made one effort to dispel the gloom which has shrouded their benighted lands for more than five thousand years. He has never contributed one farthing towards educating their sable sons, and redeeming them from the thraldom of the most abject ignorance and idolatry. Why does he not arrest the hand of the cruel and unfeeling mother, as she throws her infant into the jaws of death? Why does not he snatch the torch from the Hindoo son, as he presents it to the funeral pile of his widowed mother? Why does he not chain the wheels of the ponderous car of Juggernaut which has rolled in the blood of millions? but he has dared to assail the very Government under which he lives and acquires his very fortune and respectability, in such language as this:—"A nation can never be prosperous and happy while such a contradictory mass of rules, precepts, and doctrines, as this old collection of fabulous Jew-books contains, gives a spirit to its laws."

For The Crisis.

Letter from Br. J. D. Merriam.

Br. Merriam:—I write to inform you and the readers of the Crisis, of my present position and prospects.

As to my faith, I still regard the coming of the Lord as an event to be most ardently looked for and desired.

I see no reason to doubt the evidence we have had, and still do have, that our blessed Lord and Savior is soon to be revealed, to the joy of all His waiting children. But my faith has been shaken as to our coming to a positive knowledge on the definite time for the event to transpire. Br. Burnham expressed my views and feelings on that point a few weeks since. I have been humbled in view of our imperfection in knowledge and judgment; human nature, at best, is weak indeed.

It has been a question in my mind, how far the Spirit of God operates, in guiding into truth. In John 16: 13, we read:—"When he, the Spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth, and show you things to come."

In our experience as Advent people, this text has been used to give strength to every new view that has been taken of Scripture. When the subject of time was first presented, it was claimed that the Spirit of God guided into a knowledge of it; hence it was, that individuals not having eyes to see the time, were considered as destitute of the Spirit.

This was the case in 1843 and '4, also to some extent in '54. It has been used also in the discussion of other Scripture doctrines, such as the life and death question, the Sabbath, &c.

The Spirit of God is called the Spirit of truth; hence, if it guides a man, it will guide him into truth, not error. Did the Spirit of God teach us that Christ would come the second time in 1843 or '4?—Was it truth that He came at that time? Yes! say our friends who hold the spiritual view of His coming. No! says the literalist. What was truth in the matter? Why that Christ was coming the second time, and it was time for the Church to wake up to a consideration of that great subject. It is not promised that the Spirit shall guide us into a knowledge of all the things to come; but, shew you "THINGS to come." What were made known to us as things to come?

1. The personal coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.
2. The resurrection of the righteous dead, and change of the righteous living, at that time.
3. The dissolving of the present heavens and earth by fire; the creation of new heavens and earth wherein dwelleth righteousness.
4. That the new earth was to be the final abode of the saints, after the resurrection.
5. That the signs in the heavens and on the earth, both physical and moral, indicate these events as being very nigh at hand.
6 That the prophetic periods pointed to about this time for these things to be revealed.

Now I do not know as it can be reasonably questioned, but the things above referred to are truth. So far, then, we have had the guidance of the Spirit; for its teaching is always in harmony with the word. That the Spirit of God taught us to believe and teach that Christ would certainly come in '43, '44, '47, or '54, or '55, I have been led to doubt. That Christ has been with His children, while believing things which did not actually prove to be the truth, I believe; but because He has been with us in error, that does not make that error truth. There are things connected with the coming of Christ, of which I have not arrived at a knowledge.

In regard to the late movement on time, I find good Brn. differ; some thinking it to be the Midnight Cry, while others doubt about it, or think it is not so. Time will soon determine what is truth in the matter.

I have been for a few weeks engaged in circulating Cummings' books, to some extent; but not meeting with that encouragement I expected, have given it up for the present, even if I ever engage in it again. I find in his works a great deal that is good, excellent, while there are other things which tend to build up the things we have been engaged in trying to pull down. I refer to the Jew question, infant baptism, &c. If we are in error, in these things, it is always well to exchange error for the truth; but those things we have before proved to be error, we do not wish to endorse as truth.

I engaged in the work, not because I supposed his works were perfect, but thinking they might influence some minds to come to a knowledge of truth, that could not otherwise be reached.

Another object was, I thought I might be able to do something for my own support, as I found Brn. where I labored, were not able, or did not do as much for me as I needed to meet the current expenses of my family.

Since my engaging in it, it has been a source of perplexity and trial to me; hence, I have thought best to engage for a season, in laboring at my former occupation, that present necessities may be supplied. I intend to preach on Sundays as I have a call so to do, or duty opens the way.

Never have I had a stronger love for the Savior, or a stronger determination to walk in the path which leads to life, than I have at present, and never have I felt so sensibly that we were living in perilous times, as now. I hope, I sigh and long for the Redeemer to come and reign.

I have often felt as the sainted Rutherford expressed himself, in his longings for the Advent of Christ.

"His absence is a mountain of lead upon my heavy heart. O, when shall we meet? Oh how long is it to the dawning of the marriage day? O sweet Jesus, take wide steps! O my Lord, come over mountains at one stride! O my beloved, flee like a roe, or a young hart on the mountains of separation. O that he would fold the heavens together like an old cloak, and shovel time and days out of the way, and make ready in haste the Lamb's wife for her husband. Since he looked upon me, my heart is not mine own, he hath run away to heaven with it."—Voice Ch.

So my longing heart cries, "O come, bring immortality."

That you and I, and all the ransomed Church may soon be far from the oppressor, and safe in the kingdom of God, and sit down at the Marriage Supper of the Lamb, is the prayer of your unworthy Br. seeking it.

For The Crisis.

"A new commandment I give unto you that ye love one another: as I have loved you, that ye also love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another."—John 13: 34, 35.

The principle contained in the above verses fell from the lips of our divine Master just previously to his ascension to be with his Father, and never, in my humble judgment, did Christ utter words more full of meaning, and more full of interest to the Church and world, than these. If this principle is cherished and lived out by the Church of God, no testimony can be produced that will demonstrate to a perishing world more clearly the origin, immutability, and divine reality there is in the holy religion of Jesus Christ. And what a responsibility rests upon every member of the body of Christ touching this subject, and doubtless those to whom he uttered this language well considered, and highly appreciated this celestial truth, for by the development of this principle the human family were to be convinced that Christ was really what he professed to be—the son of God and that the new covenant or testament which he made and sealed with his own blood, was truly of heavenly origin, and consequently no person could invalidate the principles expressed in this will or testament, without incurring the displeasure of the Almighty, and exposing themselves to the curse of God. If there is any one consideration of Christ's, as a rule of faith, more important than another, this seems to be the one; for this one was expressed to, and imposed upon the church just prior to his ascension. Only a little time previously to Christ's departure out of this world He addressed His followers by using the endearing appellation, little children, and says to them, "yet a little while I am with you, ye shall seek me, and as I said to the Jews, whither I go ye can not come, so now I say to you." This announcement of the son of God gave the desciples much sorrow of heart, and they were exceedingly troubled because of this saying. But Christ did not leave them in this disconsolate situation without first rendering them some consolation; for, said he, if I go not away the comforter will not come unto you; but if I go away I will send the comforter from the Father even the spirit of truth. He shall testify of me, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said to you, he shall abide with you forever. In the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world. "Let not your heart be troubled, ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions, if it were not so I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you; and if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you to myself, that where I am, there ye may be also." Here then we discover that the desciples had the express declaration and positive assurance that He would send the comforter to lead them into all truth, and also that He would come again from heaven, and receive them to himself, that they might see and share His glories forevermore. And during the interval between his departure and return, they were to carry out the principle embodied in the text, namely, "love one another as I have loved you."

By searching the divine record, we see God's benevolence and goodness clearly exhibited to a rebelious and God-dishonoring world. For he "so loved the world that he gave his only begotton son, that whosever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life." This love was impartial, as well as pure. It extended to every generation of Adam's posterity, to the high, the low, the rich, the poor, the noble and ignoble, all were to be equally benefitted by God's benevolence in the bestowment of his well beloved son—Christ Jesus our divine Redeemer. The Life-giver and Redeemer, most gloriously displayed the depth of His love, by the sacrifice which he made on Calvary's awful summit. There, on that mount, He really became poor, that the world through His poverty, might be made rich. There he tasted death for every man; there His precious blood flowed freely for the sins of the whole world; there eternal salvation or redemption was purchased and offered to all mankind; and there blessed be God according to the purpose of the divine mind, His well beloved and obedient Son—the Captain of our salvation—became perfect through suffering; and thus we see clearly exhibited His humility, devotion, submission and unparalleled love which was co-extensive with the dying sons and daughters of Adam. After the development of such matchless love, no wonder the beloved disciple exclaimed, "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God!" And if Jesus Christ, in connection with his Father, could love mankind so ardently, should we consider it an unpleasant and burdensome thing to return the same affection, and submit freely to be governed by the counsel originating and flowing from His infinite mind? No, no, never. Then in compliance with the requirements of this new commandment, let every one who considers him or herself a disciple or member of the body of Christ, carry out the injunction of the Son of God, and love one another as He has loved the Church; be willing to lay down their lives for Jesus Christ, and also fot one another.—"For by this, shall all men know that ye are my disciples." When God's people are thus knit together in the bonds of Christian fellowship and truth, they need not the wisdom or scrutiny of any body of ecclesiastics to concoct a creed to bind them together. No; for if inspired truth together with the love of God shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Ghost, will not cement and cause their minds and affections to flow together, all the sagacity of a sectarian priesthood never can. Their wisdom has ever failed to accomplish this; for when we take a retrospect of the past, and survey the history of the first and all consecutive creeds, we see the deleterious effects they have produced upon the world whether professor or non-professor. Division and subdivision, hatred, contumely and war have been the result; and over fifty millions of God's people have sacrificen their lives under the direful influence of the first creed; and although the influence of the rest has not had such universal ascendancy, yet the noxious exhalations they have produced, has well nigh destroyed the world. So that it requires much skill, energy and persevering faithfulness to disabuse the minds of the people, and recover them from the mire of mysticism into which they have fallen, so that the Gospel of the Son of God can benefit them. The Apostle Paul, while under the influence of the Holy Ghost, foresaw this hetrogeneous state of things; for he says in Acts 20: 28, in his farewell charge to the Elders, "Take heed, therefore, to yourselves and to all the flock over which the Holy Ghost has made you overseers, to feed the Church of God which he has purchased with his own blood. For I know this, that after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock. Also of your own selves shall men arise speaking perverse things to draw away disciples after them. Therefore watch and remember that by the space of three years I ceased not to warn every one night and day with tears," and in conclusion he commends them to God and the word of His grace which is able to build them up and give them an inheritance among all them which are sanctified. How strikingly has the forebodings of the Apostle been fulfilled! None but the revealer of secrets could everhave caused such demonstrations as this; and yet in the presence of such clearly revealed facts, how is it that thousands of the professed ministers of Christ run counter to the express declaration of the Holy Ghost on this subject? I tremble for them while I view their imminent danger. May God bless them by opening their eyes to consider their sad condition, that they may labor to remedy the evil There is no subject more clearly set forth in the Bible than the one under consideration; and there is no commandment of the New Covenant treated with such manifest disregard. The professed Church trample upon this truth with impunity, and act as though they were never to be called to render an account for such a course of behavior. Jesus Christ, in His last prayer recorded in the 17th of John, prays most fervently that the children of God might be one, even as the Father and Son are one. Paul, in his first letter to the Church of God at Corinth, says, "Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment."

Again; in the 13 ch. of Cor he is more lengthy in his instruction concerning the matter. First the body of Christ (or Church) is mentioned, and in that body God hath set Apostles, Prophets, Teachers, miracles, gifts of healing, helps, governments, diversities of tongues. This one body has many members, and each has its special gift; but all by one Spirit. All become members of this one body by faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and obedience to His commandments. "For by one spirit are we all baptized into the one body" (or Church.) All the members of this one body, having different gifts, are necessary to its edification and growth, as much so as the different members in the natural body is afflicted, all the others sympathise with it; and so it should be with the body of Christ. Each member should have the same care one for another. Perhaps some may think that this characteristic of the christian religion is too strait for its devotees in this nineteenth century to be governed by; but we think after a little candid reflection, all will see the sublimity of this principle of love at once. This principle of Christian duty can not be extracted from the holy oricles, without causing a serious defect in the economy of grace, and thereby endangering our salvation; all other principles of truth and justice seem to be involved in this, and it needs not a very scrutinizing mind to discern, that there is no one duty which, when done, would so effectually assimilate the hearts of Christians as this one; for when each others trials, afflictions, temptations and wants and cared and provided for, it produces an affection which is real and abiding, and which will be rewarded with all the glories of the Kingdom of God in the coming day of the Lord Jesus. There in view of the blessings to be enjoyed, let the Church, as a whole, labor to attain to its original perfection and standing touching this and all other points of Christian duty; for when this state of mind is obtained, the world will be constrained to acknowledge that there is a God in Israel, and that He has power on earth still to forgive sins; and that the Church does sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus, even here, amidst the surging billows of these last days, and as a result of such a course many will be compelled by the power of truth to forsake their sins, embrace the Gospel, and become the children of the Temple of God. That there are a multiplicity of almost insurmountable obsticles, lying in the way of the progress of the suffering cause of our coming Lord, no thinking person will deny; for while the leading inteligences of this world surveys the many conflicting creeds, and sects whose influences are always antagonistical to each other, they can be but skeptical in relation to the word of God, unless they have canvassed the Scriptures independently of these impediments; and if they do, they are sure to learn that the professed Church have widely departed from its primitive calling. In the days of Christ and the Apostles, the Church was one, its interests, faith and hope were one, And this body was styled the Church of God, or Christ, in every instance. Individuals identified with this body were called Christians, disciples, friends, brethren, elect, &c. But none of the distinguishing names that now appear, such as Roman Catholic, Episcopalians, Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians Lutherans, and so on to the end of the great catalogue of sectarian names were ever used to dessignate the people of God; and thus the primitive Church, under the symbol of a virtuous woman dearly beloved, is represented as going forward beautiful, and comely as Jerusalem, looking forth as the morning, fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners. In this manner she appeared on the day of Pentecost, and the ultimatum was that three-thousand who heard the Gospel were pricked in their hearts, and yielded obedience to the mild sway of the Prince of life. Glory be to God for such mighty achievements, In this way she went forth conquoring and to conquor, leaning upon the arm of her beloved until the man of sin, the mystery of iniquity, the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth, scattered devastation and death through her admirable and unbroken ranks.

Since then she has waded through scenes of tribulation and anguish till her blood now cries to the throne of God for vengeance, and, thank God, we believe from unmistakable omens that she will be speedily avenged. Those who have been the direct agents in bringing all these conflicting creeds and divisions into being, and thereby severing the unity, affections, and interests of the Church of God, cannot be Christians, allowing the inspired Apostle Paul to be judge. Hear him. "I beseech you, brethren, mark them which cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned, and avoid them. For they that are such, serve not our Lord Jesus Christ, but their own belly. And by good words and fair speeches, deceive the hearts of the simple."

Well, after all that is said and done, we are right glad that there is a remnant according to the election of grace scattered here and there, who have seen the evils of sectarianism, and are laboring to counteract its direful influence, and restore the original union, love and power. So my dear Brn. and Srs., may God clothe you with the whole panoply of heaven, and speed you on in the great conflict that lies before you in the order of coming events. Success will attend your feeble efforts put forth in the name of the Lord, and great will be your achievements, when the Bridegroom shall assume his royal authority, and sit on the throne of David, clothed with all his habiliments of glory, and reward his faithful, uncompromising, and devoted Church with eternal glory in the speedily approaching kingdom of God.

A. N. SEYMOUR.

The Resplendent Ones.

"Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father."—Matthew 13: 43.

I have already investigated our expectation of "a new heaven and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness:" or what Abraham, a pilgrim and a stranger patriarch, "looked for—a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." It is most important to study the verse prefixed to this chapter, as illustrating the character of those who are to live in that city that hath foundations, who are to be the inhabitants of that new earth, and to breathe that new, pure, and divine atmosphere, when the former heavens shall have passed away like a scroll, and the earth and the things that are therein shall have been burned up. After all, it most concerns us to ascertain, not what shall be the architectural structure of our future home, but what must be the spiritual character of the inhabitants; not where we shall be in the age to come,—though, if God has revealed it, it is our duty to study it, and to express our sentiments upon it; but far more important, confessedly important, asserted in Scripture to be so, is the inquiry, Are we members of that happy family who are at home in the height and in the depth—everywhere? Are we among those who are here pronounced to be righteous by him who cannot mistake, and who are prophesied to to shine forth on that new earth, and in that divine city, like the sun, or, as Daniel states, "as the sun in the firmament, and the brightness of the stars for ever and ever"?

The connection of the words quoted is abundantly obvious. "Then," he says, "shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." "Then shall the righteous"—alluding to a time. What "then" is this? The time after the earth and the things that are therein shall be burned up. After the "new heavens and the new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness," have emerged from the ruin,—after the city for which the patriarch looked has come down from heaven,—after Jesus has pronounced the words, "Come, ye blessed,"—"then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." The words of this promise occur at the close of a parable. "The field is the world; the good seed are the children of the kingdom; but the tares are the children of the wicked one; the enemy that sowed them is the devil; the harvest is the end of the world; and the reapers are the angels." The tares are gathered—when? At the end of the world, and burned in the fire. In another parable Jesus said, Take care not to try to pull out the tares now, lest you pull out the wheat with them. The tares shall be taken out at the end of the world. We should endeavor to have the visible church as pure as possible, and the visible ministry as true as we can; yet we cannot expect a pure Christian church till Christ comes. The field shall grow tares till the end; and the Son of man only by himself, or by the ministry of his angels, not the ministers of the Gospel, shall weed that field, and gather the tares to their doom, and the sheaves, the golden sheaves of the wheat, to his barns in the kingdom of our Father in heaven.

The character of those who are then to shine forth as the sun is that of "the righteous." Who are they? What man can say, looking into his own heart, turning over the leaves of memory, listening to the whispers or the thunders of conscience, I am righteous? The Bible has settled all controversy on this topic. "All have sinned." "There is none righteous, no, not one." David said so, many thousand years ago; and Paul repeats the same melancholy but faithful verdict, many hundreds of years afterwards, "Their throat is an open sepulchre;" "There is none righteous, no, not one;" "Their feet are swift to shed blood. There is no fear of God before their eyes. Now we know that what things soever the law saith it saith to them that are under the law: that every mouth may be stopped, and all the world may become guilty before God." Such is the sweeping and unsparing verdict pronounced from a tribunal from which there is no appeal, and not pronounced on the ancient Jew and on the heathen Gentile only, but upon me, upon you, reader, upon all who are by nature the children of Adam, and born in sin and corruption. If this be so, and if there be no exception, there shall be surely none to "shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father;" for it is only the righteous that are predicted thus to shine, and said to be thus admitted. Blessed fact! There is a perfect provision for us; there is a righteousness laid up for them who have sinned, whose mouths are thus stopped, who stand thus guilty before God. Those who are transplanted from the old Adam and grafted in the new; those who have the righteousness of faith, their only standing and their only title before God; those who have that sanctification and renewal of heart, those good fruits, and that Holy Spirit, which are the evidence of their acceptance before God, and the work of the Holy Spirit; those who are justified by a righteousness without them, and simultaneously sanctified by the washing of regeneration, and the renewing of the Holy Ghost within them;—these are "the righteous," who "shall shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father;"

But it may be asked, Where is the righteousness intimated? and on what authority do we assert the possibility or possession of this first righteousness by which we are justified before God? In the same passage in which we are told of our ruin, we are informed of the method of our acceptance. "All have sinned;" "therefore, by the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified." That is, there is no justification by the law; you are proved to have broken it at this moment, and no subsequent conformity to it, however exact, can justify you. "But now the righteousness of God without the law is manifested, being witnessed by the law and the prophets; even the righteousness of God, which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all and upon all them that believe: for there is no difference: for all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God, being justified freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus:"—what glorious accents are these!—"whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare," not his mercy, but "his righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God; to declare, I say, his righteousness; that he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus." Now, this is the first and great part of that righteousness by which we are made righteous in the sight of God. Have we accepted Christ in and by faith? In the prospect of eternity is the whole stress of our hope laid upon this, that he who knew no sin was made sin for us, that we might be made the righteousness of God by him? We need nothing more; we must be satisfied with nothing less. Nothing we do can honor that law which we have broken Nothing we suffer can exhaust that curse that we have incurred. No tears that pentitents may shed, no blood that martyrs may pour out as festal wine, can expiate the least sin that taints the purest conscience in the whole universe of God. By deeds of the law, by anything we do, by aught we suffer, there is no acquittal or acceptance before God; but, by this righteousness which is without us, not in us, which is received by faith, not originated within us, which is as perfect the first moment of its acceptance as it will be at the time when we shall shine forth in the kingdom of our Father, we are made perfectly righteous in the sight of God, entitled to all heaven, because Christ is; we stand before God, accepted in Christ the beloved, a glorious church, without spot or blemish, or any such thing. Here, then, is our title.

Christians, we are told in Scripture, are now hidden. "Now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be." "The world," it is said, "knoweth us not." "Our life is hid with Christ in God." The Psalmist calls them "God's hidden ones." Christian character we must not expect to be admired by a world that hates it. I admit that the world can admire honesty, and certain outside graces, beautiful in their place, possessed by the Christian and possessed by the worldling too; but the world cannot admire real, living religion, that moral beauty which the king's daughter alone has, which is inner, not outer,—spiritual, not material. The man of the world can appreciate the ancient Parthenon, glorious and majestic in its ruins. He can admire the vastness of the stupendous pyramids, tombs as they are. He can estimate the magnificence of St. Peter's, at Rome. He can admire the glories of the sky when lighted up with all its splendors, and the beauties of the earth when clothed with its summer verdure and blossoms. But living stones he does not understand, and living temples he cannot appreciate.—Christian character is a thing his eye is too blind to see, his touch too coarse to handle, his soul too dead to appreciate and to applaud. And hence, whatever, a Christian does as a Christian, the world will misapprehend. Let a Christian be humble, the world will pronounce him mean. Let him be zealous, the world will call him a fanatic. Let him be faithful, speaking the truth honestly and plainly, and the world will forthwith denounce him as furious. Let a Christian be whatever grace can make him, and the world cannot understand it. It is the inner life that is hid with Christ in God. Hence, they have been persecuted, they have been burned, they have been misrepresented, they have been hated of all men, they have passed through much tribulation, they have learned by practical experience, "Marvel not if the world hate you." The world can understand baptized men, but it cannot understand regenerated men.—The world can comprehend a psalm, but it cannot understand praise. It can admire a liturgy, it cannot discern prayer. It can appreciate the skirt of the garment, and the fringe upon it, but the living heavenly life that is beneath is hid from it, for it is hid with Christ in God.

Another reason why Christians are hid here, and do not shine at present in the kingdom of their Father, is this: the great majority of believers, unfortunately in one sense, I may admit, belong to the humbler and the poorer ranks of life. It is true now, as it was in the apostles' days, it was the common people that heard Christ gladly. It was the priest, the Pharisee, the Sadducee, that hated, detested, denounced him. To them, therefore, he said, "Ye hypocrites!" The great sin which Jesus condemned was the sin of hypocrisy. But to the poor woman caught in a crime he spoke purely, as became one holy as

Deity, yet in the language of tenderness. And even when he was angry, it is said, "Jesus looked upon them with anger."—But, it is added—as if there was something in his anger that is not often in our hearts—"being grieved at the hardness of their hearts." The very anger that was conveyed in a stern rebuke had an inner feeling of grief at the hardness of their hearts. God's people are still mainly the common people. "Not many noble, not many wise, not many mighty, are called."—"God hath chosen the poor of this world." "The poor have the Gospel preached unto them." Now, because such are in lowly circumstances, their Christianity is not seen. I have no doubt that there is more Christianity in London than we see or suspect. We can see Christianity only when it flashes from on high. We cannot see those beautiful lights that are shining in lowly and miserable places, in the forms of patience, meekness, gentleness, battling with hunger, and nakedness, and cold,—unknown martyrs. There is many a martyr in a London cellar, whose praise the trumpet does not sound, whose commendation the newspaper column does not record. And when, perhaps, we say, "I only am left alone," we may have in our parish, in our neighborhood, seven thousand, unseen by us, but seen by the all-seeing God, who have never bowed the knee to Baal. It is thus that, because piety is much of it necessarily in lowly life, the righteous do not now shine forth in the kingdom of their Father. These flowers are hidden because they are in the sequestered nooks of the world. These diamonds are now incrusted with poverty, and therefore they cannot responsively reflect the light of the sun. Were men of real religion placed in the high places of the world, a little religion would go a great way. But, when true religion is placed amidst the pressure of narrow circumstances, it takes a great deal to penetrate the thick wrappage, and make itself be seen and felt from afar. Place a single candle on the spire of a cathedral, and thousands can see it. Place a burning and a shining light at the bottom of a coal-pit, and only half a dozen miners can see it. God's people are in the subterranean crypts of this great life of ours. By and by they shall be lifted up into the grand cathedral itself, and there they "shall shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father."

Christians are now much hid, because their very nature makes them opposed to display. They are, in proportion as they are Christians, clothed with humility.—They accept contendedly the place that God has given them. If they be lights, they are satisfied to shine just in the place in which God has located them. If, indeed, we be Christians, we shall refuse to be drawn out of our place by the praises of men; and we shall scorn to be driven out of it by the fear, or the hatred, or the persecution, of men. Jesus says to us, "If ye be Christians, let your light shine before men." There is a remarkable distinction in these last words, worth noticing. He does not say, "Strive to shine."—These are not the words of Jesus. But he says, "Let your light shine;" that is, do not sinfully conceal it. Do not gather around it clouds that should not be there; do not put your light under a bushel; be light, but neither labor nor refuse to shine. Do not go up to a hill-top that you may thus shine more conspicuously; and do not go down into a coal-pit, where I have not sent you, in order to conceal it.—Neither strive to shine, nor labor to conceal your character; but be light, and you shall be luminous. Remove all that obstructs, and you shall shine, not as you will one day do, but as far as it is possible now. Be salt, and you must salt all that is around you; be light, and you cannot being luminous within the range of your influence. Be anxious, not about the place or the candlestick, but be careful to trim the light that shines in that place, or is planted in that candlestick.—"Let your light so shine before men, that they may glorify your Father which is in heaven."

Christians are often hid now, because they are compassed with infirmities. Bad taste is often accompanied with true grace. The world sees not the grace, it witnesses the bad taste; it therefore condemns, unfairly, the man and his faith together, and thus his Christianity is hid. There are many Christians, too, who are lights; but they are fickle and unsteady lights. Others are intensely denominational lights.—Others allow flames to mingle with the light that ought to be repressed, or rather ought not to be there. We need, in manifesting our light to the world, as far as we are called upon to do it, not only all the wisdom of the serpent, but all the harmlessness of the dove, which is not always combined with it. But, if our light be hid, if our graces be misrepresented, if our motives be misconstrued, if our character be misinterpreted, if our humility be called meanness our boldness, rashness, and all our graces caricatured, we must not be discouraged. No strange thing has happened. Abel, the first Christian upon earth after Adam was converted, died a martyr; Enoch walked with God, and therefore the world knew him not; Jeremiah pined in a dungeon; Daniel was cast into the lion's den; the Baptist was beheaded; all the apostles, with the exception of John, died martyrs. These the world knew not, because it knew not Christ. The wonder is to me, not that true Christians are much reproached, but that they are not more so. When I consider their own infirmities and the ever-watchful enmity of the world, when I consider all that God has written about them, I am thankful that the indirect influence of the Gospel has so saturated the world that the direct light of the Gospel is not violently quenched, and its advocates martyred in the midst of it.

Such, then, is the condition of Christians now,—hid, reproached, not known by the world; but a day comes when these righteous ones, in the language of our Lord, "shall shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father."

This is certain. It is not a perradventure, but an absolute promise. It is not what may be, but what God has said must be. We may tarry in the present darkness that surrounds us hours and years before this glorious future; but come it will. No conflict is ours without victory. No obscurity is ours without a coming splendor. Frosts may nip the verdure of spring, the caterpillar may gnaw the summer leaf, or violence may cut short our lives; but no power can dim, no force can prevent the fulfilment of that glorious promise which can penetrate the poor man's hovel, as well as the rich man's hall,—"Ye, the righteous, then shall shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of your Father."

The World's Crisis.

Communications.

For some cause or other we have received but few communications of late, except some that are quite long. If we would have a paper published, let all to whom the Lord has given ability ask counsel of God in this thing, and write as the Spirit of God may direct. Endeavor to write in a fair and legible hand, let not the writing be too condensed or in too small a hand, and let it be revised if need be. Let Scripture quotations be as accurate as possible.

Editorial English Correspondence of the Advent Herald, Sept. 23, 1846.

PUBLISHED BY REQUEST.

One of the main objects of our mission is, to survey the field, so as to see what has been done in relation to the Advent proclamation, how it has been done, and what remains to be done. Many of your readers may recollect that quite a sensation was produced in England and Scotland, about a year ago, or more, through the preaching of our Lord's coming within a few weeks, by a Mr. Prince and three others, by the names of Thomas, Stark and Williams. They were all educated at Lampetre, a Welch College, and were connected with the "Establishment."—We are sorry to say, that they have done the cause no credit, but have been left to fall into great extravagances and errors.—Mr. Prince successively asserting that he was "Elijah," then the Two Witnesses, and now it is said, that he assumes to be the Holy Ghost! He maintained the "shut door," then denounced marriages as unlawful, and finally said he was in the kingdom, &c. We send you a letter, written by a once particular friend of his, and addressed to him, which will give you a clearer and fuller account of his course, and that of his associates, than we can now stop to do. You can publish it in this connection or not. Alas, for poor human nature! First, self-righteousness, then bigotry, and finally presumption and bigotry! Let others beware! Two individuals in this city, who have been able to get up a pamphlet of some 30 pages, in evidence of the coming of Christ at the Passover in 1848, refused, at our preliminary meeting, to co-operate with us in efforts to arouse this great community to a knowledge of the Lord's Advent right upon the world, solely because, forsooth, we believed in a Millennium to take place in the future! Such conduct is not only disgusting to man, but must be abhorrent to God.

The followers of Joanna Southcote have embodied in their system of faith the opinion of our Lord's coming. At one time they numbered 40,000, but now there are not thirty individuals of them remaining. Some have renounced her views in toto: others have gone off into a species of Judaism, the men wearing their beards long, practising circumcision, and other Jewish ordinances. They have but a single church, which is in London. The pastor, on whom we waited, treated us kindly, and furnished us with a number of magazines, &c., of which he had a great supply, remarking, that there were "no readers now." The denominational name which they assume, is placed in large letters upon the front of their place of worship—"The Church of God."—They adopt the Episcopal forms of worship, not because they were originally Episcopalians, but they were led in the outset to do so, lest they should be suspected or charged with having designs against the State, since, among other events for which they looked, was the invasion of England by France and Russia. Hence, by "the direction of God," they were led to adopt the Church forms, though it might seem as if human policy was the author of such an adoption. In this relation we shall give you what we received from the lips of the pastor of the Church, so as to give a fair and true statement of their opinions and history. Their reduction to almost nothing, and their severe trials, have not had a tendency to shake the faith of those who remain. In the year 1844, you recollect, we heard that some were putting forth, in this country, the prediction of the destruction of London, during that year, and that some were so alarmed as to leave the city. It appears that Joanna was the author of this prophecy, which was uttered in 1804, and to occur in forty years. Her followers say they erred in supposing that this period of forty years was to begin with 1804! They are unable to say at what point it should begin. They attach some importance to dreams, and profess to believe in revelations. The vestry of the Church had two or three drawings, illustrative of certain dreams, or visions, which one of their number had had several years ago; one of which was a simple view of Christ in the clouds, attended with his angels! They have large manuscripts, and a number of large books, the productions of three individuals, which, as they claim, were under the influence of the Holy Ghost, or divine inspiration, when they wrote.—Their names were, Joanna Southcote, Thomas Dowland, and Henry, afterwards, by the direction of God, called "Joseph" Prescott. Much of the books and manuscripts seemed to have been written under the influence of religious feelings; and contained pretty good sentiments. It generally was headed with reference to some passage of Scripture, and always concluded with, "so saith the angel of God."—Much of it was in the form of poetry, though it lacked the essentials of what men deem real poetry. They were not chargeable with adding to, or taking from the Word of God, since the predictions on on the subjects of inspiration of these individuals were only confirmatory, or illustrative, of what was already revealed and recorded on the pages of Scripture. Such language, they think, such sentiments, such great truths, could not have been put forth by such unlearned and untutored minds, neither of whom ever received any education. Joanna used to utter her oracles when by herself, and immediately put them in characters intelligible ouly to herself, and subsequently decipher them to others, by whom they were fitted for the press. The communications of "Joseph the youth," were received, perhaps, while he might have been engaged with his fellows in play, or upon any like occasion, and were immediately penned down by the pastor of the Church, now dead, with whom he lived. Thomas Dowland died in 1804; Joanna, in 1814; "Joseph," in 1824, and Elias Carpenter, for many years the pastor of the Church, in 1840. But Joseph renounced the faith entire before his death. And Joanna 'fell,' in 1805, mixing her own impurities with the divine revelations made to her, so as in some cases to speak "lies," From this time, her communications were not to be relied on, and the connexion was dissolved; she "cutting off" a large party, and they in turn, renouncing her.—Though, to this day, whatever she spoke under "the influence of the Spirit," is held to be good. About 1813–4, she gave out that she was the woman in Rev. 12, and was to give birth to the child.

This sect have had seven men anointed to go forth, like the Apostles, and preach the Gospel, working miracles in attestation of its truth. These have all died but one, without having executed their commission. They believe God will yet select and send forth seven to this work; they have the oil of spikenard ready to pour upon the heads of such; they did not know who the seven might be; for aught they could tell, we might contribute to this number. They regarded our visit to them as providential, and that God has sent us to England. No people had enjoyed such light as themselves, and none had been more ungrateful; would they but obey God, He would bless them above all others. They are looking for the Advent of the Spirit to precede the personal Advent of Christ.—They believe in a sort of spiritual continuous resurrection, which we could not understand. They seem to spiritualize and to literalize together. They believe in the final restoration, if we understand them, of the whole human family. They seem to be sincere, and to possess a good, kind spirit.

From the above, each can draw his own inferences, and indulge in his own reflections.

The followers of the late celebrated Edward Irving, like their great leader, profess to be looking for the Lord's return though it will be seen that they now are indulging in some expectations, and holding to some views and practices unknown by Him. We had a great desire to learn something about this people, who owed their origin, humanly speaking at least, to one of the most pious and eloquent preachers of his day, but who was not, like others, without his infirmities. Mr. Irving died about twelve years ago. We were anxious to ascertain in what estimation he is at present held by his followers, and how far they attach importance to his doctrine. One of whom we made the inquiry, cherished his memory with great affection; he had lost father and mother but his sorrow was never greater than on the death of Mr. Irving. He thought the Church made an idol of him, and God took him away—the Church would have been mad had he lived, for it was following the man instead of Christ and the Holy Spirit, as they publish nothing, and have no book, excepting the prayer book, from which you can gather their views; we sought and had a long private interview with one of the principal ministers of the Church, who, to the inquiry whether his own views essentially corresponded with those of the writings of Mr. Irving, replied, that he did not know what those of the latter were since he had not read them. On expressing surprise he explained, by stating that there was no occasion for reference to his works, because they all had the same spirit, and, of course, must be taught the same things. He said, however, that their form of Church service, organization, &c, did not originate with Mr. Irving, though that gentleman had some conception of the proper organization of the Church, and was proceeding to execute it: but this he had no authority for doing; it was a matter that belonged to another order of ministers, or officers in the Church. He could not tell us their denominational number even if he knew it; numbers are no evidence of the truth, or falsity of opinions. He stated that they had seven churches in London; the parent church is that with which Mr. Irving was connected: we learned from a member of the church, that they were not allowed to exceed seven. They felt themselves prohibited by the mouth of God speaking to his prophet, and directing them to establish such a number in London, and they had not yet had directions to constitute more. They have various orders of ministers, apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers, deriving their authority for these separate orders, from Eph. 4: 11. Connected with the "seven churches," are no less than 175 of them of different grades, all of whom form a council and who occasionally meet when called together by the apostles, to deliberate upon questions of importance. No man has a right to assume the ministerial office, because he thinks he has a gift for that office; he must first be called by the Holy Ghost speaking through a prophet. The teacher is termed, "the angel," in conformity to Rev. 2. None are expected to encroach upon the prerogatives of others: the province of each being defined and rigidly observed; so that though, on one occasion, we went to the church for the express purpose, at the conclusion of the services, of having an interview with one of the ministers, (we use the term in a general sense,) respecting their religious faith, we failed of our object, in consequence of the absence of the proper person whose duty it is to see and converse with inquirers.

About nine years ago, their apostles, twelve in number, were directed of God to take up their abode in Albany, with a Mr. Drummond, a rich banker. He received them as a faithful member of the Church should do, and has supported them ever since. They are waiting for the Holy Ghost to empower and send them forth to preach, and to heal the sick, and perform other miraculous works. Pretty good proofs of faith, patience, and liberality. Like other religious sects in this country, they remember their own poor, and do not throw them out upon the wide world to beg, or to be supported by the public in union or poor-houses. They allow to the widow and daughter of the late Mr. Irving, £600 per annum, towards their support. The poor woman is still arrayed in her mourning garb, and perhaps always will be. She is a constant worshipper at the house where her departed husband once drew multitudes to listen to his burning eloquence, and where even "Noble Lords" were willing to find a seat upon the door steps.

The advent of the Spirit is expected by them, or something more than the Church has realized as yet, before the coming of Christ. The Patriarchal and the Mosaic age, or dispensation, concluded as it begun; hence they suppose it will be so with that of the Gospel age. Still they are in duty always bound to watch, since, as they said, the Lord might come at any moment. The Episcopal form of service is observed by them, as was frankly owned, because they had so little of the Spirit—were they filled with the Spirit, there would be no necessity for reading prayers. It should be added, however, that their prayer-book differs a little from the Church of England. From our own observation, we should judge they were not, at present in danger of falling into any great religious ecstacies. They have public religious services for one house, every morning at 6 and 9 o'clock, and in the afternoon, at 5 o'clock. They do not immerse, but sprinkle. This is baptism, and is equivalent to regeneration! In this respect they confess themselves to be Papists. They believe in transubstantiation also, another acknowledged feature of the Papacy.—They admit none to their communion table excepting of their own number; no one else is even allowed to cross the threshold during the season of the Supper, not, as they said, because they themselves had any objection to their participating with them in this ordinance, but because they did not suppose that others, who differed with them respecting the conversion of the elements into the actual body and blood of Christ, could have any communion and fellowship with them in the service.

At the time of our attending their worship on Lord's-day, we found a congregation respectable for numbers and appearance. The ministers, or different officers of the Church, on entering from the vestry, were received by the congregation rising and standing, until they had all taken their respective seats. The train consisted of at least 15 or 20 men, who proceeded with their hands folded, their heads slightly bowed, and their persons covered with white surplices. The "angel" of the Church, by whom they were headed, however, had on a pure velvet robe, and differed from his associates in some other little respects. The services were conducted by each in turn, with the exception of the deacons, who occupied an inferior seat, and were silent. Had we time, we would give you the order of the services, together with other interesting details; some truths were uttered in which we felt interested, and they were put forth with seriousness and solemnity.—But O how our souls felt the need of the Great Teacher, to come and guide His wandering flock! A poor coachman, who had, with them, been looking for the Lord for a long time, said privately, with tears in his eyes, he had been waiting for Christ for more than twelve years, until now, he hardly knew whether He would ever come! What lessons should we all learn, to cleave to the word of God in all things, and to hold on to the same simple form of worship in which we received Christ.

For The Crisis.

"Yet a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep."—Prov. 6: 10.

Alas, alas! how many professed Christians are saying thus: "Time enough yet—Christ is not coming these thousand years—we are to have a thousand years millennium yet, so I will take a little more sleep."

Dear reader, do you realize the shortness of time? or the certainty of death? Do you think you are prepared to meet your Lord, if He should come and find you sleeping? O what a sad fate awaits such careless, sleeping Christians! Oh, do not give sleep to your eyes, nor slumber to your eyelids, until you have delivered yourself from the hand of the hunter, or as a bird from the hand of the fowler. "How long wilt thou sleep, O Sluggard? when wilt thou arise out of thy sleep?' It is high time to awake out of sleep. O do not sleep away your time—the time is short—time is precious—go to your closet and pray, and pray in earnest; and if need be, do as did Jacob of old, wrestle all night in prayer, and do not give up till you have gained the blessing. O do not delay, arise, and call upon thy God, that thou perish not. Do not say, the Lord delayeth His coming, do not say, peace and safety; for sudden destruction cometh upon all such, and they shall not escape. Then "watch, and be sober; for they that sleep, sleep in the night; but let us who are of the day, be sober, putting on the breastplate of faith and love; and for a helmet, the hope of salvation." 1st Thess. 5: 8.

Brn. and Srs., let us be watchful and prayerful, for the coming of our Lord draweth nigh; let us keep our garments unspotted from the world, and be not partakers of their sins, lest the Lord coming suddenly, should find us unprepared. I am not looking for a thousand years millennium before the second coming of Christ; but believe the day of the Lord is nigh at hand. What says the Apostle respecting the last days?

He says (2 Tim. 3: 1,) "This know, that in the last days perilous times shall come": is there any thing like it at the present time? I think there is. Look abroad over the land, and behold famines, pestilence, and war. Does it not agree?

Again: vs. 2–5. "For men shall be lovers of their own selves; covetous, boasters, proud, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, (yes too true,) disobedient to parents: (when was this more perfectly fulfilled?) truce breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, (how applicable to our day!) traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God: (alas! alas! how true it is,) having the form of godliness but denying the power thereof." Does not all of this apply to our day? Brn., the time is short; the day of the Lord is nigh; it hasteth greatly, but watch that we be not overtaken unawares; for the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night:

"Wherefore, beloved, seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent, that ye may be found of Him in peace, without spot, and blameless:"

For one, I am looking for such things; I expect soon to see "the Lord himself descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord

Wherefore comfort one another with these words." Yes, it is comforting to think on these things; to think how soon we shall be with Jesus, and reign with Him forever. Then will the saints "take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom forever, even forever and ever."

Brn. and Srs., will you be there? "To him that overcometh (says Christ) will I grant to sit with me on my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father on His throne."

Amen, and amen; bless the Lord, I mean to be there, reader, will you?

Armageddon.

By B. Matthias.

This gathering is for fighting God's battle—there are worldly issues and incentives to it, but these are ostensible reasons assigned by the parties in the conflict.—But the real issue is between the Lamb and these powers. "I saw the beast and the kings of the earth and their armies, gathered together to make war against him that sat upon the horse and against his army." Rev. 19: 19.

In the gathering to Armageddon it is to the battle of that great day of God Almighty Rev. 16: 14. The same battle is referred to in each place doubtless. This is the way God has prescribed for their destruction. Isa. 10th ch.

The present war has happened at the right time to fulfil the prophecy, at the pouring out of the 6th vial. In this point of time Euphrates is dried up, a present fact, also, the 7th is poured out, in the air. There is not a pure, righteous government on earth—nor an institution of any kind free from suspicion. Not only is this gathering at the right time, but it meets another discription of this day of wrath. The Angel thrust in his "sickle and gathered the clusters of the vine of the earth, and cast them into the great winepress of the wrath of God," &c. Rev. 14: 18, 19.

Again, it is not only so for these reasons, but the place of gathering named Armageddon. Able criticisms have been published on this word and war—which must suffice in that direction. But as God always guards the credit of prophecy, and secures the fulfilment of it, to meet all the reasonable demands of faith and belief too—He guards this. Now it was a singular freak of Catherine of Russia, to name the present seat of the great war in Europe Sebastopol—or august city—and no less curious that a correspondent giving account of the recent storming—should call it by this significant name.

He says:—"The sun shone serenely through the vapors of early morning, and wreaths of snow clouds on the long lines of white houses inside those rugged defences of earth and gabionade which have so long kept our armies gazing in vain on this august city."

When it was so named, there was no indication of its renown. Its present celebrity only justifies its name. And it shows us that its name is both opportune and providential.

EUROPEAN NEWS.

EXTRACTS FROM ENGLISH PAPERS RECEIVED BY THE CANADA.

The Storming of Sebastopol. The following are the material parts of General Pelissier's despatch of September 14, in which he gives the details of the attack upon Sebastopol:

On the morning of the 8th, the artillery of our left attacks, which from daybreak on the 5th, had kept up a violent fire, continued to crush the enemy with its projectiles. At the right attack our batteries also fired rapidly, but kept up the system which they had adopted several days before, in expectation of that which might take place.

Towards eight o'clock the engineers threw upon the Central Bastion two mines of projection, each charged with a hundred kilgorammes of powder, and at the same time they exploded before our approaches on the front of the Malakoff three mining chambers in all with 1500 kilogrammes of powder, in order to destroy the lower galleries of the Russian miners.

A little before noon all the troops were in readiness, and in perfect order on the points indicated, and the other arrangements had been punctually executed. General de Salles was ready; General Bosquet was at the fighting-post which he had chosen in the 6th parallel; and I, with Generals Thiry of the Artillery, Niel of the Engineers, and Martimprey, the chief of my staff, was at the Brancion redoubt, which I had chosen for my head-quarters.

All our watches had been regulated. At noon precisely all our batteries ceased to thunder, in order that they might be adjusted to a longer range, so as to reach the reserves of the enemy. At the word of their chiefs, the divisions of Generals M'Mahon, Dulac, and De la Motterouge, left the trenches. The drums and the clarions beat and sounded the charge, and to the cry of "Vive l'Empereur!" a thousand times repeated along the whole line, our intrepid soldiers precipitated themselves upon the enemy's defences. It was a solemn moment. The first brigade of M'Mahon's division, the 1st regiment of Zouaves, leading, followed by the 7th of the line, and having the 4th Chasseurs a Pied on its left, sprang to the left face and the salient of the Malakoff work! The breadth and depth of the ditch, the height and steepness of the slope, rendered the ascent extremely difficult to our men; but finally they gained the parapet, manned with Russians, who, in default of muskets, picked up whatever came to hand—mattocks, stones, or rammers—and used them as weapons. Then took place a hand-to-hand struggle—one of those exciting combats in which nothing but the intrepidity of our soldiers and their chiefs can give them victory. They immediately sprang into the work; they drove back the Russians who continued to resist, and, in a few seconds afterwards, the flag of France was finally planted on the Malakoff.

At the right and centre, with that same impetuous dash which had overthrown so many obstacles and forced the enemy to fly, the divisions Dulac and dela Metterouge, led by their chiefs, had seized the Little Redan at the Careening Bay and also the Curtain, forcing their way even as far as the second enciente that was being constructed. Everywhere we were in possession of the works attacked. But this first and brilliant success had near cost us very dear. Struck by a large splinter from a bomb in his right side, General Bosquet was compelled to quit the field of battle. I confided the command to General Dulac, who was admirably seconded by General de Liniers, chief of the staff of the 2d corps.

The engineers who accompanied the storming columns were already at work; they filled up the ditches, opened passages, and threw across bridges. The second brigade of General de M'Mahon advanced rapidly to reinforce the troops in the Malakoff. I gave the signal agreed upon with General Simpson for the attack on the Great Redan, and shortly after for the attack on the town.

The English had 200 metres to cross under a terrible fire of grape. This space was soon strewed with dead; nevertheless, this did not stop the march of the storming column, which advanced towards the capital of the work. It descended into the ditch, which is nearly five metres deep, and, despite all the efforts of the Russians, it scaled the escarpe, and carried the salient of the Redan. There, after the first brunt of the engagement, which cost the Russians dear, the English soldiers found in front of them only a vast open space, crossed by the balls of the enemy, who kept himself close behind some distant traverses. Those who came up hardly replaced those who had been disabled. It was not until they had sustained for nearly two hours this unequal contest that the English decided on evacuating the Redan. They did so with so firm an aspect that the enemy did not dare to follow.

In the meantime, on the left, at the appointed signal, the columns of Levaillant's division, commanded by Generals Custon and Trochu, dashed headlong against the left flank of the Central Bastion, and the left lunaette. In spite of a shower of balls and projectiles, and after a very sharp contest, the spirit and vigor of these brave troops triumphed at first over the enemy's resistance, and, notwithstanding the accumulated difficulties in their front, they forced their way into the two works. But the enemy, having fallen back on his successive traverses, kept his ground everywhere. A murderous fire of musketry was opened from every ridge. Guns unmasked for the first time and field pieces brought up to several points, vomited grape and decimated our men. Generals Couston and Trochu, who had just been wounded, were obliged to give up their command. Generals Rivet and Breton were killed; several mine-chambers, fired by the enemy, produced a moment of hesitation. At length an attack in their turn by numerous Russian columns compelled our troops to abandon the works they had carried and to retire into our advanced places d'armes.

Our batteries on this part of the attacks, skilfully conducted by General Lebœuf, aided so devotedly and intelligently, as on all occasions, by Rear Admiral Rigault de Genouilly, changed the direction of their fire while increasing its intensity, and compelled the enemy to take shelter behind the parapets. General de Salles, causing d'Autemarre's division to advance, was preparing during this time a second and formidable attack; but as we had secured the possession of the Malakoff, I sent word to him not to let it advance.

Our possession of this work, however, was energetically disputed.

By means of the batteries from the maison en croix, of the guns of his steamers, of field guns brought to favorable points, and of the batteries on the north side of the roadstead, the enemy deluged us with grape, and with projectiles of every kind, and committed great ravages in our ranks. The powder magazine of the Russian Postern Battery had just exploded, thereby increasing our loss, and causing the eagle of the 91st to disappear for a moment. A great many superior officers and others were either wounded or killed. The Generals de Saint Polland de Maroles died gloriously, and Generals Melinet, de Ponteves and Bourbaki, had been wounded at the head of their troops. Three times the division of Dulac und de la Motterouge seized the Redan and the curtain, and three times were they obliged to fall back before a terrible fire of artillery and the dense masses arrayed in front of them. Nevertheless the two field batteries of reserve from the Lancaster battery descended at a trot, crossed the trenches and boldly stationed themselves within half-range. They succeeded in driving away the enemy's columns and the steamers. A part of these two divisions, supported in this heroic struggle by the troops of the Guard, who on this day covered themselves with glory, made good their footing in the entire left of the curtain, from which the enemy could not drive them. During the renewed combats of the right and the centre, the Russians redoubled their efforts to reconquer the Malakoff. This work, which is a sort of earthen citadel of 350 metres in length and 150 metres in width, armed with 62 guns of different calibre, crowns a mamelon which commands the whole interior of the Karabelnaia quarter, takes in reverse the Redan which was attacked by the English, is only 1,200 metres from the south harbor, and threatens not merely the only anchorage now remaining for the ships, but the only means of retreat open to the Russians, namely, the bridge thrown across the roadstead from one bank to the other.

Thus during the first hours of the strife of the two armies, the Russians constantly renewed their attempts; but General M'Mahon, in resisting these incessant attacks, was assisted successively by Vinoy's brigade of his division, by the Zouaves of the Guard, General Wimpffen's reserve, and a part of the Voltigeurs of the Guard; in all directions he resisted the enemy, who were everywhere repulsed. The Russians, however, made a last and desperate attempt. Formed in deep column, they thrice assailed the breast of the work, and thrice they were compelled to retire with enormous loss before the solidity of our troops.

Thus terminated this memorable siege, during which the army of relief has been twice defeated in order of battle, and the offensive and defensive means of which have attained to colossal proportions. The besieging army, had at its various attacks, 800 guns in battery, which have fired more than 1,600,000 times; and our approaches, excavated in the course of 336 days, in rocky ground, and presenting an extent of more than 80 kilometres (20 leagues). have been executed under the constant fire of the place, and disturbed by incessant combats day and night.

The day of Sept. 8, on which the Allied armies proved themselves superior to an army almost equal in number, not invested, entrenched behind formidable defences, provided with more than 1100 guns, protected by the guns of the fleet, and of the batteries north of the roadstead, and still disposing of immense resources, will remain an example of what may be expected from an army, brave, disciplined, and inured to war.

Our losses on this day were five generals killed, four wounded, and six contused, 24 superior officers killed, 20 wounded, and two missing; 116 subaltern officers killed, 224 wounded, eight missing; 1,489 sous officers and soldiers killed, 4,259 wounded, and 1,400 missing—total 7,551."

Details of the Final Assault. A few minutes before 12 o'clock, the French, like a swarm of bees, issued forth from their trenches close to the doomed Malakoff, swarmed up its face, and were through the embrasures in the twinkling of an eye.

They crossed the seven metres of ground which separated them from the enemy at a few bounds—they drifted as lightly and quickly as autumn leaves before the wind, battalion after battalion, into the embrasures, and, in a minute or two, after the head of their column issued from the ditch, the tri-colour was floating over the Korniloff Bastion. The musketry was very feeble at first, indeed our Allies took the Russians quite by surprise, and very few of the latter were in the Malakoff; but they soon recovered themselves, and from twelve o'clock till past seven in the evening, the French had to meet and defeat the repeated attempts of the enemy to regain the work and the Little Redan. As soon as the tri-colour was observed waiving over the parapet of the Malakoff through the smoke and dust, four rockets were sent up from Chapman's attack one after another, as a signal for the assault on the Redan.

Now, it will be observed that, where we attacked the Redan with two divisions only, a portion of each being virtually in reserve, and not engaged in the affair at all, the French made their assault on the Malakoff with four divisions of the second corps d'armee, the first and fourth divisions forming the storming columns, and the third and fifth being the support, with reserves of 10,000 men. The French had probably not less than 30,000 men in the right attack on the 7th of September.

Brigadier Shirley was on board ship, but as soon as he heard of the assault he resolved to join his brigade, and he accordingly came up to the camp that very morning. Colonel Unett, of the 19th Regiment, was the senior officer in Brigadier Shirley's absence, and on him would have devolved the duty of leading the storming column of the light division, had the latter not returned. Colonel Unett, ignorant of the Brigadier's intention to leave shipboard, had to decide with Col. Windham, who should take precedence in the attack. They tossed, and Colonel Unett won. He had it in his power to say whether he would go first or follow Colonel Windham. He looked at the shilling, turned it over, and said, "My choice is made; I'll be the first man into the Redan." But fate willed it otherwise, and he was struck down badly wounded ere yet he reached the abattis, although he was not leading the column.

Scarcely had the men left the fifth parallel when the guns on the flank of the Redan opened on them as they moved up rapidly to the salient, in which there were of course no cannon, as the nature of such a work does not permit of their being placed in that particular position. In a few seconds Brigadier Shirley was temporarily blinded by the dust and by earth knocked into his eyes by a shot. He was obliged to retire, and his place was taken by Lieutenant-colonel Bunbury of the 23d Regiment, who was next in rank to Colonel Unett, already struck down and carried to the rear. Brigadier Van Straubenzee received a contusion on the face, and was also forced to leave the field. Colonel Handcock fell mortally wounded in the head by a bullet, and never spoke again.

Captain Hammond fell dead. Major Welsford was killed on the spot. Captain Grove was severely wounded. Many officers and men were hit and fell, and of the commanders of parties, only Acting Brigadier-general Windham, Captain Fyers, Captain Lewis and Captain Maude got, untouched, into the Redan, and escaped scatheless from the volleys of grape and rifle balls which swept the flanks of the work towards the salient.

It was a few minutes after twelve when our men left the fifth parallel. The musketry commenced at once, and in less than five minutes, during which the troops had to pass over about thirty yards from the nearest approach to the parapet of the Redan, they had lost a large proportion of their officers, and were deprived of the aid of their leaders, with the exceptions I have stated. The riflemen advanced admirably, but from their position, they could not do much to reduce the fire of the guns on the flanks and below the reentering angles.

Lamentable as it no doubt is, and incredible almost to those who know how the British soldier generally behaves before the enemy, the men, when they got on the parapet, were seized by some strange infatuation, and began firing, instead of following their officers, who now began to fall fast as they rushed on in front and tried to stimulate their soldiers by their example. * * * Simultaneously with the head of the storming party of the Light Division, Col. Windham had got inside the Redan on their right, below the salient on the proper left face of the Redan; but, in spite of all his exertions, could do little more than the gallant officers of the 90th and 97th, and of the supporting regiments.

In vain the officers, by voice and act, by example and daring, tried to urge our soldiers on. They had an impression that the Redan was all mined, and that if they advanced they would all be blown up; but many of them acted as became the men of Alma and Inkermann, and, rushing to the front, were swept down by the enemy's fire. The officers fell on all sides, singled out for the enemy's fire by their courage. The men of the different regiments became mingled together in inextricable confusion. The 19th men did not care for the orders of the officers of the 88th, nor did the soldiers of the 23d heed the commands of an officer who did not belong to their regiment.

The officers could not find their men—the men had lost sight of their own officers. All the Brigadiers save Colonel Windham were wounded or rendered unfit for the guidance of the attack. That gallant officer did all that man could do to form his men for the attack, and lead them against the enemy. Proceeding from traverse to traverse, he coaxed the men to come out, and succeeded several times in forming a few of them, but they melted away as fast as he laid hold of them, and either fell in their little ranks or retired to cover to keep up their fusilade.

[Unable to obtain support, except in driblets, which were cut off in detail, the English were at length compelled to retreat.]

It would be untrue to say that the result of our assault was not the source of deep grief and mortification to us, which all the glorious successes of our allies could not wholly alleviate. Our attack lasted about an hour and three-quarters, as well as I could make out, and in that time we lost more men than at Inkermann, where the fighting lasted for seven hours.

HORRORS OF THE HOSPITAL OF SEBASTOPOL. Of all the pictures of the horrors of war which have ever been presented to the world, the hospital of Sebastopol presents the most horrible, heart rending and revolting.

In a long, low room, supported by square pillars, arched at the top, and dimly lighted through shattered and unglazed window frames, lay the wounded Russians, who had been abandoned to our mercies by their general. The wounded did I say? No, but the dead, the rotten and festering corpses of the soldiers who were left to die in their extreme agony, untended, uncared for, packed as close as they could be stowed, some on the floor, others on wretched trestles and bedsteads, or pallets of straw, sopped and saturated with blood, which oozed and trickled through upon the floor, mingled with the droppings of corruption. With the roar of exploding fortresses in their ears, with shells and shot forcing through the roof and sides of the rooms in which they lay, with the crackling and hissing of fire around them, those poor fellows, who had served their loving friend and master the Czar, but too well, were consigned to their terrible fate. Many might have been saved by ordinary care. Many lay, yet alive, with maggots crawling about in their wounds. Myny nearly mad by the scenes around them, or seeking escape from it in their extremest agony, had rolled away under the beds, and glared out on the heart-stricken spectators, oh! with such looks!

Many with legs and arms broken and twisted, the jagged splinters sticking through the raw flesh, implored aid, water, food, or pity, or, deprived of speech by the approach of death, or by dreadful injuries on the head or trunk, pointed to the lethal spot. Many seemed bent alone on making their peace with heaven. The attitudes of some were so hideously fantastic as to appal and root one to the ground by a sort of dreadful fascination. Could that bloody mass of clothing and white bones ever have been a human being, or that burnt black mass of flesh have ever had a human soul? It was fearful to think what the answer must be.

The bodies of numbers of men were swollen and bloated to an incredible degree, and the features distended to a gigantic size, with eyes protruding from the sockets, and the blackened tongue protruding out of the mouth, compressed tightly by the teeth which had set upon it in the death rattle, made one shudder and reel round. In the midst of one of these "chambers of horrors," for there were many of them—were found some dead and some living English soldiers, and among them poor Captain Vaughan, of the 90th, who has since succumbed to his wounds.

I confess it was impossible for me to stand the sight, which horrified our most experienced surgeons—the deadly clammy stench, the smell of the gangrened wounds, of corrupt blood, of rotting flesh, were intolerable and odious beyond endurance. But what must the wounded have felt who were obliged to endure all this, and who passed away without a hand to give them a cup of water, or a voice to say one kindly word to them? Most of these men were wounded on Saturday—many perhaps on the Friday before—indeed, it is impossible to say how long they might have been there. In the hurry of their retreat the Muscovites seemed to have carried in dead men to get them out of the way, and to have put them upon the pellets in horrid mockery. So that this retreat was secured the enemy cared but little for their wounded. On Monday only did they receive those whom we sent out to them during a brief armistice for the purpose, which was, I believe, sought by ourselves, as our overcrowded hospitals could not contain, and our overworked surgeons could not attend to any more.

The Great Redan was next visited. Such a scene of wreck and ruin! All the houses behind it a mass of broken stones—a clock turret, with a shot right through the clock—a pagoda in ruins—another clock tower with all the clock destroyed save the dial, with the word "Barwise, London," thereon—cook-houses, where human blood was running among the utensils, in one place a shell has lodged in the boiler and blown it and its contents, and probably its inhabitants, to pieces. Everywhere wreck and destruction. This evidently was a beau quartier once. The oldest inhabitants could not recognise it now. Climbing up to the Redan, which was fearfully encumbered with the dead, we witnessed the scene of the desperate attack and defence, which cost both sides so much blood. The ditch outside made one sick—it was piled up with English dead, some of them scorched and blackened by the explosion, and others lacerated beyond recognition.

France. After the arrival of the intelligence of the fall of Sebastopol, the Prussian government inquired of the cabinets of Paris and London whether it was considered that a favorable moment for reopening negociations for peace had arrived. An answer was received in the negative, which was immediately communicated by telegraph to Vienna.

Russia. A letter from St. Petersburg, of the 12th, announces the departure the day before of the Emperor Alexander and a numerous suite for Moscow by railway. His Majesty was accompanied by the Empress Dowager and the reigning Empress. Count Nesselrode has remained at St. Petersburg. During the absence of the Emperor the directions of all affairs of importance is confined to the Grand Duke Constantine. This journey is stated to be made with considerable pomp; and the present intention of the Emperor appears to be to leave his Imperial consort at Moscow on his return, and then to proceed to the army of reserve in New Russia.

The Czar has arrived at Odessa, and held a council of war.

A new general recruitment in Russia is stated to be imminent. All the regular troops in Poland and Lithuenia are marching for Odessa and Nicolaieff.

In the Gazette Millitaire of St. Petersburg, dated the 7th inst. we read the following:—"News has reached the capital from all parts of the empire, of the complete formation of the troops of the reserve, and of the departure of the first levy of drouschines and national militia, who will probably rendevous at Kieff. The reserves number about 300,000 men, consequently the Russian army, after deducting the divisions sent to the Crimea and to the seat of war in Asia, numbers upwards of 400,000 bayonets, independently of the guards and grenadiers, drouschines of the national guard, some detached corps stationed in Finland, and of the guards of the interior."

Austria. The Vienna correspondent of the Times writes on the 21st: "An Austrian cabinet messenger left Vienna on Wednesday for the north, but it is not known whether his dispatches were for Berlin or St. Petersburg. In official circles there is little hope that Russia will be more disposed to yield now than she was three months ago.

2000 men belonging to the 1st battalion of grenadier guards, 2d battalion of Coldstreams, and 2d battalion of the Scots fusilier guards, will proceed from London, direct to the Crimea in the first week of October.

Obituary.

Died in Limington, Me., on Friday the 7th ult., Almira, wife of Peltiah Gove, aged 52 years.

The subject of the above notice never professed religion by uniting with the Church, but she united with THE CHURCH, whose names are enrolled in the Lamb's book of life by professing and practising that godliness "which has the promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come." She was an ardent, humble, devoted disciple of Him who went about doing good—who came to bind up the broken hearted, and into the dark and benighted mind to pour the light of life. Her religion was not made up of pompous and ostentatious display, but of kindness, of gentleness towards others, of meekness in her intercourse with her fellow beings. She was far removed from that turbulent, boisterous, and ungovernable spirit which is characteristic of those who seek notoriety—Could she minister comfort to the afflicted, could she present the cup of consolation to the disconsolate, could she soothe the ruffled spirit of the tried and tempted, could she present the cooling draught to the lips, and smooth the furrowed brow of the weary sufferer, she felt that vastly more had been gained to the cause of God and humanity, than if she had electrified an audience with a fervent prayer or exhortation. She had made somebody else happier, and herself was happier thereby.

But she sleeps in Jesus. Sleeps to wait until the resurrection morning, and come forth to enjoy the hope of the Apostle—the hope of the resurrection from the dead, of death swallowed up in victory; victory given when the victor, the Life-giver shall appear—of mortality lost forever, and immortality gained—of corruptibility transformed by the regenerating word of the All-conquering, to incorruptibility—of being made like unto the glorifiedbody of Jesus himself, according to the power by which He is able to subdue all opposing elements to the good and glorification of His saints, unto himself—of inhabiting, in a literal, definite, tangible form, substance and essence, an earth all beaming with joy and glory, fitted up by the hand of the primeval Architect in more than pristine beauty, for his own, and the residence of his recovered saints; of friends there meeting friends without the infirmities of mortality, to renew former associations, to hallow, and sanctify, and cement them forever; to renew the recollections of the hallowed scenes of the past, to rejoice eternally in the sunlight of the face of Jesus and of each other. Such is the hope of the Christian.

Sleep on, my sister. Thy repose shall be sweet, it shall be undisturbed by the rude shocks of time, and scenes that now rock the world like the rolling sea, shall not disquiet thee, but when the fiat of Jehovah, "IT IS DONE," shall go forth, thou shalt hear the voice of the Son of Man, and come forth to walk in newness of life forever and ever. Amen.

"O, then the loved of earth shall meet,
Whom death has sundered here."

CONFERENCE IN MAINE.

After mutual consultation in regard to the propriety and utility of a mutual Conference of the Advent Brn. in the central part of Maine, (and from all parts, if they can come,) it is unanimously decided by us to appoint such a meeting to be holden in the Read Meeting House, Richmond, Me., to commence Friday, Nov. 2d, at 10 o'clock A. M., and continue over the Sabbath.

Our object in appointing this meeting, is, to call together that class of brethren who are, or who mean to be engaged unitedly for the advancement of the Gospel of the Kingdom of God, and in co-operating to spread as far as possible, by judicious and Scriptural labors, the news of the immediate coming of our Lord, in glory and in Judgment, that we may by our meeting and conferring one with another, and by the blessing of God, become more active in our labors, harmonious in our teaching, wise in our understandings, childlike in malice, and devoted in our lives, which will make us more effectual in leading our perishing fellow men to Christ while time continues. All who are ready to unite with us in the spirit of Christ, in harmonious worship and united effort for the above object, are earnestly invited to attend this Conference, praying that the wisdom of God may direct us, and His blessing be upon us.

Our Brn. in R., though few, will do all they can to entertain those from abroad, and we have no fears but all will be well provided for.

NEW HAMPSHIRE CONFERENCE.

The undersigned, appointed a committee at the last N. H. Conference holden at Loudon Ridge, Sept. 1854, "to call the next N. H. Conference at such time and place" as they might deem proper, would give notice that there will be a State Conference of Adventists, to convene at Lake Village, Thursday, Oct. 18, at 10 o'clock A. M., and continue over the Sabbath.

It is hoped that the Brn. will come together at this meeting with the "fruit of the Spirit;" and the happy result be similar to that which attended the late Camp meeting at Wilbraham, where ministering Brn. of different views were brought together in love, after a long time of absence.

It is also hoped that ministering Brn from all parts of the State will try to be present; and although we have been in some measure separated in our labors for a few years past, yet it is hoped that all party feeling on both sides, and ALL sides, will be laid aside, and we once more come together, not for strife and debate, but for mutual assistance and the general good of the cause of Christ.

We must all very soon give an account of our stewardship.

The Brn. at Lake Village are few in number, yet they are disposed to do what they can to entertain the Conference, although they will not be able to take care of many horses; but arrangements will be made to keep horses on reasonable terms.

Let there be a general rally, and all who attend, both ministers and laymen, be willing to make some sacrifice to save souls from death.

A NEW AND IMPORTANT WORK! The Voice of the Church on the Coming and Kingdom of Christ; or a History of the Doctrine of the Reign of Christ on Earth. By D T Taylor. 1 Vol 12mo. 420 pp.—Price One Dollar.

☞ The present is an eventful hour in earth's history. All things verge towards an awful crisis. Nations are in distress—wise men are perplexed—rulers grasp the sword, and sit uneasily on their thrones—deep thunders mutter in the distance—and the red blaze of battle flashes along the eastern skies. The crisis is at hand. WHAT SHALL SUCCEED IT? Statesmen, sages, poets, philosophers and divines are boasting of to-morrow, and cherishing the expectation of a world's conversion, and ages of millennial peace. But is this taught in the "sure word of prophecy?" We answer, No! A time of predicted peace will come to earth, but the PRINCE OF PEACE MUST COME to bring the day. But has not the church for centuries expected to convert the world? We answer most emphatically, No! The above work is composed mainly of extracts from all the writers of note in the Christian Church for SEVENTEEN HUNDRED YEARS, and shows that during all that period no trace of the common theory of the conversion of the world can be found.

With immense labor the author has collected the testimony of the Church from the earliest periods to the present century. The statement of their faith is presented in their own words. Among the sources are ancient Jewish traditions, the writings of the immediate successors of the apostles, the early fathers, the later writers, the Waldenses, reformers, theologians, and divines. To which are prefixed the traditions of heathen nations and the opinions of modern Jews, making the most perfect history of millennial doctrine ever published, and one which cannot fail to be interesting to every enquirer after truth.

About FOUR HUNDRED of the greatest writers who have ever lived, are here quoted. Brief biographies of EACH are given, rendering the work exceedingly valuable as a book of reference. The following are some of the many writers quoted in the volume:

Origen, Victorinus, Lactantius, Dionysius, Relatives of our Lord, Commodian, Gregory, Sulpicius, Paulinus, Apollinaris, &c. Read the Following Opinions of the Press.

"Study and research evidences itself in every line of the book. The object of the writer is to show what has been the 'Voice of the Church' for eighteen centuries upon the subject of the Millennium, or the coming of Christ. The first testimony cited is tradionary, and then comes the verbal and written testimony of the ablest and most distinguished theologians and scholars the world has ever known. Though the reader may differ with the writer, yet the book is a choice one for every Biblical student and scholar. It shows that the writer has been unceasing in his labors, and he has brought together, in the compass of a volume, what the reader could not find in many whole libraries. The work is worthy of a place upon every Christian's table, and we bespeak for it a fair and candid perusal, as there are in it the choicest extracts from the rare writings of the very earliest Christian scholars.—[Worcester Journal, May 5th.

"It is a work of remarkable research and patient collection."—[Worcester Spy, May 9th.

"It appears to be a thorough examination of the doctrine—requiring extensive and laborious research, and presents arguments and arranges facts of history with method and precision."—[National Ægis, May 9th.

"A very useful book of reference to those who are disposed to investigate the question of the supposed future reign of Christ on earth. To persons who have no desire to investigate the subject it will yet prove a valuable manual of reference from its brief notices of the authors quoted."—[Rochester Democrat, May 31.

"An impartial and very valuable production; one that was called for and will do much good. We cordially recommend it to the favorable notice of all classes of the community. A dollar will be well laid out for its purchase."—[Prophetic Expositor, Rochester, May 5.

"We recommend this volume to the perusal of both Millenarians and anti-millenarians. The former will see that their doctrine was indisputably the doctrine of the primitive church during its three first and best ages, and that it has been held by a vast succession of great and good men to the present day. The latter will see that their doctrine of a Millennium under the present dispensation still future, is not only in contravention of the faith of the church of the apostles and their successors for three centuries, but came into existence only about one hundred and fifty years ago, and has very few writers of much rank to support it."—[Literary and Theological Journal New York, July, 1855.

It "meets practical needs in many hearts, and is worthy of being read beyond that peculiar circle of readers known technically as the religious public."—[Worcester Transcript, May 10.

Selected For The World's Crisis,

The Stars of Night.

Whence are your glorious goings forth,
Ye children of the sky,
In whose bright silence seems the power
Of all eternity?
For time has let his shadow fall
O'er many an ancient light;
But ye walk above in brightness still—
Ye glorious stars of night!

The vestal lamp in Grecian fanes
Has faded long ago;
On Persia's hills the worshipped flame
Hath lost its ancient glow;
And long the heaven-sent fire is gone,
With Salem's temple bright;
But ye watch o'er wandering Israel yet,
O! changeless stars of night!

Long have ye looked upon the earth,
O'er vale and mountain brow;
Ye saw the ancient cities rise,
And gild their ruins now;
Ye beam upon the cottage home,
The conqueror's path of might,
And shed your light alike on all,
Ye priceless stars of night!

But where are they who learned from you
The fate of coming time,
Ere yet the pyramids arose
Amid their desert clime?
Yet still in wilds and deserts far,
Ye bless the watcher's sight,
And shine where dark hath never been,
O! lonely stars of night!

Much have ye seen of human tears,
Of human hope and love;
And fearful deeds of darkness, too,
Ye witnesses above;
Say, will that blackening record live
Forever in your sight,
Watching for judgment on the earth,
O sleepless stars of night!

Yet glorious was your song that rose
With the fresh morning's dawn;
And still amid our summer sky
Its echo lingers on;
Though ye have shone on many a grave,
Since Eden's early blight,
Ye tell of hope and glory still,
O! deathless stars of night!

"Hold thou me up, and I shall be safe." Ps. 119: 117.

"Hold thou me up"—then safe I'll be
When gathering clouds obscure my day,
Sweetly by faith I'll rest on Thee,
While passing through the darksome way.

"Hold thou me up"—then I'll not fear,
Though high affliction's billows roll,
Thy love will still my spirit cheer,
And calm each tumult in my soul.

"Hold thou me up" when brightly shines
The dazzling sun of earthly joy;
Safe then as when each good declines,
Thy love shall still my thoughts employ!

"Hold thou me up"—then ne'er shall slide
My feet from thy dear, sacred fold:
Near by my Savior I'll abide,
While His kind hand shall me uphold.

"Hold thou me up," or basely, I
Shall prove a traitor to my Lord;
Like Peter, Him shall oft deny,
And cease to love His holy word.

"Hold thou me up," when death draws near,
Then will I triumph o'er the grave;
Thy love shall then dispel each fear,
And I shall thy power to save!

For The Crisis.

Notes of A Sermon preached on Wilbraham Camp ground, Aug. 24, 1855.

By D. T. Taylor.

Heb. 2: 10. "For it became him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings."

The subject I design to introduce before you, is, the sufferings of Christ. I rise not to speak to you of Dr. Cumming, or Dr. Elliot, but about Christ; to present to you, plain considerations of Jesus, the Savior.

The sentiment of my text is, that Christ was perfected through sufferings. In these days it is thought that we are perfected more by sunshine and prosperity, than by adversity and affliction. Thus men seek to perfect themselves by worldly prosperity. But not so with the Savior; He was made perfect through suffering.

This is the road to glory; first the Cross and then the Crown; first the night, then the day; first the darkness, then the light; first the thorns, then the throne.

We cannot destroy this order. Thus it was with the Savior, and thus it must be with us. Let me bring before you the sufferings of Christ.

1. Jesus Christ suffered in the suspicious, humiliating circumstances of His birth. His birth was miraculous. Those peculiar circumstances of the birth of Jesus, were peculiarly humiliating. He came not into existence in a royal palace. The Infant Jesus did not open His eyes in a house with gilded ceiling, as now with the rich and high born.

While His reputed father and mother were on their way to their native city to be taxed according to the decree of the Emperor, they stopped in Bethlehem; but there was no room for them in the inn, and they were obliged to take their place in a barn; and there we find the Infant Jesus in his lowly bed. How humiliating the circumstances of His birth! How low He descended when He came to suffer and die! I leave it in your minds to compare the sufferings of Christ in His birth with that of your own birth, and think to what depth Jesus descended in His humiliation.

2. He suffered in persecution from Herod the Roman Emperor.

It is a circumstance seldom connected with the birth of the great and noble, that a king should conspire against his life; but against Jesus, a King in disguise, while a little child, the wrath of a multitude was aroused. A mandate was given, that in the city of Bethlehem and round about it, the little children under a certain age, should be martyred. Jesus escaped. His parents were commanded to take the child by night, and flee into Egypt. Thus they were obliged to leave home, and friends, and country, and flee to a distant land.

Look at this persecution of Jesus, and compare it with your own; for I wish to make a practical application of the subject as I go along. You think, perhaps, that the circumstances of your birth, parentage, &c., were afflictive; but were your parents turned out of doors, and obliged to flee from their native land? Thus Christ was represented by the symbol of the child ready to be devoured by the great red Dragon which stood before the woman.

Thus Jesus suffered as an infant. I do not know His capabilities compared with those of other infants.

He suffered as a mechanic. He was recognized as the carpenter's son. When found at Jerusalem among the lawyers and docters, at the age of 12 years, He went home with His parents, and was subject unto them. His father was a mechanic, and doubtless labored with him in the shop; and I tell you it makes me feel little, and it should make us all feel little, to think that the hands which shall crown us, have once held the saw and the axe; and to think that He came down to the lowest level; a workman in workmen's clothes. How often He came home weary with the labors of the day, with His father, having earned His bread with the sweat of His brow. He felt the force of the command that "in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread."

Do you mourn because you were not brought into the world rich, and having an inheritance, but cast out in want and suffering, not knowing where to put your hand for the next dollar? Then contemplate Jesus as a man, taking upon himself our nature and suffering.

He suffered in the commencement of His ministry, by the wrath of His own townsmen.

It is said of one of His disciples, that when he found Christ, he went and told his brother. We do naturally by the ties of family bonds, seek the welfare of our friends. So the principle is carried out by Christ. In the first of His ministry, He went to Nazareth, his own city, to do them good first, just as you go to your own friends and home, and your soul is endeavoring to do them good. He pronounced to them the Scripture fulfilled in their ears. He was so well known they would not accept of Him, and He is brought to the brow of the hill, to "cast Him down headlong."

Is there one among us who was threatened to be cast down headlong at his first attempt to preach? Men are now brought through theological seminaries; and in their first attempts to preach, they have a great many with them ready to hold them up.—So there are but few, who in their first attempt to preach, get stoned. When He preached to them the gracious Gospel, they would reject it. It is the beautiful character of Christ we come to contemplate to-day, as a glorious moral lesson.

Jesus suffered by the martyrdom of John, his co-laborer.

If you should engage a friend to go and prepare the way before you, would you not think it hard to have that pioneer cut down, and his head taken off? You would. Jesus had a right hand man—John the Baptist. He was sent to prepare the way for Jesus to come after him.—Through the caprice of a woman, he was beheaded. We have no account of the mourning of Jesus; but I think the Savior did suffer in this.

We do not like to have the friend we expect to go ahead in our affairs, removed from that position. It was so with Christ; if you suffer in this way, remember Jesus suffered thus before you.

Again: Jesus suffered in being tempted by Satan. I have heard and read of saints when baptized, being exceedingly happy.

A lady in Canada some years since, for 40 days after her baptism thought she was in glory.

Instead of being 40 days in glory, He was 40 days in the wilderness with the Devil. He suffered with those temptations; they were sore; for He poured out strong cries and tears. There is one thing you may never have noticed. It was after 40 days, that the temptation of Christ was accomplished. We are led to believe that the temptation was continued more than 40 days. There was no friend near.

These temptations being varied, they pressed Him to obey him. You think that your temptations are hard; but what are they in comparison with His. Jesus was tried by the Devil, but He would not obey him. If He had touched those stones and made bread; it would have been in obedience to the Devil.

He was tempted also to presumption; for the Devil said, cast thyself down from the pinacle of the temple, to which he had taken Him; "for it is written, He shal give His angels charge over thee, and they shall bear thee up, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone." It is good to pray to be kept from the evils of this world. When we run into temptation, we may be thankful if Christ delivers us; but we have no right so to do. If Christ had cast himself down from the pinacle of the temple, the Angels might have helped Him, but it would have been presumption in Him so to do. He was tempted also with hunger. Have you been hungry? Christ suffered the same. He suffered in loneliness.

The Devil showed to Him, all the kingdoms of the world in a moment of time, but I cannot tell you how it was done.

Jesus suffered during His life in bearing our sicknesses in His own body. Virtue or life, went out of Him and healed the sick. He knew in His own body, that the person who came to Him for healing, was healed.

He suffered by false accusations.—These are common. I know they are so, and you may think that your lot is the common lot of man. Christ was first accused with being in bad company. How often are we taunted with the company we keep? The Savior goes among the world, that He may do the world good.—He went everywhere, sat down to eat with publicans and sinners.

He that was without sin, was accused of blasphemy. When He said to the sick of the palsy, thy sins are forgiven thee, they accused Him of having spoken blasphemy Have you ever been accused of that, when you have been clear from anything of the kind? Remember Jesus suffered thus before you.

Again; they accused Him of Sabbath-breaking. Anything to pick flaws; if to satisfy hunger, there were ever those ready to put in a word of accusation.

Jesus was a King in disguise: a cross here, a crown hereafter. He was a King in disguise, as God's people are priests in disguise. He was like a tree in the winter, without the leaves; but when the spring comes the tree puts forth its beautiful buds, leaves and flowers.

Jesus seemed to be without comeliness. They taunted Him with His low origin.—"Where is He that was born King of the Jews? He is only a carpenter's son.—What low origin, and low company: He did not go to the Sanhedrim for his companions; but takes a few fishermen.—Away with him!" Thus Jesus suffered. They accused Him of being possessed with a Devil; that He cast out Devils through Beelzebub the prince of the demons. But seldom does a Christian have such an accusation brought against him.

Again: He was accused of treason.—They inquired of Him, is it right to pay tribute to Cæsar? His answer in short, is, do your duty to God, and to the government. All around wherever He went, there was a system of spies, to track Him out, and their effort every day, was to find some charge against Him. What a stain upon His character! How many of us bear such a character?

He suffered by hunger. When weary with traveling one day, He sat down on a well, hungry. I have once traveled on foot, until my feet were blistered. There was on one occasion an affliction and interesting circumstance. When He rode into Jerusalem as King, He goes into the temple and casts out the buyers and sellers, and by this means turns the tide of feeling against Him. No one asks Him to stay with him. Where did He stay? We do not read of His having a supper; He goes back to the figtree hungry. Did He go without supper and breakfast?—Was there none to give Him a place and pillow on which to rest? We are almost ready to believe there was none.

He suffered weariness, after a hard days toil, which is just the time to beget a fretful feeling. You have the headache. You go home to your family, feeling fretful and cross, and it is often the case that there are many hard words used.

While Jesus was at the well, He began to preach to the woman of Samaria, and He forgot his weariness in telling the woman the way of life. The woman on returning to the city exclaimed, "Come, see a man who told me all things that ever I did."

Think of the work He did, and remember there is more still to do, and sufferings to bear. He who wears the many crowns and sits on the throne; can it be He was weary? He suffered in sorrow from anticipation of what He was to pass through. He told his disciples of the afflictions which were to come upon Him. Again: His sacred character was insulted. He was said to be devoted to the cup. He was called a sinner. Jesus, without spot, was called a sinner, a glutton, a gormandizer, an accomplice with publicans, a fellow, with an idea of contempt. He was railed upon, tempted by men and devils. Men hated Him.

If one did a kind action to Him, fault was found with it. When Mary poured the precious ointment upon his head, fault was found with Him because He let a sinner do it. At every turn He was hated without a cause.

He suffered in being homeless and houseless, having no place to lay his head. He was so all his life. We have a thousand homes wherever we go; but with Him it was true, "the foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head." He had no homestead; but when he died, he provided a home for his mother. He laid up no property. It is for the happiness of man to have a little home.—The young man just starting in life seeks it, and indeed all have a desire for the same. You want a home to dwell in, and some of us would travel half the night, in order to be at home the other half. He forsook the old homestead, and we do not read of his ever going back again.

He always had something to do. Jesus wept. It is said by the historian, that he was never seen laughing, but often found weeping. He was a man of sorrows.—He wept bitter tears for poor, fallen man, and over a world of wretchedness; and sought by all means to relieve their distress and anguish.

At the grave of Lazarus, out from his eyes rolled scalding tears. I shall not attempt to picture to you the agony of Christ on the cross. We find as we trace Him down to the end of his career, that he closed it by a most excruciating death, there being no worse death than that of crucifixion.

He was betrayed by one of his own familiar friends. It is hard to have the bond of friendship broken. True friends on the earth are few and far between; and when the friends you love turn away from you, how bitter is the cup you have to drink! Jesus had thus to suffer.

That man Judas betrayed him just as the spiritualist does, without a cause.—Must Satan have another of his disciples? He tries to get another. Said He to Peter, "Satan hath desired to have you that he may sift you as wheat; but I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not." If the Savior did thus on earth, why not in heaven? He will, and does intercede for us there. I can see Him listening to the prayers of the saints, as they ascend from this wilderness of woe, and enter the ears of the Almighty. Satan wanted Peter as well as Judas, but did not get him. If it had not been for the prayer of the Savior, he might have been lost. By a consideration of this, we find ground for faith and hope. Do not think that the Savior overlooks you; but remember that a sparrow falls not to the ground without his notice.

In the garden He suffered so that "his sweat was, as it were, great drops of blood, falling down to the ground." To enter into that hour, I cannot, I bring the scenes before you, and ask you to look at Him.

At midnight, He is taken by those sent, while He exclaims, "this is your hour, and the power of darkness." Peter follows afar off to see the end. The hour of trial comes, and Peter denies Him.—Jesus is taken as a thief, with swords and staves led to the council and had false witnesses to accuse Him. He was our model, and we will strive to imitate Him. He was blindfolded, and smitten with the hand, while He bore it speechless. There was a mock trial, in which He is derided, and sent to Herod, who from being an enemy to Pilate, now became a friend, in condemning Jesus. A murderer is released to the people while Jesus is sentenced to death.

That head which is to wear the crown of the kingdoms of the world, was crowned with thorns. No friend near. If we have a friend in times of trial, it is a comfort to us, and it helps us bear up under the affliction. But Jesus was left alone. Where were the men who were fed in the wilderness? Where were those who followed Him when entering Jerusalem, crying hosanna!

All gone. He bears His own cross to Calvary and dies, nailed upon it.—Death by crucifixion is a horible death. Inch by inch, the victim dies. His life goes out by degrees. It is a terrible execution.

There were two ways to crucify; one was, to put up the upright beam first, and then fasten the victim upon it. The other was to put the victim upon the cross, and then raise it up and let the end fall into the aperture prepared in the ground for its reception, which produced the dislocation of the victim's bones. The Psalmist doubtless refers to the crucifixion of Christ, when he says, "my bones were out of joint." He was nailed upon the tree with rude hands, the end of the cross placed in the earth, the joints gave way, and thus suffering in the midst of the rude rabble, crying, "Come down from the cross," Jesus expires. I am glad He did not come down from the cross. Had He done so, how could we have been saved?

May our hearts be melted, when we remember the sufferings of Christ. It was in the midst of ignominy and shame, surrounded by the wicked, that He gave up the ghost. But O what convulsions of nature! The vail of the temple was rent in twain, from the top to the bottom; the earth shook and trembled, and the rocks parted asunder. The vail of the temple being rent, shows there is no further need of sacrifices, the way into the holiest being thus thrown open.

It was customary, when persons were crucified, to give them anodyne, to deaden their feelings; but Jesus did not receive it, preferring to suffer all that human nature could endure. Jesus died, forsaken by men, and God. Man had forsaken Him, and He treads the wine press alone.

While on the cross, He set a good example of fidelity to parents in their old age, and in affliction. Joseph, his reputed father being dead, his mother was homeless and houseless. He said to John, one of his disciples, "Son, behold thy mother!" From that time John took her to his own home. Let the young obey their parents, and remember the beautiful example of Jesus. Take care of the old mothers and fathers; for it is not long they will be with you. They have had enough of care and sorrow; therefore be careful and speak no hard words to them, to add to their sorrow.

Amid the darkening of the sun, the rending of the Temple's vail, the earth trembles as if in sympathy with the sufferer; shall we not break out in the beautiful words of the poet?

"O for such love let rocks and hills
Their lasting silence break,
And all harmonious human tongues
The Savior's praises speak."

While your heart is tender and easy to be engraved upon, I would write that beautiful sentiment on its tablet. Hear me, all that are present, and that may hear: if Jesus so loved the world as to come down and for your sake thus to suffer, if he did it all for the welfare of your souls, that whosoever believeth on Him may have eternal life, you ought to love Christ in return. If you love Christ some, love Him better and better. You will show your love by your good works. No talk of loving God, without obedience to his commandments, amounts to anything. If you do what He says, you will be a Christain. First, repent; believe in Jesus, and be baptized; and I hope some will do this before the meeting closes. Get into the path, and move onward. Ere long Jesus is coming. I seem to see Him now. I see Him by an eye of faith, looking down with emotions of pity and compassion, commanding his Angels of mercy to fly swiftly and save some, as time's last sands are falling. Jesus is soon to come. We see Jesus stretching out his hands to day, saying, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." If we do not succeed in getting souls blest, we do not accomplish the work designed by God, that is, to save sinners. May God send His Spirit into their hearts to-day, and may we see some souls converted at this meeting. I hope, sinner, you will from this time begin the life of a Christian. Ere we meet again, perhaps the judgment will come. We are coming where our last work will be ended, where tears are wiped from every eye, and if we can rest there, we ought to work here. That lovely face will soon be presented through the clouds, and gather the saints together. O hail: happy morning.

Do not, I beseech you, aspire after great things; but be satisfied with little things. I have felt as though I did not want to preach a great sermon; but preach Jesus first, and Jesus last, and forever; and O may we be finally saved in His Kingdom with an everlasting salvation. Amen.

For The Crisis.

Vernon Campmeeting.

Dear Br. Merriam:—As I attempt to write a few lines to you and the Brn. scattered through the land, I desire to write in the spirit of Christ, relative to the gathering of the saints at the Vernon Campmeeting.

Public laborers present: Brn. Mathewson, Bishop, Baily, Bennett, Sheldon, Hemmenway, Gibson, Spaulding, Higgins, also Sr. Higgins.

The first discourse was delivered on Tuesday Evening by Br. Sheldon. The interest of the meetings continued to increase up to the close of the series, which was on Sunday evening.

Br. Mathewson preached in the afternoon of each day

The first discourse was from 2 Thess. 3: 5. "And the Lord direct your hearts into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Christ."

Second discourse. 1 Tim. 6: 12.—"Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life." The Lord was present to aid the speaker in setting forth the whole armor in whch the saint of God must be clothed, in order to fight the good fight of faith.

Third discourse. Heb. 10: 35–38. "Cast not away therefore your confidence," &c. From the above text, Br. M. showed conclusively our first moves were in the order of God, and we are living in that little while when the Lord of life and glory will appear.

Saturday forenoon, Sr. Higgins preached from 2 Pet. 3: 14. The effect on the hearers was salutary.

Br. M. in the afternoon, preached from Rev. 20: 11 and presented the Judgment of the great day, by the help of the Lord, with such power that it was brought home to the hearers hearts, and left a good impression on the congregation.

The forenoons and evenings were filled up by the other Brn. who preached as the Lord moved upon them.

Br. Baily preached from 2 Peter 1: 8, and the Lord helped him to bring things new and old from the store-house of truth.

Br. Hemmenway peeached from I Tim. 4: 10 and showed that the salvation brought to view in the text is a univer salvasion. He referred to the first man Adam and his fall, and the way in which he was to have life, and also showed how we are to have life, and pointed out the portion of the wicked which is death.

Br. Sutherland preached from Ps. 27: 4. "One thing have I desired of the Lord." This subject brought out a good number of the Brn. to speak on the one thing needful, and the Lord was in the midst.

Br. Gibson preached from Matt. 24: 46 and shewed who the good servent was and who the evil servent was.

Br. Spaulding spoke from Dan. 12: 11. This discourse awakened quite an interest. Many spoke in exhortation and we trust it resulted in good to some souls.

Sunday forenoon Br. Bishop preached from James 5. 19, 20, to the largest congregation that I have ever seen on that Camp ground; and they listened with good attention while the words of truth fell from his lips as the Spirit gave him utterence, in setting forth life and death, showing that the wicked are to die, while the righteous are to live forever.

Br. M. preached in the afternoon from Eph. 3: 8. Subject, the proximity of the battle of the great day. The Lord helped him to present before the multitude the fact that the gathering of the nations is in the order of the Lord, and will go on till the last battle will be fought by the Lord Jesus when the kingdoms under the whole heavens will be given to the saints of the Most High.

Sr. Higgins addressed the congregation at 5 o'clock from these words:—"The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved." I trust her effort was atteneded with a blessing. Br. Bennett closed the exercises at the stand with a poweoful exhortation from the same text.

At early candlelight, the Lord's Supper was administered to something like a hundred of the saints; and such a meeting I never enjoyed before. The Lord was with us in great power. Glory to God, our Father reigns. At the close of the Supper Br. Bailey was ordained Elder in the Church of God, by Brn. Mathewson, Bennett and Sutherland, by laying on of hands, while Br. M. gave the charge to Br. B., and also to the Church. The Lord was evidently in the movement.

I must now close by saying there are a few in this part of God's heritage that will not cast away their confidence. I believe we have past the Midnight Cry, and are living in the time of the trial; and may the Lord have mercy on those of our faith who begin to turn back, and deny the past movements to be of the Lord. Brn. and Srs., all, do not for the love of Christ turn back; but if you cannot see anything ahead, stand still, and wait, and see the salvation of the Lord.

Yours in hope of soon seeing our Lord.

D. W. Miller.

For the Crisis

The Advent nigh.

By T. N. Palmer.

Dear Br. Merriam:—I have for some time past felt an irresistible desire to write a few lines for the "Crisis," which I highly prize in these times of peril, and the spirit of which I have ever admired from the beginning. Indeed, I have attempted several times to write for its columns, but my heart has failed me.—Like our beloved Br. Burnham, I have written many things heretofore, which I thought at first, would do, but when I let them lay till they got cold, they looked so mean I cast them into the fire, or, I should have said, refused to send them. Whether I shall write anything at the present time that will be beneficial to God's chosen ones or not, I cannot now tell—that I leave with the Lord. My motto is, and ever has been, to "speak the truth, (or what I believe to be such,) and let God defend the right." One thing is certain, "truth is mighty and will prevail."

"Let every man prove his own work, and then he shall have rejoicing in himself alone, and not in another; for every man shall bear his own burden." Such is the language of inspiration; and may the Lord help us all to remember the words of the Apostle, especially those of our Lord Jesus Christ. Says Jesus: "Search the Scriptures, (and not let some one else do it for you,) for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they (the Scriptures,) are they which testify of me." The Scriptures spoken of here, that we are commanded to search, are the Old Testament, and not the New, as some have supposed, from the fact that they were not written when these words were spoken. Would that those who disbelieve in the Old Testament would take heed to the words of their Redeemer. Now, it has become a settled fact with me, that our future salvation or destiny depends upon the course we take here—upon having a right understanding of God's Word individually for ourselves. We certainly cannot live right unless we believe right; for right life is nothing but the development or outgrowth of right faith. If the word of God is not our guide, and if we are left to our own judgment to decide what is right and what is wrong, I fear we shall choose the evil rather than the good. But, thank God, it is not so. God, the Infinite Author of man, did not call into being this mighty fabric of the universe, and bring into existence the myriads of millions that have lived and died since its formation, and leave them subject to no laws, and bound by no obligations, and free to follow their own inclination—free to do as they please. "But," says the objector, havn't I a right to believe and do as I please?" I answer nay, unless you please to believe and do right. "There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death. Prov. 16: 25. Says God to Adam: "But of the tree of knowledge of good and evil thou shalt not eat; for in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die," or, as the margin reads, "dying, thou shalt die." Here, then, is a law, prohibitory in its character, and to the breaking of which there is affixed a penalty. But the objector may say that Adam sinned, and that the laws of God are broken. The fact is admitted, and the consequences deeply felt and lamented; but yet, two conclusions are to be drawn from it of exceeding weight. One is, that notwithstanding His laws are violated they are not abrogated. God has not altered His laws to meet the caprice or wickedness of His creatures; like His own nature, they are unchanged and unchangeable. "God is not a man that He should lie, nor the Son of man that He should repent. Hath He said, and shall He not do it? or hath he spoken, and shall he not make it good?" Num. 23: 19. The other is, that it does not infringe upon the freedom of a man's will. The law is set before him, and his obedience required, but he may exercise the freedom of his will, diobey, and suffer the consequences of his disobedience.—And so it is of all laws and precepts laid down in the Word of God, (and there are many,) and whoever breaks them, or tramples under his feet, and does not repent, but dies in his iniquity, will meet the frown and subject himself to the just punishment of an offended Deity, which is, "the second death"—everlasting destruction, and not "everlasting preservation in hell fire." No, no, thank God. Our God is full of love—of compassion—of pity—will not hold his anger forever —is forbearing and forgiving, blessed be His name! For man as a sinner, there is only one way of obtaining forgiveness and salvation, and that is, through the merits and atoning blood of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ—the only name given under Heaven whereby we can be saved. Thank God for the way of salvation.

Once more I repeat it, the word of God is our guide, and we are to be judged by it at the last great day. "Sanctify them (said Jesus,) through thy truth; thy word is truth. Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Men are chosen to salvation through sanctification of the spirit and a belief of the truth, and are begotten by the word of truth, and not by error. But there are some who are given up to believe a lie, that they might be damned, because they receive not the love of the truth that they might be saved. God forbid that it should be the case with any of us. We are commanded to "contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints." Can we ascertain what faith it is? There is but one true faith, and that is "the faith which Paul kept;" and every man that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself even as the Lord Jesus Christ is pure. It is of some consequence, then, that we have this hope in us; all others amount to nothing, and will never be realized. I am aware, however, that there are a good many kinds of faith or religion in the world at the present day—about the number of "the beast;" and a good many spirits have gone out into the world, but there cannot be but one of them that is right—but one of them that is genuine.—The Word and the Spirit must agree. It is recorded, "And they shall be taught of God"—not man. Can we imagine the Holy Ghost would teach discordant and contradictory things, when even if a professed good Br. or Sr. should do so, they would lose their claim to our confidence? The great I AM does not send His revealed truths into the world without first stamping them with His own distinctive mark. And as regards all such truths as are seated in the nature of things, they are also marked by discriminative characteristics. It is this indestructible peculiarity of marks, characteristics, or tests, which makes all truth knowable, either in its own nature or by testimony.

Since, then, all essential Christian truths are knowable in their own nature, or are taught by revelation from God; and since we are formed with faculties to understand them; and since the great God Himself has promised to dwell in us as our Instructor, and has given us a solemn assurance that if we faithfully ask and seek, we shall attain; and since Christ, the only name given whereby we can be saved, has commanded us to be in unity as co-members of His body, how, I ask, can it be pretended that we are under a moral necessity, from phrenological constitutions and the differences of circumstances, to be "ever learning, and never able to come to a knowledge of the truth?" I am ready and willing to admit however, that Christain knowledge and spiritual illumination are progressive, and conditioned on the use of means. It is not to be expected that we are to know every thing in a moment. In communicating instruction to the children of men, God is always pleased to give "line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little, and there a little;" and in relation to many things, we must learn to keep our judgments suspended until more full information and power be obtained. The promise is, that the light shall increase more and more, even to the perfect day. That some persons will at all periods be more advanced than others, is true. Both of these classes need humility and patience—the former to communicate, the latter to receive. We are to grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth.

But this law of constant Christian growth, imposes no law of unchristian antagonism or dismemberment. No, blessed be God! we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of the slaughtered Lamb of God cleanseth us from all sin.—If we are taught by this Prophet, (and "Him shall ye hear in all things,") we may rest assured that we shall not be led into the different contradictoy doctrines of the present age, but into all truth. All that are of God are one, both in spirit and in truth.

But let us glance for a moment at the history of the Jews. Had they understood the prophecies, which were read every Sabbath, and had they received that pure wisdom which comes from God alone, they would not have rejected and crucified the Lord of glory as they did. But they knew not the Scriptures nor the power of God—they knew not the time of their visitation, and were destroyed for lack of knowledge—just as we shall be, if we neglect to read and understand God's word for ourselves. And how often did Jesus reprove them! Said He, "O ye hypocrites! ye can discern the face of the sky, but why is it that ye cannot discern the signs of the times?"—They rejected the signs of His first Advent, (about 21 or more of which, were given,) just as the Gentile world have the signs of His second; of which, according to Br. Miller, no less than 25 have been fulfilled within a period of about 75 years! They were looking for a temporal king and kingdom—just as the professed Church are for a temporal millennium—a thousand years of peace and safety. But in this they will be disappointed. "As it was in the days of Noah, so shall (future tense) it be at the coming of the Son of man."

The mystery of iniquity began to work in Paul's day, and he informs us that it would assume the character of an actual manifestation in the last days, and not that the world would be converted; for the wheat and tares are to grow together till the harvest, and the harvest is at the end of the world, or dispensation. God forbid that we should listen to any of these syren songs of the last days but remember the words of our Br. Storrs:—"Stop not to contend with those who hate this doctrine, and wish to reason you out of it. You can do them no good, and they may do you eternal injury. But treat them kindly, and especially direct them to God, who alone can help them in this late hour."

Again:— Says Jesus, "Had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed me." Why so? Ans. "Because he wrote of me." Once more:—"O fools and slow of heart to believe all that the Prophets have spoken!" Now this portion of Scripture is equally as applicable to our time as theirs; and we would do well to take heed to the sure word of prophecy until (there will be no need of it after that,) the day dawn, and the day star or morning star arise in our hearts, and that will be when we get to our journey's end; for says Jesus to him "that overcometh (or endureth to the end,) I will give the bright and morning star." Every thing depends upon our enduring to the end.

When I look back and think of those Brn. who have gone before us, whose bodies have long since seen corruption; when I think of those who braved the perils of the ocean, who suffered the privations of the wilderness, and encountered all the dangers and dificulties of this life, and at last died as martyrs for the cause of their dear Redeemer; I say, when I think of those, I am led to exclaim, what enduring grace they must have had! what love for Christ and His cause! Have we as much love and devotion, to be willing to sacrifice our property, reputation, and even lay down our lives, if need be, for the cause of Jesus, and for cherishing those doctrines which they loved so well, suffered so much for, and made so great sacrifices? What are our sufferings to be compared to the sufferings of those brave soldiers of the Cross? Comparatively nothing. "It is worse than vain," says a favorite English writer, in speaking of the height that the opposition to the Gospel had risen in the 3d century, "to seek for the living members of Christ among those who ruled in the Church, or wrote to uphold her superstitions. We must look for them among the persecuted." This is doubtless true of the Church at the present time. If Jesus Christ laid down His life for us, ought we not to be willing to lay down our lives for the brethren? If we suffer with Him, we shall also reign with Him in glory. And is not the Kingdom worth suffering anything for? What tongue so eloquent as to portray its beauties! what heart so full as to appreciate its glories! what brain so capacious as to estimate its value! The Kingdom! why the very mention of the word is enough to still all the tumults of our troubled nature—to hush all the angry contentions of conflicting interests—and to allay all the anxieties of our heart in reference to this present life, what we shall eat, drink, or wherewithal we shall be clothed. And when I feel that I am within sight as it were of that blessed Kingdom, it rejoices my heart, and leads me to exclaim, "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly!" I long for that day to come—I sigh for deliverance—it does seem as though our very hearts would break—that our fond desires would pray Thee down. O come, my Beloved, come! We welcome Thee back to thine inheritance again—we long to see Thee as thou art—the fairest among ten-thousand—the one altogether lovely! "O that Thou wouldest rend the heavens and come down, that the mountains might flow down at thy presence!" We groan within ourselves, waiting for the redemption of our bodies—for the curse that is upon the land to be removed, and for the earth to be filled with thy glory. O God, hasten the time! speed on that joyous day! roll on thy bright designs and let the work be accomplished which thou hast spoken. Let thy Kingdom come, and thy will, O God, be done on earth as it is done in heaven.

But the inquiry is, "Watchman, what of the night?" In what period of prophecy are we now? What are our 'soundings,' in relation to the setting up of the Kingdom of God? Are we in the kingdom of Babylon, under the "head of gold?" No. That has passed away long ago. Are we in the Medo-Persian empire? No. Long since that kingdom was numbered with things past. Are we in Grecia? Certainly not. That too was numbered and finished more than 2000 years since. Are we in Rome in its consolidated state, or, in the "legs of iron? No. Long since that empire fell. Where are we then? Ans. Down among the feet and toes. How long since those divisions came up which constitute the feet and toes? Ans. Nearly 1400 years. Almost 1400 years we have travelled down in the divided state of the Roman empire!" O, my God! is it so? And where are thy professed people that they cannot see this? Ye can discern the face of the sky, but why, O why, cannot ye discern the signs of the times? If thou lovest thy people, O Lord, whom thou once wast with, and didst give victory to, we implore Thee not to sink them into degradation, but forgive them, for they know not what they do! Listen not, my Brn., to the preaching of those servants who are saying, "my Lord delayeth His coming"—that the "end is not bye and bye"—and that "every vision faileth;" for upon all such He is to come as a thief, and in an hour that they are not aware of. And who wants to hear them, in the face and eyes of such testimony as this? Where is the individual that says the Bible is not the Word of God? Let him hide his diminished head; let him fly to Christ for shelter; let him seriously consider his ways and repent, before the shadows of the night of death come upon him, and the opportunity of enjoying the means of salvation be forever at an end. O, it is a good thing that the heart be established! that we have the witness in ourselves that we are the children of God—and that "in all our gettings, we get understanding;" for "discretion shall keep thee, and understanding shall preserve thee." "Say unto wisdom, Thou art my sister, and call understanding thy kinswoman."

Let any candid man examine and trace the history of the above four universal kingdoms down to the present time, and he cannot, I hesitate not to say, be an honest man and resist the conviction that we occupy a true position—and that the end of all things truly is at hand—to say nothing of the fulfilment of the signs that were to precede the second coming of Christ. O I implore my Brn. not to tempt the Lord, as did the children of Israel, because we are brought into trial, by the inquiry, "Is the Lord among us or not?" God Almighty has been in this movement; and His footprints, if I may so speak, can be distinctly traced in His stately goings for the few years that are past and gone. Though there are some things that I do not fully understand, I am not one of those who would give anything to the Devil except his due, simply because I do not comprehend it. We are not required to believe anything without adequate evidence; nor, on the other hand, are we allowed to reject anything because we do not understand it. Let us remember that we are children—the children of God; that He gives us abundant evidence of everything which He requires us to believe, though He renders it necessary for us to exercise confidence in Him—to feel assured that what He says is true, and that what He does is right; that "though clouds and darkness may be round about Him, justice and judgment are the habitation of His throne." Let us learn to submit to what we see to be true—to remember that our knowledge does not embrace all truth—that things may be perfectly consistent with each other and with the attributes of God, though we may not see how. Our knowledge will continually increase. "What thou knowest not now, says Jesus, thou shalt know hereafter." Let us wait, then, for further light. God gives to the glow worm light enough to see its own path, though not enough to dispel the darkness of the night.

But where does the stone strike the image? Is it on the head? No. Is it on the breast and arms? No. Is it on the belly and thighs? No. Is it on the legs? No. Where then? I answer, on the FEET. Where are we now? Ans. In the feet. What takes place when the stone smites the image? Ans. "It is all broken to pieces, and becomes like the chaff of the summer threshing-floors, and the wind carries it away that no place shall be found for it." Annihilated, glory to God! Then will this world be cleansed and the everlasting Kingdom of God be set up, which shall never be destroyed.

"But, (says the objector,) Christ and the Apostles preached the Kingdom of heaven at hand 1800 years ago, consequently it must have been set up about that time." Here is the great stumbling-block in the way of many honest souls.—In reply, I have to say, a thing at hand, means the next to come. Let me ask, what kingdom was at hand when Babylon was in power? Ans. The Medo-Persian. Why? Because it was next to come. What kingdom was at hand when the Medo-Persian was in power? Ans.—The Grecian. Why? Because it was next to succeed it. What kingdom was at hand when Grecia was in power? Ans. Rome. Why? Because next to come as a kingdom of universal empire. What kingdom is at hand when Rome is in power? Ans. God's everlasting Kingdom. Why? Ans. Because that is the next kingdom to come of universal empire.—Thus we see how it could be said, in truth, the Kingdom of heaven is at hand in the very commencement of the Roman kingdom. But when will the Kingdom of God be established? See Matt. 25: 31–34; Rev. 11: 15–18. Many passages might be quoted, and much written upon this subject, but my limits will not permit.

The subject of Christ's speedy coming is one in which we are all interested; and its investigation at the present time is of vast importance to the Church and the world; "for the horizon (to use the language of another,) whether looked at politically, socially, or religiously, which bounds society, foreshadows some mighty change. This is becoming evident to all, even the minds of the dullest; and history—man's experience of the past—is examined in vain for some clue for our guidance, our present is so unlike any past. We are encircled with uncertainties, no one knowing what to-morrow may bring forth. We are entering upon the fiery trials that men of old foretold would precede the ushering in of the glorious day of universal submission to the authority of HIM whose right it is to reign. All things seem to show it, both in the Church and in the world."

And how few there are who understand these things! Some tell us one thing is coming, another this, and another that; but the humble follower of Jesus, who delights to do the will of God, and whose "secrets are with them that fear Him," feels authorized to say, from His blessed word, that it is the brilliant coming of his Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. And in view of these things, is it not truly surprising that there should be such forgetfulness of God? It would be less surprising were the idea of God difficult of conception, or the world in which we live unsuggestive of it. But how different is this from the fact! My heart sickens within me, as I look around and see the state of Zion, and the apparent indifference among those who profess to be the saints of God. And then to feel my own unworthiness—how far short I come, is enough to break the stoutest heart. O for an increase of the love of God! for more of that weeping spirit of Jesus, for strength and courage to go forward, and for wisdom to direct us aright! Where, oh where is the devotion of John—the consecration of Paul—or the boldness of Peter? Echo answers where? And where are those whom we were wont to greet from time to time at the house of prayer and hold sweet communion together? Where are they now? It would have been better for them not to have known the way of righteousness, than to have turned from the holy commandment delivered to them; for, says the Apostle, "it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come, &c., if they shall fall away, to renew them again unto repentance, seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put Him to an open shame." Their last end is worse than the beginging. See 2d Pet. 2: 20; Heb. 10: 26, 27. How important it is, then, that we should hold fast that whereunto we have attained! "Oh that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of my people!" "Only acknowledge thine iniquity, that thou hast transgressed against the Lord thy God, and hast scattered thy ways to the strangers under every green tree, and hast not obeyed my voice, saith the Lord, and I will give you pastors according to mine heart, which shall feed you with knowledge and understanding." Jer. 3: 13. Thank God for the promise! How good the Lord is! Blessed be His name!

But a word in regard to the [illegible] periods. And here I would like to say considerable, but I find I am growing talkative, and feel somewhat weary. I have already written to quite a length, and perhaps have tried the patience of your readers. Suffice it to say, I believe the 1260 years to be in the past—that the darkening of the sun marks their termination; that the 1290 are in the past, and also the 1335 years; that as far as they can be extended is to the 19th of May, 1855. I believe the 2300 years to be "the time appointed" for the end; and nothing is clearer to my mind, than that they commence and will terminate in the Spring, and that the coming of the Just One will also be in the Spring. He was born in the Spring, crucified in the Spring, went away in the Spring, and blessed be God, I believe He will come in the Spring, according to the promise in Joel 2. 23.

But I cannot, I will not censure a Br. or Sr. for not believing in every particular as I do; yea, I had rather be consigned to the silent tomb, than to offend one of God's chosen people. Away with this miserable stuff; and away too with this religion of selfishness which loves those only who love them, and gives in the hope of being rewarded. So long as there are constant additions to the Church, we must expect differences of opinion to exist, till we all come into the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God. We cannot be everything in a moment; we are to "grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth." But so far as we are agreed, let us walk together, and love as brethren. "Behold, how good and pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!" We all agree and believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God; it is all He ever claimed to be, having declared that His Father was the greatest. We all agree and believe that He died, and that He was "three days and three nights in the heart of the earth;" that He arose the third day, according to the Scriptures, and after having been seen of Cephas, then of the twelve, after that of above 500 brethren, and then of James and all the Apostles, Paul being the last, that He ascended in presence of many witnesses, to the Father, and is now seated at His right hand in the great Cathedral above—in the "Holy of Holies." We all agree and believe that He is soon to come again in like manner as He went away, (Acts 1; 11,) that same identical Jesus, "who was, is, and will eternally be, flesh and bones." (See Luke 24: 37–43. These words were spoken after His resurrection.) We all agree and believe that the dead "know not anything"—Ecc. 9: 5, 6; Ps. 146: 3, 4—that they are unconscious from death to the resurrection—and that unless Christ comes the second time, we never shall see Him again, John 13: 33; Acts 2: 34; John 3: 13; Job. 19: 23–27; and all that have "fallen asleep in Him are perished." (See 1 Cor. 15; Job 14: 10.) We all agree and believe the wicked will be destroyed—not annihilated, but "become as ashes under the souls of our feet." We believe the notion of going to heaven at death, and before the resurrection at the last day, "is clearly subversive of the whole Gospel scheme of redemption, is a practical denial of the resurrection of the dead, and the return of the Son of God from heaven, and is just as truly a fable as the Roman purgatory, and quite as pernicious in its effects."—We believe the abode of the saints is to be "on the earth"—See Ezek. 37: 14; Rev. 5: 10; Matt. 5: 5, that the earth was made to be inhabited, Is. 45; 18, and that it is all the heaven God has promised us. Dan. 2: 44; 7: 18, 27.

Says a believer, "well might the pen of inspiration say, The righteous shall inherit substance." It has said so, blessed be God! See Prov. 8: 21. We believe that man is mortal—Job 4. 17; Rom. 2: 7, that God only hath immortality—1 Tim. 6: 15, 16, that the promise of immortality, Titus 1: 2, as the gift of God, Rom. 6; 23, is obtained through Jesus Christ, by the righteous only, John 3: 36; 10: 27, 28, 5, and that at the sound of the last trump this mortal shall put on immortality, 1st Cor. 15: 52, 53. We believe not in Roman Catholic purgatories, nor in Protestant ones; that the doctrine of endless torment is a fable, and is derogatory to Him who is characterized as a "God of love." We believe in holiness of heart, without which no man can see the Lord and live. These are the great truths of the Gospel; and as we are all, or nearly all, agreed upon them, let us lay aside all non-essentials, and "strive not about words to no profit," but be united, and walk heart and hand together, and fellowship every Br. and Sr. that loves the Lord Jesus Christ and His appearing. And if any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be anathema maranatha.

Now "if there be any consolation in Christ, if any comfort of love, if any fellowship of the Spirit, if any bowels and mercies, fulfil ye my joy, that ye be like-minded, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind. Let nothing be done through strife or vain glory; but in lowliness of mind let each esteem others better than themselves. Do nothing by partiality; lay hands suddenly on no man; foolish and unlearned questions avoid, knowing that they do gender strifes; be gentle unto all men, apt to teach, patient, in meekness instructing those that oppose themselves; if God paradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth."

And last of all, my Brn., be patient unto the coming of the Lord He has learned one of the highest lessons of philosophy and religion, who has learned to wait. "Behold the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain. Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts; for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh."

Wait! afflicted one, pining perhaps in poverty, bereft of friends, deserted of the world, racked with pain, tempted to despair, and seeking death rather than life. The end may be better than the beginning, sorrow the condition of joy, and beyond the cloud sleeps the sunshine.

Wait! mourner, watching at morn, at noon, and dewy eve, over the fresh earth beneath which reposes a form almost as dear as thine own; wait! for the dead shall live again, and rise incorruptible, and we and they ever be with the Lord.

Wait! agonized father, weeping mother, to whom the heavens have grown dim through a child's waywardness and folly. The mother of John Newton wept such tears when her son was for years dissolute, intemperate, profane, and engaged on the coast of Africa in the accursed slave trade The mother of Augustine wept thus, who, when she went to the Bishop for counsel and sympathy, was dismissed with the words: "Woman, begone; for it cannot be that a son for whom such tears are shed will be lost." Wait, but pray.

Wait! Christian, mourning over Zion desolate, the bones in the valley very dry, and no breath of life entering the slain.—These very ruins are precious in the sight of her King; her walls are written on his hands and are ever before him. Zion dear to thee, and not to Him! There is a set time to favor her, and that time, glory to God, will surely come. Wait!

Wait! unbeliever, doubter, sceptic, and perplexed, denying or questioning the divine existence and goodness from the sight of the manifold scenes of injustice, violence and wrong in the present life.—The fathers have fallen asleep, and at present there are no signs of God's coming. But He hath appointed a day, and it will come as truly as Christ was raised from the dead, when all error shall be corrected, all wrong shall be righted, and what is confused be made plain, and God justify His ways to man. Wait!

Yours as ever,

The World's Crisis.

LOWELL, OCT. 27, 1855.

The Progress of Events.

The intelligence from the Eastern world seems unusually startling this week, inasmuch as the three great leaders of democracy in Europe have announced to the world that the hour is struck for the revolutionary forces to be combined and marshalled for the combat. I have ever believed, that although the present gathering of the nations for war was the fulfilment of certain portions of prophecy, as in Joel, Haggai, 16th of Rev., &c., yet it was only the preparatory movement to the final action of the belligerent powers of earth. It is the gathering under the sixth vial, but not the outpouring of the seventh. When the outpouring of the seventh and last comes, it will be, according to my understanding of prophecy, the breaking up of all earthly governments—the prevalence of universal anarchy and civil war, described in Joel as the overthrowing of the strength of the kingdoms of the heathen," and in Dan. 12: 1, as "a time of trouble such as never was SINCE THERE WAS A NATION." The proclamation of Ledru Rollin, Kossuth and Mazzini, calling upon the popular forces to show themselves and prepare for the conflict, accords with the idea of civil war and popular outbreaks which will destroy the strength of the kingdoms, or governments, in order, as hey suppose, to prepare the way for the triumph of universal democracy.

The representation of Haggai is, that in this overturning of the kingdoms, they "shall come down, every one by the sword of his brother;" which seems to imply civil war; and the representation of Zechariah is, that "they shall lay hold every one on the hand of his neighbor, and his hand shall rise up against the hand of his neighbor;" which also expresses civil commotion like the popular outbreaks which occurred in '48, and which again seem to be imminent.

It has ever appeared to me since the transactions of 1848 and 9 that those scenes were a sort of prototype of what was about to occur among the nations of the earth. It demonstrated the fact that revolutionary elements were at work, as it were, under ground all over the continent of Europe; and that outburst of violence was like a discharge of lava, giving vent to the internal fires of a volcano.—When this eruption of the popular elements had spent its force, the mountain, so to speak, became quiet again, but the volcanic action has not for a moment ceased. Its subterranean fires have been burning and raging within, increasing in intensity of heat till they are ready to melt all before them; and when disgorged again, they will dissolve principalities and powers, thrones and dominions, and sweep away the potentates of earth as the trees of the forest are swept away by the burning tide of lava running in rivers from the crater of a volcano.

The scenes of '48 seemed to resemble the descriptions of the Prophets referring to the scenes of the Last Day; but there was wanting the preliminary movement, viz. the action of the three unclean spirits like frogs, proceeding "out of the mouth of the Dragon, and out of the mouth of the Beast, and out of the mouth of the false Prophet." But this action of the spirits seems now so clearly developed, that it stands as a basis of our faith in the application of these Scriptures to the present movements. The preparation is now being made for the transpiring of the scenes under the seventh Vial. To my mind, since the commencement of the Advent movement, the way never seemed so fully prepared for the final and universal tempest of wrath, to burst forth like a volcano and deluge the earth as it does now. I wait with a lively interest for the arrival of the next steamer from Europe, and although those sublime events may possibly still be somewhat delayed, yet we can clearly perceive the earth is quaking—society is suffering the upheavings of the warlike elements, and doubtless they will soon break out in popular fury, and the flames of civil discord will wrap all the nations in a blaze of revolution and civil war. I would like to write much now on the subject, but must defer it till our next. In the mean time I solicit the prayers of the Church for the grace and illumination of God's Spirit to be poured out upon me, that I may understand and feel more and more of the power and glory of the truth.

I thank God for the prospect of speedy deliverance, and take courage to enter more cordially into His work and service in laboring for the salvation of souls, and expect soon to receive a glorious reward.

Brn., let us labor while the day lasts; for soon the night cometh. May God guide us into all truth, and into the knowledge of all His ways, and the discharge of all our duty, and help us to be faithful unto the end, that we obtain the crown of life.

The question relating to the thousand years of Rev. 20 is one of great difficulty, and some objection has been made to publishing on a subject so hard to be demonstrated; but as communications have been received on the question, perhaps it may not be uninteresting to the readers of the Crisis to examine both sides fairly and candidly presented without any design for controversy. The following article is the remainder of a communication of which we published a part under date of Oct. 13.

The Day of Judgment.

BY B. P. HILDRETH.

Says Peter, "But, beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." 2 Pet. 3: 8.

Now may we not expect something very important for us to know, which he is so anxious that we should not be ignorant of? Well, we will listen especially, to this one thing, that Peter has to communicate to us. "Be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." 2 Pet. 3: 8. In v. 7, he says, "The heavens and the earth which are now, are kept in store, reserved unto fire, against the day of judgment, and perdition of ungodly men;" and before he proceeds further with his subject, (of the destruction of the world by fire) he stops short, by a disjunctive, to inform us of that one thing (viz.) the length of the day of judgment. I have long since come to the conclusion that Peter here turned from the main subject of his discourse, for the sole purpose of giving us information that the length of that day would be a thousand years, else, why should he come to such a stand, to tell us what had no relation to the burning of the world, but only to the length of that day in which it would be consumed? If this were not his object, why so desirous that we should not be ignorant of it? for I can discern no very great importance to be attached to that item of the prophecy in that particular connection, if it were not to shew the length of that day. He then resumes the main subject by saying, "The Lord is not slack concerning his promise as some men count slackness; but is long-suffering to us ward, not willing that any should perish; but that all should come to repentence." "But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night, in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat; the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up. Seeing then that all these things, shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness. Looking for, and hasting unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat.—Nevertheless we according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness; (or righteous persons.) Wherefore, beloved, seeing ye look for such things, be diligent, that ye may be found of Him in peace, without spot and blameless." 2 Pet. 3: 7–14. Here we learn that the day of judgment is the day of perdition of ungodly men: and that it is the day of the Lord, and at the same time, the day of redemption to all the inhabitants of the new earth; and likewise that its length will be a thousand years, the same term of time in which the martyrs and nonworshippers of the beast, live and reign with Christ, which stands connected with the first resurrection. Rev. 20: 4, 5, and the same term that intervenes between the binding and loosing of Satan, vs. 3 and 7. This thousand years is to be the long-looked-for millennium—the seventh thousand years; and the grand question among professed Christians is, Will the King make his personal appearance at the commencement, or termination of the thousand years?—One party affirms that the King cannot come till the end of the thousand years; for there must be a great harvest gathered in, during that time; it will be a glorious day, when all will know Him from the least to the greatest; so that He will see the travail of His soul, and be satisfied. The whole world will be converted, so that He will have the heathen for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for His possession. That His Kingdom was set up at the first Advent, and that a nation will be born in a day, into His Kingdom.

The other party, answers, yes; the earth will doubtless be made to bring forth in one day; and it will be from among the dead; but who ever heard of a kingdom without a king? There will be a great harvest at the renovation of the just, and all will know Him and sing, salvation to our God, which sitteth on the throne and unto the Lamb. He will see the travail of his soul, and have the heathen for his inheritance; but He will break them with a rod of iron, and dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel. Ps. 2: 8, 9.

We know that "the law and the prophets were until John; since that the kingdom of God is preached;" that is, the principles and doctrines of the Kingdom began to be promulgated at that time. But if the Kingdom was set up then, why did the King himself say that it was at hand? and why teach his disciples to pray "Thy kingdom come?" Did He judge the quick and dead at that time? He says himself, "I came not to judge the world, but to save the world." John 12: 47.—One thing is certain, His Kingdom will not be fully set up, till His appearing, when He will judge the living and dead. Proof, 2 Tim. 4: 1. Though some of the subjects of this kingdom are here on probation, the whole body must come to the stature of his fulness; no one member can be made perfect without the whole; and when that time comes, He will reign personally on the throne of His father David, which we all know is not the case now.

"When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory. And before him shall be gathered all nations: and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats: And he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on his left. Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." Matt. 25: 31–34. Here the idea at first strikes the mind that all, both saints and sinners stand before God at the same moment; but if we take this view, when will the resurrection of the just occur, (in contradistinction from that of the wicked,) or the first resurrection? 2 Thess. 4: 16, 17, and Rev. 20: 5.—Says one, at the end of the thousand years. But is not this thousand years the very time specified for the saints to live and reign? and if so, they must have been raised at the beginning of that period; for the judgment of the quick and dead is at His appearing and His kingdom; and it must be supposed that his kingdom is fully established long before the termination of that period. According to Rev. chs. 19 and 20, Babylon, or the Mother of harlots falls; the King appears; the Marriage Supper is announced; the battle of Armageddon begins; Satan is bound, and the saints reign with Christ a thousand years, which is the first resurrection.

"But the rest of the dead lived not again till the thousand years were finished;" this implies that the former class had been dead, and did live again at the beginning of the thousand years; and it being affirmed "this is the first resurrection," implies that the second resurrection does not occur till the end of the thousand years, and consequently that there is no such occurrence as a general resurrection, in other words that the resurrections are not synchronous. I am aware that several writers of considerable note, have advanced views to this effect, that the resurrection and judgment of those who had not received the mark of the beast, (v. 4,) and the events recorded in vs. 11–15 are synchronous, but is it not evident that if there is a resurrection and judgment brought to view, in v. 4, that it occurs when the thousand years begin? And is it not as evident by what follows v. 11th that the final judgment of the wicked occurs there? and if so, they cannot synchronize; and if not, where except between the resurrections shall we locate this thousand years?

In the past, says one, of course.

I cannot do that; for this thousand years is the antitype of the first Sabbath after Creation; and analogy requires that it be placed at the end of six thousand years. Have the saints lived again, and reigned with Christ a thousand years?—Has Satan been bound? and if so, when? I will answer that, says one. It was when Constantine conquered pagan Rome.—Paganism is the Dragon, as may be seen in ch. 12; and he is there called the Devil and Satan. He is bound by Constantine in the beginning of the 4th century, and loosed in the 14th, that is, a thousand years; and the Church prospered spiritually during the same period.

But please stop; if our arguments are not just, and our reasoning in accordance with the whole tenor of Scripture, we shall incur the charge of dogmatizing, and our logic will not be the genuine coin, but counterfeit. Let us look at your argument, and then at the Bible; and all that clashes with the latter, we will reject.—You say, the Roman Dragon is the Devil. John says "the Devil sinneth from the beginning." John 3: 8. Did Paganism exist from the beginning? "Then was Jesus led up of the Spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil. Matt. 4: 1. Being forty days tempted of Satan.—The enemy that sowed them is the devil. Matt. 13: 39. Ye are of your father the devil; and the lusts of your father ye will do; he was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth because there was no truth in him; when he speaketh a lie he speaketh of his own; for he is a liar, and the father of it. John 8: 44. That through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil. Heb. 2: 14. Resist the devil and he will flee. James 4: 7. Whosoever committeth sin is of the devil. Your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion walketh about, seeking whom he may devour." 1 Pet. 5: 8.

In view of all these passages, (and many more might be quoted,) can any man in his senses say that Paganism is the Devil and Satan? We know that the dominion of Satan has existed over a lost world ever since the fall of man; Rome, proud Rome, the mistress of the world, was in league with him, in the persecution of Christ and His disciples. A Dragon is a perfect emblem of a heathen persecuting empire, such as Rome then was, which, instigated by Satan or the Devil, through falsehood, malice and treachery sought to swallow up the infant Church of Christ; and though Constantine did conquer this pagan Dragon, and christinnize the Empire, nominally, did he bind the agent by which he was actuated? Or did the same agent rise up with ten fold more wrath against the Church in the papal Beast? I think that all must acknowledge that the same agency which moved the Dragon to act, has been in some form or other moving the beast from that day to the present. "And I saw an angel come down from heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit, and a great chain in his hand. And he laid hold of the Dragon, that old serpent which is called the Devil and Satan, and bound him a thousand years; And cast him into the bottomless pit, and shut him up, and set a seal upon him, that he should deceive the nations no more, till the thousand years should be fulfilled; and after that he must be loosed a little season." Rev. 20: 1–3.

Our views of the Devil are derived in great measure from early instruction; but as soon as we learn that they accord not with God's word, it is our duty to abandon them. The Bible teaches us that there is an invisible agency in existence that is evil; we know it likewise by our own woful experience, having often been acted upon by it, to commit things that are wrong: that it is in direct antagonism with that which is good; and it is revealed sufficiently clear, in Genesis, when that agency began to operate on man; and it is no less clear, when that same agency will be restrained, by the above texts (viz.) at the commencement of the thousand years.—Jude says, v. 6, "The angels which kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation, He hath reserved in everlasting chains, under darkness, unto the judgment of the great day." That day I conceive commences with the binding of Satan, and the resurrection of the saints who live and reign with Christ, during the period of his confinement: which is the same in which "the rest of the dead lived not again." I know that the Church in Pergamos dwelt where Satan's seat is: and I likewise know that Satan's seat is in the heart of every unregenerate man; and especially the heart of an empire of paganism, as Rome was; whose every art was designed to destroy the Church of Christ, by open hostility against Him.—Not so the Papal monster; she comes Judas-like, to betray with a kiss, in the garb of a lamb, with the heart of a dragon.—She is the master-piece of Satan's work; and her doom is written, Rev. 19: 20, to be "cast alive into the lake of fire, burning with brimstone;" and this likewise will be at the beginning of the thousand years.

"O this is all symbolical language, and can by no possible means bear a litteral construction," says an opponent.

Then please tell me what is symbolized by the rider on the white horse, whose name is called the Word of God? Who is symbolized by Christ, with whom the saints lived and reigned, a thousand years? Who said to John, "This is the first resurrection?" Who said, "these are the true sayings of God?" And who, "write, for these words are true and faithful?" ch. 21: 5. Who will dare, (in view of its denunciations,) to nullify the truth and sublimity of this prophecy, by explaining awey the obvious meaning of this book, which is presented to us in robes of heaven? It is a magnificent description of the second coming of Christ, with which it begins, and ends; and though highly symbolical. and obscure, in some parts, is sufficiently clear for practical instruction; and no words could be more expressive of the last Judgment, then are recorded in vs. 11–15, where all enemies are disposed of.

Well, says one objector, you will see in those texts that death is cast into the lake of fire; and you know that Chris must reign, till He hath put all enemies under his feet; so that He cannot come till after the close of the thousand years, for death is the last of His enemies.—Christ will put all enemies under His feet, but it does not necessarily follow that in order to it, they must be wholly destroyed. Satan is put under His feet when bound: but not wholly destroyed, even in the abyss, as is proved by his being afterward loosed. Death has been a king ever since Abel fell by the hand of his brother; and has he not held empire over thet righteous dead, from that day to the present? And He will hold it, till the resurrection of the just; when his power over them will be abolished.

Interesting from Sicily. L' Ecod' Italia, contains an important proclamation, issued by the people of Sicily. It advocates an immediate revolution and unity with the Sardinian government. It will be remembered that the Sicilians were foremost in the European revolution of 1848, and judging from their past conduct, it is very probable that the next steamer will bring us news of the Italian insurrection. Gavazzi writes to the Crusader that Italy is on the point of a popular revolution.

nave already written to quite a length, and perhaps have tried the patience of your readers. Suffice it to say, I believe the 1260 years to be in the past—that the darkening of the sun marks their termination; that the 1290 are in the past, and also the 1335 years; that as far as they can be extended is to the 19th of May, 1855. I believe the 2300 years to be "the time appointed" for the end; and nothing is clearer to my mind, than that they commence and will terminate in the Spring, and that the coming of the Just One will also be in the Spring. He was born in the Spring, crucified in the Spring, went away in the Spring, and blessed be God, I believe He will come in the Spring, according to the promise in Joel 2. 23.

But I cannot, I will not censure a Br. or Sr. for not believing in every particular as I do; yea, I had rather be consigned to the silent tomb, than to offend one of God's chosen people. Away with this miserable stuff; and away too with this religion of selfishness which loves those only who love them, and gives in the hope of being rewarded. So long as there are constant additions to the Church, we must expect differences of opinion to exist, till we all come into the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God. We cannot be everything in a moment; we are to "grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth." But so far as we are agreed, let us walk together, and love as brethren. "Behold, how good and pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!" We all agree and believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God; it is all He ever claimed to be, having declared that His Father was the greatest. We all agree and believe that He died, and that He was "three days and three nights in the heart of the earth;" that He arose the third day, according to the Scriptures, and after having been seen of Cephas, then of the twelve, after that of above 500 brethren, and then of James and all the Apostles, Paul being the last, that He ascended in presence of many witnesses, to the Father, and is now seated at His right hand in the great Cathedral above—in the "Holy of Holies." We all agree and believe that He is soon to come again in like manner as He went away, (Acts 1; 11,) that same identical Jesus, "who was, is, and will eternally be, flesh and bones." (See Luke 24: 37–43. These words were spoken after His resurrection.) We all agree and believe that the dead "know not anything"—Ecc. 9: 5, 6; Ps. 146: 3, 4—that they are unconscious from death to the resurrection—and that unless Christ comes the second time, we never shall see Him again, John 13: 33; Acts 2: 34; John 3: 13; Job. 19: 23–27; and all that have "fallen asleep in Him are perished." (See 1 Cor. 15; Job 14: 10.) We all agree and believe the wicked will be destroyed—not annihilated, but "become as ashes under the souls of our feet." We believe the notion of going to heaven at death, and before the resurrection at the last day, "is clearly subversive of the whole Gospel scheme of redemption, is a practical denial of the resurrection of the dead, and the return of the Son of God from heaven, and is just as truly a fable as the Roman purgatory, and quite as pernicious in its effects."—We believe the abode of the saints is to be "on the earth"—See Ezek. 37: 14; Rev. 5: 10; Matt. 5: 5, that the earth was made to be inhabited, Is. 45; 18, and that it is all the heaven God has promised us. Dan. 2: 44; 7: 18, 27.

Says a believer, "well might the pen of inspiration say, The righteous shall inherit substance." It has said so, blessed be God! See Prov. 8: 21. We believe that man is mortal—Job 4. 17; Rom. 2: 7, that God only hath immortality—1 Tim. 6: 15, 16, that the promise of immortality, Titus 1: 2, as the gift of God, Rom. 6; 23, is obtained through Jesus Christ, by the righteous only, John 3: 36; 10: 27, 28, 5, and that at the sound of the last trump this mortal shall put on immortality, 1st Cor. 15: 52, 53. We believe not in Roman Catholic purgatories, nor in Protestant ones; that the doctrine of endless torment is a fable, and is derogatory to Him who is characterized as a "God of love." We believe in holiness of heart, without which no man can see the Lord and live. These are the great truths of the Gospel; and as we are all, or nearly all, agreed upon them, let us lay aside all non-essentials, and "strive not about words to no profit," but be united, and walk heart and hand together, and fellowship every Br. and Sr. that loves the Lord Jesus Christ and His appearing. And if any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be anathema maranatha.

Now "if there be any consolation in Christ, if any comfort of love, if any fellowship of the Spirit, if any bowels and mercies, fulfil ye my joy, that ye be like-minded, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind. Let nothing be done through strife or vain glory; but in lowliness of mind let each esteem others better than themselves. Do nothing by partiality; lay hands suddenly on no man; foolish and unlearned questions avoid, knowing that they do gender strifes; be gentle unto all men, apt to teach, patient, in meekness instructing those that oppose themselves; if God paradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth."

And last of all, my Brn., be patient unto the coming of the Lord He has learned one of the highest lessons of philosophy and religion, who has learned to wait. "Behold the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain. Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts; for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh."

Wait! afflicted one, pining perhaps in poverty, bereft of friends, deserted of the world, racked with pain, tempted to despair, and seeking death rather than life. The end may be better than the beginning, sorrow the condition of joy, and beyond the cloud sleeps the sunshine.

Wait! mourner, watching at morn, at noon, and dewy eve, over the fresh earth beneath which reposes a form almost as dear as thine own; wait! for the dead shall live again, and rise incorruptible, and we and they ever be with the Lord.

Wait! agonized father, weeping mother, to whom the heavens have grown dim through a child's waywardness and folly. The mother ot John Newton wept such tears when her son was for years dissolute, intemperate, profane, and engaged on the coast of Africa in the accursed slave trade The mother of Augustine wept thus, who, when she went to the Bishop for counsel and sympathy, was dismissed with the words: "Woman, begone; for it cannot be that a son for whom such tears are shed will be lost." Wait, but pray.

Wait! Christian, mourning over Zion desolate, the bones in the valley very dry, and no breath of life entering the slain.—These very ruins are precious in the sight of her King; her walls are written on his hands and are ever before him. Zion dear to thee, and not to Him! There is a set time to favor her, and that time, glory to God, will surely come. Wait!

Wait! unbeliever, doubter, sceptic, and perplexed, denying or questioning the divine existence and goodness from the sight of the manifold scenes of injustice, violence and wrong in the present life.—The fathers have fallen asleep, and at present there are no signs of God's coming. But He hath appointed a day, and it will come as truly as Christ was raised from the dead, when all error shall be corrected, all wrong shall be righted, and what is confused be made plain, and God justify His ways to man. Wait!

Yours as ever,

The World's Crisis.

LOWELL, OCT. 27, 1855.

The Progress of Events.

The intelligence from the Eastern world seems unusually startling this week, inasmuch as the three great leaders of democracy in Europe have announced to the world that the hour is struck for the revolutionary forces to be combined and marshalled for the combat. I have ever believed, that although the present gathering of the nations for war was the fulfilment of certain portions of prophecy, as in Joel, Haggai, 16th of Rev., &c., yet it was only the preparatory movement to the final action of the belligerent powers of earth. It is the gathering under the sixth vial, but not the outpouring of the seventh. When the outpouring of the seventh and last comes, it will be, according to my understanding of prophecy, the breaking up of all earthly governments—the prevalence of universal anarchy and civil war, described in Joel as the overthrowing of the strength of the kingdoms of the heathen," and in Dan. 12: 1, as "a time of trouble such as never was SINCE THERE WAS A NATION." The proclamation of Ledru Rollin, Kossuth and Mazzini, calling upon the popular forces to show themselves and prepare for the conflict, accords with the idea of civil war and popular outbreaks which will destroy the strength of the kingdoms, or governments, in order, as hey suppose, to prepare the way for the triumph of universal democracy.

The representation of Haggai is, that in this overturning of the kingdoms, they "shall come down, every one by the sword of his brother;" which seems to imply civil war; and the representation of Zechariah is, that "they shall lay hold every one on the hand of his neighbor, and his hand shall rise up against the hand of his neighbor;" which also expresses civil commotion like the popular outbreaks which occurred in '48, and which again seem to be imminent.

It has ever appeared to me since the transactions of 1848 and 9 that those scenes were a sort of prototype of what was about to occur among the nations of the earth. It demonstrated the fact that revolutionary elements were at work, as it were, under ground all over the continent of Europe; and that outburst of violence was like a discharge of lava, giving vent to the internal fires of a volcano.—When this eruption of the popular elements had spent its force, the mountain, so to speak, became quiet again, but the volcanic action has not for a moment ceased. Its subterranean fires have been burning and raging within, increasing in intensity of heat till they are ready to melt all before them; and when disgorged again, they will dissolve principalities and powers, thrones and dominions, and sweep away the potentates of earth as the trees of the forest are swept away by the burning tide of lava running in rivers from the crater of a volcano.

The scenes of '48 seemed to resemble the descriptions of the Prophets referring to the scenes of the Last Day; but there was wanting the preliminary movement, viz. the action of the three unclean spirits like frogs, proceeding "out of the mouth of the Dragon, and out of the mouth of the Beast, and out of the mouth of the false Prophet." But this action of the spirits seems now so clearly developed, that it stands as a basis of our faith in the application of these Scriptures to the present movements. The preparation is now being made for the transpiring of the scenes under the seventh Vial. To my mind, since the commencement of the Advent movement, the way never seemed so fully prepared for the final and universal tempest of wrath, to burst forth like a volcano and deluge the earth as it does now. I wait with a lively interest for the arrival of the next steamer from Europe, and although those sublime events may possibly still be somewhat delayed, yet we can clearly perceive the earth is quaking—society is suffering the upheavings of the warlike elements, and doubtless they will soon break out in popular fury, and the flames of civil discord will wrap all the nations in a blaze of revolution and civil war. I would like to write much now on the subject, but must defer it till our next. In the mean time I solicit the prayers of the Church for the grace and illumination of God's Spirit to be poured out upon me, that I may understand and feel more and more of the power and glory of the truth.

I thank God for the prospect of speedy deliverance, and take courage to enter more cordially into His work and service in laboring for the salvation of souls, and expect soon to receive a glorious reward.

Brn., let us labor while the day lasts; for soon the night cometh. May God guide us into all truth, and into the knowledge of all His ways, and the discharge of all our duty, and help us to be faithful unto the end, that we obtain the crown of life.

The question relating to the thousaud years of Rev. 20 is one of great difficulty, and some objection has been made to publishing on a subject so hard to be demonstrated; but as communications have been received on the question, perhaps it may not be uninteresting to the readers of the Crisis to examine both sides fairly and candidly presented without any design for controversy. The following article is the remainder of a communication of which we published a part under date of Oct. 13.

The Day of Judgment.

BY B. P. HILDRETH.

Says Peter, "But, beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." 2 Pet. 3: 8.

Now may we not expect something very important for us to know, which he is so anxious that we should not be ignorant of? Well, we will listen especially, to this one thing, that Peter has to communicate to us. "Be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." 2 Pet. 3: 8. In v. 7, he says, "The heavens and the earth which are now, are kept in store, reserved unto fire, against the day of judgment, and perdition of ungodly men;" and before he proceeds further with his subject, (of the destruction of the world by fire) he stops short, by a disjunctive, to inform us of that one thing (viz.) the length of the day of judgment. I have long since come to the conclusion that Peter here turned from the main subject of his discourse, for the sole purpose of giving us information that the length of that day would be a thousand years, else, why should he come to such a stand, to tell us what had no relation to the burning of the world, but only to the length of that day in which it would be consumed? If this were not his object, why so desirous that we should not be ignorant of it? for I can discern no very great importance to be attached to that item of the prophecy in that particular connection, if it were not to shew the length of that day. He then resumes the main subject by saying, "The Lord is not slack concerning his promise as some men count slackness; but is long-suffering to us ward, not willing that any should perish; but that all should come to repentence." "But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night, in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat; the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up. Seeing then that all these things, shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness. Looking for, and hasting unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat.—Nevertheless we according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness; (or righteous persons.) Wherefore, beloved, seeing ye look for such things, be diligent, that ye may be found of Him in peace, without spot and blameless." 2 Pet. 3: 7–14. Here we learn that the day of judgment is the day of perdition of ungodly men: and that it is the day of the Lord, and at the same time, the day of redemption to all the inhabitants of the new earth; and likewise that its length will be a thousand years, the same term of time in which the martyrs and nonworshippers of the beast, live and reign with Christ, which stands connected with the first resurrection. Rev. 20: 4, 5, and the same term that intervenes between the binding and loosing of Satan, vs. 3 and 7. This thousand years is to be the long-looked-for millennium—the seventh thousand years; and the grand question among professed Christians is, Will the King make his personal appearance at the commencement, or termination of the thousand years?—One party affirms that the King cannot come till the end of the thousand years; for there must be a great harvest gathered in, during that time; it will be a glorious day, when all will know Him from the least to the greatest; so that He will see the travail of His soul, and be satisfied. The whole world will be converted, so that He will have the heathen for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for His possession. That His Kingdom was set up at the first Advent, and that a nation will be born in a day, into His Kingdom.

The other party, answers, yes; the earth will doubtless be made to bring forth in one day; and it will be from among the dead; but who ever heard of a kingdom without a king? There will be a great harvest at the renovation of the just, and all will know Him and sing, salvation to our God, which sitteth on the throne and unto the Lamb. He will see the travail of his soul, and have the heathen for his inheritance; but He will break them with a rod of iron, and dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel. Ps. 2: 8, 9.

We know that "the law and the prophets were until John; since that the kingdom of God is preached;" that is, the principles and doctrines of the Kingdom began to be promulgated at that time. But if the Kingdom was set up then, why did the King himself say that it was at hand? and why teach his disciples to pray "Thy kingdom come?" Did He judge the quick and dead at that time? He says himself, "I came not to judge the world, but to save the world." John 12: 47.—One thing is certain, His Kingdom will not be fully set up, till His appearing, when He will judge the living and dead. Proof, 2 Tim. 4: 1. Though some of the subjects of this kingdom are here on probation, the whole body must come to the stature of his fulness; no one member can be made perfect without the whole; and when that time comes, He will reign personally on the throne of His father David, which we all know is not the case now.

"When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory. And before him shall be gathered all nations: and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats: And he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on his left. Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." Matt. 25: 31–34. Here the idea at first strikes the mind that all, both saints and sinners stand before God at the same moment; but if we take this view, when will the resurrection of the just occur, (in contradistinction from that of the wicked,) or the first resurrection? 2 Thess. 4: 16, 17, and Rev. 20: 5.—Says one, at the end of the thousand years. But is not this thousand years the very time specified for the saints to live and reign? and if so, they must have been raised at the beginning of that period; for the judgment of the quick and dead is at His appearing and His kingdom; and it must be supposed that his kingdom is fully established long before the termination of that period. According to Rev. chs. 19 and 20, Babylon, or the Mother of harlots falls; the King appears; the Marriage Supper is announced; the battle of Armageddon begins; Satan is bound, and the saints reign with Christ a thousand years, which is the first resurrection.

"But the rest of the dead lived not again till the thousand years were finished;" this implies that the former class had been dead, and did live again at the beginning of the thousand years; and it being affirmed "this is the first resurrection," implies that the second resurrection does not occur till the end of the thousand years, and consequently that there is no such occurrence as a general resurrection, in other words that the resurrections are not synchronous. I am aware that several writers of considerable note, have advanced views to this effect, that the resurrection and judgment of those who had not received the mark of the beast, (v. 4,) and the events recorded in vs. 11–15 are synchronous, but is it not evident that if there is a resurrection and judgment brought to view, in v. 4, that it occurs when the thousand years begin? And is it not as evident by what follows v. 11th that the final judgment of the wicked occurs there? and if so, they cannot synchronize; and if not, where except between the resurrections shall we locate this thousand years?

In the past, says one, of course.

I cannot do that; for this thousand years is the antitype of the first Sabbath after Creation; and analogy requires that it be placed at the end of six thousand years. Have the saints lived again, and reigned with Christ a thousand years?—Has Satan been bound? and if so, when? I will answer that, says one. It was when Constantine conquered pagan Rome.—Paganism is the Dragon, as may be seen in ch. 12; and he is there called the Devil and Satan. He is bound by Constantine in the beginning of the 4th century, and loosed in the 14th, that is, a thousand years; and the Church prospered spiritually during the same period.

But please stop; if our arguments are not just, and our reasoning in accordance with the whole tenor of Scripture, we shall incur the charge of dogmatizing, and our logic will not be the genuine coin, but counterfeit. Let us look at your argument, and then at the Bible; and all that clashes with the latter, we will reject.—You say, the Roman Dragon is the Devil. John says "the Devil sinneth from the beginning." John 3: 8. Did Paganism exist from the beginning? "Then was Jesus led up of the Spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil. Matt. 4: 1. Being forty days tempted of Satan.—The enemy that sowed them is the devil. Matt. 13: 39. Ye are of your father the devil; and the lusts of your father ye will do; he was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth because there was no truth in him; when he speaketh a lie he speaketh of his own; for he is a liar, and the father of it. John 8: 44. That through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil. Heb. 2: 14. Resist the devil and he will flee. James 4: 7. Whosoever committeth sin is of the devil. Your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion walketh about, seeking whom he may devour." 1 Pet. 5: 8.

In view of all these passages, (and many more might be quoted,) can any man in his senses say that Paganism is the Devil and Satan? We know that the dominion of Satan has existed over a lost world ever since the fall of man; Rome, proud Rome, the mistress of the world, was in league with him, in the persecution of Christ and His disciples. A Dragon is a perfect emblem of a heathen persecuting empire, such as Rome then was, which, instigated by Satan or the Devil, through falsehood, malice and treachery sought to swallow up the infant Church of Christ; and though Constantine did conquer this pagan Dragon, and christinnize the Empire, nominally, did he bind the agent by which he was actuated? Or did the same agent rise up with ten fold more wrath against the Church in the papal Beast? I think that all must acknowledge that the same agency which moved the Dragon to act, has been in some form or other moving the beast from that day to the present. "And I saw an angel come down from heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit, and a great chain in his hand. And he laid hold of the Dragon, that old serpent which is called the Devil and Satan, and bound him a thousand years; And cast him into the bottomless pit, and shut him up, and set a seal upon him, that he should deceive the nations no more, till the thousand years should be fulfilled; and after that he must be loosed a little season." Rev. 20: 1–3.

Our views of the Devil are derived in great measure from early instruction; but as soon as we learn that they accord not with God's word, it is our duty to abandon them. The Bible teaches us that there is an invisible agency in existence that is evil; we know it likewise by our own woful experience, having often been acted upon by it, to commit things that are wrong: that it is in direct antagonism with that which is good; and it is revealed sufficiently clear, in Genesis, when that agency began to operate on man; and it is no less clear, when that same agency will be restrained, by the above texts (viz.) at the commencement of the thousand years.—Jude says, v. 6, "The angels which kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation, He hath reserved in everlasting chains, under darkness, unto the judgment of the great day." That day I conceive commences with the binding of Satan, and the resurrection of the saints who live and reign with Christ, during the period of his confinement: which is the same in which "the rest of the dead lived not again." I know that the Church in Pergamos dwelt where Satan's seat is: and I likewise know that Satan's seat is in the heart of every unregenerate man; and especially the heart of an empire of paganism, as Rome was; whose every art was designed to destroy the Church of Christ, by open hostility against Him.—Not so the Papal monster; she comes Judas-like, to betray with a kiss, in the garb of a lamb, with the heart of a dragon.—She is the master-piece of Satan's work; and her doom is written, Rev. 19: 20, to be "cast alive into the lake of fire, burning with brimstone;" and this likewise will be at the beginning of the thousand years.

"O this is all symbolical language, and can by no possible means bear a litteral construction," says an opponent.

Then please tell me what is symbolized by the rider on the white horse, whose name is called the Word of God? Who is symbolized by Christ, with whom the saints lived and reigned, a thousand years? Who said to John, "This is the first resurrection?" Who said, "these are the true sayings of God?" And who, "write, for these words are true and faithful?" ch. 21: 5. Who will dare, (in view of its denunciations,) to nullify the truth and sublimity of this prophecy, by explaining away the obvious meaning of this book, which is presented to us in robes of heaven? It is a magnificent description of the second coming of Christ, with which it begins, and ends; and though highly symbolical. and obscure, in some parts, is sufficiently clear for practical instruction; and no words could be more expressive of the last Judgment, then are recorded in vs. 11–15, where all enemies are disposed of.

Well, says one objector, you will see in those texts that death is cast into the lake of fire; and you know that Chris must reign, till He hath put all enemies under his feet; so that He cannot come till after the close of the thousand years, for death is the last of His enemies.—Christ will put all enemies under His feet, but it does not necessarily follow that in order to it, they must be wholly destroyed. Satan is put under His feet when bound: but not wholly destroyed, even in the abyss, as is proved by his being afterward loosed. Death has been a king ever since Abel fell by the hand of his brother; and has he not held empire over thet righteous dead, from that day to the present? And He will hold it, till the resurrection of the just; when his power over them will be abolished.

Interesting from Sicily. L' Ecod' Italia, contains an important proclamation, issued by the people of Sicily. It advocates an immediate revolution and unity with the Sardinian government. It will be remembered that the Sicilians were foremost in the European revolution of 1848, and judging from their past conduct, it is very probable that the next steamer will bring us news of the Italian insurrection. Gavazzi writes to the Crusader that Italy is on the point of a popular revolution.

For The Crisis.

Letter from Br. W. S. Campbell.

CHICAGO, Ill., Oct. 17, 1855.

Dear Br. Merriam:—Providence seemed to direct me to preach the "Gospel of the Kingdom," first, in this city, after leaving the East. I am only at the door of the West. I find it, in respect to the demand for Gospel truth, "a great door." I hope it may yet be found an effectual one.

Stopping here, to call upon my brother, I saw, with deep emotion Br. Pratt, and his family leave for Rock Island. I wished to go on, in answer to the call "come and help us." Then found Br. Walter's. We setabout getting up a meeting for Sunday. Br. D. I. Robinson, of Syracuse, N. Y. being here, we concluded to work together. Obtained South Market Hall, a large place, and secured a fair congregation during the day and a full attendance in the evening. Subjects appropriate, as we judged, were presented, and a good impression made.

On Monday eve, I gave a discourse in the Baptist Tabernacle, Des Plaines St., upon the Reign of Christ on Earth—and another last eve, in the same place, upon the Prophetic position of the French power, in the European war, which I showed is the final struggle of the nations.

To-morrow eve, we have a prayer meeting appointed, at which we expect the presence of the Savior, in real earnest. I shall spend another Sunday here, and then move on West. This has been hard ground, and we feel glad that we can get so many to hear. Little did I think, that instead of going and resting a day or two with my brother, I should go to work right here, and be compelled to stay, by the necessity of the work. I hope it is the work of the Lord. In that, I am willing to engage, in this city, and in this western country.

This morning I had a very pleasant interview of an hour with Judge J. M. Wilson, whom I found very much interested in our views—indeed he has been an acknowledged Adventist for years. A man, I should conclude, of eminent, moral and religious, as well as Judicial position. As a missionary in this field, he gave me a very cordial and hearty reception.

I cannot learn that any lectures have been given here before, excepting Br. Blain spoke one day upon the life and death question. I felt, I suppose, like Paul, when I first came: my mind was deeply exercised, in beholding "the whole city given to idolatry"—the idolatry of mammon.

The care and direction of our Lord, having been manifest to me, I feel exceedingly grateful, and happy that I may speak the truths of the Kingdom of God, here, and happy also that I have a place in the symphathies and prayers of the friends of our Lord and His truth, in the east.

It has appeared to me from the first—and especially—from having been associated with them, in travel—that the position of Eld. Pratt and his family is admirable, for its sacrifice and devotion to the work of the Lord—particularly, in his wife's willingly leaving the association of the of the east; for the privations and hardships to herself and family, of the west, I think of that moral effort.

Truly, W. S. CAMPBELL.

☞ COMMUNICATIONS. Let those whose hearts burn with the love of the truth and a desire for the glory of God, continue to write for the Crisis as the Lord may direct in His providence and grace.

There has been a great deficiency of articles for publication, and we wish our friends would bear in mind that the interests of the paper depend much upon the contributors as well as the editor, besides which, a deficiency of copy is a source of great inconvenience both to the editor and the compositor.

Sad Effects of Spiritualism. The Rondout Courier tells of a young man, named Wm Whiddit, a "medium" in that village, who, on Sunday before last was suddenly seized while in church with blindness, and soon after with utter loss of speech—calamities which he still endures. He lies in a condition of stupor, but without any physical disease. The active agents of this melancholy affliction are still unconvinced of the pernicious character of the influences they set to work upon the young man. They assert that the miserable state in which he lies, is a most glorious condition; that his physical senses are suspended only to make the interior illumination more brilliant, and that when he returns to the world-life again he will know immensely more than he ever was before aware of.

Colonization of Kansas from the South. A Georgia paper called the "Corner Stone" announces that a gentleman in that State proposes to be one of a thousand persons, each of whom is to contribute a hundred dollars towards forming a fund which is to be used in sending men and slaves from the South to Kansas. Five hundred subscribers to the fund have already been obtained. Mr Allen Eiland of Crawford, in Alabama, proposes that southern emigration societies be established in every town in the Southern States, with a view of sending forward slaveholders to Kansas, and to purchase lands in that territory, which are only to be resold to slaveholders. The Augusta Constitutionalist heartily commends the scheme.

EUROPEAN NEWS.

EXTRACTS FROM ENGLISH PAPERS RECEIVED BY THE ATLANTIC.

Interesting Details of the War. New York, Oct. 18. The latest official dispatches report the south side of Sebastopol as being occupied by detachments of French and English troops, who have had distinct quarters of the town assigned to them. The Russians had concentrated their forces in the northern forts, and were occasionally firing upon the town, to which the Allies replied from the two forts which remained intact, Nicholas and Quarantine, and from the ruins of the other forts.

Prince Gortschakoff in his reports describes the fire of the Allies as being heavy.

The British and French engineers are making preparations by the sinking of immense mines to destroy the splendid docks, arsenals and ship-building yards of Sebastopol, and thus destroy the fitness of the place for a naval stronghold

Prince Gortschakoff, on the 23d ult., reported that 26,000 men had been landed at Eupatoria, and that on the 26th this force was increased to 33,000. He has since reported that imposing masses of the allied troops continued to threaten the left wing of the Russian army from the valley of Baidar, while a force amounting to between 30,000 and 40,000 men threatens the left wing of the Russians from Eupatoria.

It is uncertain, and will remain so for some time, which of these threatened attacks is the real one, but there is quite enough in Gortschakoff's dispatches to show that he considers himself seriously threatened in front and on both flanks. Another significant fact is, that the English land-transport corps are in full activity; that the field batteries of the artillery are in marching order; that large numbers of the French cavalry have embarked for Eupatoria; and by the telegraphic accounts from Vienna it is stated that the allied fleets had left Sebastopol on some secret expedition.

It is again asserted from Vienna that the Russian army is retreating.

The correspondent of the Times, writing on the 21st, is not at all sanguine that the Russians will be forced to abandon their position on the approach of winter. The correspondent of the Daily News takes a different view. He says: "The belief gains ground that the Russians are preparing to evacuate the north side of the harbor of Sebastopol. The extensive earthworks which have been lately constructed, and others in course of construction, are regarded as simply covers for the retreat and protection of the rear guard of the Russian army.

Carts have come in empty from the direction of the Mackenzie heights, and have gone away laden, it is suppsed, with provisions. These arrangements are supposed to indicate an intention to retire. It is still understood that a combined movement is to take place against the enemy's position on the Mackenzie heights. A direct attack from Bakshi Serai is spoken of. The approach from the South being made by a route which is kept secret, and which will have the effect of avoiding the enemy's fortified entrenchments."

Le Nord, of Brussels, takes a hopeful view of Russian affairs in the Crimea. A writer in that journal says: "The situation is not entirely to our disadvantage, and the honor of our arms has been in no way compromised. Our men will no longer be obliged to offer themselves as a holocaust, but will now be able to defend themselves in a close fight and sell their lives at a high cost."

The same paper states, that out of the ten thousand seamen who had undertaken with their officers the defense of Sebastopol, only a fourth portion of them survive, with but six or seven officers.

The Allies are reported to have established one hundred and twenty mortars at Sebastopol, with which it was expected they would soon render the north side untenable.

The Oesterveiche Zeitung says, "the bombardment of the Northern forts of Sebastopol began on the 29th. The Russian army is in full retreat, and on the 29th was at Akak, which is three days march from Mackenzie's." This intelligence, however, requires confirmation Intelligence has been received at St Petersburg from Prince Gortschakoff, which brings news from the Crimea up to the 3d instant. He reports that on the previous day the enemy made an ineffectual flank movement. His dispatch is as follows:

Crimea, Oct. 3—Evening. The enemy attepted a movement against our left flank, and then withdrew. Our advanced post still occupy their former line. Nothing has yet been undertaken against the northern forts.

Marshal Pelissier reports on the 1st inst. that a brilliant contest of cavalry was fought on the 29th ult., at Koughil, five leagues northeast of Eupatoria, in which the Russian cavalry, commanded by General Korf, were defeated by the French cavalry, under General Allonville. Six guns, twelve ammunition wagons, and a campaign force with all the appurtenances, and one hundred and sixty prisoners, of whom two were officers, were captured, besides two hundred and fifty horses of the Russian Hulans. Fifty of the Russians were killed; among them was Colonel Audeawsky. Of the French force, six were killed and twenty-seven wounded.

The report of an attempt being made to cut off the Russians by sending large reinforcements to Eupatoria has been confirmed; but although there are rumors of Prince Gortschakoff having sustained a disaster, no reliable news has been received.

Yesterday, it was reported, but upon no authority, that the north side of Sebastopol had been evacuated. The impression is general, however, that they are in retreat.

To account for the non-arrival of later advices, it is said that the submarine cable is broken across the Black Sea.

The Czar, on his recent entry into Moscow, issued a manifesto, in which he talks of resistance to the last.

Letters from Kars describes the thorough devastation of the surrounding district by the Russians. The provisions of the garrison could not last longer than the 14th of September, and if reinforcements did not arrive by that time, General Williams would be compelled to submit.

The Russians were themselves hard pressed by the snow, which had already set in, and which, if the garrison could only hold out a little longer, would compel the beseigers to retreat.

Another letter from Kars says Omar Pasha has arrived at Batoum, and was received with great enthusiasm by the half-starved garrison of the place.

The strength of the Corps de Arme, which is represented at 16,000 men of all arms, does not exceed at present 4800 sabres.

The semi-official Correspondenz publishes news from Constantinople to the 27th ult., to the effect that the Russians before Kars, had captured a Turkish convoy of provisions, destined for the garrison, together with one thousand horses and three hundred men.

A brief telegraphic dispatch from Hamburg states, that on the 27th ult., six English vessels appeared before Riga, and bombarded for several hours the batteries of Dunatnunde and the Virrage Douslien.

On the 2d inst., barque Precissa and five other vessels arrived at Elsinore as English prizes.

Dantzic, Friday morning, Oct. 5. The Vulture has arrived. Admiral Dundas was at Seskar in the flag ship.

The equinoctial gales have set in in the Baltic. The fleet is healthy.

France. La Presse says that corn has at length reached its maximum price, and that the high quotations have brought offers of supplies from all quarters. Large arrivals of foreign flour were shortly expected. The very day on which the articles about flour appeared in the Moniteur, a house at Havre sent a large order to New York. The price of Butchers' meat is to be fixed by the authorities by decree every fortnight. Measures are being taken by the authorities of the various departments for the relief of the poorer classes

The Empress is in a poor state of health

Turkey. A dispatch by telegraph, via Vienna, states that Lord Stratford de Redcliff, the able and long-experienced Ambassador near the Sublime Porte, has been recalled at the request of the Sultan, who took great offense at his lordship's energetic remonstrances on the subject of Mehemet Ali's appointment to office.

The London Times of Oct. 6, the latest date, says: "We do not know whether we may rely upon the report that Lord Stratford de Redcliffe has been recalled, and we certainly do not wish to place implicit belief in the accounts of the Ambassador's recent conduct in the affair of Mehemet Ali Pasha.

It is said that he refuses to recognize the appointment; that he sent an attache or dragoman to the Sultan, with remonstrances, and that in a personal interview he addressed the feeble, but not spiritless sovereign with such want of courtesy as to throw him into a nervous fit. These things may be true, or they may be exaggerated statements arising like other mythical narratives from the known character of the actor

If correct to the letter, they would only be a repetition of what has often happened before, for it is well known that in the last resort the British Embassy has always relied on the personal terror of its chief menaces acting on the weak mind of a monarch who has few about him on whom he can rely."

Russia. It is said that the discontent in Poland and the Ukraine has risen to a very serious height. The successive calls for enlistment has also deprived those parts of Russia of young and able-bodied men, as was severely felt during the recent harvest. A government survey has been ordered, to know whether Poland can furnish sufficient corn for the supply of the army during the next campaign. It is thought that the result of this inquiry will greatly influence the decision of the Russian government as to the continuance of the war.

When the disaster of Sebastopol became known to the populace of St. Petersburg, they became dreadfully excited, and meeting the carriage of the Empress in the streets, followed it on its way to the palace with shouts of "vengeance for Sebastopol," "vengeance for Kormiloff," "vengeance for Nachimoff."

A letter from St. Petersburg states that the evening before the Emperor's departure for the south, a grand council was held, at which it was decided to carry on the war with the utmost energy.

The Emperor went from Moscow to Nicolaieff, the great Russian naval depot near the mouth of the river Bug, where, on the 25th, accompanied by the grand Dukes Constantine, Nicholas and Michael, he made an inspection of the troops, fortifications and dock yards. The fortifications, it is stated, are to be greatly strengthened and extended.

Various Russian accounts state that the war is to be carried on with the greatest determination, and that the Crimea is to be defended to the last extremity.

General Mouravieff, now in Asia, will, it is intimated, take the place of Prince Gortschakoff, who is to become Minister of War.

Advices from Moscow state that 193,000 men have been added to the military force of Russia.

A letter from Odessa of the 13th ult., says the Czar was expected there on the 7th inst.

By telegraph we learn that the Czar has left Nicolaieff for the Crimea, his object in proceeding there being, doubtless, to inspirit his forces by his presence, and to turn the tide in favor of Russia

Gortschakoff has issued a hopeful address to his soldiers. He admits the loss of 500 to 1000 men per day for thirty days previous to the close of the siege, but he says, in conclusion, Sebastopol only enchained us to its walls; we are now free, and a new war commences.

We take the following from Prince Gortschakoff's diary of the siege:—

"Aug. 24 (Sept. 5). At 6 A. M. the enemy opened a very violent cannonade and bombardment against the first and second sections of our line or defence; their batteries fired by salvoes. We replied from our works on the right flank of our line of defence by an equally well sustained fire. The fire slackened about 2 P. M., and stopped towards evening. In the 24 hours, according to the observations taken from the telegraph, the enemy fired about 70,000 cannon ball and 16,000 shells.

There was an armistice for a few minutes on Tuesday, to effect an interchange of letters for prisoners.

The Russian officer who conducted it, and who is supposed to have been the commander of the Vladimer, is said to have expressed the same opinion as the Russian admiral did on Monday, the 10th instant—"With this before us," pointing to the ruins of Sebastopol, "peace is further off than ever."

Intended Bombardment of Odessa. The shipments of siege materiel continue at Toulon.—Bombs of very large calibre have been dispatched.

The general belief is, that a bombardment of Odessa is intended.

Suspension of the Order to Destroy Sebastopol. The Times says—Although preparations have been made by the sappers and miners of the allies to complete the destruction of the docks and forts of Sepastopol, no effect has yet been given to these intentions, for, upon a reference to the allied governments, the operations in question were suspended.

The urgent importance of destroying the marine works of Sebastopol would only arise if it were in contemplation to restore the town to the Russians, but we may rather hope the remainder of the war resources will be used for our own advantage, and it will be soon enough to destroy them when the harbor is no longer occupied by the allied fleets.

Russia's Determination to Prosecute the War. A letter from St. Petersburg in the Wanderer of Vienna, says—The evening before the departure of the Emperor, a council was held, at which it was determined to carry on the war with the greatest determination; and the Emperor directed Count Nesselrode to announce this intention to the political agents of Russia in foreign countries. Gortschakoff is to be appointed Minister of War, General Mouravieff is to assume the command of the army in the Crimea, which is to be defended to the last extremity.

Another account says:

It is stated that Austria has for the present renounced the intention of offering her mediation, considering it would be useless to make propositions to Russia in the present temper of that government.

Battle Between the Turks and Russians. The Invalide Russe of the 21st, contains news from the seat of war in Asia, of an affair before Kars on the night of the 3d, in which the Russians were successful. The Turks, it is said, lost 500 men in killed and wounded, above 200 prisoners, and 400 of their horses were captured. The English General, Williams, who commands, was sending the greater portion of his cavalry from the garrison, owing to the difficulty experienced in feeding them, when the Russians fell upon them with the above result. On the 4th, the remainder of the Turkish cavalry, made a show of forcing a passage, but the demonstrations of the Russians compelled them to return to the fortress.

Railway Accident in Russia. A terrible accident occured on the 11th, on the St. Petersburg and Zarskoje Selo Railway. The trains got off the rails near the canal which surrounds the capital, and ran against some locomotive sheds. The shock was such that the first carriage was crushed to pieces; eleven persons were killed on the spot, and forty were more or less injured. Among the latter were the Princess Bariatynska, Princess Soltikoff, Gen Effmovitch, and Prince Alexander Trubetskoi

Poland. Letters from Brody, a town in Austrian Poland, situate close on the Russian frontier, state that the interruption of commerce, and intercourse of all kinds, owing to the want of horses for purposes of communication, is there becoming fearful. The post, which should only be twelve hours in coming from Lemburg, is usually eighteen or twenty. All transit of goods is at an end, and matters of the utmost importance are unknown for many days.

The Papal States—Warlike Preparations in Naples. The Emperor of the French is said to have written a very unpalatable letter to the Holy See, recommending a general amnesty, the secularisation of the administration, the code Napoleon, and a liberal Government. From Naples we learn that King Bomba is making preparations for an invasion, though from what quarter it threatens no one appears to know.—All the ships of war which were lying in the new military port have been, for greater security, drawn into the old military port, which has been closed with a chain. Many pieces of artillery have been sent off from Castlemore, as also chests of ammunition and 24,000 sand-bags, for Brindisi and other points on that coast, which are at present unprotected. Some of the most scientific artillery officers, too, have been destined for Capua and Gaeta. The Commissary of Police has given this explanation to the people, which makes the King very popular with the people: that the allies insisted on having grain and provisions for their own convenience, and that the King, to save his people from starvation, had declared that rather than do so he would suffer any sacrifice whatever, and had therefore prepared for war. The miracle of the liquefaction of the blood of St. Jannarius, announced by the firing of cannon from the castle of St Elmo, has taken place under such auspices that the people are told they will never be visited by the cholera again. Since 1848 up to May, 1854, 839 persons have been condemed to different punishments for political crimes. It is said that in the civil courts bribery is so openly recognized that no advocate would think of undertaking a cause, be it ever so good, without first recommending his client to make a propitiatory offering to the judge.

Great Indian Battle in Minnesota. A correspondent of the St. Paul Democrat, writing from the Lower Sioux Agency, in Minnesota Territory, gives the following account of a battle, near that place, between that party of Missouri half breeds, assisted by some Chippewa Indians, and a band of Yankton Sioux:

It appears that the Sioux were encamped on the open prairie to the amount of eighty lodges, and, as they were on the confines of a hostile country, kept themselves prepared for a sudden attack by sleeping on their arms. They had passed the night, however, in apparent security, although the enemy were almost in their midst, waiting for their favorable hour to strike; that hour when man is supposed to sleep the soundest—the darkest hour of the night—just before day.

The first intimation the Sioux had of their approach was a murderous fire opened upon them by the whole force of the allied enemy, who, upon firing the first volley, retreated and fled to their horses, pursued by the entire band of warriors in the Sioux camp, who kept up a running fire upon them, so hot that only a few of them had time to reach their horses; the rest scattered off in the darkness, leaving in the hands of the Sioux 250 horses and 71 head of cattle.

The Sioux had sixty-three wounded, nineteen of whom have since died. They found three Chippewas and one half breed dead on the ground, and suppose there is a larger number of the enemy wounded than of their own men.

The Sioux of the Plains have sworn vengeance on the half breeds, and every fighting man is reported to be out on the war-path, hovering on the trail by which the half breeds that have lately been paying St. Paul a visit to purchase their winter supplies, have to return to their homes on the North Red river.

The Yanktons are a wild and warlike race, measuring out justice by their own immutable law—death for death; and nothing can now appease the wrath of the Great Sprit but a like number of their enemies' scalps reeking all their belts. The half breeds, as the aggressors, cannot expect mercy, and forgiveness is a word unknown to the Sioux of the Plains.

A Curiosity. Otis Manchester, of this city, exhibited to us yesterday a stalk of wheat of singular appearance and history. It will be remembered that some years since a discovery of some kernels of wheat in the folds of cloth which enveloped an Egyptian Mummy, was made, which must have remained there at least four thousand years. These kernels were brought to this country and planted on Long Island. The specimen here presented is the growth of that ancient seed. The stalk is remarkably large and singularly shaped—being nearly conical. The kernels are almost round, and wholly dissimilar in shape and appearance, to any grain we have seen.—[Utica Herald.

Greece and the Western Powers. The French and English governments have approved of the attitude taken by their ministers relative to the Kalergi affair; and they have added that if the King persists in his determination to dismiss General Kalergi, the two cabinets would require positive guarantees, in anticipation of the fatal and imminent consequences which must attend the accomplishment of that measure. The nature of the "guarantees" required is kept secret, but they are supposed to refer to a reinforcement of the allied troops, and the removal of the Court of the Camarilla.

Russia and Turkey. Among the medals struck during the congress of Verona, in 1822, is one in honor of the Emperor Nicholas. Surrounding the bust is "Emperor of Russia, Verona, Oct. 1822," and on the reverse these significant words, "I should like Constantinople."—[From Notes and Queries.

CONFERENCE IN MAINE.

After mutual consultation in regard to the propriety and utility of a mutual Conference of the Advent Brn. in the central part of Maine, (and from all parts, if they can come,) it is unanimously decided by us to appoint such a meeting to be holden in the Read Meeting House, Richmond, Me., to commence Friday, Nov. 2d, at 10 o'clock A. M., and continue over the Sabbath.

Our object in appointing this meeting, is, to call together that class of brethren who are, or who mean to be engaged unitedly for the advancement of the Gospel of the Kingdom of God, and in co-operating to spread as far as possible, by judicious and Scriptural labors, the news of the immediate coming of our Lord, in glory and in Judgment, that we may by our meeting and conferring one with another, and by the blessing of God, become more active in our labors, harmonious in our teaching, wise in our understandings, childlike in malice, and devoted in our lives, which will make us more effectual in leading our perishing fellow men to Christ while time continues. All who are ready to unite with us in the spirit of Christ, in harmonious worship and united effort for the above object, are earnestly invited to attend this Conference, praying that the wisdom of God may direct us, and His blessing be upon us.

A NEW AND IMPORTANT WORK! The Voice of the Church on the Coming and Kingdom of Christ; or a History of the Doctrine of the Reign of Christ on Earth. By D. T. Taylor. 1 Vol. 12mo. 420 pp.—Price One Dollar.

The present is an eventful hour in earth's history. All things verge towards an awful crisis. Nations are in distress—wise men are perplexed—rulers grasp the sword, and sit uneasily on their thrones—deep thunders mutter in the distence—and the red blaze of battle flashes along the eastern skies. The crisis is at hand. WHAT SHALL SUCCEED IT? Statesmen, sages, poets, philosophers and divines are boasting of to-morrow, and cherishing the expectation of a world's conversion, and ages of millennial peace. But is this taught in the "sure word of prophecy?" We answer, No! A time of predicted peace will come to earth; but the PRINCE OF PEACE MUST COME to bring the day. But has not the church for centuries expected to convert the world? We answer most emphatically, No! The above work is composed mainly of extracts from all the writers of note in the Christian Church for SEVENTEEN HUNDRED YEARS, and shows that during all that period no trace of the common theory of the conversion of the world can be found.

With immense labor the author has collected the testimony of the Church from the earliest periods to the present century. The statement of their faith is presented in their own words. Among the sources are ancient Jewish traditions, the writings of the immediate successors of the apostles, the early fathers, the later writers, the Waldenses, reformers, theologians, and divines. To which are prefixed the traditions of heathen nations and the opinions of modern Jews, making the most perfect history of millennial doctrine ever published, and one which cannot fail to be interesting to every enquirer after truth.

About FOUR HUNDRED of the greatest writers who have ever lived, are here quoted. Brief biographies of EACH are given, rendering the work exceedingly valuable as a book of reference. The following are some of the many writers quoted in the volume:

Origen, Victorinus, Lactantius, Dionysius, Relatives of our Lord, Commodian, Gregory, Sulpicius, Paulinus, Apollinaris, &c. The Nicene Fathers, Eusebius, Cyril, Epiphanius, Ambrose, Chrysostome, Hilary, Jerome—an opposer, Augustine, Testimony of Dr. Lardner, Chillingworth, Russell, Bush, Moshiem, Burton, Neander, Gibbon, Encyclopedias, Newton, Mede, Maitland, Kitto, Milner, Taylor, Whitby, Stewart, Giesler, The Septuagint Chronology, Papal divines, Andreas, Romish Doctors—Joachim Abbas, Anselm, Almeric, Jean Pierre d'Olive, Jewish Rabbis of the middle ages, The Paulikians, Thomas Aquinas, Waldenses, The Noble Lesson, A line of witnesses, Ambrose, Evagrius, Theodoret, Cassidorus, Andreas, Pope Gregory, Serenus, Alcuin, Paulinus, Agobard, Claude, Arnulph, Gonthier, Tergand, Berenger, Bernard, Arnold, Peter De Bruys, Waldenses, Walter Brute and others, Huss, Jerome, Wickliff, Tyndale, Bradford, Piscator, Latimer, Ridley, Sandys, Chytræus, Augsburg Confession, Catechism of the time of Edward Sixth, Becon, Leo Juda, Bullinger, Knox, Perkins, Calvin, Osiander, Flacius, Luther's Expectation of the judgement near—yearnings for its coming, Melancthon, Bale, Foxe, Brightman, Pareus, Mede, Twisse, Usher, Maton, Adams, Goodwin, Reformers, Milton, Janeway, Baxter, Ambrose, Durant, Alleine, Taylor, Watson, Westminsters Assembly Divines, Most of them believed in Christ's personal reign. Rutherford, Farmer, Sterry, Burroughs, Vincent, Hall, Bunyan, Baptists of 1660, Boughton, Beverly, Tillingbast, Prideaux, Jurieu, Charnock, Henry's Golden Thoughts, Burnet, Cressener, Ames, Howe, Mennonites, Cocceius, Davenant, Alstead, Napier, Fleming, Whitby, Henshaw, Woodhouse, Russell, Duffield, Increase Mather, Isaac Newton, Wells, Daubuz, Gill, Bengal, Doddridge, John Wesley, Newcome, Bishop Newton, Lancaster, Watts, Pirie, Hort, Cotton Mather, Whitefield, Benson, C. Wesley, Early Methodists, Hall, Fletcher, Perry, Toplady, Romaine, Cowper, Coke, Scott, Glas, Spaulding, Lowth, Rudd, Hussey, Pope, Dow, Lambert, Heber, Prince, Dr Clarke, and very many others of note.

Read the Following Opinions of the Press.

"Study and research evidences itself in every line of the book. The object of the writer is to show what has been the 'Voice of the Church' for eighteen centuries upon the subject of the Millennium, or the coming of Christ. The first testimony cited is tradionary, and then comes the verbal and written testimony of the ablest and most distinguished theologians and scholars the world has ever known. Though the reader may differ with the writer, yet the book is a choice one for every Biblical student and scholar. It shows that the writer has been unceasing in his labors, and he has brought together, in the compass of a volume, what the reader could not find in many whole libraries. The work is worthy of a place upon every Christian's table, and we bespeak for it a fair and candid perusal, as there are in it the choicest extracts from the rare writings of the very earliest Christian scholars.—[Worcester Journal, May 5th.

"It is a work of remarkable research and patient collection"—[Worcester Spy, May 9th.

"It appears to be a thorough examination of the doctrine—requiring extensive and laborious research, and presents arguments and arranges facts of history with method and precision."—[National Ægis, May 9th.

"A very useful book of reference to those who are disposed to investigate the question of the supposed future reign of Christ on earth. To persons who have no desire to investigate the subject it will yet prove a valuable manual of reference from its brief notices of the authors quoted."—[Rochester Democrat, May 31.

"An impartial and very valuable production; one that was called for and will do much good. We cordially recommend it to the favorable notice of all classes of the community. A dollar will be well laid out for its purchase."—[Prophetic Expositor, Rochester, May 5.

"We recommend this volume to the perusal of both Millenarians and anti-millenarians. The former will see that their doctrine was indisputably the doctrine of the primitive church during its three first and best ages, and that it has been held by a vast succession of great and good men to the present day. The latter will see that their doctrine of a Millennium under the present dispensation still future, is not only in contravention of the faith of the church of the apostles and their successors for three centuries, but came into existence only about one hundred and fifty years ago, and has very few writers of much rank to support it."—[Literary and Theological Journal, New York, July, 1855.

It "meets practical needs in many hearts, and is worthy of being read beyond that peculiar circle of readers known technically as the religious public"—[Worcester Transcript, May 10.

For The Crisis.

Death.

The tyrant death six thousand years
Has filled the world with groans and tears;
The blood of Abel stained the earth,
And gave the cruel monster birth.

Unnumbered millions since that day
Have fallen by his mighty sway!
Oh, who can count the groans and tears
Through many long, successive years?

But God shall bid Death's triumphs cease,
And usher in eternal peace;
The Crimea's gory battle-field
Proclaims God's servants being sealed.

Great Armageddon's day has come,
And soon the saints will be called home;
The blood of millions will arise,
And cry for vengeance to the skies.

Soon, death and hell, Jehovah's ire
Will cast into the lake of fire;
The second death will soon be past,
And Life Eternal come at last.

Earth's unbelievers soon will quake,
When God shall rise, the world to shake,
Then all who have obeyed the truth,
Shall flourish in eternal youth.

Hymn.

O Jesus, our life and our light,
Our shield and exceeding reward,
Thou fount of all holy delight,
Our adorable, infinite Lord.

Enshrined in ineffable bliss,
Enrobed in majestic attire,
Enthroned in the holiest place,
Enwrapt in the love of thy Sire.

'Mid cherub and seraph enshrined,
With the love that all heaven yields thee,
Thou art glorious in beauty divine,
And Angels thy worshipers be!

In obedience they wait for thy nod,
And smile when thy glory they see,
E'en Gabriel, the Angel of God,
Delights to yield homage to thee.

And art thou our Brother and Friend?
Our Savior, our King, and our Lord?
And shall we behold thee again?
And wilt thou to earth be restored?

Long years have thy Church upward gazed,
Long centuries waited for thee,
O when we behold thy dear face,
How blessed that moment will be!

For The Crisis.

"Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord: And he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse."

This prophecy caused doubts in the minds of the Scribes concerning the Messiahshsp of our Savior, because they looked at His first Advent as some do now, that the promised forerunner should be the literal, personal Elijah, when they should have looked for a proclaimer, one who should go forth in the spirit and power of Elijah to prepare the way for the coming of the Just One Then they might have recognized John the Baptist. It may be that those persons are correct who are now looking for the advent of the literal Elijah, prior to that of the Messiah, but it appears to me that the promised messenger is indeed come already. What was to be the mission of Him who should precede the coming of the great and dreadful day? He is to "turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers." Has not the Second Advent of the Messiah been heralded for years past? Has this proclamation fulfilled any part of the mission prophesied? It has certainly turned the hearts of the children to their fathers.—Not only have our intellects been led to examine the writings of the Apostles and Prophets, but the warmest affections of our hearts have been drawn out towards them, so that our brightest dreams of future glory are more or less filled with anticipations of the happiness we shall enjoy in the blessed society of those beloved fathers.

What further is prophesied of this Elijah? He is to "restore all things."

What things have been lost which could possibly be altogether restored before the Advent of the Lord? Surely a correct knowledge of nearly all Scripture truth. How nearly all things concerning the faith are restored, I cannot say; but none of us will pretend to deny that the thing is being fulfilled.

"Lest I come and smite the earth with a curse." If this restoration of the truth had not been effected, what would have been the condition of the religious world by this time, we cannot determine; but it would seem it could not have been otherwise than fitted to receive the fulfilment of this prediction.

What further is to be the character of this messenger? He is to possess the spirit and power of Elijah. What was the spirit of Elijah? Why, when all Israel had gone after Baal, so that even the seven thousand who bowed not to the idol, so effectually concealed their real religion that the Prophet himself could not recognize his brethren, when it was popular and fashionable to worship Baal, and unpopular and even dangerous to confess the true God, then stood forth Elijah, alone and unfriended, an acknowledged worshipper of the God of Israel. He quailed not before the haughty Ahab, but even confronted him with unwelcome tidings of the evil that should come upon the land. How we admire the majesty of his moral heroism, as he stands before the monarch, and utters the daring words: "As the Lord God of Israel liveth, before whom I stand, there shall not be dew nor rain these years, but according to my word." This was his spirit. No cowardice or shame characterized Elijah the Tishbite. And is such a spirit called for now? Is the sword coming upon the land? and are there men who dare to blow the trump of warning, fearless of consequences, unwelcome as they know will be the message to an idolatrous world? We know it is even so.

"The spirit and power of Elijah." In what did his power consist? Not in dreaming of dreams, and seeing of visions, but in exercising all powerful faith in prayer. Let us look at him. "He prayed earnestly that it might not rain, and it rained not for the space of three years and six month; he prayed that it might rain, and it rained." Again; "He cried unto the Lord, and said, O Lord, my God, I pray thee, let this child's soul come into him again. And the Lord heard the voice of Elijah: and the soul of the child came into him again, and he revived."

Again, "Elijah the prophet came near and said, "Lord God of Abraham, Isaac, and of Israel, let it be known this day that thou art God in Israel, and that I am thy servant, and that I have done all these things at thy word. Hear me, O Lord, hear me, that this people may know that thou art the Lord God, and that thou hast turned their heart back again. Then the fire of the Lord fell, and consumed the burnt sacrifice, and the wood, and the stones, and the dust, and licked up the water that was in the trench." This was "the power of Elijah." Has there been any thing of the kind since this message first went forth? I confess not, on so grand a scale. Still there have been astonishing instances of the power of prayer, as most of the Brn. can testify.

There is still another striking feature in the history of Elijah. He was destined to be translated without seeing death: and in this instance was certainly a type of those faithful who "are alive and remain to the coming of the Lord." Also Elijah's going up was a subject of ridicule to the world, and as is shown by the children's words in mocking Elisha. Then is not this the Elijah who was to come? The Church, at the present time, it is true, seems more in the condition of Elijah under the juniper tree praying to die: faith weak, nearly exhausted. Hark ye, my Brn., have we shut our mouths of late, or commenced softening the message with perhaps, and may be so, that things go on smoothly between us and the world, and our former persecutors are now so smiling and bland. Is it so? O I pray the Lord God of Elijah, that a double portion of his spirit may rest upon the entire Church; that our faith may be increased tenfold; and though disappointed at Gilgal we may go on to Bethel; though disappointed at Bethel, we may stagger not at the promises, but cheerfully pass on to Jericho; though disappointed at Jericho, we may still count Him faithful who has promised and boldly push on to Jordan; though at Jordan, and the deep waters seem to intercept our further progress, let us not halt in our journey, but firmly grasping the mantle of mighty faith, step firmly down the brink. No danger but the dark tide will divide hither and thither before us, while we look to God for strength; and with our feet on shore again, let us not sink down with fatigue and discouragement. What though we are wearied with wielding the heavy mantle? What though we had expected that surely the heavenly convoy would have met us long ere this; O do not, lest we peril our eternal all, do not let us sit down and go to sleep here; for surely, it is but a little, a very little way beyond the deep waters where the joyous cry is heard, "My father, my father, the chariot of Israel, and the horsemen thereof."

FINE PREACHING. Conversation about the talents of preachers, and the beauty of sermons, gives delight to many who rather wish to hear about Christ than to live unto Him, and to have a good seat under the sound of the Gospel, than to be enjoying the power of it.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Br. M. Grant.

EAST BOSTON, Oct. 18th, 1855.

Br. Merriam:—Allow me to speak a word concerning the goodness and mercy of our blessed Savior. He is still favoring us with His smiles in this city, and cheering our hearts with hopes of better days, and warming them with love for Himself, and each other.

Two happy souls were buried with Christ in baptism, last Lord's day and rose to walk in newness of life, rejoicing in hope of the coming kingdom.

Others are inquiring the way to the land of promise, and already feel comforted by the view that faith presents to their astonished vision.

Our congregations are gradually increasing in numbers and interest; prayer meetings, which are held four evenings in a week, are well attended; and the tide of feeling is swelling in favor of holiness of heart and life, with entire consecration to God. I am fully satisfied, there is nothing needed more at the present time among us as a people, than the practical part of Christianity. There is no lack of theory, but a sad deficiency in interest for the welfare of our neighbors, parents, children, brothers and sisters, husbands and wives. Many of them are out of Christ, and yet we are comparatively indifferent about them, and thus practically say, the Christian religion is not worth recommending.

We show by our activity in worldly matters, that we think the things of this world of more consequence, than of the one to come; and at the same time profess to believe that the great day of the Lord is to come within a very brief period of time.

"What meanest thou, O sleeper."—Says the Savior, "Take heed lest coming suddenly He find you sleeping."

These are truly, "perilous times."

My Brn. and Srs., gird on the armor, for there is great danger that we come too late, saying; "Lord, Lord open to us."

When our friends come to Boston, we hope to see them at the FREE CHAPEL, corner of Lowell and Causeway sts., where we have social meetings every Tuesday and Friday evenings, and preaching every Lord's day.

Selected For The Crisis.

The duty of Christians in relation to The Impenitent.

They are to labor for their conversion, with personal effort, and by constant example; because God works by means and instruments, and ordinarily He blesses and aids most freely, through the power of His Spirit, those means which are employed with most fidelity. Above all they are to pray for their conversion; because, by the appointment of God, such prayer is the antecedent of spiritual blessings; and only in the bestowment of those unseen blessings, involving everything that is best and most precious in the experience of the soul, can His children obtain their wished-for end.

They are to labor and pray, in deep humility; knowing that of themselves they can do nothing; that their efficiency is all of God; that only within the heavenly armory are found those tempered blades and falchions, and those celestial shafts and shields, which arrest all attack, and smite through all the armor of sin, piercing the harness between its joints! But still they are to labor and pray, in patience and with hope; unwearied and unfainting, not doubting of the issue; knowing that in due time they shall reap if they faint not, shall conquer if they pause not; that God is faithful, and will fulfil His every promise; and that, their weakness being strengthened upon His might, and their ignorance being enlightened by His infinite knowledge, and their feeble endeavors being advanced by Him and crowned with that success which He alone and He forever is capable of giving, although they go forth weeping bearing the precious seed, they shall return with shouting bringing their golden sheaves! Though they are nowise able of themselves to arrest the unbelieving and arouse the careless, to turn the wicked from his sin and the infidel from his error, though God alone hath that vast power, by sending down His Spirit upon the heart, to break the grasp of that depravity which binds and locks it, "heavy as frost, and deep almost as life," yet He has power, and will surely exert it; oftentimes in modes, by agencies the most unexpected by us; giving success to the humblest agency, hearing the prayer which is briefest in utterance, and leading the soul when it seems most rebellious to turn from its iniquity and live for Him!

Oh, then, let all Christians labor in hope, with joy, with thanks to God that He allows them the privilege. For though it be true that except a man be born again—except he be renewed in the essential spirit and temper of his mind—except he become a little child in Jesus Christ, and give up all his pride and folly, and turn from all his worldliness and sin, he cannot see the kingdom of God—it is true also that he may be thus humbled, in answer to our effort, in answer to our prayer!—And it is true that as thus humbled and changed, and brought to sit at Jesus' feet, he shall see, in full vision, the uncreated Glory of God! shall see it in this world, in some imperfect expressions of its fulness; shall see it in the future, when standing face to face before the Throne, in all its splendors! Surrounded by all the worshipping spirits of the Just, encircled by the angelic assemblies, reigning and still submitting, triumphing in obedience, a King and priest forever unto God, he shall know that unspeakable ecstacy, and share that great inheritance of the saints; shall join his voice, once loaded with curses, but now rising in psalms, with that uncounted and innumerable multitude whose jubilant shouting is as the voice of many nations and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying, "Alleluia, for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth!"

For such an end, who would not labor! To fit an intelligent mind for such destinies, what sacrifice is too vast! And yet how often are ministers languid, in preaching and in effort; and Christians dull and dumb before men; and even parents themselves believers, neglectful or timorous in their teaching of their children!—The most fit and powerful weapons of God we hesitate to use! The noblest end, conceivable by man, draws forth no adequate labor or care!

Our Children.

From the sheets of the forthcoming Memoir of Dr. Justin Edwards, we select a passage spoken by him on a public occasion, near the rock of Plymouth, in 1824.

"The wisdom that is from beneath says, Give to children no religious instruction; and exert upon them no moral influence in favor of the Gospel, lest they receive an improper bias; let them alone to choose for themselves, and when they come to years of understanding they will choose right.

But the wisdom that is from above saith, 'Train up a child in the way he should go.' 'Teach these things diligently to thy children, when thou sittest in the house, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up.' "Suffer little children to come unto me." 'Train them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.'

"In yonder distant country was a little feeble band inspired with love to Christ, who covenanted to educate their children for him. Not able to do it according to his word and the dictates of their consciences in their own land, they escape under the cover of night, with their little ones, to a foreign clime. But their children still exposed, they embark upon the ocean with no protector but their covenant God. And though the very elements seem to join with earth and hell to oppose them, borne in his arms, I see them approaching, till they enter yonder haven, and stand upon a rock. And though winter and famine and pestilence attack them, and cut down half their numbers, around them I see the arms of the everlasting covenant, within them the Shekinah, and hear a voice saying, 'Leave your fatherless children, and let your widows trust in me.' 'I will never leave nor forsake thee;' and 'they that seek the Lord shall not want any good thing.' They hearken, and lo, they 'break forth on the right hand, and extend themselves on the left;' 'a little one becomes a thousand, and a small one a strong nation.' They spread from sea to sea, and 'He is a God to them, and their children after them, from generation to generation;' 'keeping covenant and mercy to thousands of them that love him, and obey His commandments.'"

THE BOY WITH A SHORT MEMORY. A good deacon, returning from Church one Sabbath afternoon, was accosted by a man:—

"Sir, did you see a boy on the road driving a cart with a bag of cotton in it?"

"I think I did," said the deacon, musingly. "A boy with a short memory wasn't he?"

The man looked confused, and said, "Why do you think he had a short memory, sir?"

The deacon seemed to enjoy his confusion, and even determined to increase it.

"I think so; and I think, moreover, that he must belong to a family that have short memories."

"What in the world makes you say that?" said the man more than ever perplexed.

"Why, simply this," said the old gentleman, assuming all of a sudden a very grave and solemn manner: because God Almighty has proclaimed from Mount Sinai, in a most solemn manner, among other things, Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy;" and that boy has forgotten all about it. His memory must be very short indeed—very."

What must I do to be Saved?—You must believe on Christ as the only and all-sufficient Savior. Do you ask what it is to believe on him? It is to have such confidence in him, as to receive all that he has said as true, and to treat it as true, to act upon it as true. In other words, you must seek salvation as the gospel directs, by repenting, by believing, by obeying. By repenting—by breaking off, at once, from all sin, whether outward or secret, in the heart or in the life, because it is offensive to God, and ruinous to yourous to yourself; for this is repentance.—By believing—by giving yourself and all that you have to Christ, trusting to him, and to him only, for all that you need for time and eternity; for this is faith. By obeying—by engaging sincerely, and uniformly, in whatever you know to be duty, for the sake of glorifying God, and doing good; for this is obedience. This you must be willing to do—this you must begin at once—this you must continue for ever, taking God's word as your rule of action, in dependence on God's Spirit for strength, and in reliance on God's grace for acceptance and final salvation. Do this, and though your sins are as scarlet, they shall be white as snow; though they are red like crimson, they shall be as wool.—Come thus unto Christ, and he will in no wise cast you out. Guilty and polluted though you may be, his blood shall cleanse you from all sin.

Christian Kindness.

If we are to do good to all as we have opportunity, we must abound in kind words. In this rough world, so full of hardships, trials, and difficulties, Christians should abound in the grace of kindness. "Oh, (says some one,) kind words are cheap." So they are; and so is the light of heaven, and a cup of cold water; yet these are among the most precious gifts of God. Passing along the streets a few days ago, we saw a little child who had tripped his foot and fallen down. He was crying over his distress. We lifted him up, instinctively saying, "Poor little fellow!" These little words of sympathy were very cheap, but they brushed away his tears, and spread sunshine over his face again.

The poorest on earth can say a kind word to a struggling brother or sister; and who can tell the good that may be done by a single kind word? It may cheer an inquiring sinner—it may send a faint believer on his way rejoicing.

DEPLORABLE. We cut the following from the Boston Traveller:—

The Congregational Churches in Vermont contained in 1836, a total of 21,385 members, while in 1855 there are only 17,705. And from this latter, must be deducted 2,734 reported as non-resident, leaving but 14,971. All parts of the State suffer though variously. The loss of members for that period is, in Windham County, 27.5 per cent; Windsor County, 35 per cent; Orange County, 12,5 per cent; Rutland County, 21 per cent.—Some Churches have become extinct, many greatly enfeebled, e. g. The Church in Hubbardton, Rutland County, in 1836, had 92 members. Since that time 83 have been dismissed by letter, and the Church now consists of but 19 members Nor is this diminution in Vermont confined to Congregationalists. Methodists and Baptists suffer in about the same proportion. Episcopalians are very scarce in the State, and Unitarians more so—only four or five congregations in the State.—Out of 195 Congregational Churches, more than 50 are aided by the Home Missionary Society, and this number is increasing yearly.

FAITH. "Faith, (says Jeremy Taylor,) is a certain image of eternity. All things are present to it Things past and things to come are all so before the eyes of faith, that he in whose eye that candle is enkindled, beholds heaven as present, and sees how blessed a thing it is to die in God's favor, and to be chimed to the grave with the music of a good conscience. Faith converses with the angels, and antedates the hymns of glory: every man that hath this grace, is as certain that there are glories for him, if he perseveres in duty, as if he had heard and sung the blessed thanksgiving song for the blessed sentence of doomsday."

Selected for The Crisis.

REPENTANCE. There are two kinds of repentance: one is that of Judas, the other that of Peter; the one is "ice broken, the other ice melted." Repentance unto life, will be repentance in the life.

WHAT IS IT TO BELIEVE ON CHRIST?

It is to believe that He is the only Savior; that there is no salvation in any other; "no other name under heaven, given among men, whereby we must be saved." Acts 4: 12.

It is to feel your need of Him; that you are guilty, and need forgiveness; sinful, and need to be made holy; under condemnation, and need to be pardoned; lost, and need to be saved.

It is to believe that He is able and willing to save you, and to save you now.—He is able—almighty—"able to save to the uttermost them that come unto God by Him;" Heb. 7: 25; willing; "not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance;" 2 Pet. 3: 9; ready to save you now; "for now is the accepted time, and now is the day of salvation." 2 Cor. 6: 2.

It is, to cast yourself at once, and without reserve, on His mercy, trusting in Him alone for salvation, renouncing self-righteousness and self-dependence, all idea of meriting salvation by any thing you can do, and relying on what Christ has done; to give yourself up to Him, just as you are, to be accepted, forgiven, purified, directed, and saved; to take Him for your prophet to teach, your priest to atone, your king to rule over and in you, and your example to be imitated in all your feelings, and conduct. Do this, and you will be a believer in Christ; and He shall be your refuge, your portion, your Savior, all your salvation, and all your desire.

"Prostrate I'll lie before His throne,
And there my guilt confess,
I'll tell Him I'm a wretch undone,
Without His sovereign grace.

I can but perish if I go;
I am resolved to try,
For if I stay away, I know
I must forever die

HOW TO LOOK YOUNG. An aged person being asked how he had managed to retain his youthful appearance so well as he had done, said, "I never ride when I can walk; I never eat more than one dish at dinner; and never get drunk. My walking keeps my blood in circulation; my simple diet prevents indigestion; and never touching ardent spirits, my liver never fears being eaten up alive." But he forgot to add one of the greatest causes of all-lasting youth: viz. "a kind, unenvious, contented heart." Envy and discontent can dig as deeply into the human face, as Time itself!

CHILDREN AND PARENTS. "Let all children remember," says Dr. Dwight, "if ever they are weary of laboring for their parents, that Christ labored for his; if impatient of their commands, that Christ cheerfully obeyed; if reluctant to provide for their parents, that Christ forgot himself and provided for his mother amid the agonies of the crucifixion. The affectionate language of this divine example to every child is, 'Go thou and do likewise.'"

CHILDREN OF THE PIOUS. In a town in Massachusetts, the children above a certain age being divided into three classes, it was found that of those whose parents were both pious, two-thirds had professed religion; of those, only one of whose parents was pious, only one-third; and of those, neither of whose parents were pious, only one-tenth, and several of these became pious when away from home.

☞ Signs of progress in the dissolution of all things earthly.

The following unparalleled circumstance shewing the distraction existing in the political world we cut from a late paper.

"There are thirty-six distinct parties in New York with all sorts of strange and whimsical names adopted apparently more out of ridicule than characteristic of political principles."

The Bible its own Evidence.—When Dr. Duff read to the intelligent Hindoo youth for the first time the precept of the Savior, "I say unto you, love your enemies; bless them that curse you;" one of them could not restrain himself from speaking out his feelings: "O how beautiful!" For days and weeks he could not cease repeating, "'Love your enemies! Bless them that curse you.' How beautiful! Surely this must be the truth."

APPROPRIATE TO ALL. "It is distrust of God, (says Bishop Patrick,) to be troubled about what is to come; impatience against God, to be troubled with what is present; anger at God, to be troubled for what is past."

OLD AND YOUNG. "A young beginner in Christianity may say what HE will do, but an old Christian will say what CHRIST will do."

GOOD TEMPER. Good temper is like a sunny day, it sheds a brightness on every thing.

For The Crisis.

Exposition of the 12th, 13th and 17th Chapters of Revelation.

BY DR. A. DECKER.

To the Brn. scattered abroad:—The following exposition of prophecy has been written through many trials and family afflictions; and in addition to this, my inexperience in writing on such subjects; it will consequently be found with many repetitions, &c., but if through all these obstacles, I shall have succeeded in throwing any additional light on the prophecies under consideration, my object will be accomplished, and to God the fountain of all wisdom, be the glory.

There is, probably, no part of prophecy that has been less understood, and more perplexing to the student of prophecy, than the 13th ch. of Rev., relating to the two-horned beast and image. This perplexity has been, I think we shall see as we proceed, from not understanding the symbols here used, and also the preceding prophecy relating to the Dragon and leopard beast.* Hence, it will be necessary to commence our investigations with the 12th ch., and so proceed along, step by step, until we shall arrive at the end; carefully observing the arrangement of the prophecy, and the true nature and import of the symbols. We have in this, and the following ch., three symbolic beasts brought to view, succeeding each other very much like the four beasts of Dan. 7th ch., which symbolize three grand divisions of the Roman Empire.—Nearly all the symbols in the book of Rev. are, as it were, borrowed from other portions of the Bible, and to which we must refer for their history, in order to understand their true application and use.—Hence, the "Great Dragon" that "was cast out, that old Serpent called the Devil and Satan, which deceived the whole world," refers back to the garden of Eden, where the serpent (the old serpent that has always been called the Devil and Satan,) first practised his deceptions on the woman by telling her a lie, and making her infidel respecting the Word of God. We here learn the character of the serpent, and of his deceptions; that he is directly opposed to God's word, and the best interests of man, and deceives by his lying, and contradicting God's word, and turning the world into infidelity.—Therefore, if the Dragon is used as a symbol, it must always symbolize an infidel or pagan government—like Egypt (see Ezek. 29: 3,) and Rome. Jezebel, the wife of king Ahab, (1 Kings 6: 31,) is made a symbol in Rev. 2: 20 of the Church of Rome.

As the Church of Rome apostatized, and seduced the people of God, to worship and eat things sacrificed to idols, and put to death the saints; so was she fitly symbolized by Jezebel, who seduced Ahab and the children of Israel to worship Baal, and eat things sacrificed to idols; and who slew the Prophets. "The Lamb" also, that was slain on the passover day, is here used as a symbol of Christ. See Rev. 5: 6, 8, 12, 13; and 6: 1, 16; and 7: 9–17, &c. Hence, "the beast that ascends out of the earth," is represented as having two horns like a lamb, i. e., like Christ—professionally, and to all appearance, followers of Christ. Many have inferred that, the two horns of this beast, symbolized Republicanism or Republican Government: but nothing, I conceive, is farther from the truth. Where, in all the Bible, is a lamb used to symbolize a Republican government? The onely safety for us, in making an application of these symbols is, to be governed by the law as furnished in the Bible, and thus let the Bible be its own interpreter. Christ, is the only one symbolized by a lamb in the Bible. Hence, if the two horns, or ruling powers of this beast are like a lamb, they must, to all appearance, be followers of Christ. "But he spake like the Dragon." (Murdock.) Inference is right, when it is legitimate; but to infer that the speaking like the Dragon, is speaking with great power and authority, is not in accordance with the law of this symbol. We have already seen, that the language of the Dragon is infidelity; and that he accomplishes his work, not by speaking with power and authority, but by deceiving lying, contradicting the word of God—saying, "thou shalt not surely die." Certainly, if speaking with authority and power, is the characteristic of the Dragon speaking; then the Leopard beast spake like the Dragon also. But, while one exercised all the power of the other, (Rev. 13: 12) yet, there is a very great difference in their language or speaking, as every one knows that is acquainted with the history of Pagan and Papal Rome.—We, therefore, learn from this law of symbols, that the language of the nation symbolized by the two horned beast, is Paganism—infidelity, which will enable us to distinguish it from all other nations, as certainly, as we can distinguish the French, from the English, by their language. Also, the two "horns like a lamb," and a beast that speaks like a Dragon, is an anomaly; and shows, that while the nation itself is infidel, the two imperial families, or houses, that reign over the nation—like the Medes and Persians, symbolized by the ram with two horns, are professionally Christians. The Mede and Persian nation, was symbolized by the ram, while the two lineages of kings, which reigned alternately, each having an equal right to the throne, were symbolized by the two horns; so it must be with the nation that is symbolized by the two horned beast. The beast must symbolize the nation, while the two horns symbolize the two imperial families, or houses, that reign over it alternately, each having an equal right to the throne.

In Rev. 20 ch., is found the antitype of the battle of Gog and Magog, prophesied of by Ezekiel, 38th and 39th chapters, and fulfilled in the seven years' war of the Jews with the Syrians under Antiochus; (Jos. Ant. 1: 12, and 8: 17, and the 1st and 2d, Maccabees,) and which very fitly typifies the battle of the great day of God. That, like as God's presence and power was manifested for the deliverance of His people, and the overthrow of the armies of Gog and Magog, that were then gathered about Jerusalem; and which not only threatened it, but the whole Jewish nation with destruction; so, when the "Dragon shall be loosed out of his prison, and shall have deceived and caused the nations that are in the four quarters of the earth" to rise up in infidelity, and completely hem in and surround the people of God and the Church, and thus destroy and cut off their power and influence, or in other words, bringing about the antitype of the days of Noah, God will again deliver His people and destroy their enemies by reigning the fire of destruction upon them.* Many, by their extreme literalism, have run into great errors in their interpretations of this book. One general principle, however, must guide us throughout in our study and application of its symbols. And upon the same principle that the leopard beast trod the holy City under foot, must the Dragon compass it around. In neither case, are the saints, or the city, required to be altogether in the same camp, or, to occupy any particular locality on the earth. But wherever they are, they will be compassed about by infidelity and their power and influence cut off. Paul's language is very similar. Heb. 12: 1 "Wherefore, seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses," &c.

Those who are in favor of understanding the Dragon of this book literally, should be consistent and in harmony with some general law of interpretation. Thus if the Dragon is literal, his mouth must be a literal mouth, and also, the waters which he casts out of his mouth like a flood, and the woman, whom he would cause to be carried away of the flood.—Moreover, the same principle would compel us to understand the "leopard beast" to be a literal beast; since the Dragon gave him his power, and his seat, and great authority. Rev. 13: 2. Certainly, a transfer of power, seat, and authority must prove both beasts either literal or symbolical. Moreover, in ch. 16: 13, we are informed that under the pouring out of the sixth vial, "three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the Dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet," which should be sufficient to convince any one, that if the beast is a symbol, the Dragon must be also.

I think all must be satisfied by this time, in regard to the law by which we must be governed in our investigation and application of these symbolic prophecies. We might carry our investigations, to develop and illustrate this principle much further, by noticing the several other symbols that occur in this book. But I deem it unnecessary, since all must see that the same general principle pertains to the whole.—Before we can proceed safely in this application of symbolic prophecy, we must become thoroughly acquainted with the nature and import of the symbols used, and have something more than mere inference to go upon.

Having now established the rule by which we are to be guided—by letting the Scriptures be their own interpreter, we are now prepared to make the application of history to prophecy. The Dragon, then, in this book, is the symbol of the kingdom or empire which must be infidel or pagan. And as three of the four kingdoms that Daniel prophesied of, had already passed away, and John lived in the glory of the fourth (Roman) and last kingdom prior to the setting up of the kingdom of God, therefore the Dragon must represent some part of the Roman empire—that part which answers to the nature of the symbol.

And as the Dragon is the first beast presented in the prophecy, (Rev. 12: 3,) and these beasts succeed each other in power and dominion, (see ch. 13: 2, 7, 8, 12,) for but one beast at a time can exercise this universal power in the same empire, therefore the Dragon symbolizes the Roman Empire from its rise up to the time that the Dragon is succeeded, and the Roman empire symbolized by the "Leopard beast."

Rev. 12: 3, "And there appeared another wonder in Heaven; and behold a great red Dragon, having seven heads and ten horns, and seven crowns upon his heads" The crowns upon the heads of the Dragon, show clearly, that it is a symbol of an imperial government. John does not see the Dragon rise up out of the sea, for the reason that the Roman Empire had thus arisen prior to his day.—Daniel saw the fourth beast rise up out of the sea, having ten horns, and another little horn, (Dan. 7: 3, 7,) which represents the whole Roman kingdom—all that is embraced in the three beasts of Rev. ch. 12 and 13. We, therefore, understand, that while there is a general harmony in the prophecies of Daniel and John, in regard to the fourth beast, yet the symbols differ widely; and the prophetic history of John, is much more in detail, than that of Daniel, which has generally been much the best understood, inasmuch as general outlines are easier to understand, than details; consequently the foundation of all chronological calculations. But it is very evident, that before we can arrive at any very certain calculations on definite time, we must understand the prophecies in detail; therefore, the necessity of understanding the Revelation of John.

Rome became the fourth kingdom, after conquering Macedonia and Greece, (Robins' outline of History p. 99, and Taylor's Manual of Ancient Hist. p. 153,) one of the four divisions of the Macedonian empire, symbolized by the Leopard beast of Dan. 7 ch. and the He Goat of ch. 8.

After conquering Macedonia and Greece Rome extended her conquests "towards the south, (Egypt,) and towards the east, (Syria,) and towards the pleasant land," (Palestine,) and thus obtained universal dominion; so that in the days of Augustus Cæsar, all the world paid taxes to Rome, (Luke 2: 1.) Down to A. D. 64, the Church was very little persecuted by the Romans; but at that time the Church had grown so rapidly as to excite the suspicion and jealousy of the government, for their pagan and idolatrous worship; and Nero commenced a most severe and dreadful persecution and slaughter of the saints, which continued in more or less severity, until the conversion of Constantine in the beginning of the 4th century, commonly known as "the ten persecutions;" during which, some three millions of Christians lost their lives. In this we see the fulfilment of v. 4th.

"And his tail* drew the third part of the stars of heaven, and it cast them to the earth."

V. 7. "And there was war in heaven; Michael and his angels fought against the Dragon; and the Dragon fought and his angels; and prevailed not, neither was their place found any more in heaven."—Michael and his angels here, must be regarded as symbols of Christ and His ministers—His ministers being His warriors or angels. Commencing with this 7th v., we have the history of some particulars merely alluded to in passing over the same ground in the preceding part of the chapter; since this must all have its fulfilment prior to the Woman's flying into the wilderness, (see vs. 6, 13, 14.) This war had its beginning with the commencement of the Gospel, after the "confirming of the covenant with many for one week" had ceased. When the Apostles made their first direct attack on the idolatrous worship of the Romans, Michael and his angels, the Apostles and Ministers of Christ made a bold and vigorous attack on the Dragon first, not by carnal weapons; for the weapons of our warfare, says Paul, (2d Cor. 10: 4) are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds. (Eph. 6, 11, 12.) "Put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the Devil; for we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against wicked spirits (Marg.) in high places." Paul here sets forth the commencement of this war upon the Dragon, in a very clear light, too plain to be mistaken.

The Apostles, Ministers and leading men in the Church carried on this war so vigorously, "not loving their lives unto the death," (v. 11) that at length, the whole Roman Empire took up arms against them, of a carnal character. The war, at first, was of a spiritual character on both sides; the Apostles opposing and overthrowing the Philosophers and Pagan priests, with the doctrines of Christ. But in A. D, 64, (Mosheims Church History Vol. 1 p. 30) as before alluded to, the Emperor of Rome, became so alarmed and enraged at the rapid growth of the Church, and the fierce and successful war that was being waged by its Apostles and Ministers, not only on the religion of Rome, but also all the different shapes and forms under which superstition appeared in the various countries where they exercised their ministry, that he (Nero) commenced a furious war on all the propagators of the new doctrine, which continued for about two hundred and fifty years with great slaughter and bloodshed. At the close of this period, Michael and his angels obtained the victory and the great Dragon (v. 9) was cast out, that old serpent, called the Devil and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world. He was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him.

V. 11. "And they overcame him by the blood of the Lamb, and the word of their testimony."

"The word of their testimony." This shows that the Apostles and Ministers of Christ, are the Angels of Michael.

Constantine—Emperor of Rome, espoused the Christian religion in the beginning of the fourth century, which, with his influence and edicts, and those of his successors, together with renewed energy of the ministry, thus encouraged, the Dragon or idolatrous power of Rome, was cast down as early as about the middle of this (4th) century. (See Millman's Gibbon's Rome, Vol. 3. p. 131.) The Roman idolatrous institutions, had, until this time, been upheld by the laws of the government; and the war had been carried on by the Emperor and rulers, instigated by the Pagan Priests, &c., on the one side, and on the other, by the Apostles, Bishops, and Ministers, and leading men in the Church; which latter, on this account, were the greatest sufferers from their adversaries, as the following extract from Mosheims Church history will illustrate. "Diocletian, by an edict, ordered all the Bishops and Ministers of the Christian Church to be thrown into prison. Nor did his inhuman violence end here; for a third edict was soon issued, by which it was ordered, that all sorts of torments should be employed, and the most insupportable punishments invented, to force these venerable captives to renounce their profession, by sacrificing to their heathen gods; for it was hoped that, if the Bishops and Doctors of the Church could be brought to yield, their respective flocks would be easily induced to follow their example. An immense number of persons, illustriously distinguished by their piety and learning, became the victims of this cruel stratagem through the whole Roman Empire."

After the Pagan worship had ceased to be upheld and enforced by the imperial edicts and laws, and Constantine had espoused the cause of the persecuted Bishops and Ministers, and by his edicts, and those of his successors, had forbidden the worship of the Roman idol gods, there was an universal confidence felt by the ministry of the immediate triumphant success of the Gospel in the evangelization of the world.

V. 10. "And I heard a loud voice saying in heaven"—Nothing could be more natural and certain after such a victory over so dire a foe, that had carried on such a persecution—horrible beyond all description on account of the millions put to death in the most inhuman manner possible, than acclamations of praise to God through whose divine assistance they had been enabled to endure their sufferings, and overcome their adversaries! Also, such a victory could have no other effect than to inspire them with the full belief that God had taken up in their defence, and since all obstacles to the free spread of the Gospel were now taken out of the way, and those wicked Pontiffs, Priests, &c., who hunted them day and night, to "accuse them before" (in the presence of) God to their rulers, to obtain their destruction, were now "cast down"—deprived of power to persecute them before magistrates—and of their idols, temples, and sacrifices, and forbidden public assemblies for such purposes, they were inspired with the faith that the whole world would now be brought under the hallowed influences of the Gospel. But in this, they were doomed to meet with a very great disappointment, as will be seen by further investigation.

V. 12. "Therefore, rejoice, ye heavens." You who have just obtained so signal a victory over your enemies.—"Woe to the inhabitants of the earth and the sea, for the devil has come down unto you"—you who have had less to do and to suffer, and have been in the least danger during the past conflict.

As has before been remarked, this war has been carried on mainly, by the rulers, instigated by the Roman Pontiffs, Priests, and Philosophers on the one side: and the Apostles, Bishops, and Ministers on the other. But now a different state of things ensues. Instead of the Roman worship being enforced by the imperial laws, the Emperors have now turned against it, and in favor of the Christian religion. And thus the former have nothing left, only to vent their malice, and direct their persecutions against the Church generally—"the Woman"—for "when the Dragon saw that he was cast out into the earth, he persecuted the woman."—v. 13.

V 12. "Having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time." The victory that had been obtained over the idolatrous power, was sufficient to convince him that his time was short; and to excite in him the greatest indignation and wrath, and to do his utmost to persecute, corrupt and overthrow the Church. Nor was he unsuccessful; for here commenced her "falling away." The Pagans, notwithstanding they were thus cast down, and their temples shut up, and forbidden all public assemblies for the purpose of worship, still "were indulged, (says Gibbon, vol. 3, p. 153,) with most licentious freedom of speech and writing; the historical and philosophic remains of Eunopius, Zosinus, and the fanatic teachers of the school of Plato, betray the most furious animosity, and contain the sharpest invectives against the sentiments and conduct of their victorious adversaries."

Hieracles, the great ornament of the Platonic school, wrote, in the beginning of this century, two books against the Christians, in which he went so far as to draw a parallel between Jesus Christ and Apollonius Tyanaeus. Himerius and Libanius, in their public harangues, and Eunapius, in his lives of the Philosophers, exhausted all their rage and bitterness in their efforts to defame the Christian religion, while the calumnies that abounded in the discourses of the one, and the writings of the other, past unpunished.—Mosheim's Church History, Vol. 1 p. 103.

To the wrath of the Dragon, and his persecutions of the Woman (Church) after he was cast down from his high and lofty position, history abundantly attests. Under the reign of Julian, after the death of Constantine and Constantius, the Pagans persecuted the Church with the greatest vehemence, and for a while, seemed to threaten her with entire destruction. But, after the death of Julian, under the reign of the succeeding Emperors,* Valentinian 1st, Valens, Gratian, Valentinian 2d, Honorius and Theodosius the great, who promoted the Christian religion, the Church again revived, and rapidly extended her influence which had the effect to enrage the idolators the more, and cause them to lay every stratagem, and seek every opportunity, by which, they might effect the destruction of the Christian Church, (the Woman.) On the breaking up of the Empire, by the incursions of the "Goths, Franks, Vandals, Huns, and other fierce and warlike nations, for the most part strangers to Christianity," a very favorable opportunity was afforded the Dragon, to more successfully persecute the Woman, (Church) and cast out of his mouth water—peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues, (Rev. 17: 15) as a flood after the Woman, that he might cause her to be carried away of the flood."

* By turning to Gen. 3: 1, it will be seen that the serpent is one of the beasts of the field.

* The fact that the battle of Gog and Magog is here used symbolically, is sufficient evidence that Ezek. 38th and 39th chs. has been fulfilled.

* "Boa—the Dragon of antiquity, (says Mr. Taylor, see Religious Encyclopedia, word Dragon,) was a serpent of prodigious size, whose mode of warfare was to stand erect, and beat to death with its tail, whatever came within its grasp, and its most conspicuous color was red." The Apocalyptic Dragon strikes vehemently with his tail, in which particulars it perfectly agrees with the Boa.

* We should be careful in the investigation of this Prophecy, not to make the Dragon symbolize the lineage of Kings or Emperors. A beast always symbolizes a nation; and if the Kings or Emperors are symbolized, it is by a horn or horns on the beast. (See Dan. 8: 3-7, 20, 21; Rev. 13: 11.) Therefore, as the Pagan religion was the religion of the Romans, so long as that institution existed, it would represent the Roman nation, and the nation would be symbolized by the Dragon—the nation being represented through its idolatrous institutions, in the Prophecy.

LOWELL, NOV. 3, 1855.

☞ I intended to have written an article this week on the subject of the present war; but was prevented by the labors of the Office which are much increased by the fact that my clerk has left, and our funds are hardly sufficient to warrant the constant employment of a clerk. If we had a few hundreds more added to our list of paying subscribers, the financial affairs of the Office would be unembarrassed.

☞ We have received some excellent articles in answer to our appeal to correspondents, for which we are under much obligation, and hope the same favors will be continued. And while we thank those who have thus promptly responded to our call for communications, we would remind those who have not, that there is still room for more articles, and that we hope to receive them.

For The Crisis.

Letter from Sr. M. C. Webster.

CONCORD, N. H., Oct. 22d, 1855.

Dear Br. Merriam:—On looking over the pages of the Crisis, latterly, I have been led to make this inquiry: Where are many of those dear Brn. and Srs. who have formerly written such spirited and heart cheering letters for the paper?—Have the disappointments and trials of the past caused them to become disheartened, and lay down their pens? I hope this is not the case. But if so, may the time speedily arrive, when the glorious light of Zion shall again shine upon their pathway with such brilliancy and glory that they may feel constrained to speak or write, that they may be refreshed. Were it in my power to describe the blessings that I as an individual have been permitted to receive in perusing the well written, experimental, and practical communications from the pens of my Brn. and Srs., I feel assured that some of them at least, would at once resume their correspondence for the Crisis. I have often felt while reading and feasting, (especially when a resident at the South,) to shout aloud, and praise God for the well furnished table that seemed to be spread before me. I felt an assurance that what my Brn. and Srs. wrote, came from the heart; for the most tender fibres of my own heart were often touched when reading their epistles. Language fails me to describe the blessings which I have been permitted to receive through the medium of the Crisis. Many of those Brn. and Srs. whose faces I have never seen in the flesh, have been made near and dear to me by the ties of Christian union which have been formed in connection with their writings. I now feel that were I to meet many of them, I should greet them as those with whom I had enjoyed an intimate acquaintance.—Praise the Lord—I trust we have been made nigh by the blood of Christ.

Come, my dear Brn. and Srs., will you not suffer one who has been permitted to share such rich blessings through your former endeavors, to ask, Will you not once more take up your pens, and let us know of your estate, and how you do, through the Crisis? Why may we not give and receive a word of exhortation, admonition and comfort through this medium?

I know our worthy Editor would be under the necessity of exercising a good degree of patience, should some of us who are the feeble and unlearned portion of the flock, attempt thus to do. But if we may judge from the spirit of his writings, he is well furnished with the Christian graces, one of which is patience, which would enable him, at least, to exercise all due forbearance; and then again, should we be found taking unwarrantable ground, I trust his Christian candor would prompt him to reprove us in the spirit of meekness, which would be to us an excellent oil; and then we would at once forbear. Shall we not make the experiment?

Why will not many more of the true shepherds and principals of the flock adopt this method of feeding the sheep and lambs, many of whom are scattered in this dark and cloudy day, and have not the privilege of hearing the Gospel preached? Come, ye Ministers of Christ, ye servants of the Most High, who really have in your hearts the "thus saith the Lord, and thus it is written;" why will you not once more take up your pens, and give some word of comfort and consolation to the weeping saints, through the medium of the Crisis? The injunction of the Savior still remains to be observed; "Feed my sheep, feed my lambs."

The time in which we are living is indeed a time of peculiar trial. We need all the aid and assistance which we can obtain, to endure the same. I believe many have been purified, made white, and are now enduring the trial spoken of in connection with the end. If there ever was a time which would try our christian graces, the present is one.—Here we ought each to examine ourselves, whether we be in the faith, also to prove our own selves. If we now have oil in our vessels with our lamps, I verily believe that our lights will brightly shine, so that the world will take knowledge of us, that we have been with Jesus. If we can now be permitted to ascertain, after a rigid and through investigation and examination of ourselves, that we have the root of the matter in us, that we are serving God from principle, that love prompts us to action, we may truly hope to abide the day of the Lord's coming and stand when He appeareth.

The pure and undefiled religion of Jesus Christ, enjoyed in the heart, and practised in the life, will only prepare us to meet the Lord in peace. We may be sound in theory, but if wanting in practice, we shall fail of salvation in the end. I believe the Lord will have a people when He comes, ready, waiting and looking.—To such, He will "appear the second time, without sin unto salvation."

That we have been right in looking for and proclaiming the coming of the Lord near, is a settled fact in my own mind.—That He is soon coming is still fastened in my heart, as a nail in a sure place.—The trial of my faith has served to confirm me in the hope of the Gospel. If ever I saw beauty and glory connected with the Lord's second Advent, it has been recently. Never, since I embraced the Advent faith, did I more firmly believe than now, that God, the living God, is with His people who are really looking for and expecting Him, according to His word.

I know, my dear Brn. and Srs., that we are living in a day when false theories and poisonous influences are disseminated broadcast in the land; but notwithstanding this, the Lord has a people standing on His plain, unadulterated truth. Such will stand, when the advocates of error will fall. May the Lord help us, one and all, to search and see on what our feet are planted in this day of mighty shaking and tossing to and fro. If we have not a hope that is really like an anchor sure and steadfast, entering into that within the vail where Jesus, our Forerunner, for us hath entered, our little bark will be dashed in pieces now. The tempest is truly raging—the mighty tide is foaming; but glory, glory to God—the Christian's Hope like an anchor strong holds the vessel fast.—"Let the winds blow high, let the winds blow low, still she's making for the harbor, hallelujah."

Oh! my dear Brn. and Srs., bear with me, while I praise the Lord that our Hope is still a blessed one. It has not failed us. Jesus and His coming are still our theme. We have only been disappointed in the time of realizing its full fruition. Our hope is safe if we trust in the Lord. It has entered into that within the vail where Jesus, our great High Priest now sits enthroned in light. It will not let go until He, even Jesus, shall come out of the holy place as King to bless His waiting people. A substitute we can never take. We must see that very same Jesus that was taken up from the Mount called Olivet, for ourselves, and not another, or we must still look. For as said the Psalmist, "As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness: I shall be satisfied, when I awake with thy likeness." How beautifully does the language of the Apostle John, harmonize with that of the Psalmist. "Beloved, now are we the sons of God; and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when He shall appear, we shall be like Him; for we shall see Him as He is."

Beloved Brn. and Srs., this Hope is ours, if we are Christ's. If we truly have this Hope in us, we shall strive to purify ourselves even as He, (Christ) is pure.—If we are pure in heart, we shall see God. If we are peacemakers, we shall be called the children of God. If children, then heirs; heirs of God, joint heirs with Christ according to His blessed word, we shall also be glorified with Him when He comes. Wherefore, beloved, seeing that we look for such things, may the Lord enable us to be diligent that we may be found of Him in peace, without spot, and blameless. MIRIAM C. WEBSTER.

THE CHOLERA AT LAGUAYRA AND CARACCAS. We learn by a passenger who arrived here in the barque "Thomas Dallet," that the cholera was raging fearfully in Laguara and Caraccas, the number of the deaths averaging fifty per day. Out of a population of eight thousand, not less than eight hundred had already died.—This terrible scourge had extended to within six miles of Puero Cabello, and the inhabitants of the surrounding country were in a sad state of excitement. The deaths were mostly confined to the lower classes, and they died off like rotten sheep. Business generally, was almost at a stand. There was no disease among the shipping. [Phila. Pennsylvanian.

For The Crisis.

"The Feast of First-fruits, and of Pentecost."

BY SR. A. BURNHAM.

As it was the will of God, that His people should dwell alone, and be divided from all nations of the world by a wall of partition, till the Messiah should come to pull it down; so, besides a great number of other peculiarities, they must not plough, nor sow, nor reap, in the same manner as other people. The rites with which they began and finished their harvest are not unworthy of a particular notice.

Besides the charitable regulation they observed, in not making a clean riddance of the corners of their field, nor gathering any gleanings, nor returning to fetch a forgotten sheaf (for these were the perquisites of the poor stranger, the fatherless, and the widow:) they were commanded to begin their harvest with offering to the Lord a sheaf of the first fruits, and to end it in a holy convocation and an offering of two loaves, with other solemnities.

The beginning of harvest in the holy land, was on the morrow after the feast of the passover, when they presented their first fruits unto the Lord, not only for the whole congregation, but, as it would seem, for every particular family. The form of words to be pronounced upon this occasion by him that offered the first fruits, is expressly recorded in the Jewish law; (Deut. 26: 3, 5. "I profess this day, that I am come into the country which the Lord sware unto our fathers for to give us. A Syrian ready to perish was my father," &c.) and the wise king of Israel enforces the obedience of this religious precept with the assurance of the heavenly benediction; "Honor the Lord with thy substance, and with the first fruits of thine increase, so shall thy barns be filled with plenty, and thy presses shall burst out with new wine." (Prov. 3: 9, 10.) They were forbid to taste themselves the produce of the year, whether bread, parched corn, or green ears, till they had brought the appointed offering to their God, as an acknowledgment of His dominion, and expression of their gratitude. It seems to have been a significant ceremony, intended to revive that law of nature, that the all-bounteous Giver should be honored with our first and best. And truly, the observance of this rule is not only enjoined everywhere in the Mosaic ritual, but may be traced as high as the offering of the first martyr, who brought unto the Lord of the firstlings of his flock; whereas no such thing was observed of the first murderer, to whose offering the Lord had no respect. Besides, when He who crowned the year with His goodness, required a sheaf to be given Him, it might impress upon their minds such momentous truths as these, that we can give nothing to God, but what we first receive from God; that what we present unto God, cannot be profitable unto Him; and that what He requires, is nothing to what He bestows. What is a single sheaf to all the treasures of the harvest? Would he not be a foolish Israelite, who would have regarded his puny sheaf as an equivalent or price that deserved at God's hands the rich productions of the year? Nor is it less absurd for any to imagine, that their most useful actions can deserve the gift of eternal life, that joyful harvest of light that is sown for the righteous, and of gladness that is sown for the upright in heart.

The end of harvest was upon the fiftieth day after it began. This day was solemnized with a religious assembling, and with abstaining from servile work.—The husbandman had seen the fruits of his ground brought to maturity, and testified his gratitude by the sheaf which he offered with holy rites, upon the first day; and now he offers, upon the fiftieth day, two large loaves of fine flour baken with leaven, which are also called the first fruits unto the Lord, (Lev. 23: 17,) and were a thankoffering, as well as the sheaf, to that good God who had reserved for them the appointed weeks of the harvest. On the beginning of Pentecost, they offered with the sheaf a lamb without blemish for a burnt-offering; but now their gratitude must rise in proportion to the favors they receive, and not one lamb, but seven lambs, one young bullock, and two rams, must smoke upon God's altar.

We are informed by the historian of the New Testament, that this fiftieth day coincided with the most remarkable event of the descent of the Holy Ghost upon the first founders of Christianity.

"And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place. And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them.—And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance." Acts, 11: 1–4.

By inspecting the history of the Israelites' march from Egypt, it will also be found, that upon this very day the law was given at Mount Sinai. The conjunction of these two grand events on the last day of the Pentecost, seems not without some special intention in the Holy Ghost. Fifty days after the deliverance from Egypt, was the killing letter, or the fiery law given; and fifty days after the resurrection of Christ, our better deliverance, was the quickening Spirit dispensed, to write the law, not on hard tables of stone, but on the fleshly tables of the heart, and to qualify the Apostles to begin a new harvest, far more important than was now happily finished; a harvest, not of corn, but of men, to be reaped by putting the sickle of the word of God into the field of the world.

Such were the sacred rites with which the Jews began and finished their harvest; and, in the language of the New Testament, whatever thing is the beginning, pledge and earnest of more of the same kind, is styled first fruit. So the first fruits of Achaia, 1 Cor. 16: 15, denote the earliest converts to the Christian faith in that part of the world; and those benign graces and consolations of the Holy Ghost that are the earnest of the eternal inheritance, are denominated the first fruits of the Spirit. Rom. 8: 23. But we shall chiefly observe the application of this epithet to Christ, and to believers.

"Christ," says the inspired Apostle, "is risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept." 1 Cor. 15: 20.

May we not hence affirm, that as the harvest is a natural emblem of the end of the world, and general resurrection, so the Jewish first fruits did represent the resurrection of the Son of God. The bodies of the saints, when deposited in the grave, may be compared to that seed which the husbandman commits to the furrows of the field. One would imagine that the grain once buried beneath the sod, would never more emerge from under it. But constant experience assures us that by the combined influences of vernal showers and sunshine, it will burst the confinement of the furrow, and reward the laborer's toil with copious fruit. So, at the destined hour, the sleeping dust of saints shall "revive as the corn;" the earth shall cast forth her dead, and shall no more cover her slain; and what was sown in dishonor shall be raised in glory. The resurrection of Jesus Christ advances further still, and evidently proves the certainty of our bodies arising from the dust. This joyful event not only proclaims in loudest accents, that the dry bones can live, if it is the pleasure of God to send forth His quickening Spirit, but asserts, in the strongest manner, that "He will revive us, He will raise us up, and we shall live in His sight." Hosea 6: 2. Were the first fruits reaped before the rest of the harvest? So Christ, the first fruits, was first raised from the grave, and afterwards they that are Christ's at His coming.—Were the first fruits a pledge and earnest to the Israelites, that the whole harvest should be reaped in due time? The resurrection of Jesus Christ insures the resurrection of all His people at the appointed season. So runs the joyful declaration in the Prophet, "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise: awake and sing, ye that dwell in the dust." Isa. 26: 19.

But as the first fruits are an emblem of Jesus Christ, they no less represent the faithful and the redeemed from among men. "Israel, (says a prophet,) was holiness to the Lord, and the first fruits of his increase." Jer. 2: 3. And an Apostle affirms, that "of his own will we are begotten by the word of truth, that we should be a kind of first fruits of his creatures." James 1: 18. Let us see the resemblance. The first fruits were the inalienable property of the God of Israel, with which it had been sacrilege to intermeddle. Even so, the redeemed are the portion of the Lord; they are not their own, and all who devour them shall offend. The first fruits were given by God to the priests, as a part of their maintenance.

This puts us in mind of that saying of our High Priest, "Thine they were, and thou gavest them me." John 17: 6.—The first fruits were but a small part of the harvest. This may denote the paucity of saints, who, in comparison of the multitude, are like an handful of corn in the earth. But, lastly, as the first fruits did sanctify and bless the whole crop, and in their use were better than the rest, even so the people of God, though few and small, are the excellent of the earth, and a blessing in the midst of the land, however much they may be undervalued by worldly man.

For The Crisis.

Letter from Br. H. L. Hastings.

PEACE DALE, R. I.

Br. Merriam:—I receive, frequently, letters that I think might interest others, and at least, might do them good. Here is an extract from one from a preacher in Canada, dated Oct. 11th.

"Dear Br. Hastings:—Although a stranger to you personally, yet I hope the reason of my addressing you at this time, will be a sufficient excuse.

Having noticed in one of the pamphlets published by you, that you would send any or all of the tracts there noticed to the poor, without money or without price, I thought I would write to you, and request you to send me some, if you would. But perhaps I had better let you know what are my circumstances.

Last June, before leaving my last field of labor, I disposed of nearly all I had, in order to pay my debts, (contracted by sickness, &c.,) horse and carriage, furniture, books, &c., (and these were not sufficient,) that I might come 'West' unembarrassed. I had thought of going further; perhaps to Ill., but my funds not proving sufficient, I have settled in this place for the present. The country is new—the inhabitants are very poor, &c., yet I must say for the time I have been with them, I am getting along well. They often say, 'these things are quite new to us, yet he reads it out of the Bible, and therefore it must be true. But how different from what we have heard before!'

Now, I do not know what your circumstances are, but I would say that if you can send me some tracts and pamphlets, I shall receive them with thankfulness; and any books, old or new, that would enlighten the mind on the study of Prophecy and other kindred subjects, that you could spare, would be received with gratitude. Were it in my power to purchase, I would; but I cannot, not having a dollar in the world; and since the first of Sept. last, I have received but 25 cents. But the poor must have the Gospel preached to them, and I have thought that much of the money that is spent in holding Conferences in the East, among Brn. who are well established in the faith, is lost; whereas, if an able Minister of the New Testament were sent out through Canada West, he could do much good; but he must come free, he must be a Pauline preacher. Perhaps I am trespassing on your time; if you can comply with my request, you will oblige your Br. in Christ, waiting for immortality till He comes.

Yours, ——— ———

. There—that is a specimen of letters I receive. What shall I do? I have no capital or salary, and have had to borrow money to pay for tracts and books. I sent that Br. $10 worth of tracts. One Br. gave me one dollar towards the bundle. I cannot resist such calls, and they come very often. There are many such places. Just think, that Br. paid in postage on his letter to me two fifths of all the money he had received for preaching in six weeks! Preachers, how would you like to preach at that rate? And I presume this is no solitary case. Now I shall furnish such Brn. tracts as long as I can get money to print a tract. And if there are any others who may see this letter and who wish for them, just send me word. I have some on hand now. I shall practice economy and self denial—shall do without tea, and coffee, and tobacco, and my wife can wear the old clothes, and get along without the ribbons and gewgaws of fashion, and I shall try thus to scatter the light; and if God does not open a way for me to pay for tracts and books, &c., otherwise, I shall probably have a loud call to go to tent making, or some other honest occupation, by and by. And if any think because the Lord did not come as soon as they expected, and because they are not certain that He will come within a specified time, that they have a right now to hoard up every cent they can grasp, I would say to such, I don't want any of your help in the work, any way. To those who, when they get on the altar stay there, and who, when they are consecrated wholly, stay so, I would say, Work while the day lasts!—The night cometh wherein no work can be done.

H. L. HASTINGS.

PEACE DALE, R. I.

Tracts.

I want to say a few words with relation to Tracts. I suppose it is pretty well understood that I have been largely engaged in issuing tracts for some time past. Some of them are thought to be worth reading, for several of them have been republished in various papers; some once, some twice, and some three times, which shows that Editors thought them worth reading any way.

One, "A voice of Warning from the four winds," another "The Three Worlds," have just been republished in the Crisis. Persons say to me sometimes, this or that is a "most excellent tract"—Now then why in the name of common sense don't you make some effort to scatter them? Leave off some of your fine ribbons and new bonnets, your fine coats and costly garments, let alone some of your luxuries—leave your tea and coffee and tobacco; your filthy snuff and cigars; and use your wasting means to advance the truth of God. And it might not do any hurt to spend in God's cause some cash that is hoarded up, and so when another proclamation of the Lord's coming is heard, men wont be under the necessity of working so hard to sell their property and get it out of their hands because the Lord is so near. Is the coming of the Lord in reality any more distant than it was last year? Have men got to slumber and sleep again till the trump of God wakes them? May God help us to go to work! The Lord cometh! are we ready? H. L. HASTINGS,

"The Voice of The Church on the Reign of Christ on earth. By D. T. Taylor.

A work of over 400 pages, containing the best arrangement and classification of testimony on this subject ever laid before the public. If the Church could only hear the echo of her own voice, she would certainly feel herself in danger and in indifference on an important matter.—The writer may surely feel that no apology is due for breaking in upon the eazy slumbers of the Church with this volume. The Voice may be strange; but it is the voice of the Church notwithstanding. It may be stern and rugged—it may seem like the voice of those who mock—but it is truly the voice of the Church. We really wish the light here beaming forth to the world might be blazoned in large capitals in the sky, that all men might see and believe that the popular doctrine of the entire conversion of the world is of modern origin. We would be glad to have this work find its way especially into the hands of all ministers of the Gospel of Christ, if not into the hands of every lay member. For then the alarm would be given which would waken the Church from a condition of peace and safety, when sudden destruction is so near.—Those who desire a flood of testimony on this subject, can get it by sending for this work to "H. L. Hastings, Peace Dale, Rhode Island."

Price of the "Voice of the Church," $1,00—postage 18 cts. $9, per dozen.—Tracts to sell and to give to the POOR and the STINGY.

Address, H. L. HASTINGS.

PARTICULAR NOTICE.

☞ Br. Merriam:—This is to request you to make known in the Crisis, that our brother Charles L. Page, of Holderness, N. H. intends to remove with his family into one of our Northwestern States, to spend the fall and winter in preaching the Advent of our Lord; and if circumstances permit, to make a permanent location, until the consummation of our hope. We, the undersigned, of Sandwich and Moultonborough, believers in the faith of the coming of our Lord at hand, do recommend our Br. Page to the kind attention and notice of Brn. and others in the West, as an upright, faithful minister and servant of Christ, against whom, from his childhood, no unworthy motives or improper conduct, to our knowledge, have ever been imputed; and we have full reason to believe that in the town of his nativity, where he has lived until now, his integrity is undoubted.

We hope our Brn. in the West will receive him in true Christian fellowship, and that through his preaching many may be brought into the fold of the great Shepherd and Bishop of our souls.

Correction.

In my communication, published in the Crisis last week, near its close, some understood me to say, that at present there were no signs of God's coming. Nothing could have been farther from my intention. Perhaps it would have been better if it had read thus:—"Declaring the fathers have fallen asleep, and at present there are no signs of God's coming;" and in the 14th line from the paragraph commencing thus:—"But I cannot, I will not censure a Br. or Sr., &c., it should have read:—"We cannot see everything in a moment," instead of "be everything in a moment." For The Crisis.

The criptural view of Death.

BY R. W.

"Now if we be dead with Christ, we believe that we shall also live with him. Knowing that Christ, being raised from the dead, dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him. For in that he died, he died unto sin once: but in that he liveth, he liveth unto God. Likewise reckon ye yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord." Rom. 6: 8–11.
"For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God." Col. 3: 3.

We have been taught that there are various kinds of death—as, temporal, spiritual, eternal, &c. The Scriptures present to us one idea of death, and that is loss of life. It is generally supposed, I believe, that the Apostle in the above texts is describing the moral condition and experience of believers—they are dead to sin, dead to the world, &c., but is this the correct view of what we should learn from these Scriptures? It will be observed that Christ is set forth as our example—"he died unto sin once." But Christ did not cease from sin, because He knew no sin. 2 Cor. 5: 21. "In him is no sin." 1 John 3: 5. "He did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth." 1 Pet. 2: 22.

"He became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross;" Phil 2: 8, and descended into the lower parts of the earth." Eph. 4: 9. Hence Christ, in that He died unto sin once, suffered the loss of His life—He died for our sins, and was buried according to the Scriptures." 1 Cor. 15: 3, 4. "Likewise reckon ye yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin." How? As Christ died for sin, so we reckon ourselves dead—subject to death "because of sin." Rom. 8: 10. "But in that he liveth, he liveth unto God." "God raised him from the dead." Acts 3: 15. Likewise reckon ye yourselves to be "alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord:" "being reconciled to God by the death of His Son; much more being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life." Rom. 5: 10. Because He lives we shall live also. This is the reckoning of faith.

The text, Col. 3: 3, declares the believer is dead, has lost his life, and being dead, his life is hid with Christ in God. Hence, it is perfectly evident that whatever life is lost, that is the life which is hid with Christ. When we lived in sin, we had envyings, strifes, hatred, malice, contentions, wrath, and such like; these are the works of the flesh, the evidences of the life of sin. Of course the true believer is dead to these sinful affections and lusts, because he does not any longer live in them, but we cannot for a moment suppose that this is the life which Christ our Life-giver has in His sacred keeping, to be restored to those who have lost it, at His appearing. We are dead, mortal, because we partake of the mortal nature of our father Adam: and again, "death has passed upon all men; for that all have sinned." "The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."

Selected For The Crisis.

A Lesson of Love.

A beautiful child, whose innocent face
Betokened the workings of inward grace,
Sat reading a book, and her matchless eyes
Shone brighter far than the star-lit skies;
And pleasant thoughts in her breast would dwell
As the waves of peace in her soul would swell.

Still on she read, till at last she took
Her beaming eyes from the sacred book;
Saying—"Dear mother, this volume I hold
Contains a gem of more value than gold;
That gem is this, (let us all by it live,)
To be forgiven, we all must forgive.

For see, dear mother, this sacred page,
Unscathed by the ruthless hands of age,
Contains a record of Him who said—
'The righteous never shall want for bread;'
Who said—'Forgive thy offending brother,'
'And bear with the faults of one another.'"

And the light of love shone from her eye,
Like rainbow tints on a summer's sky,
As she placed on her knee that holy Book,
Requesting her mother to come and look
At the mine where this precious gem is found
Where pearls of wisdom are strown around;
Which bids us remember, as long as we live,
"To be forgiven, we all must forgive."

The child drew close to its mother's breast,
And the holy book on her knee did rest;
Saying—Dear mother, if any offend,
We're taught to hold them still as a friend,
And if they repeat it seventy times seven,
We still must forgive, or ne'er see heaven.

And O! may I, in my walk through life,
Be it blessed by peace or embittered by strife,
Be the path that I tread all sunny and gay,
Whether roses or thorns I meet on my way,
May I wear this gem in my inmost heart,
May it form of my body and soul a part;
May I remember, as long as I live,
'To be forgiven, we all must forgive.'"

Fight with Pirates in the China Seas. The Overland (China) Mail publishes a lengthy account of a desperate encounter with pirates near Kulan, by American and English sailors. The pirates had cut off several lorchas and junks from the convoy of the steamer Eaglet, but displayed such a formidable and determined front that Capt Caldwell was unable to rescue them, and applied to Capt Fellows, of Her Majesty's ship Rattler, for assistance. Upon reconnoitering the pirates, they were found to be too strong for them, and Capt Fellows thereupon returned to Hong Kong and invited the co-operation of the United States steamer Powhattan, which was cheerfully contributed. It was determined that the Rattler, with three boats and a hundred officers and men of the American steam frigate, should form the expedition, First Lieutenant Pegram and Lieut Jones of the marines of the Powhattan accompanying it.

Thus arranged the expedition sailed for Kulan, and attacked the piratical fleet, with their prizes, some thirty-six sail in all, who were anchored in a narrow strait. They formed a dense mass, the larger and heavier junks bringing up the rear. The attack was made by the English and Americans with great bravery and effect, although the pirates fought with the fury of despair. The pirate chief was killed and his vessel taken. On board his junk were found one hundred kegs of powder and other warlike stores Lieutenants Pegram and Rolando, with the launches of the Powhattan, swept the decks of two of the largest junks with volleys of musketry, and then boarded them and drove their crews overboard at the point of the bayonet, the pirates fighting desperately. Another junk, which was boarded, was blown up (by the pirates, probably) with a tremendous explosion, and the men and officers blown into the water, three of the men were killed and several frightfully scorched, one of whom subsequently died. The officers miraculously escaped. This junk had on board a larger amount of treasure, and was defended with great bravery, the Americans being encountered hand to hand, as they gained the deck. The officers employed estimate the number of guns taken at 200, large and small, and the pirates at 1000—500 of whom were killed.

Election Riot in Kansas. A correspondent of the Cleveland (Ohio) Leader writing from Lawrence, K. T., gives a thrilling account of a bloody outrage perpetrated by Missouri ruffians on the occasion of the recent election of a delegate to Congress. The election took place on the first of October, the day appointed by the last Legislature, whose acts and authority the Free State disavow. They accordingly stayed away from the polls, and refrained from voting, resolved to maintain peace and good order, yet never to yield.

The Missourians came over in armed bands, and the motley crowd of voters, composed of Missourians, recently arrived Virginians, and drunken Indians, were addressed by pro-slavery speakers. They went and voted, and "with rifles in their hands, knives in their belts, bottles in their pockets, and whiskey in their bellies they swaggered around the polls, drinking, swearing and shouting in devilish glee and fiendish exultation over their fancied triumph."

As the day advanced, they paraded through the streets, uttering sanguinary threats against the "abolitionists" and "yankees." Mr James Farnum, a citizen of Lawrence, was passing through the streets, and as he passed the hotel one of the Missourians asked him to come in and vote, but he declined, and refused an invitation to drink Being asked his reasons for not voting, he said he did not consider the election legal, at which the crowd burst out into a volley of oaths and imprecations, crying out "Hang him!" "Lynch him!" "Tar and feather him!" &c.

Mr. Farnum attempted to leave, but one of the mob seized hold of him. This man he knocked down, and then fled. The crowd gave chase, but could not overtake him, and one of the desperadoes shot at him with a rifle. The ball pierced his hat, but did not hurt him, but entered a house and killed a child which was playing on the floor

In the meantime another citizen named Thomas Newman, was knocked down and stabbed, and subsequently died. The free State men thereupon armed themselves, and to the number of a hundred, marched down to the hotel, but the Missourians had decamped. They were pursued to the river, however, and one of them shot

Tornado. A tornado passed over Westport Point, yesterday forenoon, at quarter past ten o'clock, doing much damage in that vicinity. We hear that a very large barn, belonging to the widow of the late John Potter, containing 14 tons of hay, a pair of horses, &c., was taken from its foundation and moved about three feet, tearing off in the meantime many of the shingles, ripping up the flooring and otherwise damaging the building A horse which was in the barn at that time, was considerably injured by falling through the floor. In its course it swept down a white oak and several large maple trees. Thence it passed to the barn of Pardon Cornell, totally destroying the same, and scattering the hay in every direction. The tornado passed in an easterly direction, extending over a space of about 60 feet in width, and was accompanied by a powerful rain. A high wind prevailed here during the early part of the day, but we hear of no damage with the exception of a chimney blown down, from a house, corner of Water and Griffin streets.—[New Bedford Mercury, 29th.

THE FIGHT WITH THE CHINESE PIRATES.—We find the following additional particulars of the escape of Lieut. Rolando and his men, of the Powhattan, on the blowing up of the piratical junk which they boarded, in the recent engagement in the China Seas, an account of which we published last week:—

"With much difficulty those of the Powhattan's launches' crew remaining on board succeeded in rescuing nine of their comrades and the Rattler's gig's crew; Captain Fellowes being hauled on board with his head bleeding from contusions by the falling spars. Lieut. Rolando was blown to some height into the air, and narrowly escaped death afterward while swimming to his boat, by the descent of a crowd of spars from the falling stern of the burning, blown up junk. Nine of the Powhattan's crew were taken out of the water, variously wounded. Two were gone altogether, and one of the wounded died next day on board the Eaglet Mr. Wilson, assistant surgeon, lost his sword and box of surgical instruments by the capsizing of the gig. Capt. Fellowes, also, lost his sword and hat."

Earthquake at Honduras—The Yellow Fever. New York, Oct. 27. A correspondent of the Tribune, at Truxillo, Honduras, states that several severe shocks of an earthquake were felt at that place, commencing on the 25th of September. There were twenty-seven distinct shocks within forty hours; every brick and adobe building in the town was more or less injured.

A New State! A new star is likely soon to be added to the American constellation. The Legislature of Michigan has passed an act providing for the formation of the new State or Territory of Superior. Michigan gives part and Wisconsin another part to form the new Commonwealth, which is the seat of the great mineral wealth of the nation.—[Evening Traveller.

The War. Little has occurred at the seat of war beyond that the allies are threatening Perekop, but their advance is checked for a time.

French troops are concentrating on the Danube.

Odessa was expected to be immediately bombarded by the allied fleet before the walls.

The garrison at Kars still holds out.

General Simpson in his last despatch, dated Sebastopol, Sept. 29, says that 9500 men were employed daily in making roads from Balaclava to the camp. Fatigue parties in the town were engaged in getting timber and other materials from the ruins of buildings in order to get shelter for the troops ere bad weather sets in.

The Russian fire from the batteries on the north side caused Gen Simpson some little annoyance, but has not prevented the work being carried on.

By an explosion of a kind of infernal machine, numbers of which have been dug up in various parts of the town and batteries, an officer and nineteen men were wounded.

Gen. Simpson reports a trifling engagement, in which the 10th Hussars and a troop of Chasseurs beat back a detachment of Cossacks near Kertch

A letter from Vienna states that several bankers there give credence to the rumor that Russia is contracting a loan in North America, and that the negotiations are likely concluded.

Marseilles advices of the 10th state that the minister of war was still using every exertion to reinforce the army in the Crimea.

A letter from Sebastopol in the Frankfort Gazette states that the sunken Russian ships can be raised without difficulty, as the Russians closed them in every part but one, and having attached hose to the hulls so that water could be pumped out when required. Letters recommend that divers should be employed to seek for the hose to draw off the water and enable the ships to rise

Generals Pelissier and Simpson, according to the Daily News, have had a meeting with a view to prevent what they consider indiscreet revelations by newspaper correspondence, military and civil.

Gen. Marmora declares in an order of the day that he will severely punish the authors of any letters which may be found by informing the Russians of the movements of the allies to have injured the position of the latter.

Latest. The advance of the allies upon Perekop. A despatch from Prince Gortschakoff, dated 9th, received at St. Petersburg, states that the enemy had advanced from Eupatoria, threatening Perekop; but had retired on meeting the advanced post of the Russian's left flank. Sixteen battalions of the Russians were put into disorder.

Retirement of the Russians. According to the Frankfort Post Zeitung, the body of the Russian army has been withdrawn from the plateau on the north side of Sebastopol towards the heights of the Belbec; only a few thousand men now garrison the northern forts. In the neighborhood of Nicholaieff some 45,000 men are concentrated, 28,000 of whom belong to the newly raised military.

Her Majesty's ships Rodney, Albion, London, Leander and Wasp have received orders to proceed under the command of Admiral Stopford, to the coast of Italy They will begin their mission, it is said, in the Bay of Naples.

A letter from Sebastopol, in the Marseilles Journal, says one of the orders which has been executed by the troops with the greatest pleasure is that of filling up the trenches. It is stated the troops regard their prospects so favorably, that a great number of the soldiers of the class of 1847, who may now quit the service, do not wish to do so.

The allied fleet, which, according to the last news, had sailed on a secret expedition from Sebastopol, anchored off Odessa on the 8th of October. Prince Gortschakoff reports eight ships of the line, twenty-seven steamers, and other vessels No news of the bombardment had been received up to the latest dates, but it was expected immediately. Odessa, since the destruction of the corn ports in the sea of Azoff, has formed the chief if not the sole means of support of the Russian army in the Crimea. The emperor of Russia and suite arrived at Odessa on the 22d, but left again the next day for Nicholaieff to attend a council of war.

The Invalide Russe gives a detailed account of the Russian garrison up to the 8th of September: killed 2684; wounded 6058; contusions 1205; missing 1754, total 11,701.

The same journal states that the Russians lost 1500 men Aug. 10, and 1000 per day up to Sept 5. Thus it would appear that the losses of the garrison for the last three weeks of the siege amounted to 32,200 men, irrespective of disease.

The Danube. According to the Journal de Constantinople, the commander of the Turkish army on the Danube has received instructions to provide rations for 40 or 50,000 French troops who are to arrive at Silistria about the end of October.

A telegraphic despatch from Constantinople states that the Anglo-Turkish contingent has received orders to proceed to Schumla.

In a circular addressed by the Austrian government to its representatives, it is intimated that though Prussia is at liberty to act as mediator between the belligerent powers, the present is not a favorable time for such mediation; that in fact the Western Powers must follow up the advantage gained, and not make peace with Russia when the Russians have been expelled from the Crimea. The manifesto asserts most perfect understanding existed between Austria and France.

War in Asia. Gen. Monrarufen has forwarded to St. Petersburg a report of a successful cavalry engagement, in which the Cossacks, militia and dragoons, commanded by Lieut Gen Korslerski defeated a detachment of 1800 Turkish cavalry, and 1000 Beshi Bazouks; the Turks had about 400 killed. Ali Pasha, the commander who took part in most of the last wars of Turkey was made prisoner; the Turks lost all their guns.

The garrison of Kars still holds out, though reduced to great extremes; part of Omar Pasha's force was advancing from Batoun, to attempt to raise the blockade; the army of Kars now numbers 10,000 men.

The Baltic. The Russians are repairing Sweaborg with the greatest activity, enlarging the barracks and building batteries upon the islands, &c., availed of during the recent bombardment of the allies.

Further accounts, though meagre, of the bombardment of Riga state that the batteries at the north mouth of the Dwina, suffered little, but the battery at Ballen suffered considerably on the 25th Sept. Three frigates anchored at the mouth of the river Sulis, and a boat's crew set fire to ten vessels.

Rear Admiral Penaud, describing the expedition to the Gulf of Bothnia by a French corvette and two English steamers, states that eleven Russian vessels anchored off Burau, a small town on the Finnish coast, were captured, and eight other vessels, making a total tonnage captured of 2500.

FRESHETS, &c., IN ITALY. The accounts received at Rome from the marshes concerning the accidents caused in the country by the inundations and storms, were truly distressing.—Rivers and torrents have overflowed, and many bridges been destroyed. The Metauro, Fesino, Vallato, and Foglio have desolated the surrounding country, destroyed the crops, and swept away houses. The weather on the other hand, was frightfully bad for two days, and in some places showers of hail destroyed the grape crops, the last hope of the farmers.

Denmark. It is announced in one of the London papers that the Danish government has invited all the maritime powers, including the United States, to meet in congress at Copenhagen, to settle the question of the sound dues. Denmark, it is said, proposes the capitalization and redemption of the dues.

Russia. The visit of the Emperor to Odessa is thus chronicled in a letter published in the Ost Deutsche Post of the 29th ultimo: The unexpected arrival, on the morning of the 25th, of the Emperor, accompanied by the Grand Dukes Michael and Nicholas, caused much astonishment to the public. All that is known is that the object of the journey of the Emperor is to secure the preservation of Nicolaieff, the centre of the maritime establishments of Russia in the Black Sea. That town, which twenty-five years ago, was an insignificant place, now has 4,988 houses, and 38,067 inhabitants. Its arsenal contains an enormous quantity of warlike stores, which have been accumulating there for the last ten years. Immediately after the arrival of the Emperor at Nicolaieff, M Volokoff, the engineer at Odessa, was sent for by telegraph, and charged with the construction of five redoubts, which will surround the town, and on which 360 pieces of artillery will be mounted. There are also to be built, under the inspection of the Grand Duke Constantine, who has ordered a great number of workmen from Cronstadt for that purpose, 500 gun-boats, each of them to be mounted with two or four guns of very large range. These guns have already arrived at Nicolaieff from the arsenal at Kiew. The armament of the Vitjus and Tiger, frigates, recently built, has been completed, and the Emperor has expressed his satisfaction at them. The Grand Duke Constantine left on the 27th for Sebastopol. He will, it is said, be accompanied on his return by General Gortschakoff, in order to decide with the Emperor on the plan of campaign. It is reported that the Russian general intends to abandon the north side of Sebastopol, and to take up a strong position between Balaklava and Eupatoria, in order to defend the Crimea.

The following is from a letter, dated Stockholm the 1st inst:

"I am induced again to trouble you with a few lines on Scandinavian policy, as it appears to me that the immense results attained by the fall of Sebastopol in the South point out the absolute necessity of striking some similar blow in the North, if the object of the present war is really and bonafide to secure the independence of Europe. The destruction of the Russian fleet in the Black Sea, and the fall of a fortress so long deemed impregnable, have annihilated in one day the fruits of 70 years' incessant toil, unheard-of sacrifices, and it must be evident to every thinking mind that Muscovite ambition, checked in one direction, will seek some other opening, and where can one so easily be found as in the Baltic, where Russia still possesses a powerful fleet and strongholds fully equal to that which has cost the allies a price almost unparalleled in history? None but the blind partisans of la paix a tout prix will deny that, foiled in the East and in the South, all the energies of that still formidable nation will be turned to that point to which I have so often called the attention of your readers, namely, to the establishment of new Sebastopol on the Atlantic, within an easy sail of the British coast.

Every improvement of modern science is being applied to the Russian navy, under the unceasing superintendence of the Grand Duke Constantine, who long since proposed and is now actually fitting up the larger ships with screw propellers We know that Cronstadt cannot be taken by land, and after seeing what the allied fleets have been able to achieve in two campaigns, we are inclined to believe it would be equally difficult to carry it by sea. Two-thirds of the Baltic shores are under Russian dominion, besides the Aland Archipelago, which extends to within three geographical miles of the Swedish coast, about three days' march from Stockholm, which is quite open on the land side. Near the coast of Norway the Russians have long coveted the bay of Verangen, which never freezes, and which, besides its valuable fisheries, has the inestimable advantage of being within 150 miles of Scotland."

The Magazine under the Redan. The following is an extract of a letter from Sebastopol, professing to show how the Redan escaped being blown up by the Russians, like the other forts: "A sapper, who was exploring the batteries of the Redan just as the Russians were evacuating the town, discovered a rather large cable which he cut in two by a blow of an axe, and then called the attention of the officers to it. On further examination it was found to be a thick metallic wire covered with a coating of gutta percha. This wire led to a very large powder magazine dug under the Redan, and the discovery of which made the boldest tremble, when they thought of the frightful explosion from which they had escaped The wire came from across the town as far as the sea, which crossed to the other shore, from whence the electric spark was to be despatched to set fire to that volcano. It was discovered just at the nick of time, as the last soldiers had not yet evacuated the town when the forts blew up one after the other, filling up the trenches with the ruins The Careening Port, the Flagstaff Battery, the Central Bastion, the forts of the bay, the arsenals, and all the principal edifices crumbled to the ground beneath the combined action of shells, fire, and mines. The Redan and the Malakoff alone remain standing, the former saved by the sapper, as just mentioned, and the latter saved by a shell, which, directed by Providence, had cut the electric wire in two."

Miscellaneous. A letter from Abo says that the bombardment of Sweaborg was heard at Kirdasch, in the government of Vasa, which is 187 English miles distant from the fortress.

The Austrians are, it appears, quitting the frontiers of Wallachia, to take up their winter quarters in the towns in the interior. A letter in the Presse d'Orient states that they have recently received large supplies of munitions of war.

An extraordinary plague of flies has prevailed in Nottinghamshire and other parts of the midland counties for the last few days. The insects are supposed to come from the turnip fields, which at present smell very offensively.

It appears that the bridge between the Nicholas' and Michael's batteries was not constructed on pontoons, but was simply composed of beams and spars lashed together and planked over. It was 3,000 feet long, and 22 feet wide, and was finished only on the 27th of August.

A Russian Colonel of Artillery, named Konstantinoff, has invented a new kind of Congreve rocket, at Revel, and the trial of its effects had proved satisfactory. It flies five-sevenths of a German mile, that is, of five English miles. A great quantity has been distributed there for use against the allies. Revel is still being fortified.

The Opinione of Turin says: "The Austrian government has seized on the property possessed in Lombardy by the religious corporations suppressed in Piedmont. Austria bases her conduct on what the Sardinian government did when Joseph II. abolished the convents and monasteries, without bearing in mind that at that period a bona fide abolition was effected, which is not the case at present. The Sardinian cabinet is discussing the question with Austria on legal grounds."

Public Feeling in St. Petersburg. The St. Petersburg correspondent of the Presse, writing on the 29th ult., says: "Since the whole of the Court quitted our capital, and the principal ministers accompanied the Emperor to Moscow, there has been received here no news respecting events in the Crimea. Complete uncertainty and melancholy sadness prevail; and it is at St. Petersburg especially that the boyardsmost manifest their discontent. Reviews and parades cherished their warlike ardor. These have ceased, and the absence of the high functionaries, civil and military, who have followed the Emperor, leaves the nobles at leasure to consider the difficulty in which Russia has been placed by the war in the East. Hence their discouragement, which manifests itself openly in their words. Moreover, adding to their discontent, certain pamphlets pass more easily from hand to hand, and cherish these melancholy feelings. The discontent, it is impossible to deny, has reached the lowest classes of the population, and the peasants are now seeking to escape the conscription. This is not all. A practice which has been rare in the Russian army is extending itself on a large scale. I mean the desertion of soldiers, which has become so marked that the government has considered it necessary to adopt measures and apply penalties which are quite unusual against those who desert their colors."

The French Journal des Debats seems to regard the account of the movements of the allies in the field as indicative of some progress. The Russians are now menaced on both wings and the centre. It says:

"The Corps d'Armee of Eupatoria constitutes the extreme left of the general system of operations of the allies. This corps menaces the right of the Russians and the centre of their communications with Southern Russia. The Russian army maintains for the present its right at the northern forts of Sebastopol; its centre in the fortifications of the Mackenzie heights, opposite the lower course of the Tchernaya; and its left on the heights above Tchorgoum, which are occupied by the Piedmontese. The Russian left appears at present greatly menaced by the movements of the right wing of the allies in the mountains of Baidar.

Prince Gortschakoff's despatches allude to some combat which had enabled the allies to come down from the mountains and force themselves a passage. It appears distinctly from the Russian despatches that the allies, after extending their operations from the mountains of the Baidar to the valley of the Upper Beldec, had left the Upper Beldec. This last circumstance denotes a marked progress of the allies on the left wing of the Russians to surround them."

India. The Santhal Insurrection. The Bombay Times of March 28th, says that the Santhal insurgents continue to devastate the country, but are now being hemmed in on all sides by English troops, and must speedily yield. The mountain territory near Rajmahal, usually their home, lies nearly parallel to the Ganges, and covers an area of about 2,000 square miles, the peaks rising to an elevation of from 2,000 to 4,000 feet. The Times says that "the people have generally been quiet, industrious and well-behaved, the present being the first time, during the seventy years we have had to deal with them, that they have occasioned us the slightest annoyance." The insurrectionists are scattered in small bands, committing the most atrocious outrages; though whenever they have come in conflict with the regular troops they have been beaten. It has been proposed to remove the whole tribe from their mountains to the fertile plains of Pegu, and set them at work on those neglected fields.

A religious war appears to be raging in Oude between the Mahommedans and Hindoos. Profound tranquility seems to reign throughout the British Burmah

ONE DAY LATER FROM EUROPE.

Consols had improved a shade in London. Austrian finances are reported as in a most precarious condition.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times, writing on October 12, at 6 o'clock in the evening, sends the following by express to London:

News of the doings of the expedition which arrived before Odessa on the 8th, is anxiously expected. 10,000 French soldiers are on board the squadron, and the general belief is that Kinburn and Oczakoff are to be the points attacked.

A report of a popular outbreak in Sicily was prevalent.

Rome was dreadfully afflicted with cholera. At Madrid, also, there were about 60 cases a day, and the civil governor of the capital had died from it.

Russian agents were busily at work in Italy and Switzerland.

Nothing later from the Crimea.

The English gun-boats had left the Baltic, and were under convoy home.

It is said that the Danish Sound Dues question will certainly be settled in an amicable manner.

The attempt to lay the submarine telegraph between the coast of Italy and Algiers had proved a failure, the cable having ruptured in paying out.

A terrific boiler explosion had occurred at the Walker Iron Works, at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, (Eng.), which killed five men and two boys, and inflicted injury on several others.

CONFERENCE IN MAINE.

After mutual consultation in regard to the propriety and utility of a mutual Conference of the Advent Brn. in the central part of Maine, (and from all parts, if they can come,) it is unanimously decided by us to appoint such a meeting to be holden in the Road Meeting House, Richmond, Me., to commence Friday, Nov. 2d, at 10 o'clock A. M., and continue over the Sabbath.

Our object in appointing this meeting, is, to call together that class of brethren who are, or who mean to be engaged unitedly for the advancement of the Gospel of the Kingdom of God, and in co-operating to spread as far as possible, by judicious and Scriptural labors, the news of the immediate coming of our Lord, in glory and in Judgment, that we may by our meeting and conferring one with another, and by the blessing of God, become more active in our labors, harmonious in our teaching, wise in our understandings, childlike in malice, and devoted in our lives, which will make us more effectual in leading our perishing fellow men to Christ while time continues. All who are ready to unite with us in the spirit of Christ, in harmonious worship and united effort for the above object, are earnestly invited to attend this Conference, praying that the wisdom of God may direct us, and His blessing be upon us.

Our Brn. in R., though few, will do all they can to entertain those from abroad, and we have no fears but all will be well provided for.

An Evening Prayer.

I come to Thee to-night,
In my lone closet where no eye can see,
And dare to crave an interview with Thee,
Father of love and light.

Softly the moonbeams shine
On the still branches of the shadowy trees,
While all sweet sounds of evening on the breeze,
Steal through the slumbering vine.

Thou gav'st the calm repose,
That rests on all—the bird, the air, the flower,
The human spirit in its weary hour—
Now at the bright day's close.

'Tis nature's time for prayer;
The silent praises of the glorious sky,
And earth's orisons so profound and high,
To heaven their breathings bear.

With them my soul would bend,
In humble reverence at thy holy throne,
Trusting the merits of Thy Son alone,
Thy sceptre to extend.

If I this day have striven
With Thy blest Spirit, or have bowed the knee
To aught of earth in weak idolatry,
I pray to be forgiven.

If in my heart has been
An unforgiving thought, or word, or look,
Though deep the malice I could scarcely brook,
Wash me from this dark sin.

If I have turned away
From grief or suffering which I might relieve,
Careless the "cup of water" e'en to give,
Forgive me, Lord, I pray.

And teach me how to feel
My sinful wanderings with a deeper smart,
And more of mercy and of grace impart,
My sinfulness to heal.

Father, my soul would be
Pure as the drops of eve's unsullied dew;
And as the stars whose nightly course is true,
So would I be to Thee.

Not for myself alone
Would I these blessings of Thy love implore,
But for each penitent the wide world o'er,
Whom thou hast called thine own.

And for my heart's best friends,
Whose steadfast kindness o'er my painful years,
Has watched to soothe affliction's griefs and tears
My warmest prayer ascends.

Should o'er their path decline
The light of gladness, or of hope, or health,
Be Thou their solace, and their joy and wealth,
As they have long been mine.

And One, O Father! guide
The youthful traveler in the dangerous hour,
Save him from evil and temptation's power,
And keep him near Thy side.

Watch o'er his couch to-night,
And draw him sweetly by the cords of love
To blest communion with Thee, far above
Earth's withering cares and blight.

And now, O, Father! take
The heart I cast with humble faith on Thee,
And cleanse its depths from each impurity,
For my Redeemer's sake.

Epigram of Prayer.

The Monitor, published March 1712-13, by Mr. Tate, (Poet Laureate,) Mr. Smith, and others, contains the following:—

Prayer highest soars when she most prostrate lies,
And when she supplicates, she storms the skies.
Thus to gain heaven may seem an easy task,
For what can be more easy than to ask?
Yet oft we do by sad experience find,
That, clogged with earth, some prayers are left behind,
And some like chaff, blown off by every wind.
To kneel is easy, to pronounce not hard,
Then why are some petitioners debarred?
Hear what an ancient oracle declared;
"Some sing their prayers, and some their prayers say,
He's an Elias, who his prayers can pray."
Reader, remember, when you next repair
To church or closet, this memoir of paryer.

The Day of Judgment.

By B. P. Hildreth.

(Concluded.)

Paul, speaking of Christ the first fruits, and of those that are His at His coming, says, "When this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory; O death, where is thy sting?" Ist Cor. 15: 23, 54, 55.

Says Isaiah, "He will destroy the face of the covering cast over all people, and the vail that is spread over all nations; and he will swallow up death in victory." Isa. 25: 7, 8.

Hosea says, "I will ransom them from the power of the grave; I will redeem them from death. O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy destruction." Hosea 13: 14. When one king conquers another, is he not put under his feet? When the king of Babylon took the king of Judah, and slew his princes and his sons before his eyes, put out the eyes of the king of Judah, carried him to Babylon and immured him in prison till the day of his death, was he not effectually put under his feet before the day of his death?

Yes, but the assertion in that connection that the last enemy that shall be destroyed is death, seems to convey the idea that he must be destroyed, in order to be put under his feet.

I think it is no more than saying, "Death, the last enemy shall finally be destroyed," without any reference to the time when it would be accomplished; and it is evident that Death is disarmed of all his power over God's heritage, at the first resurrection, but not destroyed; for he still seems to hold empire over "the rest of the dead (who) lived not again, till the thousand years were finished;" for his destruction is at the end of that period, and more than this, David says of the wicked, "Death shall feed upon them;" Ps. 49: 14; and it is said of a proud man that he is as death, and cannot be satisfied.

"Forasmuch then, as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, He also himself likewise took part of the same, that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death; that is, the Devil, and deliver them who through fear of death, were all their lifetime subject to bondage" Heb. 2: 14, 15.

"But if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not raised; and if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain." "But (says Paul,) now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits, of them that slept. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order; Christ the first fruits, afterward, they that are Christ's at his coming." Now if the saints are raised and judged at the appearing and Kingdom of Christ, and this is the first resurrection, and at the end of six thousand years from the Creation, it follows that there must be a thousand years distinctly marked, in which the saints will enjoy that salvation or rest which remains to the people of God. It avails nothing to say that Eternal Life will be that Sabbath; for that does not meet the difficulty. A Sabbath is measured, and is a specified period of duration, which cannot be said of eternity; and if God rested the seventh day, and made it a type of the rest of His people, as Paul expressly says, (Heb. 4: 1–9,) it follows that the thousand years of Rev. 20th is that day.

Paul tells us there is such a day, Peter tells us its length, and John sees it in vision, and marks it by the two resurrections; and sees the souls of those who were unmarked by the beast, on thrones, living and reigning; where? With Christ. How long? A thousand years. He affirms that this is the first resurrection.—He then speaks of the blessedness of those who have part in the first resurrection, on whom the second death hath no power; "they shall be priests of God and of Christ and shall reign with Him a thousand years." Who are they who lived not again, till the thousand years were finished? The rest of the dead.—This marks the day (viz.) the loosing of Satan. However men may discard these views, I believe they are in accordance with the whole Bible; at least I find no part of the Scriptures to clash with them. Satan goes out to deceive the nations, which can be no other than "the rest of the dead, who compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved City."—Here is the final Judgment; and Satan is cast into the lake of fire, "where the beast and false prophets are." Death and Hell share the same fate, and, all who are not found written in the Book of life; which closes the inexpressibly awful scenes of the Day of Judgment. But the Dragon is said to have ten uncrowned horns; which he could not have in the time of Constantine; for horns represent kings, or kingdoms; and the empire was not broken, till about one hundred and fifty years after Constantine; so that the Dragon could not have relinquished his power till his horns had begun to grow; and while they are in an incipient state, he gives to the beast "his power, and his seat, and great authority." Rev. 13: 2. It was easy for the Dragon to cease persecuting the saints, and pretend piety, while he had so great an object to accomplish as the corruptions] and apostasy of the Church; and I see no place where the Dragon could be said to be bound a thousand years, unless it was when the papal Beast took the helm; and even thus it was voluntary on the part of the Dragon; and the sufferings of the Church during papal rule, do not appear like living and reigning with Christ.

I once felt unsettled in mind about this thousand years, and strove and labored year after year to bring a consistent view of the judgments together according to the first view of the parable of the sheep and goats, but I could not; I must let John tell his story, and even if alone, I was constrained to believe it; I could not make it a mystical resurrection, for if I did, who were "the rest of the dead?" and this expression fully convinced me that those who lived and reigned with Christ, had also been dead. I believe there is not a chapter in the whole book of Revelation so free from symbols as the 20th; and I must call it plain, literal language; nothing figurative after the 3d v. till the 7th; and the Judgment (vs. 11th and 12th,) is in accordance with all other texts on that subject. With this view all the Bible is in harmony; but the view taken of a spiritual reign, or that all are to be converted, is in direct antagonism with the parables of the tares and of the net; also with the prevalence of the little horn of Dan. 7th ch. against the saints, until the Ancient of Days came. It is also in direct contrariety to the tribulation and persecution of all that will live godly in Christ Jesus; also of the perilous times that shall come in the last days, when evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving, and being deceived. I therefore look beyond the first resurrection for all to know the Lord, from the least to the greatest, when the kingdom of God will be established in the new earth; and then I look for the "many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth to awake to everlasting life." It cannot but derogate from the honor of God and the book of inspired prophecy, to make the Son of God symbolize anything so much below Him as earth is below heaven; or the stupendous events of that day to compare with the things of a world that is under the malediction of heaven, which is now the case with the world; and "the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain, • • waiting for the adoption, viz. the redemption of our body." This cannot be shuffled off by a pretence of disregard, or indifference about the body, for inspiration declares it.

The question is often asked, why the Evangelists and Apostles speak so strongly, "The Kingdom is at hand!" "The Judge standeth at the door!" "Behold I come quickly?" &c. To this it may be answered, that if each day of creation represented one thousand years; (as appears clear by what has been written above,) then it will be seen that Christ's first Advent was in the morning of the World's Friday; and every one knows that when we reach Friday forenoon, the Sabbath will come quickly; it is at hand, or at the door; in proportioning the week, more than four-sixths of it, were passed away; and if we are now in the last part of the afternoon of Saturday, and at eve the Sabbath will commence by the sounding of the trumpet, according to the Hebrew custom, how much reason have we to heed Peter,'s admonition, "Be diligent that ye may be found of Him in peace, without spot, and blameless." The whole history of the Church, from Constantine to the present day, appears like one continued exposition of the 24th ch. of Matt. "Take heed, (said the Savior,) that no man deceive you; For many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ, and shall deceive many." How fully has this been verified by blasphemious Popes, who have so long sit in the Temple (Church) of God claiming divine honors: shewing himself that he is God, Christ, or His vicar, on earth; our Lord God the Pope. "He opened his mouth in blasphemy against God to blaspheme His name and His tabernacle, and them that dwell in Heaven." The sufferings of the Church during the period of the great tribulation, have been an exact transcript of the words of Christ; "They shall deliver you up to be afflicted, and shall kill you; and ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake. And then shall many be offended, and shall betray one another, and shall hate one another. And because iniquity shall abound the love of many shall wax cold." And the recapitulation of the same things, from and after v. 15, together with the darkening of the sun and moon and falling of the stars, in all of which, there is a remarkable coincidence between the occurence of those events and the prophecy itself, the latter being the last signs before the sign of the Son of man. "Then cometh the end; when He shall have delivered up the Kingdom to God, or presented the subjects of His future Kingdom, purified and made white in His blood, to God, even the Father." He here resigns the commission which He received when He rose from the dead, when "All power was given unto (Him) in heaven, and in earth." Matt. 28: 18. Then the Lord will give unto Him the throne of His father David; and He shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of His Kingdom, there shall be no end." Luke 1: 32, 33. "And there was given Him dominion, and glory, and a Kingdom, that all people, nations and languages should serve Him; His dominion is an everlasting dominion which shall not pass away, and His Kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." Dan. 7; 14. Sinner, should you reject the Gospel, and continue in sin till the Lord comes, should you fall in the battle of that great day, it will, though beset with horrors, be but the first death; you must come forth, at the end of that day, not to the resurrection of life, but to that of damnation." John 5: 29. And there the great white throne of Judgment, the second death, the lake of fire, await you and all who are not found written in the Book of life. Fly, O fly to the Lord Jesus Christ for refuge and safety against the perils of that dreadful day.

Children, "watch unto prayer;" watch for the Lord; watch against sin; for the Master says, "what I say unto you, I say unto all, watch."

For The Crisis.

Letter from Br. J. D. Merriam.

Templeton, Oct. 22, 1855.

Dear Br. Merriam:—I deeply sympathize with you in the trials you endure, incident to the position you occupy, in endeavoring to give meat to the household in these times of peril.

There are many reasons why you should have the special guidance of our Heavenly Father in making the Crisis just what it ought to be. No doubt it visits many a lonely pilgrim, who, without its weekly ministrations, would be shut out from those of like precious faith.

There is nothing in this world so cheering to the poor, despised, hated and afflicted child of God as the blessed hope of the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ. He expects to meet with trial, disappointment and affliction, while he remains in this present world, for Christ has called him, not only to believe, but also to suffer for His sake.

How sweet the promise, that "if we suffer with Him, we shall also reign with Him." This is truly the suffering time of the saints, and he who expects to reach the blisful regions of everlasting life without suffering, has altogether mistaken the way. Says the Lord by the Prophet, "I have called you in the furnace of affliction." Some have to drink the cup of sorrow in one way, and some in another. John had a vision of the redeemed ones, clothed in white raiment, and he inquired, "what are these, and whence come they? He is told by the Angel, "These are they that have come out of great tribulation, that have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." Paul, when traveling to confirm the souls of the disciples, exhorted them to continue in the faith, and that we must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God. Peter tells us to count it all joy, when we fall into divers temptations, "knowing that the trial of your faith worketh patience. But let patience have its perfect work. that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing." O how ungrateful are we when we find ourselves surrounded by temptations and severe trials, to murmur and complain of the way. How much rather should we rejoice to find that God is dealing with us as with sons; that we are in the way our fathers trod before us; that we are companions of Jesus in His temptations and sorrows. He was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief. O how I long to be like Him.

Before I am aware, I sometimes find myself distrusting His gracious dealings; fearing lest after all He will not fulfil His promise. When I left my business a year and a half ago to go and labor in the vineyard of the Lord, to try and save some souls from the pit of ruin to which I saw they were hastening, I think I made a full consecration of all to God, and felt a willingness to suffer, if need be, for His sake. I think I have had some christian experience since that time; have made some advance in the knowledge of God, though not so much as I wish I had; for the more I learn, the more I see there is yet to learn, and it seems to me, the less I know.

O! to be where this vail shall be taken away; where we shall see as we are seen, and know as we are known!

I find I am brought into circumstances of pressing necessity, to try my faith. I said to my brother when he enquired if I had an assurance from any body of men on which I could depend for support, "I have no one to depend on but the promise of God, 'I will never leave thee nor forsake thee.'" For a few weeks past, I have taken more thought for myself, and I see I have erred, for I find myself still where I would not be, notwithstanding my efforts.

I find the only way for me to do is to leave myself and all my affairs in the hands of Him who cannot err, and trust to the openings of His providence.

If the way to the kingdom is through tribulation, and it is, for the Savior himself says, "In the world ye shall have tribulation, (then we should if we are in it; He adds,) but in me, ye should have peace." Thank God for that. I have no doubt that Lazarus at the rich man's gate, though suffering in body, covered with sores, clothed with rags, with the dogs for his only comforters, enjoyed great peace of mind. O hush! desponding, repining soul! Look away from thyself, and behold Jesus, in His sorrows and cruel mockings and scourgings. He was dumb, He opened not His mouth.

If He thus meekly suffered for me, can I not suffer a little for Him?

O welcome sorrow, grief or pain, if Jesus and heaven be mine. Sometimes I think we have come into the hour of temptation which is to try all them that dwell upon the earth; at any rate, during the experience of nearly 16 years in the christian course, I have never had such temptations, (or so it appears to me) as during the last few weeks. I hope I have the Savior's prayers, that my faith fail not. I trust also I have the prayers of saints. O how can I bear the thought, to have my worthless name left out, when the book of life is opened! God forbid!—But I have no worthyness to plead; I have sinned, I have come far short of the glory of God. I see my imperfection, my failures, and loath and abhor myself. I see only in Jesus, purity, perfection. His blood and righteousness I plead, and should I perish, I will pray, and perish at His feet.

"Here Lord, I give myself away,
'Tis all that I can do."

Thy promise I claim. Thou canst not, wilt not, deny thyself. "He that cometh to me, I will in no wise cast out." O how sweet the promise. We may be despised and cast out by our follow men, yet if not cast out by Jesus, how rich, how blest and happy our condition. Paul was ready not only to be bound, but also to die, for the name of the Lord Jesus. What victory he had in his soul! There was no fear of death in it. Perfect love, had cast out all tormenting fear.

May the Lord help us to have the same spirit of victory and triumph over the world, the flesh, and the Devil, and hold it to the end.

I feel that I am ready to go and labor in the vineyard of the Lord, whenever such labor as I can perform is wanted; and am resolved by the grace of God to do my duty, whatever it may be; however crossiug to human nature, not looking for my reward here, but in the world to come; and O If could be the humble instrument in the hand of God in snatching one soul from the pit of ruin, I would praise God forever.

Yours as ever, in hope of the Kingdom.

J. D. Merriam.

For The Crisis.

Letter from Br. S. Mills.

Lanesville, Ct., Oct. 23, 1855.

Br. Merriam:—I can truly say, "I know that my Redeemer liveth," and that the same Jesus which the men of Gallilee saw taken up into heaven, will soon come in like manner as He went away; and although the consummation of our hope is deferred, and our hearts made sick, still I feel resigned to the will of God; for the hope we have is "an anchor to the soul both sure and steadfast."

I am thankful that I was ever aroused by the cry, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh," and rejoice that still I am found among the despised ones whose names are cast out as evil and everywhere spoken against. But Christ says, "I have chosen you out of the world; therefore the world hateth you."

Now, Brn. and Srs., "if any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." Let us all remember that we cannot love God and the world at the same time; neither can we serve two masters. Therefore let us relinquish the world with all its transitory joys, and although we have tribulation be of good cheer; for Christ has overcome the world.

I am glad in God that although disappointed in not seeing Jesus ere this, there are some that will not give up the battle yet, but keep their faces set Zionward as a flint; and their hope grows brighter and brighter as the field seems rapidly whitening for the harvest.

Jesus, when He was on his first mission to the world, said He would come again, and gave the signs which were to precede His coming in power and great glory with all His holy angels; not as He came before, despised and rejected of men, a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief.—He endured the scoffs and contradiction of sinners, and had not where to lay His head. He suffered on the cross, endured the pain, and triumphed over death, and soon He will come again to take vengeance on those who fear not God and obey not His commandments. He will then reign King of kings and Lord of lords. I praise the Lord that I was ever brought to see this glorious truth while surrounded by an ungodly world and a lukewarm Church scoffing at the idea of Christ's second coming, and crying peace and safety when there is no peace.—Then it is, says the immutable Word, that their sudden destruction cometh. We can lift up our heads and rejoice, knowing that our redemption is at hand. Then will the Master say to the faithful, "well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

May God grant that we may escape the coming storm which is soon to burst on the ungodly world, and may the Lord direct our hearts into the love of God and a patient waiting for Christ, is the prayer of your Br. in hope,

For The Crisis.

Letter from Br. R. Humphries.

Buffalo, Oct. 19th, 1855.

Br. Merriam:—I am sorry that you did not receive the scrap from the newspaper I sent you giving the account of the dog war of the city of Armagh in Ireland, which is the place of my birth.

The dogs assemble on the top of a hill in the centre of a large valley—they come in hundreds and sit down upon the ground looking upwards and cry with a very mournful cry. They are seen coming for miles around, and the owners of the dogs cannot call them back. When night comes they give a yell which is the signal for battle, and the scene which follows is said to be beyond description. They tear each other in such a manner that the ground in the morning is like a slaughter house. They are attended by flocks of birds which feed upon dead carcases, called Magpies.

The paper states that they continued the fight for many weeks.

My brother, whose lands join the scene of battle, is an eye witness and says that the account given in the paper is true.—He says that some of the dogs wounded by gunshot are the first back the next evening to renew the fight.

I am reminded that a greater battle will soon follow, and I believe that the nations are gathering now to the place called in the Hebrew tongue, Armageddon; but in the Greek tongue, Sebastopol.

Never was there a time when we should watch more than now. This is the time in which Jesus says that He will come as a thief. Strange it is, that with such an amount of evidence, the world takes no heed, and even those who are watching for the coming of the Lord seem to be letting their lamps go out.

We are just at the ending of the days, when Daniel will stand in his lot. My faith never was so strong in the coming of the Lord as now.

We have blessed meetings here in Buffalo.—the few waiting ones who are left. May the Lord give us grace to keep humble that we may continue to the end.

For the Crisis

Letter from Sr. E. Strong.

Lanesville. Conn., Oct. 22, '55.

Dear Br. Merriam:—For the first time I have taken my pen in hand to communicate a few thoughts to the scattered flock who are on their may to mount Zion.—Are we not strangers and pilgrims here? I confess we are. We claim no heritage here, our names are cast out as evil, our friends turn away from us, but we heed them not: for we have the promise that if we will live godly in Christ Jesus we shall suffer persecution. We also read that the friendship of the world is enmity with God: and if we would be His disciples we must leave all and follow Him.—Therefore my motto is, onward and upward, and thus I move onward believing that my journey's end is near. I know that He who is for us is more than all they that are against us; so I will trust in Him and journey on till I a better world can view. I expected, with you, to have reached the goodly land ere this, but my hope was deferred, and sad was my heart. Though oft disappointed and sometimes mistaken, yet from my dear Jesus I ne'er will depart. I do believe the Lord has been with us while we have been echoing the cry, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh!" and though many have gone back to the cold and beggarly elements of this unfeeling world, yet there will be a faithful though little flock that will stand the test, who will come forth like gold purified by fire: for the Lord will have a people spotless and pure who will be watching, waiting, and ready to welcome Him back to earth. It is my aim to be one of this company, that I may exclaim with the faithful, lo, this is my God, I have waited for Him, and He will save me.

Your Sister striving to overcome,

E. Strong.

For The Crisis.

Exposition of the 12th, 13th and 17th Chapters of Revelation.

BY DR. A. DECKER.

The fulfilment of the above, is very clearly shown by the subjoined extract from Mosheim, Vol. 1, p. 134. "Amidst these calamities, the Christians were grievious (we may venture to say, the principal) sufferers. It is true, these savage nations were much more intent upon the acquisition of wealth and dominion, than upon the propagation or support of the Pagan superstitions; nor did their cruelty and opposition to the Christians arise from any religious principle, or from an enthusiastic desire to ruin the cause of Christianity; it was merely by the instigation of the Pagans who remained yet in the empire, that they were excited to treat with such severity and violence the followers of Christ. The painful consideration of their abrogated rights, and the hopes of recovering their former liberty and privileges by means of their new masters, induced the worshipers of the gods to seize with avidity every opportunity of inspiring them with the most bitter aversion to the Christians. To destroy the credit of the Gospel, and to excite the hatred of the multitude against the Christians, the Pagans took occasion, from the calamities and tumults which distracted the empire, to renew the obsolete complaint of their ancestors against Christianity, as the source of complicated woes.—They alleged, that, before the coming of Christ, the world was blessed with peace and prosperity; but that, since the progress of his religion everywhere, the gods, filled with indignation to see their worship neglected, and their altars abandoned, had visited the earth with those plagues which increased every day."

From the above extract, it is seen, how successful the Dragon (Romans) was in turning ("casting out of his mouth water as a flood") those nations against the Church, which threatened to overwhelm her, and complete her ruin and destruction. And, although, such calamities were averted by the timely conversion of those barbarians to the Church, yet it was not until about 780, when Charlemagne, Emperor of the French, subdued the Lombards and Saxons—to the authority of the Church, that the "Dragon ceased to persecute," and "cast out of his mouth waters after the woman."

After the complete subversion of the hereditary rule of the Roman Emperors in the west; the Heruli continued the government of Italy, until they were succeeded by the Goths under Theodoric.—The Goths were finally overthrown by Justinian, in A. D. 538, soon after which, the Lombards came into Italy, and continued to reign over it until A. D. 776, when they were finally subverted by the victorious arms of Charlemagne. Soon after the Saxons were subdued, and compelled to embrace the Catholic faith by the same arms; so that by A. D. 781, there was no infidel nation, east or west, to persecute the Church, or resist her authority.

We now come to notice particularly, the 14th v. "And to the woman were given two wings of a great eagle, that she might fly into the wilderness, into her place, where she is nourished for a time, and times, and half a time, from the face of the serpent."

From the common opinion, that makes the Woman flying into the wilderness, symbolic of the persecuted Church of Christ during 1260 years, under the Leopardbeast, I shall be compelled to dissent.

First, it will be seen, that the Woman here spoken of, flies into the wilderness, from the persecutions of the Dragon; while the true Church, if she flew at all—flew away from the Leopard beast, for it was the "Leopard beast that made war upon the saints, (See Ch. 13: 5–7) and not the Dragon.

Again, if the saints' being trodden under foot, burned at the stake, famished, lashed, mangled, torn in pieces, &c., by the Leopard beast, and perfectly helpless and unable to get out of his fangs, be fitly symolized by a Woman with the wings of a great eagle, able to rise and soar above her enemy, and fly away to a wilderness—place of safety where she is fed and nourished for 1260 years, I, certainly, am unable to understand the true nature and import of this symbolic language.—By a careful examination of this (v. 14.) it will be seen, that, by the addition of the "two wings of the great eagle," the Woman acquires a power of soaring above, and of velocity, which she did not possess before this addition; and yet, in point of all that constitutes the true Church, I am unable to understand how, there could be any additions made to her at this time, that she did not possess at the first, when she "was clothed with the sun, and the moon was under her feet;" but I can see, I think, very clearly, how this could be fulfilled by an apostate Church, that had acquired a great deal of worldly honor, influence and power, by which, she would be able to rise above the reach of her adversary, and fly, (advance) swiftly to that state of safety and condition, fitly symbolized by the wilderness. But how a poor, forlorn, helpless Church, suffering every degree of persecution, could be thus symbolized, I am unable to understand. As I deem a correct understanding of this, of much importance, to a correct understanding of the 1260 years, both as to their beginning and end, I shall inquire more particularly into the nature and import of these symbols.

By referring to the following texts—Deut. 28: 49; Hab. 1: 8; 2 Sam. 1: 23; Job. 9: 26, &c., it will be seen, that the eagle denotes speed, swiftness, velocity; hence in Dan. 7: 4, the Kingdom of Babylon is represented by a lion, with eagle wings, to denote the swiftness of the conquests and growth of that Kingdom. In Deut. 28: 49, Moses, in prophesying of the destruction of Jerusalem by the Kingdom of Babylon, says:—"The Lord shall bring a nation against thee from far, from the end of the earth, as swift as the eagle flyeth."

Also, by referring to the following texts, Prov. 30: 19; Jer. 48: 40; and 49: 16, it will be perceived, that the eagle not only denotes swiftness, but also exaltation, pride and power. Obadiah, in speaking of the destruction of Edom, says:—"The pride of thine heart hath deceived thee, thou that dwellest in the clefts of the rocks, whose habitation is high; that saith in his heart, who shall bring me down to the ground? Though thou exalt thyself as the eagle, and though thou set thy nest among the stars, thence will I bring thee down saith the Lord."

By the above texts and considerations it will be perceived, that the eagle denotes swiftness, exaltation, power &c., and that the addition of the "two wings of the great eagle," most fitly symbolizes the exaltation and apostasy of the Church, which commenced soon after the conversion of Constantine the great, as history abundantly attests; and the power, which she so rapidly acquired over the eastern and western Roman Empires, to which, the two wings evidently correspond; like the four wings of the Leopard beast, corresponding to the four divisions of the Greek empire. (See Dan. 7: 6.) The Church, through her apostasy, so extended her influence, that, by about the time of Theodosius the great, she obtained no inconsiderable support from the eastern and western Empires, which became to her like the two wings of a great eagle, by which she rose far above the persecutions, and reach of her adversary, and swiftly flew (advanced) to her wilderness state, which I shall presently consider.

The Woman, I understand, symbolizes the Church, in her real and nominal character, from the beginning to the end of the Gospel age. And when we learn that there is but one Woman, one Dragon or red beast, one Leopard beast, &c., in the book of Rev. we shall be prepared to understand it. In the first verse of this ch., the Woman is described as clothed with the sun, i. e. with all the glory and briliancy of the Gospel of Christ; so that from her radiated the Divine light and truth, which illuminated the world, and led them to the fountains of living waters. But, as we pass down the stream of time, we soon find the Woman apostatizing and acquiring the addition of eagle wings—of worldly influence and power; and as we travel still further along, we find her in her wilderness state, of complete apostasy, committing fornication with the kings of the earth, (wilderness) and instead of being clothed with the sun, she is now arrayed in purple and scarlet color, and decked with gold and precious stones, and pearls, &c. Here John sees the Woman, after she has got into the wilderness, into which she flew with her eagle wings, and gives us so perfect a description, as to leave no doubt of her real character, as well, also, as the manner in which she was nourished and fed, during 1260 years; and tells us plainly by whom it was done—the Kings of the earth. Did John see the apostate Woman in the wilderness?

Ans. He did.

How did she get there?

Ans. By flying there with two wings of a great eagle. If John tells of but one Woman that flew into the wilderness, and afterwards sees but one Woman there, it is, undoubtedly, the same Woman. The wilderness, then, is associated with, and denotes her state and condition.

As the Jews, after their fall and apostasy, were driven back into the wilderness—a place befitting their state and condition; so the wilderness is here used, (in the 6th and 14th vs.) as justly symbolizing the complete state of apostasy and darkness, into which the Catholic Church so rapidly advanced, by her acquisition of worldly influence and power. The Catholic Church arrived to her wilderness state of apostasy, when she, for the first time, committed fornication with the Kings of the earth; and at which time, they began to feed and nourish her, and continued so to do—as we shall presently show, for just 1260 years.

With no degree of consistency can a Woman that has fled away from the face of (power of) her persecutor into a wilderness, where she is nourished, be made to symbolize the true Church, not only in the sight, but under the feet of her adversary without the ability to extricate herself.—The wilderness is described as a waste, desert, in all which particulars it applies to the Church of Rome. The Church in its primitive state was like a city that fed bountifully on the bread of life, and that drank freely from its cooling and refreshing streams. But now in her apostasy she is like a waste, desert, wilderness, where she no longer feeds on the bread of life, nor drinks from its overflowing fountains. Therefore, the necessity of her being fed with the carnal things of this world, by the Kings of the earth. This is a place prepared by God for all those who "forsake the holy covenant."

This apostasy is also clearly shown by the four beasts of Rev. 4: 7. The third beast had the face of a man, denoting the corruption of the Church by human wisdom. The fourth beast was like a flying eagle. As the Church of Rome is the antitype to Babylon, so is she, like Babylon, represented by a beast with eagle's wings, or that flies like the eagle, which in no case could apply to the true Church in "tribulation," and which was justly symbolized by a "holy city" trodden under foot. A very wide difference, indeed, between the nature and import of the two symbols.

V. 16. "And the earth helped the Woman."

By the earth, I understand earthly rulers, "kings of the earth," those with whom "she committed fornication," and consequently by whose help she escaped the "flood of waters cast out against her." This is another striking evidence of her fallen and earthly state. Instead of asking and obtaining help from above, she now obtains it from beneath—from the kings of the earth.

V. 17. "And the Dragon was wroth with the Woman, and went to make war with the remnant of her seed, which keep the commandments of God and have the testimony of Jesus."

Those who keep the commandments of God, are spoken of as a separate class from those represented by the Woman; for if the Woman means the true Church, then, indeed, all those who keep the commandments of God are included, and there can therefore be no "remnant." A parallel passage is found in ch. 2d, 24th v. "But unto you I say, and unto the rest in Thyatira, as many as have not known this doctrine, and which have not known the depths of Satan, as they speak," &c. Here there is a "rest," or "remnant" of the Church of Thyatira which have not known the depths of Satan, and are, therefore, the remnant which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus.

Here, then, we have the two classes clearly shown; those that keep the commandments of God are a remnant, compared to those represented by the Woman. The fulfilment of this verse will be shown hereafter, in a suitable place.

Much additional evidence will be brought to sustain this position in regard to the Woman, as I proceed to the investigation of the 13th ch. A correct understanding of this symbolic Woman will hereafter be seen to be of much importance to enable us to correctly understand the prophetic periods so inseparably connected with her in the prophetic history.

For The Crisis.

"Sic transit gloria mundi!"

BY MARION A. COTTON.

"Thus passes away the glory of the world." When we look over the face of nature, we are reminded that all is transitory. As we stand by the dying bed of some loved one, with what force does this truth impress us. And as we behold the mighty tower and magnificent castle crumble back to dust, we exclaim from the depths of our soul, "So the glory of the world passes away!"

"Tell me, thou reverend chronicler of the grave, can all the illusions of ambition realized, can all the wealth of an universal commerce, can all the achievements of successful heroism, or all the establishments of this world's wisdom, secure to empire the permanancy of its possessions? Alas! Troy thought so once, yet the land of Priam lives only in song! Thebes thought so once, yet her hundred gates have crumbled, and her very tombs are but as the dust they were vainly intended to commemorate! So thought Palmyra—where is she? So thought the countries of Demosthenes and the Spartan; yet Leonidas's is trampled by the timid slave, and Athens insulted by the servile, mindless, and enervate Ottoman!"

"Rome, in its glory, (said one writer,) could only be excelled by the New Jerusalem. In his hurried march, Time has but looked at their imagined immortality, and all its vanities, from the palace to the tomb, have, with their ruins, erased the very impression of his footsteps! The days of their glory are as if they had never been! Such is the natural progress of human operations, and such the unsubstantial mockery of human pride. But there is a blissful country, a beautiful land—a radiant city—whose glory will never pass away. And such a city, where in the history of the world, can you point to such a magnificent place—streets of gold—gates of pearl—walls of jasper—and God's eternal glory to lighten it. O! shall I be permitted to dwell in that blissful land, to gaze upon the ravishing scenery of earth restored, to know that the glory thereof will never pass away?

PITTSFIELD, Mass., Oct. 23, '55.

For The Crisis.

"I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." Rom. 12: 1.

The Apostle here entreats with urgency those recognized as brethren, to a voluntary offering of their entire being as a sacrifice to God! and adds it is but reasonable thus to do.

Those who have been made heirs to an incorruptible inheritance with Jesus Christ by the costly purchase of His blood, can easily perceive the reasonableness of such a demand.

If it be asked, how can our bodies be offered as a sacrifice? I answer: according to the teachings of Scripture they must be given away, not to be burnt on Jewish altars—but as a living sacrifice—that is, to serve another, instead of ourselves. Says the Apostle: "Ye are not your own, but have been bought with a price." And again: "Ye are God's husbandry; ye are God's building." If we are not our own, surely it is but reasonable our labor should be performed for our rightful Proprietor. Therefore the glory of God should FIRST be sought in whatever occupation we may engage, whether mental or physical. We have no moral right to serve ourselves or our friends regardless of God's glory—but as the Apostle farther testifies, "Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." 1st Cor. 10: 31.

If professing Christians would seriously enquire whether they were glorifying God in their present employment or non-employment, as the case might be, methinks the sweet voice of the Spirit in harmony with the unerring Word, would constrain an immediate change. It would teach the indolent to be active—the active to act right. How many, realizing their person and all entrusted to their care belong to the Lord, would dare take the money committed to their stewardship, to purchase a disagreeable narcotic just to gratify a morbid appetite—to derange the system—make themselves filthy—disturb the peace and excite the disgust of their more cleanly fellow beings, and finally hasten themselves to a premature grave!

And yet, thousands of dollars are expended in this way annually in our own New England, by those professing the self-denying religion of Jesus Christ!—I know the habit is powerful, and requires the greatest energy and decision to overcome it. But there is a sufficient effacacy in the Spirit and Word of God to subdue and exterminate this unnatural appetite The first commandment in the Decalogue reads, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me," showing conclusively we must have stronger affection for God than any other object, animate or inanimate.

To say nothing of the many charitable objects that suffer for want of this worse than needless expenditure, should not the fact startle you, my Christian Br. or Sr., when you betray more love for this filthy weed than for the Spirit of God? If you think this incorrect, bethink yourself whether you do not feel more uneasiness when deprived of your tobacco, than when a cloud intercepts a free communion with God? Would you not strive harder, and subject yourself to greater care and pains to obtain it than to gain a greater share of God's Spirit? if so, are you not breaking the first commandment?

Again: if the idea were firmly established in the mind, that we were performing our labor for the Lord instead of self, would it not modify or restrain some in their over exertions? Would not those who, to lay up treasures here strain every nerve—prostrate their physical energies—impair their mental powers so as to unfit them for the worship of God when the Sabbath obliges them to cease their toil—take more time to acquaint themselves with the word of God? more for holy meditation and prayer? and thus be better prepared for the elevated society they hope ere long to enjoy.

Then, again, suffer us to enquire, why do those professing to be governed by the law of God make such use of their stewardship over the Lord's money as to deck their persons with gold, pearls and costly array? Our Bridegroom ordains other kind of ornaments with which to bedeck His Bride. Listen to the mind of the Bridegroom on this subject. "Whose adorning, let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel; But let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price."

When we see those seating themselves around the table of the Lord to partake of the symbols of the body and blood of Christ, ornamented with all the tinselry of these last days, we can but think they have mistaken the ornaments. I sometimes feel desirous to know whether such persons ever read the following Scripture.

"In like manner also, that women adorn themselves with modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety; not with broidered hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array; But (which becometh women professing godliness) with good works."—1 Tim. 2: 9, 10. Whether they do not read it, or disregard it after they have read it, the fiat has gone forth that this very Word will judge them at the last day. John 12: 48.

Having thus far considered the reasonableness of devoting our person and our all to the Lord with a strict adherance to His Word, let us notice a few things the superficial Scripture reader is liable to misapprehend, by isolating a few passages like the following: "Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice;" then again in Mark 12: 33, "to love God with all the soul and his neighbor as himself is more than all whole burnt offerings and sacrifices."—But let it be remembered that sacrifice for God is no where repudiated between the lids of the sacred Volume more than the tithing of mint and cummin which sacrifice the Savior would not have omitted—He only condemned its being substituted for weightier matters, as for the love of God, judgment, faith, &c. The abuse of this important duty appears to be the gist of these Scriptures.

And what ordinance or blessing has not poor, weak, human nature abused? It was the liability of substituting a mere carnal gift for the love of God, and an effort to purchase salvation or be recognized as a child of God without a meek child like submission for which they were reproved; when a broken and contrite spirit appears to be the first acceptable sacrifice offered to God, (Ps. 51: 17,) and is a compliance with the command to "offer the sacrifices of righteousness."—And why is righteousness recognized as a sacrifice?

Ans. Because the heart is naturally opposed to it; therefore it costs human nature much to do just right. E. g., when the tongue of slander heaps on us opprobrium, defamation, &c., it is a sacrifice for human nature to return the kindness of entreaty: but thus did Paul! When smitten on one cheek, it costs human nature a sacrifice to turn the other! but thus it must be, the Gospel commands us to love our enemies, bless those that curse us, &c., and forbids our rendering railing for railing; but contrarywise blessing, &c. It is truly astonishing to see so many professed Christians withhold this sacrifice of righteousness! when revenge is so expressly forbidden in language too plain to be misunderstood. Says Jesus: "I say unto you that ye resist not evil," &c.

Again: Paul to the Romans 12: 17; "Recompence to no man evil for evil," &c. Notwithstanding the great cloud of Scripture testimony arrayed against revenge of any kind many by their acts seem to defy God; for as soon as they suffer some little neglect or injustice from their fellow beings, they immediately desire some means of retaliation, and even try to justify such a course because their enemies have said this and did that, &c. &c. Mistaken ones! will you pause and read Rom. 12: 19. "Dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves; but rather give place unto wrath; for it is written, Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord." Then will you ever presume to take the work of the Almighty out of his hands? O forbear! do not so rashly I beseech you, lest He smite and there be none to deliver.

My dear fellow pilgrims, it is indeed true that a Christian life is one of self-sacrifice all the way through! Yes, all the propensities of our nature not in harmony with the Divine will, must be sacrificed, or we must be shut out of that pure and peaceful clime. No lovers of self (with which this age abounds,) can ever enter there. No! one such character would mar and stain the kingdom of God. Not only the first, but the second commandment must be obeyed here; for "on these two hang all the law and the prophets." If we love our neighbor as ourselves, we shall be willing and rejoice to share our worldly goods with those who are in need; and not only shall we share those things that sustain animal life, but we shall also seek to communicate that knowledge that will inspire devotion to God, and make each other more Christ-like.

It may be a sacrifice to communicate to those hard of understanding; but let all cheerfully obey, remembering with such sacrifices God is well pleased.—Heb. 13: 16.

Beloved, what we do must be done quickly. Late news from the old world proclaims the speedy coming of Him whose name is Faithful and True!—Amen: even so, says my heart, let Him appear quickly, and gather those of like precious faith with Peter, into His everlasting Kingdom.

LOWELL, NOV. [illegible]0, 1855.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Sr. A. Mussey.

Manchester, N. H., Oct. 28, '55.

Br. Merriam:—Once more permit me through the Crisis, to speak a word of exhortation and comfort to the household. And may the grace of God assist me as I write. Could I feel justified in holding my peace, I would gladly do so; but to withhold more than is meet, "tendeth to poverty." Often am I reminded of the word of the Lord, "whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." But oh how frail I am! how short-sighted, how poor, how weak, yea, how insufficient, in and of myself! how incapable of doing any thing for God's glory, or the good of His cause, without the aid of His Holy Spirit! And for this, I would most earnestly pray at this time, remembering the promise that God, my Father who is in heaven, is more willing to give His Spirit to them that ask Him, than earthly parents are to give good gifts unto their children. I expect to have His Spirit while I write, for I believe God to-day—blessed be His name.

When I sit down to write, I often feel to wish like this: O that I could see all my dear Brn. and Srs. together, who with me have been looking for the blessed Jesus to come; how I should love to greet them, and exhort them to faithfulness in duty, how I should love to shake the friendly hand with them, and hail them happy on the road that leads to glory and to God. But alas! this blessed privilege will ever be denied me while here on this dreary earth we stay; but, dear Brn. and Srs., I hope to meet you on the other shore; yea,

"In heaven I hope to greet you,
Where no farewell tear is shed."

All I can do now is, to comfort you with the blessed promise, "I will come again, and receive you to myself." Though now you are scattered o'er mountain, hill, and dale, yet, at the voice of God, kind Angels will be summoned to go forth, east, west, north and south, from every land and every clime, from every nation and every tongue to gather the jewels of the Lord, and bring them to His holy mount at Jerusalem. There will be but one fold and one Shepherd, and His name one.—Then the Watchmen will "see eye to eye" —then the vail will be removed, and all the dear children will see alike—all will be perfect union and harmony—all will be peace. No jarring notes there, no discordant sounds there—no, no, blessed be God, they will sing one song, and that song will be, "WORTHY IS THE LAMB" who died to redeem us, and has brought us safely home. O my Father! grant me a place in thy glorious kingdom with that happy throng, that I may share with them in the glory. Praise the blessed Lord—unworthy as I am, I expect to be there.

My heart swells with emotion to-day, and should I undertake to write what has passed through my mind, my pen would fail me—but were it possible for me thus to do, I am sensible some of the readers of the Crisis would be pleased, while others would be displeased; and some might say I was a foolish virgin. But be that as it may, (for it is a light thing to be judgded of man's judgment,) I desire above everything, to have my eye single to the glory of God. I am no man-pleaser—I have ever endeavored to take a course to please God, independently of man, however much I may have come short, (and I realize that I have, in many ways,) but what I have believed to be the truth, I have ventured out upon, fearless of consequences, knowing that to my own Master I must stand or fall; and never, to my knowledge, since first I gave my heart to God, have I been ashamed of Christ or His word.

"Ashamed of Jesus? just as soon
Let midnight be ashamed of noon!"

What I have believed, I therefore have spoken, and have left the event with God. Many things which I have embraced, I still believe to be true, and they will stand until the great Judge appears, and the heavens be no more. And there are many things I have believed to be truth, that time has proved to be errors; and had I time and space, I should be just as willing to confess my errors as I have been to believe and advocate them; for God knows I have been honest at heart, and still am. Never, in all my life, have I felt more sensibly the Divine presence than I have to-day! O that peace which is like a river has filled my soul, the God of Israel be praised!

Much has been said—much has been written about our past experience; and especially has the Parable of the ten virgins been dwelt upon very largely; and no one perhaps has dwelt more upon that portion of God's word than myself; and it is good, for it is the word of the Lord: but I am willing to acknowledge I do not know what portion of it is fulfilled. I was very strong in the '54 time, and thought, according to our past history, it must be the Midnight Cry; and if so, the Lord must come. I believed it—advocated it—tried to be ready for the event—and had my Master then appeared, I believed He would have saved me. I believed it because I thought the word of the Lord taught it, not because men said so; for I have learned in these days of peril to lean on no arm but God's alone: and that arm has sustained me thus far, and I trust it will to the end of the world. After the passing of the time last fall, I remained quiet and peaceable for the time being, and let it rest. I embraced no new views; and whether it was or was not the Midnight Cry, I did not know. I felt to leave the event with God, believing if it was, the Lord would certainly come in a short time. But a year has nearly passed, and He has not come, and I am persuaded in my own mind we were mistaken in the idea that that was the Midnight Cry. For a few days past, I have been looking over our past history; and the way we have come; and for one I can truly say, if I have been "beside myself, it is to God;" but to say our great and all-wise God has been in all that has transpired I cannot.—He has been with us, it is true, and many glorious truths have been brought out from His blessed word in these last days, that will stand the grand review; but error has attended us all the way along, and that will fall to the ground. I have been thinking of late it is much better to acknowledge our mistake than to persist in error that will lead us away from God, and doing good to our fellow men. Jesus is yet on the mercy-seat pleading for perishing sinners; and as He is, so, should we be in this world. My own observation of late has taught me, that weak and frail as I am, I can do some little good in the world; and when I have realized that the different denominations are doing more to save souls than some of my Advent Brn., I am a little surprised. I do not know that much can be done for their salvation, but when we remember the long suffering of God is salvation, let us do what we can.

That the Lord is coming I have no doubt—heaven, earth and sea bespeak it; signs in the sun, moon and stars, and upon earth distress of nations tell the wondrous story, that Christ is soon coming to judge the world in righteousness and His people with His truth.

I came out whole-hearted with this people that have been looking for Jesus; and they are my people still, but I feel, as Br. Burnham expressed himself, (not because he said so, for it was the sentiment of my heart before I read it from his pen,) "my policy is to associate with all who give me evidence that they love God, of every clan, clique, party, sect or denomination, and yet, in a sectarian sense, be free from them all." This I believe to be safe —Here we can do all good that are within our reach; and God can be honored, and our souls watered while we water others. Oh Lord, lead us thyself.

When occasion requires me to meet with any of the different denominations, and I feel disposed to speak a word for God, (as I generally do,) and when I talk about my blessed hope, and the glories of the new earth, and the big tears start from the eyes of those that hear, with a hearty amen; and after the meeting a friendly greeting with an invitation to come again, God forbid, that I should withhold the hand of Christian fellowship from such, and say in my heart, "stand by thyself; for I am holier than thou." "He that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my mother, my sister, and my brother." What if I am accused of going back to Babylon, no matter; I know whose I am and whom I serve.—But, say some, the Midnight Cry is sounded and the foolish virgins have gone to buy oil, and you are one. Oh no, Br. Sr., my lamp has not gone out yet. I am only trying to serve God, and to keep free from every yoke. I must believe yet, the Midnight Cry brings our long absent Lord. Says another, the 1335 days, are ended. That cannot be; for God's word plainly declares when they end, good old Daniel will stand in his lot. Have you seen him yet? Then he still sleeps, and those days are not ended. Could I believe this is not true, I could not tell what was true by the plain, literal reading of the Scriptures.

Says another, the gifts are in the Church, and are now being developed, and some talk in an unknown tongue. Amen to that. I for one would not forbid it; for the great Apostle of the Gentiles has told me not to.

Says another, the prayer of faith shall save the sick; and many have been healed in these days. Amen to that. I believe it: and I really wish some that have the gift of faith in healing the sick would come in and pray for me to day; for I am really sick, and I want to be made whole! O! must these things distract and divide us. Says Jesus, "a new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another." It has been a great grief to me, to see my Advent Brn. divided up into so many parties, and each party thinking we are the Church.

Brn., these things ought not to be.—For one I had as lief belong to any other sect or party, as belong to a sectarian Advent party. When I look back to '42 and 3 and see what a happy, united, loving band we were then, and think how we are now, I could weep as it were, tears of blood. But some suppose it is according to the word, that it is God's will that there should be divisions among us. It cannot be His will, if we are His children; for our Master told us to be ONE as He and the Father are one. When we first started out in expectation of meeting our Lord we were like a beautiful ship sailing on the deep blue sea—the wind all in our favor. How sweetly did we move—and the passengers were all united in order, peace and love; but she has foundered, as it were, on a reef of rocks; behold the fragments, some crying one thing, some another; and there are discordant sounds; lo here! and lo there! But amid the commotion of the elements a still small voice is heard, "this is the way, walk ye in it," and we shall do well to give heed to its teachings. I believe the true jewels of the Lord are, and oh I do most earnestly pray they may show themselves a united company—some effort has been made of late to this effect. God speed the right. May error fall, and truth triumph—God be honored, and souls saved.

While viewing the state of things that now exists, it appears to me I have felt some as did good old Jeremiah when he exclaimed, "O that my head were waters, and my eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of my people!" O Brn. beloved in the Lord, let not differences of opinion divide us—let not theories distract our minds; but rally around the standard of Prince Immanuel, and be like a city set on an hill, whose light cannot be hid. Let the standard be raised high, and the banner floating in the breeze.—Never, no never lower the standard for the sake of a union with the world or the worldling; but let union and love abound among us, that they may say, "Behold, how these brethren love one another."

Our Lord is coming, and we desire to be prepared; and by the grace of God, I mean to be ready; but my steps have been very imperfect, my words have not always been seasoned with grace as they should have been. This I humbly and freely confess to all, and I hope all will forgive and overlook my many imperfections. I can extend the hand of fellowship to all who love our Lord Jesus Christ and His appearing. If there be a people on the earth I love, it is the Advent people; and gladly have I suffered with them. If there be a cause on earth that lies near my heart, it is the cause of God. O that Zion's walls might be built up—her borders enlarged, and a people prepared for the coming of the Messiah; that when the trump of God shall awake the dead, we with them may rise triumphant, and soar away to meet our Beloved, and so forever be with the Lord.

Finally, Brn., farewell (for the present.) Be perfect, be of good comfort, be of one mind, live in peace, and the God of love and peace shall be with you. May the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost, be with you all. Amen.

For The Crisis.

"Behold I come as a Thief."

Many hundreds of years have these words stood on record in the Holy Scriptures, and the inquiry arises, was it the design of God that they should always startle the ears of the Church, or do they stand in connection with events which, being fulfilled, she may become apprized of the fact, and double her diligence in watching and keeping her garments? Much light has been shed upon the book of Revelation. By following certain rules of interpretation, it has become plain to many minds, and easy to believe, that the events spoken of stand in chronological order; and if we can understand the nature of those events, we may know when to give attention to the above admonition of the Divine Redeemer who once said, in person, to His weeping Church, "If I go away I will come again". Let not her unbelief at this time, lead her to say, If we could have an Angel commissioned directly from Jesus, with this message, we would believe, and how we would stir ourselves, lest a reply similar to the one given to the rich man in the parable be given her. If you will not believe my beloved Disciple John, neither will ye believe an Angel from heaven.

As the Spirit of God has for many days been stirring my mind upon this subject, and I have been giving heed to certain needful exhortations to correspondents, in the Crisis, I have been convinced to day, that I should not please God, to be governed by my feelings of unworthiness and insufficiency any longer.

How widely different God, our Heavenly Father, is, from man. He chooses the foolish things of the world to confound the wise, while man naturally avoids whatever brings reproach. "Behold I come as a thief," falls with thrilling interest on my ear, settles down into my heart, and leads me to put the question to my Brn. and Srs., will you, in view of passing events, like the unbelieving world let this voice of mercy from the Book of God die away without producing its designed effect? In the meantime I cry, awake my stupid, unbelieving soul, obtain a close walk with God, or the floods of unbelief which shed their chilling influence all around, as they emanate from the world, the professed Church, and more especially from those who have been in our ranks, will engulf thee in destruction as inevitable as the flood. O keep me, thou Mighty One, by thine Almighty power.

I rejoice in the faith that God will have a few, who have "committed their souls unto Him as unto a faithful Creator in well doing." And He knoweth them that trust in Him. Also the rod of the wicked shall not rest upon the lot of the righteous, lest the righteous put forth their hands unto iniquity. Ps. 125: 3.

To whom will Jesus come as a thief? Paul says to his Thessalonian brethren, "Ye are not in darkness that that day should overtake you as a thief. Ye are all children of light and the children of the day: we are not of the night nor of darkness." If Christ comes upon us as a thief, it is proved that we are not Paul's brethren, but are of the night and of darkness. "If we say we have fellowship with Him(God) and walk in darkness, we lie and do not the truth." 1 John 1: 6.

There are two classes only, children of light and children of darkness. Upon the children of darkness or night, Christ will come as a thief. "They that sleep, sleep in the night." Sleep represents a state of security and ease. "When they shall say peace and safety, &c. "They that be drunken are drunken in the night."—Isaiah, in describing the condition of the Jews when the Lord had departed from them, says, "They are drunken but not with wine; they stagger, but not with strong drink." The Lord had brought a deep sleep upon them. They had rejected the Lord, chose darkness, and the Lord rejected them and gave them darkness, until "the wisdom of their wise perished, and the understanding of their prudent was hid." The sin of hypocrisy was more severely denounced by our Savior than all other sins. It makes no difference whether Jew or Gentile, if we profess one thing while another, we are hypocrites. To profess to give ourselves to the Lord, trust in Him, and then trust in an arm of flesh, for such a sin, whoever is guilty of it, God will proceed to do a marvelous work and a wonder. How aggravating the sin! to draw nigh to God with the mouth and honor Him with the lips, while the heart is removed far from Him, and their fear toward Him is taught by the precept of men! I apprehend the reason why Paul should say, "Of the times and seasons, brethren, ye have no need that I write unto you," was, the condition of the Church and the world would so strikingly compare with the old world, Sodom and the Jews just before their destruction, that the children of light would understand and respond as did the beloved disciple to the saying of Jesus, "Surely I come quickly: Amen. Even so come, Lord Jesus." The events of the sixth vial bring us to the same conclusion, (Rev. 16: 12) "And the sixth Angel poured out his vial upon the great river Euphrates; and the water thereof was dried up, that the way of the kings of the east might be prepared." The great river Euphrates—the Mohammedan power —that once mighty scourge of the Roman Catholics. "Water was dried up."—The people diminished in numbers and strength, which was necessary to prepare the way of the kings of the east. John the Baptist came to prepare the way of the Lord—bring the people into a condition to receive the Lamb of God or be without excuse if they rejected Him—War, I think, was the means of diminishing that people to such a state of weakness that Russia dared invade, hoping doubtless to obtain what she had so long desired as a necessary gratification of her growing ambition—the passage of her Fleet through the Dardanelles. Her pretext was just what would best arouse and retain the aid and courage of her subjects—religious considerations. She was for many years held in check, by powers, who looked with jealous eyes on her increasing strength and desire for enlargement. At length the 13th verse begins to be distinctly fulfilled. "And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the Dragon, and out of the mouth of the Beast, and out of the mouth of the false Prophet."

In chap. 12 we learn that the Dragon symbolized the power that stood to devour Jesus Christ as soon as He was born, which was Imperial or Monarchical Rome. The Beast, I am disposed to call Papal Rome, whose characteristic is self-exaltation—sitting in the temple of God, assuming the prerogative of Jesus Christ to make laws, saying what we shall believe and what we shall not believe. The false Prophet is Mohammadanism, whose prevailing spirit, in the days of its power, was, to exterminate or destroy. These three spirits Monarchical, Dictatorial and Exterminating, each possessing a civil and a religious character, sometimes in the water and sometimes out, have gone to the kings of the earth and of the whole world, and are the spirits of Devils working miracles.

Monarchical Rome was called the Devil and Satan. The satanical desire for supremacy has gone to the kings of the earth and of the whole world. The spirit of extermination has effected the shedding of much blood. The Roman Catholic Church claims most strikingly infallibility, but she is not alone; her spirit too has gone to the whole world. And where, let me ask, do not these three spirits operate? They are the components of our natures; what Paul calls our "Old Man, The carnal mind, which is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be." And every individual who has learned the all important lesson of knowing himself, has felt the working of these three influences, more or less; some one of them gaining prominence in every man, woman, and child, who have not crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts.

How often is the desire to be "Boss" manifested by some little boy. And another spirit produces the uplifting of the hand to punish the intruder upon its supposed rights.

When a child I placed in my memory a sentiment I have often had occasion to remember; "Never obtrude your opinion unasked," which, if followed, would save many a one from dictating in matters that did not concern them. In matters of faith, it becomes desperately wicked. My attention has been called to this subject by the recent struggle between the Know-Nothings and their antagonists. I do not speak of these things by way of censure, (Jesus "came not into the world to condemn the world,") but to show that these spirits have gone out not only to the kings of the earth, but the whole world.—In our so-called "happy America" they have been working and producing the results spoken of in the word of God, gathering those who are influenced by them to the "battle of the great day of God Almighty." It is not the work of one day or year. They set at variance Church members, neighbors, and members of the same family, and the ultimatum of their work will be, to set every man's hand against his neighbor, when the "slain of the Lord shall be from one end of the earth, even unto the other end of the earth."

The government of the U. S. of America is not christian, it is worldly; and what is of the world, is not of the Father. It is not the friend of Jesus Christ; for Jesus says, "Then are ye my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you." Jesus commands His disciples to "resist not evil." Again He says, "they that take the sword, shall perish with the sword." Paul teaches the same. "Dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves," &c. If we are the friends of Jesus Christ because we do what He commands, then on the same principle, if we do what the world tells us to do, we are the friends of the world; and if the friends of the world, we are the enemies of God.

God is dealing with this generation as He has dealt with all others, previous to destroying them—not only worldly nations but His professed people, who are the most guilty of the two. If they had not had light, they would not have been guilty. The world has been warned. The Church has been aroused; but they have alike said by their conduct, "we will not have this man (Christ Jesus) to reign over us." This is the hour and power of darkness. Now is the Prince of this world judged in the person of his people. Monarchical Rome has assumed its eighth head, (France) and gone out to deceive the nations again. The little horn is making war and persecuting, while sitting upon many waters. The false Prophet is expending his dying energies to exterminate. The children of light and of the day hear the voice of their Beloved, in the Scriptures, "Behold I come as a thief."

Letter from Br. S. S. Brewer.

Lawrence, Mass., Oct. 30, '55.

Well, dear reader, time still drags its length along, and at seasons wearily and drearily enough for poor human nature to to bear up with, but grace, in sweet acquiescence with the divine economy and will of God, breaths forth in sweet accents of resignation, "all the days of my appointed time will I wait until my change comes." O how calmly does the sanctified heart repose, in the midst of severe and fiery trials, on the promise of its Heavenly Father, and like the sweet singer of Israel, in soul-blending unison exclaim; "As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness. I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness." "How excellent is thy loving kindness, O, God, therefore the children of men put their trust under the shadow of thy wings."

O ye tried and tempest-tossed one, weary amid the surging billows—at times foaming and dashing—threatening to overwhelm; again lying becalmed—while the scorching rays of fiery sarcasm pour all their concentrated fury on thy devoted head, trust in God, and He shall be as the light of the morning when the sun riseth, even a morning without clouds—as the tender grass, springing out of the earth by clear shining after the rain."

God's promises are truly great and precious. Men make and brake promises; but God, never. Men place great reliance on small pieces of paper—the issues of institutions with a promise to pay on demand—which frequently fail to comply, and treat with contempt the poverty-stricken holder of their deceptive bait; but all the promises of our heavenly Father are yea and amen. The last heir to the inheritance is almost of age; and the patrimony will soon be divided.—O how vast—how great—how glorious. O how firm, how lasting, how durable! And of the Kingdom there shall be no end. O how pure—how calm—how heavenly and serene the atmosphere! O how beautiful—how lovely—how perfect the children of the Kingdom! O what sweetness sparkles and beams in every eye! O what a company they all are robed in spotless white, and conquering palms they bear. O what a country!—There every sight pleases; there every sound cheers. Creation is instinct with immortality. Losses and crosses are forgotten. Tears and fears are unknown. I am sick, and farewell-sounds so familiar here—will never be heard there. Praise God, O my soul. I long to be there. O Father in heaven, let thy Kingdom come. Let the wickedness of the wicked come to an end Amen.

Truly it is soul-refreshing in view of the present deplorable state of things to realize that there is a God who arranges His purposes, and works His sovereign will.

All things are working at this moment to bring about the eternal salvation of God's people, and the redemption of the purchased possession, unto the praise of His glory. And though clouds and dark ness, at times, seem to lower thick and heavy, it is blessed to trust the promises. They will soon be met with an exceeding and eternal weight of glory. They can never fail. Firm as the Rock of Eternal ages they will stand, when old rolling time will cease to move.

The times are ominous. Perils surround us on every hand. Iniquity abounds. Love has grown cold. Poor Laodicea is rich and increased in goods. The titled dignataries have ceased to separate the precious from the vile. They are, in the language of the Prophet, no longer as God's mouth; but spewed out of His mouth. All manner of crime seems rampant in the bosoms of earth's teeming legions. War, pestilence, famine, murder, debauch, tyranny, gambling, polygamy, lying, swearing, stealing, extortion, oppression, pride, idleness, slavery and injured innocence on one hand, and demons incarnate steeped in blood-crimsoned iniquity on the other—what a picture!!—Language fails to convey any description of the dark, dark streams of iniquity now sweeping in threatening devastation over the most enlightened and so called Christian nation of the earth.

Very soon in the present—as in the instance of Sodom and Gomorrah—long suffering and patience on the part of God's too long rejected mercy will cease to be a virtue; and then will fall the long suspended blow.

The harvest of earth appears ripe and ready for the sickle of Divine vengeance. Over the battle field are looming clouds of dark and bloody wrath surcharged with unrelenting fury. The angry nations, like blind men, stand on the verge of the lake of fire. The last vial of God's wrath, in which is pent up His fiery indignation, is now trembling in the air. And soon the last wail of lamentation, mourning and woe will rise from the doomed millions as they expire amid the pangs of the SECOND DEATH, from which may both you and I, dear reader, through grace, be saved. Amen,

Letter from Sr. A. M. Stark.

GUILFORD, GREEN RIVER, VT., Oct. 29th, 1855.

Dearly beloved Pilgrims, and strangers: Although I have seen but very few of you here in the flesh, I can but confess my sympathies are with you, and I have been very much interested in the doctrines you advance. It has been but little more than a year since I became acquanted with the truth that our Savior's Advent is very near at hand. It is a great comfort, and satisfaction to me, to know that things will not long remain in their present condition. Even now, as I look abroad upon the face of nature, and behold it fading and decaying beneath the blighting influence of the frost-king, I look forward with anxious expectation to the time when Paradise shall be restored,

> Then deserts shall rejoice,
> And bloom as Eden fair,
> While vine-clad hills and leaping rills,
> Their praise to God shall bear

Although yet in the morning of life, when hope is buoyant and the syren voice of pleasure is calling; it falls upon my ear in deathlike tones, and my weary heart is saying.

> "Perish, every fond ambition,
> All I've sought, or hoped, or known."

I have never felt until of late to cry "Lord Jesus, come quickly;" but when I did, it became the burden of my prayer. Ah! how sweetly that petition did arise.

Beloved Pilgrims, let us strive to fulfil our earthly mission; and though trials and offences must needs come, let us endure hardness like good soldiers, and like the sturdy oak we will gather strength from winds and storms of this tempestous life, and finally, enter the harbor of rest singing the glorious song that Angels cannot sing.

Destructive Fire in Newfoundland. Two Hundred Houses, Burnt. On the 18th of October, a most destructive fire occurred at Tarrahan's Town, St. John's, Newfoundland. The details of the fire are not given. The St. John Courier says that it is impossible to state accurately the number of families rendered houseless by this fire. Upwards of 120 brick chimneys now standing, show that over 200 houses were burnt, in most cases one chimney serving two houses.—We cannot therefore reckon under 400 families burnt out, all of the operative—many of poorer classes—the greater number of whom lost much of their furniture. An extent of five acres was burnt over. Contributions were making for the relief of the sufferers.

☞ Amid all the favorable opinions expressed in relation to that most excellent volume which ought if practicable, to be in the hands of every Adventist in the land, we are happy to add the following testimonial from one who is regarded as the most eloquent preacher in London.

"THE VOICE OF THE CHURCH."

To H. L. Hastings, Peace Dale, R. I.

My Dear Sir:—

I thank you for sending me "The Voice of The Church." I think it eminently fitted to disarm prejudice, and show there is no novelty in doctrines some think very new.

I hope many excellent Christians who do not yet see their way to that blessed hope, will read it.

Yours truly, JOHN CUMMING

Important from Nicaragua.

Arrival of Steamship Star of the West.

Walker Victorious—Capture of the Capitol of Nicaragua—Walker declines the Presidency—California Passengers Fired on, and Several Killed.

New York, Nov 4. The steamship Star of the West has arrived at this port from Punta Arenas, with a full complement of passengers and $272,651 in treasure, from California, brought down on the Pacific side by the steamship Uncle Sam, which left San Francisco on the 5th ult.

By this arrival we have important news from Nicaragua. Col Walker having been reinforced by a small party of Californians, on the 12th ult, embarked at Virgin Bay on board the steamer Virgin, and before daylight landed within four miles of Granada. After a rapid advance the army reached the city and gained the Plaza without encountering any serious resistance. Here a sharp contest ensued, which resulted in a loss to the enemy of fifteen killed and several wounded, and Col Walker took possession of the capital of Nicaragua. Subsequently the fort was captured by a detachment of Americans. Order having been restored, the citizens of Granada held a public meeting, and tendered Col Walker the Presidency of the Republic, which honor he declined, in favor of Gen Corral.

Col Wheeler, our Minister to Central America, after much solicitation, proceeded to Rivas with propositions of peace. Arriving at Rivas, and learning that Gen Corral was absent, Col Wheeler attempted to return, but was prevented by the Governor, and detained two days: nor was he released until the town was threatened with an attack. This breach of faith on the part of Corral's forces led to a spicy correspondence between our Minister and the General. On the 22d, Corral surrendered, a treaty of peace was formed, and thus Walker's victory became complete.

During the progress of these events, others of importance were transpiring. On the 19th, Col Fry and P H French, with sixty men, embarked on board the Virgin, which also carried the passengers and specie from California, with the intention of capturing San Carlos. The occupants of the fort, however, fired upon the steamer with cannon. The expedition was abandoned, Col Fry being unwilling to risk the lives of his passengers.

On the 23d, the steamer conveying the outward bound passengers by the Star of the West, was fired upon by the fort. A thirty-two pound shot struck the boat, killing a lady and child, and seriously injuring the machinery. Previous to this, an attack was made upon the returning Californians at Virgin Bay by the Government forces, when four persons were killed and eight others seriously wounded. These attacks were evidently made in a spirit of revenge for the success of Walker, and perhaps with the view of robbery.

Col Kinney was pursuing the even tenor of his way, perfecting plans to secure a large emigration from the United States, with every prospect of carrying them out successfully.

Don Pinto Mayorza, late Secretary of the former Government, and a prisoner on parole in the city of Granada, was detected in correspondence with the enemy outside, and having been tried by a court martial and found guilty, was shot on the public Plaza on the morning of the 22d ult.

EUROPEAN NEWS.

EXTRACTS FROM ENGLISH PAPERS RECEIVED BY THE BALTIC.

Monetary Panic in England—Advance in the rate of Interest—Repulse of the Russians at Kars, with a loss of 4,000 killed and wounded—Matters at Sebastopol.

New York, Nov 3. The Collins steamship Baltic, from Liverpool Oct. 20th, arrived at this port at nine o'clock, this morning.

The Baltic encountered heavy westerly gales and heavy seas during eleven consecutive days, being repeatedly reduced to a speed of three miles an hour.

The news by this arrival is important, although we have but few details.

The restrictive measures of the Bank of France were telling upon almost every branch of trade.

Rothschild is to establish an Austrian Bank of Credit, with a mobillier capital of 60,000,000 florins.

A concordant highly favorable to the Church of Rome, was concluded between Austria and the Holy See.

The new Greek ministry announces neutrality, with a reformed administration and execution of obligations to Foreign Powers

Monetary Affairs Perhaps the most important feature of the news relates to the continued agitation of the British and French money markets. The Bank of England has raised its rates of interest to six and seven per cent., and the Bank of France has followed suit in adopting the same rates. The most comprehensive statement is given by the London correspondent of the New York Commercial, who writes Oct. 19:

"Apart from foreign and political news, the state of the money market has again been the grand subject of attention. Although there is reason to hope that the operations of the Bank of France in drawing gold from this side have ceased, and the continental exchanges are now favorable at every point, the Bank of England directors have found it necessary to resort to a further advance in the rate of discount, and have endeavored this time to make it such as shall be final and decisive. They not only raised the rate from 5 1 2 to 6 per cent, as was anticipated, but have distinguished between short and long bills, and have decided not to receive any having more than sixty days to run under seven per cent. In no case are any bills admitted over ninety-five days."

The necessity for the measure is partly attributable to the long continued absence of gold arrivals from Australia, one or two millions sterling being now over due The restriction as to the period for bills to run is believed to have been adopted in order to compel the holders of long paper to go to the discount houses instead of to the Bank, upon which there has lately been a disproportionate pressure. These houses refused advances to their customers, on the prudent plea that the constant rise in the rate prevented them from knowing at what change they might safely let their money out. At the same time, they admitted that if they could be sure the highest point had been reached, they would have no fear in granting abundant accommodation. By putting the rate for long bills up to 7 per cent the Bank have given them reasonable ground to infer that it has at length been carried as high as will be needed.

It was also announced yesterday that the Bank of France have made another advance of one per cent., and that their rate of discount will likewise now be six per cent. This measure renders the course of the Bank of England still more proper, since if our rate had been under the French there would have been a renewed attraction of money from this side.

With regard to the general state of trade, perfect confidence continues to be everywhere manifested, and no one conversant with the effects in this country of such a high rate of discount as six or seven per cent could have believed in the possibility of such steadiness as is manifested. The reason of it consists in the thorough appreciation on the part of the public of the exceptional and temporary nature of the influences in operation.

The accounts of the French harvest are more and more discouraging, and it is consequently with regard to the finances of that country that the chief anxiety is felt. The high rate of discount now adopted, however, will, it is hoped, go a great way to remove all danger. The wheat harvest appears to have fallen short at least 28,000,000 bushels, and the yield of rye presents a similar deficiency

There is a rumor that the Bank of France is desirous of procuring an additional £2,000,000 sterling in gold, and that the future Australian arrivals are likely to be purchased to supply it."

Miscellaneous War Items. The Sebastopol correspondent of the London Times, writing under date of October 5, says: "At present the troops are in excellent health. Our strength is very considerable. It is almost as numerous as that with which the Duke fought the battle of Vittoria. The infantry counts 27,000; the cavalry, 3,500; the artillery, 9,000—in fine, General Simpson has under his command not less than 38,000 effectives of all arms. There are a few things to be complained of."

Numbers of military officers on sick leave in Ireland have received orders to proceed instantly to the Crimea. Several of the gentlemen had to leave without their luggage.

Advices from Marseilles state that great exertions were making to complete the embarkation of an entire division of 10,000 men under General Laubert.

The Verite, of Lille, states that every night during the past week railway trains, conveying troops, have passed through that town from the camp of the North which is now completely at an end. Each of the trains conveyed not less than 700 men. Most of these troops are on their way to the Crimea, and it is difficult to describe the joy and animation which prevail amongst them.

The destruction of Sweaborg in the Baltic is said to have been effected by shells charged with a liquid combustible, the invention of Hutton, the English chemist. The same destructive projectiles were to be used against Odessa. Mr Hutton professes to have discovered another preparation for charging bombshells, of a nature so fearfully destructive to human life that he has resolved not to divulge it.

Advices from St. Petersburg state that an imperial ukase has ordered the levy of the militia in the governments of Orenburg and Samara, at the rate of 23 men per 1000 male souls. The levy is to begin on the 15th November, and is to terminate on the 15th December.

Progress of the War. From Sebastopol we have nothing, with the exception of the following statement of the vast stores that the English have found in the Karabelnaia:

"2222 pieces of cannon, 300,000 bombs and round shot, 30,000 tuns of coal, 3,000,000 rations, engines, anchors, and metals, valued at £70,000, besides arms and clothing."

The following selections give all the additional news:

The correspondence received from the Crimea, describes the sailing of a grand expedition, consisting of 15,000 French, and nearly 4,000 British troops from Balaclava, for a destination imperfectly known in the camp. Telegraphs, however, of a later date, have intimated that the expedition made its appearance, but an appearance only, before Odessa, and later telegraphs announce that on the 15th, a detachment of the allied fleet effected a descent upon the Spit of Kinburn, near the Salt water Lakes. The peninsula at Kinburn is one of the most important military and naval positions on the south coast of Russia, at the mouth of the rivers Boug and Dnieper, and opposite Nicolaieff. The telegraphic dispatch describing the landing of the detachment (and which comes from Nicolaieff, via St. Petersburg,) states "that the number of troops disembarked was inconsiderable. Towards the close of the day six steamers began to cannonade the town of Kinbrun. The fortress, however, replied in such a manner as to keep them at a distance, and damaged one of the steamers"

By their position at Kinburn the allies place in close blockade the naval arsenals and port of Nicolaieff, the towns of Cherson and Berislaff, and the whole region watered by the Dnieper, Boug and Ingul.

St. Petersburg, Oct. 18. A dispatch has been received, stating that the fortress of Kinburn resisted the Allied squadron until the 17th. A sharp fire had been kept up, but at noon on that day the fire ceased, and at 3 o'clock P. M. the enemy (the Allies) entered the place.

An important cavalry engagement at Eupatoria is thus described by Marshal Pelissier, in a dispatch published in the Moniteur:

"A brilliant cavalry engagement took place on the 29th September at Koughill (five leagues northeast of Eupatoria), in which the Russian cavalry under General Korf was completely defeated The action inaugurates very auspiciously the series of operations of which Eupatoria will now be the pivot. As the result of the action, we have taken six guns (three cannon and three mortars), 12 caissons, and one field forge, with their horses and harness; 169 prisoners, of whom one is an officer, and 250 horses. The enemy left on the field about 50 killed, among them Colonel Andreawski, who has the reputation of being a cavalry officer of great merit. We have 6 killed and 29 wounded"

The Russian accounts state that the Russian force concerned in this action was a corps of observation, consisting of a regiment of Lancers and a battery of horse artillery, under Gen. De Korf, and at another point a regiment of Lancers, commanded by Gen. Tervelensky. They had instruction to fall back if attacked by a superior force. Gen. Korf, having lost sight of the enemy, who was pursuing Tervelensky's Lancers, halted and caused his men to dismount. Not having placed videttes in proper order, Korf was surprised by between 2000 and 3000 of the French cavalry appearing suddenly on his rear and right flank, and he had neither time to get his force in order nor prepare for a conflict. The Lancers were therefore compelled to scatter, and fall back fighting. Loss 150 Lancers, a subaltern officer, six guns, and some of the gunners.

A dispatch from Admiral Bruat and a letter from Lieutenant Colonel Reed announce that, on the 24th of September a successful attack was made upon Taman and Phanagoria, in the Straits of Kertch. The expedition consisted of ten gunboats. Bruat says all the houses in Phanagoria were destroyed Sixty-six cannon and four mortars were found at Phanagoria, but were unserviceable. At Taman, eleven twenty-four pounders were found buried in the sand.

Odessa, Oct. 11. A report is in circulation, which, under existing circumstances, does not appear improbable. It is rumored that the Russians intend to abandon the north side of Sebastopol, and to retire to Perekop.

The Daily News says: "We believe that there is no doubt of the fact that General Simpson has resigned his command in the Crimea, and has recommended General Eyre as his successor. The Government, however, have declined to accept General Simpson's resignation"

A commission has been instituted by the Emperor at Kieff, to examine all prisoners from the foreign legions in the service of the Allies They are not to be treated as prisoners of war, but handed over to their respective governments.

Accounts from the Crimea to the 13th state that on the 12th the advanced posts of the Allies were within five leagues of Bakschi Serai; that the Russians were retiring slowly, and that everything led to the belief that General Liprandi intended to defend the line of the Belbec, and to rest upon the corps commanded by Prince Gortschakoff The battle which would definitely decide the possession of this ground was expected shortly to take place.

Other accounts state that the Russians have surrounded the north side of Sebastopol with a chain of new fortifications, and placed it in a state to support a siege. All the plateaus on the north side are, it is said, covered with redoubts and earthquakes, and, on the line of the Belbec, new works, constructed in the form of the Mamelon, have been raised.

The allies are extensively engaged in road making and hut building, not only along the plateau de la Chersonese, but along the Tchernaya line up to Alsa. The line of the railway has been adopted for the main road from Balaclava to the camps in the neighborhood of Sebastopol.

Defeat of the Russians in Asia. The allies have achieved another great victory—the defeat of the Russians before Kars This brilliant affair was achieved by the Turks, under Gen. Williams, an Englishman, who has maintained his position in Asia against unexampled difficulties. A dispatch received by the Ottoman Envoy in London, from the Minister for Foreign Affairs at Constantinople, gives the fullest details of this sanguinary affair:

Constantinople, Oct 13. An official report received from the general commanding at Kars, under date of the 28th ult., announces the following: The Russians had attacked Kars the same day. The combat lasted eight hours; and during the struggle, which could not have been of a more deadly character, the enemy, after repeated efforts made with its full strength, succeeded in entering some of the batteries, but was repulsed with heavy losses. After having made considerable efforts, the Russians were compelled to yield before the courage of our brave soldiers, and to retire in a state of complete confusion. In addition to the dead and wounded removed during the action, 4000 dead were left in the trenches and the environs of the fortress; 100 prisoners were made, and one cannon captured. Our losses amount to 700 or 800 men, among whom we have to deplore the death of several superior officers. The Russians are preparing to retreat, and to abandon the siege.

Hamburg, Oct. 15. A private dispatch has been received here, purporting to be authentic, which states that, in consequence of the defeat of the 29th of September, the Russians are preparing to retreat, having resolved to raise the siege of Kars. The battle was fought with extraordinary animosity on the part of the Russians who confess to only 400 killed.

General Mouravieff, the Russian commander, says: "At the beginning, the attack was successful, but the position and numbers of the enemy forced us to withdraw. Notwithstanding this, and a heavy loss, our troops took fourteen banners and a stand of Colors. The blockade of Kars is re-established."

The account via Trebizond gives more particulars, and states that the Russians were determined to raise the siege. It states that at one time the Russians succeeded in taking two batteries, but before they had time to turn round the guns, or even to spike them, the Turks rushed upon them with such vigor as to regain possession of the batteries, and decide the fortune of the day. The Russians, furiously repulsed, fell back upon their comrades, who were thrown into confusion. The Turks then rushed out of the fortress, and massacred an enormous number. This account states that, though a large number of killed and wounded Russians were removed, four thousand were left dead under the walls. Two hundred were taken prisoners, and some pieces of ordinance captured.

Several Russian officers of high rank were killed or wounded, early in the action, which lasted eight hours.

A telegraphic dispatch has been received at the Brittish Foreign Office from Viscount Stratford de Redcliffe, dated Therapia, Oct. 12, stating that the Russians attacked Kars on the 29th of September, and were repulsed after a conflict of seven hours, with a loss of 2500 killed, and twice that number wounded. Upward of 4000 muskets were left on the field. The loss of the Turks was about 700 killed and wounded.

The London correspondent of the New York Commercial truly says:

"Whatever may be the ultimate result, the present victory is all that was wanted to complete the military humiliation of Russia. From the opening of the war she had been beaten at every point, except in Asia. Elsewhere, whether in entrenchments, as at Cetata or Alma, or in attacking them, as at Olterniza or Inkerman; whether in conducting a siege, as at Sillistria, or in resisting one, as at Sebastopol, every effort throughout a year and a half has been attended by failure. Turks, Sardinians, French and English have all alike resisted her with the same result. It was in Asia alone she could console herself Routed armies and abundant trophies, abandoned by the cowardice or venality of the Turkish leaders, gave monthly opportunities for a Te Deum. But in one day, these glories have been dimmed, and the army that should have been all powerful, if its previous successes had been what they were reported, has been routed by a band of half starved men, whose fate had already been supposed to be beyond redemption."

The Sound Dues. Telegraphic advices from Copenhagen state that the Danish Government has appointed M. Bluhme, the director of the Sound dues administration, to the Danish commissioner at the conferences respecting the Sound dues, which it is proposed to hold in November. The report is confirmed, that Denmark will propose that the dues shall be capitalized for the purpose of redemption.

State of Affairs at Rome. The Roman correspondent of the London Daily News, under date of Rome, Oct 10th—writes:

The anxiety and uneasiness which invariably accompany uncertainty in future prospects just now agitate alike the Romans and their ecclesiastical rulers. Liberals and Papalini look forward with equal hope and fear to some impending change in the system of government, and either party seems to have adopted for its motto, "Mihi cura futuri" The circumstance of either party's being perfectly powerless with respect to the guidance or regulation of the eventful future does not render the question less interesting, and all eyes are directed towards France in the expectation of some practical result growing out of the openly expressed opinion of the allied governments, or the realization—better late than never—of the sentiments concerning the Roman states conveyed in the Emperor Napoleon's celebrated letter to Edgar Ney. The tenacity with which the ecclesiastics cling to their temporal power is ludicrously shown up in a pasquinade which has been going the round of Rome to the great amusement of the people, intimating that, in consequence of the allied governments having come to a determination to work an entire change in the administration of the Roman states, the French general had waited upon the Pope and informed him that it had become absolutely necessary to separate his spiritual from the temporal dominion.

His holiness is represented as answering, "We fully concur in the necessity of the separation you allude to, for the experience of many painful circumstances has convinced us of the impossibility of wielding two such weighty sceptres at once; we therefore cheerfully resign our spiritual authority into your hands, Signor Generale, and shall merely reserve the temporal dominion for ourselves!"

Russia. A letter from St Petersburg says that the Emperor Alexander, in his recent visit to Moscow, not only went with all the Imperial family to the holy places, temples, catacombs, and chapels, kissing the relics of the saints, and prostrating himself before the altars, but, in order to fortify the courage of his army, determined on carrying to it a relic of St. Sergius, consisting of a painted image of the saint from one of the sides of his coffin, which is supposed to be of great sanctity and virtue, and which figured in the wars of the Czars Michael Feodorovitch and Peter I, and that of Moscow in 1812 On giving up the image to the Czar, a grand religious ceremony took place, and the Metropolitan in the course of it made the following solemn appeal to the saint:

"Saint Sergius!—Thou gavest thy blessing to Prince Dimitri, to the Czar Michael, Peter, and Alexander I. Look down favorably on the Czar Alexander Nicolaiewitch, who comes to demand from thee thy holy image, in order to show it to his army as the sacred mark of thy prayers of benediction and protection. Cease not to pray to God to pardon our sins, for which we have merited chastisement, that He will bless our most pious Czar and his army, and that He will give him victory which will make peace, and a victorious peace.' The Czar, on receiving the image, reverently kissed it.

The emperor has taken the image in question with him to the South.

Notices.

[illegible] recommended a few weeks since [illegible] of the Preachers, is now written, [illegible] to the publisher's as soon as pledges are received sufficient to warrant the undertaking. As this is a gift to the cause except the actual expense, I do not feel it duty to borrow $4 or 500, and be compelled to peddle my own productions to get out of debt. If the preaching Brn. interested would just name the thing to the Churches, and get some one or more in each place to pledge themselves for 10, 15, or 20, as they may choose, it will save the trouble of getting single subscribers at 50 cts. each.—Such a course would secure the object at once. 1,000 books will cost about $400. 50 pledges, 20 each, will warrant the undertaking. I have received pledges for over 100 without any effort. Now this is a short and easy method, and if done soon, the work will soon appear, and the Nos. be sent to those who pledge, for distribution.

Dies Iræ.

A friend has sent us the concluding piece from a little volume of poems by the Rev. Dr. S. Dryden Phelps, of New Haven, soon to be published by Sheldon, Lamport and Blakeman, of this city, under the title of "Sunlight and Hearthlight, or Fidelity, and other Poems."—The piece which has been sent to us is a close translation of the celebrated Latin Hymn entitled Dies Iræ. The Dies Iræ has often been translated, but never, we believe, to the complete satisfaction of the translator. Its condensed, simple, rugged sublimity cannot be adequately represented in any other language. Dr. Phelps' version is as follows:—

I.

Day of wrath! that day appalling!
When the world in fire is falling!
Ancient prophecy recalling.

II.

Ah! what dread dismay impending!
When the Judge shall be descending,
Searching eye o'er all things bending!

III.

Lo! the trump, in thunder pealing,
Calls the dead, their tombs unsealing,
Up to God, His throne revealing!

IV.

Death amazed, and Nature quaking,
See the crowds, their graves forsaking,
Swift their way to judgment taking!

V.

Opened are the solemn pages,
Where are writ the deeds of ages;
Whence the world await their wages.

VI.

Now, the Judge His seat maintaining,
Hidden things in light arraigning,
Naught is unavenged remaining.

VII.

Ah! what then shall I say, quailing!
Who for me shall plead, prevailing,
When the just man's heart is failing!

VIII.

King of glorious exaltation!
Thou, the saved, dost give salvation;
Save me, Fount of consolation!

IX.

Jesus! ne'er forget me, sighing
O'er my sins, thy grief supplying:
Lose me not that day all trying!

X.

Weary, waiting, Thou hast sought me,
On the Cross from death hast bought me;
Be not vain what thou hast wrought me!

XI.

Righteous Judge! dread vengeance bearing,
Let me pardon free be sharing,
Ere that day of doom declaring!

XII.

All condemned, my guilt lamenting,
Of my faults in shame repenting;
Spare the suppliant, Lord, relenting!

XIII.

Thy forgivness Mary showing,
Mercy to the robber flowing,
Hope on me thou art bestowing.

For the Crisis

Notes of a sermon preached at Worcester Conference, June 6th, 1855.

By Eld. M. Grant.

I need help from God, while I attempt to speak to you to-day. We have entered a very critical point of time in our history, and the most important part of our work at the present time is, to see that we are in possession of the right spirit. I think we are in more danger of getting into a wrong spirit, than wrong theories. It may be the most profitable for me to speak on practical religion. We all know that if we have not charity or love, our professions of religion, are all good for nothing. You may give all your goods to feed the poor, and your bodies to be burned, and if you have not love in your hearts, which prompted the actions, it amounts to nothing. I see more and more clearly, that to possess a Christian spirit, we can have no spirit of war, of fight in us. We are in danger from wrong theories, as well as a wrong spirit; so we need to cling closely to the word of God, to be preserved from both. I will therefore present a few passages of Scripture for your consideration.

Luke 6: 46. "And why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" Matt. 28: 19, 20. "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, * * * Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

If we are to go and teach all nations, what shall we teach? Teach what the Master has told us to teach. And what instruction has He given us in this matter? Matt. 5: 16. "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." 19. "Whosoever shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven: but whosoever shall do and teach them, the same shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven."

I do not want to teach any thing but what my Master would have me teach.—O Lord, teach me what I shall do and say. Owing to our present position, a feeling of watchfulness has come over us. We are commanded to let our light shine before men. Have we got any? Certainly. I think, if there is anything wanting, at the present time, it is practical christianity. There are theories enough, for it is confusion, confounded. I am sick of them, I want something that will give me a passport into the kingdom. He that feareth and serveth God with the whole heart, will go into it.

V. 48. "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father in heaven is perfect." That trims pretty closely. Are we to be perfect Gods? No! Are you a perfectionist? Yes. Noah was perfect in his generation. Job was a perfect and upright man. So Zachariah and Elizabeth walked in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord, blameless.

We ought to set our standard of Christian character higher than we have done. We are so full of theories in the head, that our religion lacks power and vitality. In the palmy days of Methodism, there was a power in their religion.

I am afraid we do not pray as much as we used to. I have often been asked, "what will you do if your time passes without witnessing the Advent of the Lord?" I have always said, I will try and live as well as I know how. I mean to try and serve the Lord forever. I mean to have the practical part of the Gospel; and nothing short of it will make us right for the kingdom.

But to the command of Christ to be perfect. I have a watch. It is made to keep time. It is perfect in its sphere as a watch. I might have a green apple; it is a perfect green apple; but it may grow to be a perfect ripe one. A little child may be perfect in its sphere, and it may grow up to be a man. So we may grow up into a perfect man in Christ Jesus. We are to be as perfect in our sphere as Christians, as the Angels are in theirs.

Some seem to think that when we come to the position that our sins are all forgiven, there can be no progression.—But it is not so; when my Father forgave my sins, He made perfect work. We are to leave the first principles of the doctrine of Christ, and go on to perfection. Are we making progress towards it? I do not believe in making every thing of time.—Perhaps some may think that because the time has passed, our religion has also passed; but I trust that such will not be the case. I am going to preach practical religion. I can preach something besides the 19th of May. There is something else left. I think we are on the rock still, and the only way to stay there, is to stand upon Christ Jesus. Believing in '54 will not make a man a Christian. I have often feared that some thus believing would never enter the kingdom of God, from a lack of Christian character. We may become pure in heart. There is music in that word, PURE. Pure religion and undefiled before God, is to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and keep himself unspotted from the world.—The words of the Savior, I am to teach. He has given instruction in the giving of alms. He says, "Take heed that ye do not your alms before men, to be seen of them; * * but when thou doest alms, let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth." We are in danger of going contrary to this sentiment.

It is often the case that individuals when about to do anything which is a little out of the ordinary course, try to be seen of men, or have men know that they did it. It may be so done in many ways; in the production of the pen, as well as every thing else. The feeling comes up, I want to have folks understand that I got this thing up, or, I wrote that book, &c. It is a puffing up of pride, which makes people think so much of self. I am glad God is humbling every soul of us; and I hope we will all of us get behind the great rock, and hide ourselves in the dust, that in due time we may be exalted. I am afraid there may have been a wrong in our manner of giving alms. If you have anything to give, throw it in, and let no one know where it came from.

Matt. 7: 1, 2. "Judge not, that ye be not judged. For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged; and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again." Suppose you have wood to sell, and in loading it, you pile it up in every way, so as to make it measure more; is that right? There is danger—look out—see that you are honest in all your dealings with your fellow men. If we are going into the kingdom, we have got to be very humble. I am glad we have been humbled; let us remain thus in humility.

But some are disposed to bring up the iron bedstead to stretch people on. Some said, "you must come up to the '54 theory, or you will be lost," or, "you must go with us, if you would be saved." Some are called foolish virgins who do not follow in the train that they start. I think we lack wisdom, we all want knocking into pi, as the printers say. We have got up too high. I want knocking down, and let us be thus melted, so as to make one impression in Christ; and not have a few great Is sticking up. I am glad this kind of feeling is coming up, that we may get hold of the right end of things and not let go.

"Judge not; for with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged." I have known persons living in licentiousness who said they enjoyed the religion of Christ.

Knowledge is not judgment. I may know that an individual is guilty, of gross wickedness; but it is not judging, to call him a wicked man. Judge nothing before the time. But, says one, I am not going to fellowship iniquity! Neither am I.—But shall we let the wicked remain among us? The Master says, let the tares and wheat grow together till the harvest. I have seen tares growing among the wheat, and I have seen people try to pull out the tares; but they made poor work of it.—We must let these things be. Let both grow together till the harvest. The wheat may stand the firmer.

"For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged. And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, and considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye?"

I once saw a picture of a man having a beam, sticking out of his eye, while he was trying to get a mote out of his brother's eye. It is not christianity thus to act. Had Christ acted on that principle, we should all be lost.

You may see a brother going in the wrong path, and if you want to have him pursue it, just shew him the cold shoulder; treat him with neglect. We are in danger on this point. Get the beams out of our own eyes, and then we can see clearly to get the mote out of the brother's eye. We are too apt to have our hands over the fence in the brother's garden, pulling up a few little weeds, while they are growing to the shoulders in our own garden.—But if you keep your own garden free from weeds, a neighbor comes along, and looking at it says, how well your garden looks! He thinks of his own weedy garden, and goes home, and improves its appearance by a removal of the weeds.

If you want to make your children cross and ugly, be so yourself. We ought, as parents, to be just like a perfect mirror, reflecting a perfect character all the time. Do not prosecute a brother for trespass, and say, I will not have this man do so, thus to run over me; but rather pray, Father, forgive him.

If we have not the Spirit of Christ, we are none of his. There are some who can profess to be looking for the coming of Christ, who seem to be filled with the spirit of hatred and strife; Such is not the spirit of the Master.

I have suffered as a teacher in school, by not being so kind as I ought to be. I was often finding fault with the scholars, which did not make them do any better, but rather the worse. Parents, if you want to have good children, be good yourselves. Children will not go forth from the home of their childhood, cursing father and mother, without there was something wrong in their training. Let us look out for these little matters. If we have vital godliness in our hearts, God will never leave us.

Now, friends, be sure and get all the beams out of your own eyes, and then you will see clearly. I have not always lived as I should; I am going to try to live this out myself.

Matt. 18: 15. "Moreover if thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone." If it read, go and tell of it, how many would say, "ah yes, I will run with it." You tell some one something about this brother, and he goes to others, and soon the whole band is in trouble. This is all wrong. Let us do the things Jesus has told us to do, or no longer call Him Master. If thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him first, between thee and him alone. Is not that doing as you would be done by? But it is crossing, I do not want to do it. I suppose Christ did not want to come down to earth to lay down His life, but He did it. In your difficulties with brethren, have you lived up to this command? If not, then do not call Him Lord, unless you go about it immediately. Is not such the requirement of the Lord? But—can I not send, and not go myself? Go, if you can, yourself; but if it is impossible, be sure and send by a right person. When you go, be careful how you tell him. Do not tell him in such a manner as to aggravate him, and thus make the matter worse.—If you go in the spirit of Christ, there is not one in a thousand who would do any other way than melt under it. I think we have been split up into fragments from a neglect of this command. But, says one, the difficulty is such that I cannot go to him, unless I violate my principles. I am not going to violate them. It is from a want of the Spirit of Christ, that these things have been neglected. We may make professions of having great and glorious principles to stand up for, and make them long and loud; but what does it amount to, if the trouble still remains?—Go and pray for him first of all; then go to him, and "if he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother." If he will not hear thee, then take with thee one or two more. If you gain him in the first instance, nobody knows anything about it. You can pray, and he too, if in the right spirit. You have committed one sin, and he another; now do not be too hard with him. Get the beam out first, and God will help you to see things as they are, in the simplicity of truth.

How oft shall my brother trespass against me and I forgive him? I have been to him seven times, is not that enough? No! go until seventy times seven. God is long-suffering, and it is salvation to you, and may be to him; therefore manifest the same.

You expect your children will feel and look and act some like yourself. If you have the Spirit of your Father, you will look like Him. It is to forgive and forget. The Savior has given us an example of a man who owed his lord, ten-thousand talents, and because he had nothing to pay, his lord had compassion on him and forgave him the debt: but he went out, and found one of his fellow servants who owed him about 15 dollars. He takes him by the throat saying, pay me what thou owest? He asks for mercy, but he cast him into prison, till he should pay him the debt. The lord of that servant, hears of it, calls him, and because he manifested such an unforgiving spirit towards his fellow servant, delivered him to the tormentors, till he should pay what was due. "So likewise shall your heavenly Father do unto you, if ye from your hearts, forgive not every one his brother their trespasses." In the course of my experience, I found a man who wanted to get religion, but did not seem to get hold of it. I told him he must forgive every man, whatever he may have against him. He said, there is one man, I cannot forgive, never can. He stopped there in seeking religion, and never can go any farther, unless he comes to this point. It is time we look at these things. So likewise shall your Heavenly Father do unto you, if you from your hearts forgive not.

Says one, I will forgive when he asks for it. Is that Bible doctrine? Mark 11: 25 "When ye stand praying, forgive, if ye have ought against any." But I will wait till he comes and asks forgiveness. No, when ye stand praying, forgive; not wait—that your Father also which is in heaven may forgive your trespasses. That is a good reason, Master, I will forgive.

Our fellow men may have in their trespass against us said many hard things, and so have we against them; and if God has shown us our wrongs, we should be first to make reparation.

But, says one, I am not going back there, to make confession. Take care! take care! It is very easy to have every thing destroyed now. Be careful about putting up bars, and saying what you will and what you will not do. Let us be careful also about indulging in a hard spirit. I have no sympathy with such a spirit, among the time folks, or any other people. I pray there may be nothing hard, during all this meeting. Such a spirit among us seems worse than any where else. I am not going to make out that we are better than everybody else, that we are right, and every body else wrong. Some Br. may say some things which are wrong.—It is not best to condemn a man for the first hard thing. If he is backslidden in heart, help him to return to our Father's house; forgive him, even to seventy times seven. Let us have the spirit of Caleb and Joshua, who were actuated by another spirit. Let us work while the day lasts. There are always enough to turn back to Egypt, without our being of the number. If I ever should get backslidden, I hope you would get round me and help me up again. O be like the good Samaritan.—Just as quick to help enemies as friends. If you have the Spirit of Christ, you will love everybody; enemies, as well as friends; and will try to do them good, to get them right. You will not try to get up a prejudice against them. I am satisfied if we live up to these things, God will bless us.

When therefore ye stand praying, forgive: and let us remember that if we do not forgive, neither will our Father in heaven forgive us, our trespasses. You cannot love your enemies, till you become a Christian! You cannot get up a counterfeit love. I am glad the Devil cannot counterfeit it. "Therefore when thou bringest thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee, leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way, first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift." Now do not say, Lord, Lord, any more, unless you intend to to do what He says.

Another word about forgiving before it is asked for. The Savior, when on the cross, said of His murderers, "Father forgive them, for they know not what they do!" He did not wait to have them ask forgiveness.

Stephen did the same. When being stoned, he cried, "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge." Hence I think it is duty to forgive, even before it is asked.

God help us to live up to all these glorious truths of the Gospel and thus be ready for the coming judgment. Amen.

Letter from Br. S. H. Waldron.

Dear Brother Merriam:—I prize your paper very highly, inasmuch as it advocates the tangible and literal truths of the bible, and in the right spirit which leads into all truth. I am sorry to find Brn. and Srs. so remiss in responding to your just call for short and spirited communications for its columns.

I have great reason to thank God and take new courage, that I have yet an opportunity to make my calling and election sure. The tenth day of the 7th month is now past again, but my disappointment bears no comparison to that which I suffered in the fall of '44 and '54. My faith on this fall has been according to the evidence that I have had; if the commandment went forth in the fall of 446 B. C., we must run to the fall of 445 B. C. to get the first year of the vision of the 70 weeks and 2300 days (which I believe to be inseparably connected,) and so on down to the fall of 1855, for the 2300. After all that has been said of the decree, 445 appears to be the true date; for the 2d ch. of Nehemiah in my Bible commences with 446, and ends with 445.

Again; if this chronology be correct, the vision must speak at the same time next year at which it commences, whether it be Spring or fall. I still believe in a literal Jesus born in a manger—subject to his parents until He was about 30, when He was annointed to preach the Gospel—suffered on the Cross—was buried in the heart of the earth—arose on the third day—after forty days passed into heaven, from whence we look for this same Jesus to come in like manner to earth again, as He was seen to ascend from the earth.

I, for one, could never rightly appreciate this great and glorious plan of salvation. The resurrection seems to be the very essence, so to speak, of the Christian's hope. O what a subject to contemplate, that poor, sinful, mortal man will not always be as the beast of the field that perisheth; but be raised at the last day, with good old Job, to see God in his flesh, and once more become a material and conscious living soul, but immortal; for this mortal must put on immortality, when these vile bodies of ours shall be fashioned like unto Christ's glorious body, to sin and die no more.

Blessed is he that attaineth unto the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power. Then we shall live and reign with Christ a thousand years, when He delivers up the kingdom to God the Father, and becomes subject to the Father, that God may be all in all.

I think, if any one will take a little pains and carefully compare the 3d and 34th vs. of the 4th ch. of Dan. with the 26th v. of the 6th ch. and 14th of the 7th, there may be some additional light obtained in reference to this thousand years spoken of by Peter and John the Revelator, which I understand by Peter to be the day of the Lord, and by John to be the first resurrection, or resurrected state, in the which they neither marry nor are given in marriage. Withal, please compare 1 Thess. 15: 24 with Dan. 6: 26, last clause, and you will notice that kingdom and dominion run parallel from generation to generation, and both are everlasting. The kingdom shall not be destroyed, and His dominion shall not pass away; but still it shall be even unto the end—of what else but a thousand years? I will now leave this subject as a question for your consideration.

I think if we look at the present unparalleled strife among the nations of the earth in the light of divine truth, we shall not fail to see that the kingdoms of this world are soon to become the Kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ, when He takes to himself His great power and reigns. I will now draw to a close by saying that the end is emphatically nearer than when we first believed.—Though the vision tarry beyond our time, we should patiently wait; for at the appointed time it will speak and not lie.

For The Crisis.

Letter from Br. A. Ross.

Fairfield, Oct., 29th, 1855.

Dear Br. Merriam:—I am yet looking with anxiety for the return of Him who was slain, to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing. And O how much to be desired is the event, when creation's Jubilee will be proclaimed and the tenants of the dust that have so long been sown in dishonor, will be raised in power, and glory.

Any reliable evidence that that day is near, must be most welcome to the pilgrim's heart, and such evidence in abundance is afforded us. Therefore, amid the widespread infidelity of the nineteenth century, we can lift up our heads knowing that our redemption is at hand. O how expressive is the term Redemption! in its adaptation to the Church. Redemption from what? From sin, that blighting scourge, which has spread its blandishments over a world once fair, leaving every thing which has received a touch from its poisoned wand to moulder and decay—from pinching want that tearless tyrant who delights to sport with human misery, nor feels one emotion of compassion—from the hand of oppression—that legalized assassin, who glories in obtaining the monopoly over others, and even to reduce his fellow man, concerning whom it is said, "He made of one blood all the nations" of the world, to the condition of a chattel; and last of all, from death that enemy of all animate things, under whose malignant power the fairest countenance fades—the musculararm falls paralyzed—the robust constitution breaks, and man goes to his long home, and mourners are left to go about the streets.

I do rejoice that the bright day of eternal blessedness is dawning. The dark shades of night are to be chased away forever, and morn, bright morn, resplendent with immortal beauties, will greet the entombed millions of earth with the anthem "awake, and sing, ye that dwell in the dust; for your dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out her dead."

"My longing heart cries out, O come;
Creation groans for thee:
The weary pilgrim cries, O come,
Bring immortality."

For The Crisis.

Letter from Br. S. C. Moses.

Oct. 27th, 1855.

Dear Br. Merriam:—A few weeks since I thought I must sleep for a little while with my Sister Hannah, and Brother Joseph, and others who, though not kinsmen, are dear to memory, because their flesh, also, rests in hope. While they lived they were pilgrims and strangers, and were persuaded of the things we hope for, and embraced them, "not accepting deliverance;" for they "looked for a city that hath foundations"—which should endure forever. They saw, even as we see, that "The best beloved of earth

Not long survive to-day, and they longed for a country where the inhabitants should no more say, "I am sick."

But I am this morning among the living to praise the Lord, and am gradually recovering my strength at the house of Br. Matthias, in Pompton, N. J, where I was taken sick, and for a short time thought I could not live, and sent my Brn. word at New York to be ready to meet me at the resurrection.

But I had rather live till the Lord comes, and be changed with my Brn. from mortality to immortality, and with them look upon "The King in His beauty"—all of which I believe we shall speedily realize, if faithful.

Your Br. in Christ.

S. C. Moses.

Appropriate to all. "It is distrust of God," says Bishop Patrick, "to be troubled about what is to come; impatience against God, to be troubled with what is present: and anger at God, to be troubled for what is past."

For The Crisis.

Exposition of the 12th, 13th and 17th Chapters of Revelation.

BY DR. A. DECKER.

Taking leave of chapter 12 for the present, I now come to the consideration of the 13th chap. "And I stood upon the sand of the sea, and saw a beast rise up out of the sea, having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns, and upon his head the name of the blasphemy And the beast which I saw was like unto a leopard, and his feet were as the feet of a bear, and his mouth as the mouth of a lion; and the Dragon gave him his power, and his seat, and great authority." Vs. 1, 2.

The sea, and earth, are so frequently spoken of in conjunction in this book, as to prove that, they represent two distinct parts of the Roman territory under quite different circumstances. The four winds were not to "blow on the earth, nor on the sea." "The four angels to whom it was given to hurt the earth, and the sea," were commanded, to hurt not the earth, neither the sea! (7: 1—3.) Wo to inhabitants of the earth and of the sea! (12: 12.) "The first angel sounded, and there followed hail and fire mingled with blood, and they were cast upon the earth. And the second angel sounded, and as it were a great mountain burning with fire was cast into the sea." (8: 7, 8;) see also ch. 5: 13; and 16: 2, 3. As John is here represented as standing upon the sand of the sea, and seeing the beast rise up out of the sea, it is important to understand, what part of the Roman Empire is here figured. By examining the following texts, Job 38: 8–11; Prov. 8: 29; Jer. 5: 22, it will readily be discovered, that, the earth sustains the same relation to the sea, that a nation in power, does to another, over which its power is exercised. As the earth surrounds and sets bounds to the raging and tumultuous sea beyond which its waves cannot pass; so does one nation set bounds to another, over which it rules. Thus, in the 7th of Dan. four beasts are represented as coming up from a boisterous sea; not all at once, but, one coming up at a time, and succeeding each other.

The earth, at first, is introduced as a vast sea without bounds. But, when the Kingdom of Babylon, symbolized by the first beast like a lion, rose into power, the waters began to be gathered together and the bounds of the sea were set. Here the Kingdom of Babylon with its territory proper, became "the earth:" while the Medes and Persians, &c., whose territory bordered that of Babylon, and was subject to her rule, are represented as being the sea, i. e. in a submerged condition—under her dominion. But when the Medes and Persians, symbolized by the bear, came up from the sea, it was, by the conquest of Babylon. Hence the kingdom, and territory of the Medes and Persians, are now represented by the earth, by which, the Macedonian kingdom is bounded and held in subjection; and so on, until the fourth kingdom (Rome) came up from the sea, by conquering, and subjecting the Macedonian empire, symbolized by the leopard beast, and making it a Roman province. From this onward, the empire of Rome proper, is symbolized by "the earth;" while the Greek empire thus bounded and inundated, is symbolized by "the sea." From the above, it will be perceived that, the territory of the ruling power, is always meant by "the earth." The earth then, represents the western, or Roman empire proper; and the sea, the eastern, or Greek empire; or that territory that constituted the third kingdom of the book of Daniel. This is proved by the sounding of the two first Angels of ch. 8: 7, 8. That which followed the sounding of the first Angel, fell, mostly, upon the western empire (the earth) and denoted the irruption, and depredations, of the Goths, under the famous conduct of Alaric, who began his incursions in the year 395.—He carried blood and fire throughout Italy, besieged Rome, and was bought off at an exorbitant price; besieged it again, took and plundered the city, and set fire to it in several places. That which followed the sounding of the second Angel, represented by a "burning mountain cast into the sea," fell upon the eastern empire.—After the Goths, the next ravages were by Attila at the head of the Huns. They wasted Thrace, Macedonia, and Greece, put all to fire and the sword, and compelled Theodosius 2d to purchase a shameful peace. Although the Huns afterwards carried their depredations into Italy, still, the prophecy follows them no further than they effected the eastern empire—the sea—thus, keeping the prophetic history distinct, and from danger of being confused.

Having determined what part of the empire is meant by the "sea," we are now prepared to contemplate the position of John standing upon the sand of the sea, i. e., on the intermediate line between the eastern and western empires; the most favorable position to see what transpired in both, and to give us a correct history of the same. Moreover, we are now informed from what division of the empire to look for the coming of the leopard beast up out of the sea, the second time; for the description and circumstances are such as to leave no justifiable doubt, that the leopard beast denotes a kingdom that rises up from the same territory that was originally comprised in the leopard beast kingdom of Dan. 7th; with this exception, that this kingdom will contain in addition, a small part of the territory of Babylon, and of Media and Persia—denoted by the "feet of a bear," and "mouth of a lion"—an allusion to the symbols of those two kingdoms.

The "leopard beast" kingdom, also, when it rises up the second time as seen by John, has the addition of three heads, making seven in all—and ten horns.—These heads, however, do not all exist at the same time, as was the case before, but succeed each other in rule, which is clearly proved in ch. 17: 10. "And there are seven kings; five are fallen, and one is, and the other is not yet come; and when he cometh, he must continue a short space." The Greek, or Macedonian empire became a Roman province, after the conquest of Syria, Macedonia and Egypt, and continued for about five hundred and six years. Then a kingdom rose up the second time, out of the same Greek empire, denoted by the leopard beast of ch. 13th; and which succeeded to the dominion of the western Roman empire, symbolized by the Dragon of ch. 12th—as the Medes succeeded to the kingdom of Babylon, and so on—an established law in the fulfilment of prophecy.

Constantine removed the seat of the imperial government "from Rome to Byzantium, in A. D. 328, and consecrated it as Constantinople in A. D. 330." But the removing of the seat of government, did not affect the western empire, as being the dominant power—the Greek empire still remaining a province. But it was the first circumstance, however, that paved the way for the fall of the Roman Empire and the rise of the leopard beast, or the Greek empire, from its inundated "(sea") state to the dominion. Theodosius the Great, succeeded to the throne in A. D. 379, and he was the last that reigned over both the east and the west. Although the empire had been variously divided, at times previously, yet the east and the west, down to Theodosius, had been more or less blended together in the imperial reign.—But, "before his decease, he divided the empire between his two sons, assigning the west to Honorius, and the east to Arcadias." From this era they became two distinct empires, and continued to the fall of the western empire by the irruption and depredations of nothern barbarian nations. Although, from A. D. 395, the Greek empire was separate and independent from the west, and quite equal in power, yet, we cannot date the rise of the leopard beast, until a much later period.—The point demanded to fulfil the prophecy is, where the east, or Greek empire, shall succeed or rise to the dominion of the west, so as to become the only ruling power. The Medes and Persians, for instance, for some considerable time before the conquest of Babylon, were an independent kingdom, and quite equal in power to the latter; but yet they were not denoted by the beast as coming up from the sea, until they had completed the conquest of that kingdom, and had thereby succeeded to the "dominion." It was particularly so with the Romans, before they succeeded to the dominion of the Greek empire. The rise of the leopard beast, however, is definitely marked in the prophecy:—"And the Dragon gave him his power, and his seat, and great authority." This explains, in a very clear manner, what is to be understood by a beast coming up out of the sea.

The Roman empire became excessively weakened in consequence of its position, which favored the project of the Carbarians, who, from this period, poured in like a torrent upon the western empire, which in a very few years was completely overwhelmed. The extinction of the Roman empire occurred A. D. 476, upon the taking of Rome by Odoacer, king of the Heruli. "Romulus Augustulus was then on the throne, and Odoacer, after taking the Capital, spared his life only upon condition of his resigning the empire." We have now come to where the leopard beast takes his "rise up out of the sea," (eastern empire,) and the Dragon (western empire) by voluntary act, which is plainly required to fulfil the prediction—"gives him his power, and his seat, and great authority."

The following extract will show the fulfilment of this part of the prophecy, in a most clear and striking manner.

After the resignation of Romulus, "the submissive people of Italy were prepared to obey, without a murmur, the authority which he (Odoacer) should condescend to exercise as the vicegerent of the Emperor of the west. But Odoacer had determined to abolish that useless and expensive office; and such is the weight of antique prejudice, that it required some boldness and penetration to discover the extreme facility of the enterprise. The unfortunate Augustulus was made the instrument of his own disgrace. He signified his resignation to the senate, and that assembly, in their last act of obedience to a Roman Prince, still affected the spirit of freedom and the forms of the constitution. An epistle was addressed by their unanimous decree, to the emperor Zeno; who had lately been restored, after a short rebellion, to the Byzantine throne. They solemnly disclaim the necessity, or even the wish, to continue any longer the Imperial succession in Italy: since, in their opinion, the majesty of a sole monarch is sufficient to pervade and protect, at the same time, both the east and the west In their own name, and in the name of the people, they consent that the seat of universal empire shall be transferred from from Rome to Constantinople; and they hereby renounce the right of choosing their own master, the only vestige that yet remained of the authority which had given laws to the world. The Republic might safely confide in the civil and military virtues of Odoacer and they humbly request, that the Emperor would invest him with the title of Patrician and the administration of the diocese of Italy.—"His (Zeno's) vanity was gratified by the title of sole Emperor, and by the statutes erected to his honor in the several quarters of Rome; and he gratefully accepted the imperial ensign, the sacred ornaments of the throne and palace which the barbarians were not unwilling to remove from the sight of the people." Gibbon vol. 3. It is from this period that we must date the rise of the leopard beast or Greek empire; and I know of no prophecy that has had a more perfect and striking fulfilment, than is here shown. By a voluntary act—as the prophecy clearly indicates, on the part of the Dragon, he gives to the leopard beast, "his power, and his seat, and great authority;" and thus fulfils the prophecy in the most extended sense. But, although we are to date the rise of the leopard beast at this era, (A. D. 476) we are not to suppose this is to mark the commencement of any of the prophetic periods.—The commencement of the prophetic periods, however, are definitely marked in the prophecy, quite as much so as the rise of the beast, which is one event, and his receiving "a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies, and power to make war (Marg.) forty and two months, on the saints," quite another, and subsequent event. From this era, the emperors of the east maintained their authority in Rome; and, although the Dragon had given "his power, seat, and authority," to the beast, yet he had been quite careful not to make a surrender of himself—for, "they worshipped the Dragon which gave power unto the beast; and they worshipped the beast." This worship, it will be seen, is after the rise of the beast and the surrender of the power of the Dragon.—Hence, the Dragon, although he no longer retains the dominion, has his life prolonged for a season and a time, (See Dan. 7: 12) this worship, of course is secular, i. e. an obedience to the civil laws.

Such, therefore, is the concord of the laws of the Dragon with those of the beast, that they are enabled to obey the former without violating, in the least, the laws of the latter. And thus the Dragon continues to run parallel with the beast, being represented by the Heruli, Goths and Lombards, which succeeded each other in Italy, until the Lombards were finally subdued by the victorious arms of Charlemagne, emperor of the French.—The Lombards—the last barbarian kingdom in Italy, were decidedly a Dragon kingdom; and were held by the Catholics as being the most filthy and detestable of all nations; and even down to the time of their subversion, all Catholics were forbidden to make with them marriage contracts. (See Neander's Church History, v. 3, p. 120.) Having now ascertained definitely the rise of the leopard beast, we are prepared to follow out the remainder of the chapter.

Many have connected the "1260" years with the immediate rise of the beast; but a careful examination, I think, will satisfy all that this is not required to fulfil the prophecy. His commencing to "make war on the saints," &c., is, certainly, a subsequent event to his rise, and how long subsequent, is to be determined by the fulfilment of the prophecy.

The same principle pertains to the little horn of Dan. 7th, which denotes the same kingdom symbolized by the leopard beast, and sufficiently proved by the fact that both represent a kingdom that arises out of the Roman empire, that speaks "great things against the Most High," and "blasphemies," and that "makes war with the saints" for a definite period of time. The rise of the "horn" is the first event in the division of the Roman enpire; and subsequently, "the saints were given into his hand for a time, and times, and the dividing of times." The division of the Roman empire into ten kingdoms, must be reckoned as early as the time of its subversion by Odoacer; since there was no empire to divide after that event; for the last vestige of Roman rule there ended.—And these horns were to arise out of the head of the "beast," or empire. If we were to date the rise of any of these horns, eight or ten years after the fall of the empire we might carry it much further, and have twenty horns instead of ten.—A. D. 477, then, is the era of the rise of the little horn, and of the leopard beast. The fact attested by universal history, that with the Greek empire commenced the war or persecution of the saints, is sufficient evidence of the correctness of this application. It was with the Greek empire, therefore, that the Woman (Church) first committed fornication on her arriving at her wilderness state; and subsequently, with the seven heads, or, seven Kings; which became the agents or heads of this empire, by virtue of their sustaining the same relation to the Woman. I have already, I think, advanced sufficient evidence to prove the Woman that flew into the wilderness, to mean the nominal Church. A word or two more, here, however, may not be superfluous. The Jews, when they had committed fornication with the heathen nations around them, were driven from their city and dispersed in the countries, which, in the Bible, is not unfrequently called a wilderness. Indeed, such was the wilderness in which John the Baptist dwelt—"crying, make straight the way of the Lord." Job, also, describes the wilderness as a place befitting the wicked. See Job 24: 4, 5. If the Woman represents a Church, so must the wilderness represent the state and condition of the Church; and John has given us sufficient evidence to prove the Woman he saw in the wilderness represented the nominal Church. Therefore, it is to her, the wilderness belongs in its symbolical signification—she is in the wilderness.

It is true, the Holy city began to be trodden under foot, at the same point of time, the Woman arrived to the wilderness, and form this unholy union with the kings," Indeed, the two events are [illegible] arably connected together, from the [illegible] ture and circumstances.

The nominal Church is represented [illegible] "a Woman arrayed in purple and [illegible] color," &c., while the true Church [illegible] resented by a "Holy city" trodden [illegible] foot, during the same period [illegible]

The next event, though [illegible] verse of this chapter, (after the rise of the beast) is that which marks the commencement of the 1260 years. This event also, is definitely marked in the book of Daniel, and several other places in this book; all of which will be referred to, to enable us to understand, definitely, this point.

V. 3. "And there was given unto him a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies; and power was given unto him to make war (Marg. Whiting) forty and two months."

V. 4. "And it was given unto him to make war with the saints, and to overcome them; and power was given him over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations." As the beast had a mouth like a lion when he rose up out of the sea, the mouth here spoken of therefore must be an additional one, which must sustain the relation to him of an agent or prophet.

This is clearly illustrated and proved from the following. Jer. 15: 19. "Thou shalt be as my mouth." Ex. 4: 16.—"And he (Aaron) shall be thy spokesman unto the people; and he shall be to thee instead of a mouth." "And the Lord said unto Moses, see, I have made thee a Lord unto Pharaoh, and Aaron shall be thy prophet." Here a mouth is explained to be a Prophet. Hence, "the Lord spake by the mouth of his holy Prophets."—The Prophets, therefore, were the mouth of the Lord to speak unto the people, "thou shalt be as my mouth." In Rev. 2: 20, the Church of Rome is unquestionably, the antitype to Jezebel the Prophetess. The Woman Jezebel, also, in vs. 31, 32, is shown to be guilty of fornication; and in ch. 17: 2, it is incontrovertibly proved that, those who committed fornication with her, were the leopard beast with its seven heads or kings. The Church of Rome—not the Pope—is thus demonstrated to be, the mouth or Prophet given to beast. We are to date, therefore, the commencement of the 1260 years, from where the leopard beast or Greek kingdom, perpetrated the first act of fornication with the Church; and the nominal Church first began to sustain the relation of a mouth or prophet to that Kingdom. That the Church did sustain this relation with the Greek empire and its seven heads, is a fact witnessed to by universal history The councils and synods of the Church, were, in the most extended sense, used as the mouth of the empire. All the ecclesiastical and many of the civil laws were decreed by the synods of the Church, assembled by the command of the emperors and kings, for this express purpose. Therefore as the commandments and laws of God were promulgated through the Prophets, so were the ecclesiastical, and many of the civil laws of the empire promulgated through the synods. As the Prophets were made instrumental in the hands of God, so was the Church instrumental to the empire. Those who would make the setting up of the Pope as head over all the Churches—the period from which to commence the 1260 years, should make the Pope alone the antitype of the Woman; whereas the Pope was nothing more than a high officer, and instead of his ruling the Church, the Church ruled him; for the Pope had no power, nor could he do anything only as he carried out the laws of the empire as decreed and promulgated through the synods of the Church. Therefore as the Pope is not the antitype of the Woman, so no elevation of his power over the Church can mark the beginning of the 1260 years. The faith and doctrines of the Church were decreed by the synods, which were frequently composed of from four to six hundred Bishops. The Bishops for the most part, were appointed or confirmed by the emperors and princes, and were, mostly, men of great worldly interest and influence in the state. And thus the synods of the Church became the complete tools of the secular [illegible] the royal authority, [illegible] became confounded [illegible] assemblies, at which the [illegible] their noble vassals were used to draw up their civil laws, and the ecclesiastical and civil laws were drawn up at one and the same time. Thus in the Frankish kingdom, (one of the heads of the beast,) till far into the 8th century, the assemblies of the Bishops, for purely ecclesiastical purposes, becoming continually less frequent, at length went into entire desuetude."

"Gregory the great, was obliged to apply to the Frankish princes and Bishops, for the convening of a synod to devise measures for the removal of ecclesiastical abuses; and, as we have already remarked on a former page, Boniface found occasion to complain, that no synods had been held for so long a time. But even in the synods held by him, the most considerable men of the nation took a part, and along with the eccleastical laws, others also were passed by them, having no relation to ecclesiastical affairs. In like manner, under king Pepin and the emperor Charlemagne, it continued to be the prevailing custom for ecclesiastical and civil laws to be drawn up at the same time, at the great national assemblies."

"Now by this union the Bishops, it is true, who took part in these general legislative assemblies, obtained some influence on civil legislation, and on the institutions of civil society. But this influence fell to their share, not merely by accident, but by reason of the circumstances above described; but the whole form under which the theocratic system was contemplated, carried along with it the necessity of their having such influence. As, on the one hand, the Church needed the arm of the civil power to carry a part of their laws into effect, so on the other, the civil power needed that sanction from the Church, that commanding authority which the latter had to offer, in order to maintain itself against rude arbitrary will, and to place a check on barbarian insolence." (Neander's history of the Christian religion and Church, Vol. 3 p. 95, 96.)

In the above, we have, the most incontrovertible testimony, not only in regard to the kings of the earth committing fornication with the Woman—Church, by uniting and blending the laws and institutions of the empire, with the laws and [illegible]

[illegible], but, also, the manner [illegible] Church, through her synods, [illegible] as a mouth, Prophet, or tool [illegible] secular power. To find the commencement of the 1260 years then, we have only to ascertain where this relation of the Church and state commenced, or, in other words, when the Church became nationalized—the decrees of the councils of the Church, being sanctioned and published by the civil authorities.

The World's Crisis.

LOWELL, NOV. 17, 1855.

To Correspondents.

Communications—COMMUNICATIONS—COMMUNICATIONS—where are they? True, we have had many stirling, excellent and rare articles of late; but they do not last forever. Pass along the lively, glowing, warm-hearted articles, baptized with prayer—sparkling with celestial light—overflowing with love. Come, we wait for a fresh supply. The Lord will have the Crisis going forth and scattering its scintillations of light and love to all the flock scattered over mountain and valley, lighting the watch-fires, enkindling a flame of love and diffusing its healthful life-giving influence all around, or else He would have it cease. Which course do you think most for His glory? Decide, and act accordingly.

Questions.

I have been so pressed with business of late as to be unable to write editorials, or answer questions that have been asked.—But perhaps it would be best to publish questions, and if I have not opportunity to reply, others may do it more effectually.

☞ The following article was written, I am informed, by a Br. who has been interested in times past, in the Advent doctrines; but who has more recently been led to believe in the doctrine of a temporal millenium. As the article is written in a kind spirit, with a desire that it be published and replied to, I thought it advisable to admit it to the columns of the Crisis.

[illegible] history of the Church and the world.

The first event here spoken of, is the binding of the Dragon, that old serpent, who is the Devil and Satan, for the period of a thousand years (Chilia etee); then follows the resurrection of the martyrs, and here arises the much vexed question, how is this resurrection to be understood—literally or figuratively? If literally, it would seem that mortals are to mingle with immortals, as we cannot expect that the last enemy, Death, is overcome, until after the subjugation of Gog and Magog; and we perceive by the 7, 8, and 9, vs., that Satan, after his release from his prison, finds man the easy victim of his seductive wiles, and these victims surely are not resurrected saints. But again, it is worthy of notice here, that there is nothing said about the resurrection of the body, which the Apostle Paul teaches us to expect, in his Epistle to the Corinthians, 15th chapter. The word here and elsewhere is (psuKas, soul) in Corinthians (somati, body) therefore the question naturally arises, "What is a resurrection of souls?" The word here, and in other other places rendered soul, signifies life, reason, inclination, &c., consequently it is that principle of man that impels him to action; if a regenerated soul, to Christian action, and if unregenerate, to action of an opposite nature: therefore we conclude, that even a literal construction of the language, cannot imply an absolute resurrection of the martyrs, according to the teaching of Paul, and even our Savior himself, but rather a resuscitation, and prevalence of holy principles, during the period when Satan's power shall be restricted. This period the prophets distinctly predict, as in Ps. 2: 8, that Christ shall have the "heathen for an inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for a possession." "The earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea," Isa. 11: 9. "The fulness of the Gentiles shall come in, and all Israel shall be saved," Rom. 11: 25, 26; and the very explicit passage in Isa. 2: 2–6 which our limits will not permit us to transcribe.

These events, it will be observed, are to transpire in the last days, when "out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem."

We pass now to notice the events that are to transpire at the end of the thousand years.

We are informed, that when the thousand years are completed, Satan shall be unbound from his prison, and shall come out to deceive the nations, that are in the four (goniais, corners) of the (gees earth) Gog and Magog. The word here rendered earth, is in similar connections rendered land, which it also signifies. In Matt. 10: 15, gee Sodom, (land of Sodom) 9: 26 went abroad into all that geen (land,) 27: 45. "Darkness over all the geen land," Acts 25: 39, they knew not the geen land, and many others, but this will suffice. Therefore we conclude, that the word here actually points out a particular locality, i. e. the land of Gog and Magog. It has been understood, that the nations so designated, are some of the tribes, formerly comprehended under the general term Scythians. It is then the nations inhabiting this region, whom Satan is to instigate to war against the saints.

In the 38, and 39 chapters of Ezekiel, we find a prophecy against Gog, the land of Magog, wherein it is said, this warlike prince shall come against the mountains of Israel, which are described as restored from their former waste and desolation, to a fertile and habitable condition.

The language in these chapters, and the concluding verses of the 19th ch. of Revelation, bear a striking resemblance to each other, and are thought by many to refer to one and the same event. If so, the first incursion of Gog is at the commencement of the thousand years, and the second at the end of that period, and this appears to be a reasonable construction.

The people of Israel dwell in their own land, (Ezek. 36 and 37 and compare 38: 8,) and this prince in the land of Gog and Magog, being seized with a desire of conquest, collects his forces against them.—During this period, however, the emissaries of Satan are instigating the kings of the earth to war, and they are gathered together in a place called Armageddon. Here the Revelator breaks off the thread of the subject, which he had under immediate consideration, while he relates another event, of vast importance to the Christian world, being nothing less than the fall of mystical Babylon, which is under[illegible] be Papal Rome, and again re[illegible] the 19th chapter, where it will [illegible] the kings of the earth are [illegible] by the King of kings, and [illegible] lords. Therefore these events [illegible] presented to our view in con[illegible] apparent that they all have [illegible] in that mighty revolution, [illegible] declares is to convulse [illegible] to the dawn of the Millennial period.

Whether this gathering of the kings of the earth is the same as Ezekiel's description of the incursion of Gog and Magog, it is evident that it is to transpire before the commencement of the thousand years; and if they are not one, then the only conclusion is, that the Gog and Magog of Ezekiel and John are one, who are to war against the saints at the end of the thousand years. Thus the question cannot be one of great importance, as the record in either case shows that a mighty revolution is to convulse the earth, at the commencement of the thousand years, when the kings of the earth are to be vanquished by the Messiah, and He shall "reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before His ancients gloriously." Yet a seed remains, whom Satan can subvert to his purposes, and the fact stands thus recorded, that "When the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed from his prison. And shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battle: the number of whom is as the sand of the sea.—And they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city, and fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them."

We have thus in as concise a manner as possible, perhaps too concise for perspicuity, endeavored to present our views of this subject. If any of our Advent Brn. deem them unscriptural, and can show us why they so consider them, we shall be happy to have them do so; for it is a subject whereon Christians ought to be united. If our Savior has declared that the Gospel shall be published among all nations, and commanded His followers to publish it, it is incumbent on them to obey; for, although He is able by the working of His Almighty power to subdue all things unto Himself, yet it has pleased Him by the foolishness of preaching, to save them that believe.

Therefore the weapon which the child of God has to wield, is the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God. Thus armed, the servants of the Most High should go forth, in compact ranks, and united efforts, (suffering no ism or variance of opinion to break or divide those ranks,) and with steadfast faith rely upon the promises of God, undismayed while they hear the mutterings of the distant thunder, which indicates the rising tempest; for although the kings of the earth gather together to war, we have the sure word of prophecy, by which we know that our Lord will ultimately sweep the sources of apostasy, infidelity and oppression from the face of the earth; and thus prepare the way for purity and truth to permeate the social mass.

AMICUS.

For The Crisis.

Analogy of the First and Second Advents.

BY WILLIAM SHEPHERD.

The Star and Magi of the first Advent—The Morning Star and the Second Advent now impending—Features of similarity hastily noticed.

Unto the Church of God in waiting:—

"Grace and peace from God our Father, and from our Lord Jesus the Messiah or Life-Giver. Blessed be God the Father of our Lord Jesus the Messiah, who in His great mercy hath begotten us anew by our Lord Jesus the Messiah, to the hope of life, and to an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and unfading, which is prepared for you in heaven; while ye are kept by the power of God and by faith, for the life that is prepared and will be revealed in the last times; wherein ye will rejoice forever, notwithstanding ye at the present time are pressed a little, by the various trials that pass over you; So that the proof of your faith may appear more precious than refined gold that is tested by fire, unto glory, and honor, and praise, at the manifestation of Jesus the Messiah."

Beloved of God:—In our last epistle, entitled 'Type and Antitype,' we omitted to consider one feature which has a very important bearing upon the Church in her present position. Let us then just glance at this by way of a timely admonition, as this is the only object we have in presenting it. We find that the Israelites subsequently to their being brought out from Egyptian bondage with a high hand and strong arm, and being safely conducted unto the eve of triumphant deliverance, they began to complain and murmur against Moses despite of all arguments and entreaties. See Ex. 14: 11, 12.—Here is distrust—a faithlessness toward God and His providence manifested, they are brought into a strait place—to the trial of their faith—they waver—regret that they have left Egypt, and wish to return—Moses encourages them, however, they proceed and are rescued. That this circumstance has its parallel with the Church now in waiting, Scripture abundantly testifies. The Apostolic exhortation no doubt has an express allusion to this. "Harden not your hearts as in the provocation, in the day of temptation in the wilderness • • • Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God. But exhort one another daily. • • For we are made partakers of Christ, if we hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end." Heb. 3: 8–17. See also ch. 4th. Indeed we shall discover by carefully examining the sacred word on this point, that it is fraught with the most stirring exhortations to prayer and watchfulness, just a little while preceding the return of our Lord Jesus, and that our Lord himself anticipated a deplorable state of things in the neglect of these exhortations and consequent faithlessness in regard to His coming again, in that remarkable passage recorded in Luke 18: 7, 8., and rendered in the Syriac thus:—"And will not God much more vindicate His chosen who call upon Him by day and by night, and have patience with them? I tell you He will vindicate them speedily, yet the Son of man will come; and will He find faith on the earth?"

But to the subject.

The "Morning Star" then, in Scripture (as are the luminaries of heaven,) is an emblem of supernatural light; but this celestial orb is highly distinguished from all others mentioned therein. It should rather be regarded as a signal light, or herald of a greater. Indeed its very name "The Morning Star"—is associated with the dawn of day—the rising Sun, &c—But that it is an emblem of light, and a promising one, we are assured. And God grant that the Church in these trying times may be more fully illuminated with its beautiful and consoling rays.

That an analogy exists between the two Stars—the two Characters—(the Magi, and wise of Dan. 12: 10,) in the two Advents, we venture to say. Who were those "wise men from the east that came to Jerusalem" with such perfect assurance of beholding the infant Messiah? "Saying, Where is he that is born King of the Jews? for we have seen his Star in the east, and are come to worship him."—Surely they were not heathen as some have presumed to assert, but men divinely illuminated and instructed no doubt in the Oracles of God. They knew that they should see the Savior with a positive certainty, from the fact of their bringing with them those rich gifts; gold, frankincense and myrrh, which they cheerfully laid at the Babe's feet, as a faint outward expression of their inward and heartfelt adoration and unfeigned homage, to the Redeemer of the world. These men understood, and were not in darkness in regard to His first Advent. Neither John, His forerunner, the aged Simeon, or devoted Elizabeth professed a more firm assurance that Jesus was the Messiah, than these Magi. It may be said, then, that they were highly priviledged from the fact also of this mysterious orb, the visible Star, gently leading them to the holy object of their search; not so, however, more than the wise who are looking for the Savior's second appearing, as we shall presently notice.

Again; these men were not recognized by any professedly religious institution, or body, that we are aware of, yet possessed this superior knowledge of and love for the Messiah. Behold the striking similarity existing between them, in this particular, and those men who long for and love His appearing. Are those dear saints who occupy this blessed (Rev. 16: 15) position, recognized by any ecclesiastical body or professedly religious institute or system now in vogue, as the children of God, or Christians rooted and grounded in the faith of the Gospel. Let every heart respond for itself. These wise men from the east typify, in some important particulars, those who are looking for Jesus' second Advent. They were divinely illuminated, we way safely infer, and had access to sacred books predicting the time of the Messiah's birth or first Advent, together with the fact, "The Star which they saw in the east went before them, till it came and stood over where the young child was." No wonder they rejoiced under such unusual happy auspices, as we read, "When they saw the Star, they rejoiced with exceeding great joy." Let it be remembered that these Magi are designated as wisemen, a phrase which the Scriptures ever recognize as indicating the righteous or men of God, e. g. "The wise shall shine," "The wise shall understand," "Faithful and wise servant," "Five of them were wise," Dan. 12: 3, 10; Matt. 24: 45; 26: 2. There certainly is a remarkable resemblance observed here between the wise men of Matthew and those of Daniel: carefully examine the circumstances of each, and you will readily perceive it. And now, dismissing this part of our subject which lies in the past, we hasten to consider that portion which more immediately interests us, as it is yet in the future. We before observed that the Magi were not more highly favored, (if as much,) in regard to divine light and knowledge respecting the Advent, than the Church now in waiting. Let us see what God has promised in relation to this, and if what we assert is not affirmed by Him.—"Light is sown for the righteous, and gladness for the upright in heart." "Thy word is a lamp to my feet, and a light to my path." "The entrance of thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple," (or upright.) "Arise shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon." "The Lord shall be thine everlasting light," "I am the light of the world, he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness." "He that loveth his brother abideth in the light." Psa. 99: 11; 119: 105, 130; Isa. 60: 1, 20; John 8: 12; 1 John 2: 10; Rev. 3: 3.

"We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed as unto a light that shineth in a dark place until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in your hearts." 1 Pet. 1: 14.

This memorable passage affords us a key as to the nature and character of the light which we are now contemplating, It is needless to say that it is divine and spiritual, as the apostolic writings affirm. "For God who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God, in the face of Jesus Christ," that, "The eyes of your understanding being enlightened, ye may know what is the hope of his calling," &c. Is the Church illumined with this resplendent light presented under the beautiful figure of "the day-star by the Apostle? We trust she is, and may still richer and more refulgent communications from this divine source throw a halo of glory around her so that she may realize indeed that her light is come; this we pray of the Father through her highly exalted and ever blessed Advocate and Head, even Jesus the Messiah. Amen.

Again: "And after these things I saw another angel come down from heaven, having great power, and the earth (Church) was lightened with his glory." Rev. 18: 1.

Observe the chronology of this Angel's mission, and his language. "The earth (Church) was lightened with His glory.—This Angel is seen descending just previous to the downfall of Babylon and is represented as crying or proclaiming, "mightily, with a strong voice, saying, Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen, &c.," The language indicates a blessed state of things for the Church in this locality, (to which we are approximating with rapid flight,) in respect to divine illumination, "floods of light" are here implied—ah, more in regard to this Angel and the Church. The Church acts in harmony with him, partaking of his spirit and the sentiment of his annunciation, and will ultimately proclaim, "Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen, for strong is the Lord God that judgeth her."

And finally, on the promises of light and knowledge. "I will give him that (that overcometh,) the Morning Star."—Rev. 2: 28. This is one of the most splendid promises, one of the most soul-cheering, perhaps, which the entire Scriptures contain. And if the Magi "rejoiced with exceeding great joy, when they saw the star," heralding to them the first Advent of Jesus in his humanity, how much more shall the saints of God "rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory," when they realize this glorious promise, and, as it were, behold "The Morning Star," the harbinger of the Second Advent of Jesus in his divinity. If their hearts were ravished and their hopes brightened at the sight of that little orb that radiated its faint light around the Messiah in the manger, much more shall these weary pilgrims be glad, and their hopes renewed when the brilliant rays of the morning star shall enlighten their understandings, and throw its refulgent light on the coming of the Messiah in majesty. The first but a little preceded the time of the Gospel dispensation; but this, the fulness of times, or all previous dispensations. Glory to God, that we are almost there—on the eve of this era of grandeur. The Star in the east appeared at the first Advent—the morning star of the Apocalypse will appear at the second Advent—the first arose and gilded the eastern horizon, this will arise in the heart, as it were, gilding the horizon of the understanding and illuminating the mind—the light of the first rejoiced the hearts of those who beheld it, unerringly guiding them to the humble abode of the Messiah—the light of the second will equally comfort and guide to the knowledge of his coming in glory. The former introduced a period of time, the latter will usher in an eternal day when

Hallelujahs shall resound
  Through vast creation wide,
While Jesus shall in glorious state,
  With all His saints abide.

There is another difference in relation to these points, which we would not omit to mention. The first is simply called a "Star," the last, the "MORNING STAR;" consequently, it has a two-fold meaning, being not only an emblem of light, but the herald of that blissful dawn which precedes the everlasting day. Well might the Apostle say, speaking prophetically to the Church down here:—"ye are not in darkness that that day should overtake you" unawares. No, praise God, we are not in darkness in relation to this momentous event, but "have a more sure word of prophecy." "I will give him (the faithful,) the morning Star." Think you when a man perceives the morning star rising in the east, that the day will take him by surprise? Most assuredly not; so all that enjoy what is implied in this blessed promise, will be in readiness when the night is past—the day breaks—the clouds disperse—and Jesus is revealed, to hail Him with—"Lo! this is our God, and we have waited for Him."

And as it would not be expedient to prolong this article beyond its present limits, occupying thereby too much valuable space in the Crisis, we must hastily bring it to a close, invoking the Divine blessing to attend the same. May the perusal thereof prove conducive to the good of all who are interested in the things pertaining to the kingdom of God, leading them to a more careful examination of this subject. May they possess an unwavering determination by the grace of God to overcome, which must, as an inseparable consequence, result in the happy realization of what is implied in the promise of "The Morning Star."

The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ the Messiah be with all the saints. Amen.

For The Crisis.

The wicked not immortal; or the immortality of the soul disproved by Bible truth.

A lecture delivered by P. Tandy, Sept. 30, at Mill Village, Goshen N. H.

Respected neighbors, friends and brethren:—I arise at this time, feeling very solemn and humble in view of our true condition! I feel that we must all give a strict and impartial account to God, our great Judge, of our deeds done here, whether they are good, or bad, in the day of judgment, which is very fast approaching! How it becomes us to act as candidates for that awfully solemn scene!!—May the Lord help us, one and all, to act as we should, under all circumstances; that we may have divine approval. Our motto in the following remarks is, "To the Law and to the testimony;" and our theme, the wicked not immortal.

Various errors exist among men in regard to revealed truth. These errors go to show how very imperfect we are in knowledge—the mistakes committed in our education—the reluctance of the mind to investigate—and a great want of moral courage to step aside from the track marked out by learned men, but who, (most likely,) have conducted their own investigations under the influence of the fear of being denounced as heretics; if they should be led to results unlike to those who are reputed for wisdom. But, "if any man will be wise, let him become a fool that he may be wise." "The wisdom of this world is foolishness with God." We honor God only so far as we have right conceptions of His character, government, and purposes, and act in accordance with them. If we believe God will reward or punish men contrary to his own word of inspiration, we dishonor Him, however much sincerity and zeal we manifest. Truth and the honor of God are inseparable; and we cannot glorify our Father in heaven by erroneous opinions. Yes, (to be plain,) most professed Christians, if pressed on the subject, can give little better reason for what they believe, on many points, than, that their teachers told them so. They are thoroughly educated; they must be right.

It is our solemn duty to study carefully and prayerfully the holy Scriptures, and form our opinions of what they teach for ourselves, as we must answer for ourselves in the day of judgment. But in this study, the correct principles of interpretation are of the first importance. Without these, our appeal to the word of God may only serve to confirm us in error. The plainest truths of the Bible have been wrapped in darkness by pretending that the language of the Scriptures has a mystical or secret meaning, that does not appear in the words employed. Such a principle of interpretation, is a libel on Divine Revelation! The word of God professes to be a Revelation; and so plain, too, that the wayfaring man can understand it; and the Savior says, "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine." The language of the Bible, then, should be explained as we would the language of any other book, according to its plain and obvious meaning, unless there is a clear necessity for departing from it. A strict adherence to this principle is necessary, if we would be saved from the wildest errors, and see the children of God united in one spirit, and one body. With these remarks I proceed to the question at issue—namely, The wicked not immortal. The question is not, whether the righteous soul can be immortal, nor whether the souls of the righteous will be immortal; these point are admitted and abundantly proved by the Bible; but the question substantially is this—will the wicked who live and die in their sins, continue eternally, or without end in a state of conscious being in misery! God says, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die;" do we believe God's word? Are we willing to let God be true, but every man a liar? "To the Law and to the Testimony." Living as we do, on the eve of a new epoch in the history of the Church, and standing in the dawning light of a new dispensation, we may reasonably expect some clearer light, some more blessed truths to be evolved from the oracles of God; not however a new Revelation, but an eliciting of the light which for a long time has lain partially concealed, like the latent spark struck out by steel. Let me just remark here, that the doctrine which I advocate, is not new; it is as old as the Bible.

We now propound the inquiry, is the soul naturally immortal? Leaving all preconceived notions or opinions of men, let us examine the plain teachings of the word of the Lord on this subject. "To the law and to the testimony." To understand this subject we need to begin at the foundation; to ascertain of what elements man is constituted, and upon what the sentence of death was pronounced. Man, we find to have been formed out of the dust of the earth: and when God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, man became (not immortal, but) a living soul. It seems that God formed an organization which was perfect in all its parts; but the organization demominated man, was still insensate and inanimate; the principle of vitality was not there; therefore thought, feeling, animal motion and consciousness were as foreign from the lifeless mass as from any other clay. "But the Lord God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." As breath is the first and last indication of animal life, therefore it is taken for the life itself; the idea is, God communicated to the lifeless form the principle of vitality; notwithstanding that man at his first formation was actually possessed of every member, organ, muscle, &c., of the human body, yet he was without life; consequently without thought feeling, consciousness, &c., but the very moment the Lord breathed into him the breath of life, he became a living, breathing, moving and sentient being. Now let us admit this plain, simple, Bible fact; viz., that breathing into his nostrils the breath of life, was simply communicating to an inanimate system the principle of vitality, or animal life; and the idea of human philosophy, that at the creation, a house of clay was formed, and a soul, or immortal spirit was brought from some other region of the universe of God to inherit it, all vanishes from the mind by the power of truth. The true Scriptural principle being established, we at once can perceive, (if we will) that when a man's life is extinct, the power of vitality which sets in motion the machinery of the body and mind, and induces consciousness, is lost; consequently all the functions of the body and mind cease their action at death. And there can no more be thought, nor feeling, and motion, and consciousness in the man after vitality ceases, than there could be after his formation, prior to receiving the breath of life; for all sensation and consciousness depend on the organism of the man excited by vital action. We have dwelt thus long on this point because, we consider it fundamental; and if we heartily, and clearly entertain the scriptural view on this very important point, we shall be much better prepared to appreciate a biblical argument on the whole subject.—Now the question arises, what significance is to be attached to the sentence of death, as pronounced on the man as seen in Gen 3d chap? God plainly told Adam, that "In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." (The marginal reading is, dying, thou shalt die.) In explanation of this sentence the Lord tells Adam, that after a life of toil and suffering, he should drop again into his original dust, or element; or as the wise man expresses it, "Then shall the dust, (meaning mortal man) return to the earth as it was; and the spirit (or breath of life) shall return to God who gave it." This is what we all understand to be physical death. The privation of life, is simply reversing the process of man's creation. There is an actual return both of the body and of the spirit to their original state. The dust returns as it was, prior to its natural being, and the spirit or breath of life, or in other words principle of animal life, returns to God the fountain whence it came. As God gave life at first, He takes it away at death.

"THE EXCELLENCY OF THE LORD'S ANOINTED, or, CHRIST THE PROMISED MESSIAH."

We have received a copy of a work bearing the above title, from the pen of Sr. Mary A Seymour. It consists of nearly 70 pp. 12 mo. Price, 8 cts. single, $5 per hundred. By forwarding $1 to A. N. Seymour, Hillsdale, Michigan, 12 copies will be received, post paid.

From what little examination I have been enabled to give to the work, I should esteem it a highly interesting and valuable treatise to enlighten the mind of any inquirer after truth in relation to the sonship of Christ.

Were the promises made to Abraham and his seed ever fulfilled? I would like to see something in your paper on this subject. E. W.

It is stated that a school or college for Turkish youth is about to be established at Versailles, the Sultan having made a grant of 1,500,000 francs for this purpose. Here some 300 Mussulmans will be instructed in the European languages, the sciences, and the arts as applied to industry.

THE DIFFICULTIES WITH MEXICO, ON THE TEXAN FRONTIER. Capt. Callahan has made a report to the governor of Texas, attempting to justify his destruction of the town of Piedras Negras, on the Mexican side of the Rio Grande. In this he says that whilst the Rangers were posted there, a force of 1200 or 1500 Mexicans appeared before it. On the 6th Capt. Callahan commenced crossing his horses over the Rio Grande to the American side, and during the day the Mexican and Indian force advanced to the attack. Capt. Callahan had taken possession of the two pieces of cannon in Piedras Negras, which were mounted and fired upon the Mexicans several times. Finding his force inadequate to defend itself while crossing the river from so overwhelming a force, Capt. Callahan as a last resort set fire to the town, between himself and the enemy. This checked the assault, and gave him protection during the balance of the day, and enabled him to cross over all his men and his horses, except about thirty. During the night he brought over the cannon, and mounted them on the American side to command both sides of the river. On the 7th he recrossed the balance of his horses except about twelve. His command has returned to the settlements.

Capt. Callahan then complains that he was deceived by the local Mexican authorities, who sent him a passport and all but invited his expedition, that they might be surrounded by an overwhelming force and massacred. Not a very likely story.

The Texas State Times attempts to justify the foray, stating that during the last fifteen months the Indians on the frontier had massacred more than forty men, women and children, and stolen about 2000 horses. The latter they sell to the Mexicans at a low price, and in consequence they are not only allowed a refuge there, but openly protected by the authorities of that country.

The affair has caused much excitement in Texas, and an appeal has been made to the people of the State to rally armed to the frontier, and in sufficient force to pursue the depredators across the Rio Grande, and demand of the local Mexican authorities their surrender, and prepared to enforce their demand

Cibolo, near the mouth of the Santa Clara, has been appointed the rendezvous, and the the 15th day of the present month as the time when the expedition will move.

The New York Courier and Enquirer observes, that this Indian war between Texas ahd Mexico will occasion the government much trouble, and intimates that the Texans are not altogether the long-suffering lambs which they represent themselves to be, and it is suspected that in many cases the Indian hostilities, of which we have only the Texan version, are provoked by murders and robberies previously committed by the white outlaws who infest our side of the border. The government troops are very numerous in Texas and abundantly sufficient to chastise any band of Indian depredators.

The Nicaraguan News. It appears that 280 passengers, besides the 50 recruits for the Walker expedition, were in the steamer from San Francisco to San Juan del Sur, before the attack on Granada; and that all these innocent passengers were put to much inconvenience and suffering by the fillibusters. On the arrival at Virgin Bay, they embarked in the steamer Virgin, but lest they should sail without "the command," the marauders detained their luggage; then seized the vessel, and set sail with it, with all the passengers on board, to attack the castle of San Carlos and summon it to surrender. On reaching San Carlos, a bombastic proclamation was prepared, to the effect that the Virgin had 210 armed men on board, and that their humane commander, wishing to avoid bloodshed, demanded an unconditional surrender of the port.

With this proclamation, Capt. Erricson, with two oarsmen, was sent on shore. The captain, with his oarsmen, were made prisoners, and in about twenty minutes after the landing of the boat, the commander of the port sent a reply in the shape of six cannon shot, each of which fell a safe distance from the steamer.

A boat with 25 men, which was sent to effect a landing, found the attempt hopeless, and the steamer returned to Virgin Bay, discharged the unhappy passengers on the beach at midnight, and then went off in the steamer Virgin at Granada. The troubles of the peaceful passengers were not yet over, however. While they were standing in and about the office of the Transit company at Virgin Bay, a detachment of full two hundred government troops from Rivas, commanded by Col. du Champ, came into town, and without a moment's warning, made a general assault upon the passengers by firing upon them and charging upon them with fixed bayonets. This assault caused a great stampede, most seeking shelter in the jungle. Five are supposed to have been killed, and several others wounded. The commander of the government forces was under the impression that they were all fillibusters.

On the afternoon of the 18th October, while the troops at San Carlos were exasperated by the insult offered them that day from the Virgin, the steamer San Carlos, with passengers from New York, Oct. 5, made her appearance up the river, and when within range of the guns was fired upon by the fort. The shot struck the steamer amidships, disabling the engine and killing two passengers—Mrs White and her infant daughter, and severely wounded her son.

St. Louis, Nov 2.—The Pacific Railroad Accident. The following are the details as far as received. The gentlemen who gave the sad tidings were on their way to the city as passengers on the Ben Bolt, and saw the train of cars pass up with the company on board, and exchanged salutations. The boat came to a landing and the train proceeded to the Gasconade river, about eight miles distant. Before the boat was ready a locomotive, which had followed the train for the purpose of rendering assistance in case of accident and seeing that all was right along the road came back from the river with the word that the bridge over the Gasconade, standing 35 feet above the water, had broken down while the train was crossing, and ten or eleven cars with their occupants had been precipitated into 20 feet of water.

The consternation of the men with the engine was so great that they could barely announce the fact, only adding that they thought at least 150 had gone out of the cars to walk over the bridge. There were probably 500 persons in the company. Two of our military companies were among them, the Greys and the National Guards, as were also many members of the press and private citizens. The locomotive came down to the train bound for St. Louis, which was immediately taken by the Superintendent and his men back to the scene of suffering and may be the means of saving many lives.

Serious Result. The accident on the Boston & Worcester road on Tuesday morning will probably result in the death of Miss Alice Taft, daughter of Dr Taft, of Framingham. Miss Taft and a younger brother were riding in a buggy across the track, just as the first down passenger train and the up freight train were approaching "Train's Crossing," and their attention was directed only to the freight train that was nearest. They waited a moment for it to pass them, and then drove directly across the track of the downward train. The engine struck the horse upon the hip, separated him from the vehicle, and killed him outright. The wagon was completely demolished, and the boy and girl thrown to the ground with great violence. The boy was not much injured, but the girl had two of her ribs broken and was otherwise injured. The train was running at its usual speed, and the engineer had given the customary warning by blowing the whistle of the engine.

Monachism in Austria. The Emperor of Austria has by a most humiliating and disgraceful act removed all those checks upon Papacy within his dominions which his ancestors had established after a severe and long protracted struggle, and has restored to the Catholic church all those immunities and privileges, the exercise of which must greatly detract from his own independence and dignity, and prove a blight and a curse to the nation Out of Spain no country has suffered more from the Papal rule than Austria. The worst evils of the Catholic system have prevailed there to such an alarming extent, and the usurpations of the Pope have been so threatening to the temporal authority, that successive Emperors have been forced in self-defence to resist the assumptions of the See of Rome. The Emperor Joseph Second, towards the end of the last century, succeeded at length in erecting some barriers against the encroachments of the spiritual power. It has remained for his successor, in this age of progress, to break down those barriers and to give free course to the desolating influences of Catholicism.

One article of the extraordinary concordat concluded between Austria and the Pope looks to the increase of the monastic institutions, so long the disgrace of Austria and all Catholic countries. In relation to these institutions a remarkable document has recently been brought to light. This is a petition of Ubaldus Borzinsky, a member of the order of the Brothers of Mercy, addressed to Pope Pius Ninth. Borzinsky has for many years resided at different monasteries of the order in Austria, and he has witnessed so much iniquity and corruption on the part of his brethren, that he has deemed it his duty to expose their conduct. Some of his manuscript was discovered, and in order to put a stop to his projected revelations, he was sent to the monastery at Prague, where he was kept in confinement. From here nearly a year ago he addressed his petition to the Pope. No notice was taken of the petition, but Borzinsky was soon after removed from Prague and confined in the monastery at Gortz, where he now remains

The petition reveals the fact that monachism at the present day is precisely what it was in the middle ages. The dissolute habits of the priors and monks, and the scenes of riot and debauchery enacted within the walls of the convents, as described by Borzinsky, are hardly surpassed by the monstrous disorders said to have been found in many of the religious houses in England, at the time of the suppression of monasteries by Henry the Eighth.

Such is monachism in Austria, such is the institution which Francis Joseph is willing to perpetuate Such are the clergy who are the spiritual teachers of the people. Such is indeed Catholicism, when freed from restraint and permitted to carry out its rotten and corrupt system The establishment of religious orders is a prominent feature of that system and is an important source of power to the church The iniquities practised by the members of these orders may in part be attributed to the unnatural lives which they are compelled to lead. But that such things should not only be tolerated but encouraged by any government, in this age of enlightenment and progress, can but excite our astonishment and indignation.

We cut the following from the Boston Daily Mail of Nov. 12:

The Threatened Rupture between the United States and England. In order to give our readers the fullest possible idea of the manner in which the recent warlike conduct of the English ministry is regarded by the British press, we give this morning extracts from the latest London and Liverpool papers that have come to hand

The London Morning Post, the mouthpiece of the aristocracy, says:

England and France, notwithstanding the contest in which they are engaged in the East, have the means, as well as the determination, to repress that spirit of lawless aggression which Americans have for some time past exhibited; and though the insulting and menacing tones of the Cabinet of Washing on may be accounted for by the probable acquisition of the Russian North American territories, a great maritime war, with their exposed seaboard—with their comparatively small fleet—with their British neighbor, Canada, powerful, wealthy, devoted to the mother country, and able to repel invasion, is a course of policy from which we would fain hope the good sense of the more reflecting and honest portion of the American people will save their country. From such an unholy contest what good result could spring? The commerce of England and France might temporarily be cut up, but every American ship would be swept from the seas—all the ports of America would be blockaded—the whole seaboard of America, from Maine to Florida, would be exposed to attack, and all this bloodshed, all this ruin, all these evils, are to be encountered for the acquisition of a Haytian Sebastopol, from which Cuba can be more conveniently threatened!

* * * * * *

The sensitiveness of the American Government appears very remarkable when their repeated and flagrant violations of the public law—witness Texas, Mexico and Cuba—are borne in mind We trust that the presence of the formidable British fleet which is assembling at Bermuda, will tend to cool both the arrogance and over sensitiveness of the American Government.

Fiendish Thieves. The St. Louis Republican gives the following account of thieving at the Gasconade Bridge, at the time of the occurrence of the late terrible accident:—"One man was discovered attempting to steal the watch of Mr Schuetze, who lay apparently insensible in one of the cars for several hours. He had succeeded in getting the watch, when he was observed, and such threats made as convinced him that it was best for him to give it up. It was intended to detain him, but in the excitement of the moment he made his escape. Others lost money in the same way. As soon as the accident happened, men seemed to flock in from the surrounding country, although no houses were to be seen, and it is a most forbidding part of the country for settlement. Where they came from, and in such a storm of lightning and thunder and rain, is a mystery; but there they were, ready to rob the dead, and to pick what ever valuables could be found, in the general confusion which followed for hours afterwards."

The Bible, and the Jews in America. A conference of Jews, composed of Rabbis and delegates from the various synagogues in the country, (the first ever held in the United States,) took place at Cincinnati, on the 17th ult. The first afternoon was devoted to preliminary discussion, and the consideration of a platform basing the entire proceedings of the conference upon the inspiration of the Bible and the teachings of the Talmud, which was finally adopted. The second day was devoted to the discussion of the derivation of the Talmud, whether it was of divine origin or the work of the elders of Israel in the days of Moses and Joshua; decided as the result of both—i. e., that it is partly spiritual, partly rabbinical—a divine treatise upon the Scriptures, and more particularly the Pentateuch.

Breadstuffs in South America. It is a singular fact that the grain crop in South America bids fair to be as short as it is in Europe. In Ecuador the price of flour has gone up to $40 a barrel.

Sentence for Illegal Enlistments. In the United States District Court in New York, Joseph Wagner, convicted of enlisting men for the British service, was brought up for sentence. The Judge (Ingersoll) said he would make an example of the prisoner, in order to deter others from a similar course, which might embroil us with the present belligerent powers of Europe. The Court then sentenced the prisoner to be imprisoned two years, and pay a fine of $100. Wagner was arrested in Boston, but was sent on to New York, the offence having been committed there.

Railroad Accident. A serious accident occurred on the Chicago, Alton & St. Louis Railroad, on the 29th ult., near the junction of the Illinois and Michigan Central roads, about 14 miles from Chicago. The passenger train from St. Louis, was moving at full speed, when it ran off the track in consequence of a switch having been carelessly left open. The engine and three cars were thrown from the track, breaking the first named, and smashing the tender, splintering the baggage, express and second class cars, and injuring a first class passenger car. Several passengers were injured. The baggage master and the express messenger of the train were seriously injured, and a young man by the name of Page, from Boston, a brakeman on the road, was caught between two cars in such a manner that the whole front end of the passenger car had to be cut away with axes before he was liberated. His thigh bone was badly crushed, and he was otherwise seriously hurt.

Electrical Display on Lake Erie Between 6 and 7 o'clock last evening there was a most briliant electrical display upon the Lake. The heavens were clear, save to very near the Northern horizon, upon which a thick haze seemed to rest. From a few points West of North, Eastward 90 degrees, colums of fire, some perpendicular, others curved, shot up from the lake a distance 10 or 15 degrees, in rapid succession;—while in other parts of the sky were visible flashes as of heat lightning. The whole seemed more like a series of powder explosions than lightning. When last seen, the jets of fire were apparently within a mile of the shore, but later were near the horizon. The wind was blowing a gale from the South.—[Cleveland Herald, Oct. 30.

Shocking Occurrence at a Lunatic Hospital.—Two Attendants Killed by a Lunatic. "It appears that a patient named John E. Clarke, who has been an inmate of the asylum for upwards of three years and a half, and who, during most of this time has been quite docile, and was employed in various ways about the establishment, frequently attending upon the family of Dr Waddell, in a fit of "impulsive insanity," seized an axe, and before any alarm could be given, struck down two of the attendants, and by repeated blows mangled them in a shocking manner, causing instant death

The Bee says of the Know Nothings, "They are in power in New York, Ohio, California, Louisiana, Maryland, Kentucky, Delaware, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New Hampshire and Rhode Island—and have proved their ability to carry Pennsylvania on a square American issue. In a national contest, with a fair platform and strong leaders, they can carry Indiana, Illinois, Tennessee, Alabama, and Virginia—and we doubt not Florida, Mississippi, Arkansas and North Carolina.

EUROPEAN NEWS.

EXTRACTS FROM ENGLISH PAPERS RECEIVED BY THE ASIA.

Since the Arago sailed there is news that the Russians have themselves blown up their fortifications on Otchakoff Point opposite Kinburn, Fort Nicholas and other works mounting 23 guns. Kinburn and Otchakoff commanded the entrance to the bay of Dnieper, and also served as outworks of Nicolaieff, hence by their capture the allies have full command of the great line of river communication lying in the rear of all the Russian forces in the Crimea.

The French and Sardinians have advanced from the Tchernaya and Baidas line and correspondence of the 13th says that the French posts were within 9 miles of Bakshi Seari, also close to the Russian possessions at Albat and Airgel, where, if at all, the Russians will make a stand.

October 12. The Russians from the north side of Sebastopol were falling back by detachments on Perekop; there was, however, no diminution of fire from the forts and batteries on the north side of the harbor, their fire for the past four days had been very active and chiefly directed against the Malakoff, and French quarters in the western part of the south side.

The British and French were engaged in clearing the ruins of the city.

A Russian dispatch from Berlin says: That on the 22d, the allies 40,000 strong marched from Eupatoria towards Toulat, but on the 23d, perceiving our lancers on their left flank, they returned behind Aktaschi.

Gen. Todleben is entrusted to fortify Nicolaieff.

The London Times says that Gen. Simpson has resigned or is dismissed. The Globe says that he is not re-called, but that physical ailment may induce him to resign his post. The Globe also says a new commander is appointed, but does not give his name. Rumor mentions Generals De Lacy Evans, Codrington, Markham, Sir John Campbell, and others, as his probable successor.

Major Delafield, Major Murdock, and Captain McLellan, American officers, had arrived in camp. A British general order provides them with rations during their stay in the Crimea.

Miss Nightingale has returned to Sebastopol.

The Moniteur publishes a list of the stores found in Sebastopol: One million shot and cartridges, and one million pounds of gunpowder.

The effective land strength of the allies in the Crimea, including sick, is officially reported to be 210,000 men.

A letter from St. Petersburg of the 15th, says that the allied successes had caused despondency, yet everything indicates the intention of Russia to continue the war.

The London Times has a noticeable editorial respecting American expansion. The Times says, "the English government is omitting no opportunity of reinforcing the West India squadron, and thus interposing a powerful barrier between Britain and the North American continent. At this moment North America is in profound peace with the whole world, yet it is not the less true that in her ports are fitting out at this moment piratical fillibustering expeditions, destined to carry war and bloodshed into the dominions of an unoffending neighbor.

"We cannot believe that those who are now engaged in enrolling unhappy men for these desperate and criminal enterprises, fully contemplate the success of a descent upon Ireland, for instance, as probable or even possible.

"If we can prevent the expedition from sailing or intercepting them mid-ocean, we shall have done much towards averting the dangers which must arise, should they be carried out to their natural development."

The gunboats at Elsinore were ordered to England.

The coasting trade is again springing up since the removal of the fleet.

Asia. When the Russians in Asia heard of the fall of Sebastopol, they, on the 29th September, made an attack upon Kars. Turkish details of their repulse were received. The Russian loss is reported to be 2,000. Two Turkish redoubts were lost and retaken four times. The Hungarian General Kenunty commanded the Turks, in the absence of the English General Williams. The Russian General Mouravieff, with 80 guns, cannot continue the siege. The Russians have fortified all the passes leading to Tifles.

Omar Pacha is at Souchem Kale.

France. Paris papers say that splendid gold mines were discovered in Cayenne.

Belgium. The Chambers meet on the 14th November. The King of Belgium actively offers his mediation in the war.

The Assault on Kars. The Asia's news contains full details of the repulse of the Russians at Kars. According to Gen Mouravieff's despatch, at the very commencement of the onslaught, several of the principal Russian chiefs and commanders were slain, and the result was that the unity of operations was quite broken. The engagement, which lasted for seven hours and a half, was attended with great loss, but the blockade has now been established as before; and it is even said that they are preparing to attack Kars again.

A letter from Erzeroom shows the obstinate character of the defence. 800 Russians were slain before one redoubt alone, defended by 400 Turks. An English officer writes that the Russians left upwards of 2,000 men dead upon the field, and that their loss in killed, wounded, and prisoners, must have exceeded 6,000. All the European officers present with the Turks escaped, though many of them distinguished themselves.

Omar Pacha is at Lidana, in Turkish Georgia, and is concentrating his troops to march upon Akhaltzik, and so create a diversion in favor of Kars

Spain. The Borges faction has been put to the rout, with a loss of 8 killed and 16 wounded. 25 insurgents, of the band of Tofal, had been executed at Catalonia. The cholera was still very bad at Madrid

Portugal. From Lisbon we learn that heavy rains had done great injury in the provinces, to large quantities of wheat and Indian corn.

Sweden. Admiral Virgin has left Stockholm on a secret diplomatic mission, it is believed to Paris, and it is added that he is the bearer of the King's ultimatum as to the conditions he requires as the price of his throwing up his neutrality and joining the Western powers in the prosecution of the war.

The blockade of the Baltic having almost ceased, a brisk coasting trade was springing up, and there were lying at the last accounts in Stockholm, about thirty decked and open Russian craft of different sizes, which have broken the blockade and crossed over from the coast of Esthonia, bringing cargoes of corn, potatoes, hops, hemp, and tallow, to barter for that precious article of consumption in Russia—salt. They buy this article here for 6 dollars per barrel, and state that if they return home in safety they shall sell it at 30 dollars, thus realising 500 per cent.

Heligoland. The sum of £40,000 in sovereigns having been landed here from England, the islanders were hoping they would now be paid the value of their potato land, taken from them to build the wooden barracks on for the German Legion and arbitrarily fixed at a penny per square foot. A transport ship had called to convey 500 of the German Foreign Legion to England

Russia. Exhaustion of Men, &c. The Paris correspondent of the Empress says that, according to letters from St. Petersburg, the Emperor Alexander's mind is becoming affected.

The levy announced to take place in the provinces of Orenburgh and Samara (23 men in 1,000 soul) is calculated to produce 33,000 soldiers. This will bring up the total amount of the militia embodied in the course of the present year to no less than 380,000 men, exclusive of the Cossacks. The kingdom of Poland has been already drained of its last men, and is now perfectly exhausted. The Grand Duchy of Finland, also, is considerably drained of its population.

Greece. Advices from Athens of the 13th ult. state that the French and English envoys had declined to receive the new ministers. They are said to have demanded positive promises from the King: 1, in respect to the sympathy displayed for the Russian cause; 2, in regard to the large bands of robbers which disturb the peace and quiet of the country; 3, in respect to the Greek press.

Miscellaneous. Difficulties have arisen about the Austrian concordat with the Pope. Even the Austrian bishops complain of the powers conceded to the Holy See.

Latest Foreign News. The following is given on the authority of a Berlin despatch in the Advertiser:

Berlin, Oct. 26. An order of the day from Prince Gortschakoff, dated Oct. 15, declares that he will not evacuate the country confided to his defence, neither will he retreat before the invaders, but will defend the Crimea at all hazards.

Yesterday 1000 officers and men of the 1st Regiment of Light Infantry of the British Foreign Legion, embarked on board the iron screw ship Simoom, for Balaklava.

Obituary.

Died in Hill, N. H., Aug. 16th, Br. David Trumbull, aged 60 years.

Br. T. was a devoted and self-sacrificing Christian for 25 years previous to his decease. Oft was the pilgrim heart cheered by the welcome reception he was sure to meet at his hospitable mansion. The marked characteristics of his conversion were lively expressions of bouyant hope—confident faith—sure expectation of eternal blessedness in the world to come, which rendered his society agreeable and attractive to the disconsolate and despondent Christian.

In the relation of a husband he was devoted and kind; in that of a father, indulgent and affectionate; in that of a citizen, confidential and faithful. He lived in peace with God and died a saint.

Notices.

The work recommended a few weeks since by so many of the Preachers, is now written, and will go to the publisher's as soon as pledges are received sufficient to warrant the undertaking. As this is a gift to the cause except the actual expense, I do not feel it duty to borrow $4 or 500, and be compelled to peddle my own productions to get out of debt. If the preaching Brn interested would just name the thing to the Churches, and get some one or more in each place to pledge themselves for 10, 15, or 20, as they may choose, it will save the trouble of getting single subscribers at 50 cts. each.—Such a course would secure the object at once. 1,000 books will cost about $400. 50 pledges, 20 each, will warrant the undertaking. I have received pledges for over 100 without any effort. Now this is a short and easy method, and if done soon, the work will soon appear, and the Nos. be sent to those who pledge, for distribution.

ions of the Church, but, also, the manner in which the Church, through her synods, was used as a mouth, Prophet, or tool of the secular power. To find the commencement of the 1260 years then, we have only to ascertain where this relation of the Church and state commenced, or, in other words, when the Church became nationalized—the decrees of the councils of the Church, being sanctioned and published by the civil authorities.

The World's Crisis.

LOWELL, NOV. 17, 1855.

To Correspondents.

Communications—COMMUNICATIONS—COMMUNICATIONS—where are they? True, we have had many stirling, excellent and rare articles of late; but they do not last forever. Pass along the lively, glowing, warm-hearted articles, baptized with prayer—sparkling with celestial light—overflowing with love. Come, we wait for a fresh supply. The Lord will have the Crisis going forth and scattering its scintillations of light and love to all the flock scattered over mountain and valley, lighting the watch-fires, enkindling a flame of love and diffusing its healthful life-giving influence all around, or else He would have it cease. Which course do you think most for His glory? Decide, and act accordingly.

Questions.

I have been so pressed with business of late as to be unable to write editorials, or answer questions that have been asked.—But perhaps it would be best to publish questions, and if I have not opportunity to reply, others may do it more effectually.

☞ The following article was written, I am informed, by a Br. who has been interested in times past, in the Advent doctrines; but who has more recently been led to believe in the doctrine of a temporal millenium. As the article is written in a kind spirit, with a desire that it be published and replied to, I thought it advisable to admit it to the columns of the Crisis.

[illegible] history of the Church and the w[illegible]

The first event here spoken of, is the binding of the Dragon, that old serpent, who is the Devil and Satan, for the period of a thousand years (Chilia etee), then follows the resurrection of the martyrs, and here arises the much vexed question, how is this resurrection to be understood—literally or figuratively? If literally, it would seem that mortals are to mingle with immortals, as we cannot expect that the last enemy, Death, is overcome, until after the subjugation of Gog and Magog; and we perceive by the 7, 8, and 9, vs., that Satan, after his release from his prison, finds man the easy victim of his seductive wiles, and these victims surely are not resurrected saints. But again, it is worthy of notice here, that there is nothing said about the resurrection of the body, which the Apostle Paul teaches us to expect, in his Epistle to the Corinthians, 15th chapter. The word here and elsewhere is (psuchas, soul) in Corinthians (somati, body) therefore the question naturally arises, "What is a resurrection of souls?" The word here, and in other other places rendered soul, signifies life, reason, inclination, &c., consequently it is that principle of man that impels him to action; if a regenerated soul, to Christian action, and if unregenerate, to action of an opposite nature: therefore we conclude, that even a literal construction of the language, cannot imply an absolute resurrection of the martyrs, according to the teaching of Paul, and even our Savior himself, but rather a resuscitation, and prevalence of holy principles, during the period when Satan's power shall be restricted. This period the prophets distinctly predict, as in Ps. 2: 8, that Christ shall have the "heathen for an inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for a possession." "The earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea," Isa. 11: 9. "The fulness of the Gentiles shall come in, and all Israel shall be saved," Rom. 11: 25, 26; and the very explicit passage in Isa. 2: 2–6 which our limits will not permit us to transcribe.

These events, it will be observed, are to transpire in the last days, when "out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem."

We pass now to notice the events that are to transpire at the end of the thousand years.

We are informed, that when the thousand years are completed, Satan shall be unbound from his prison, and shall come out to deceive the nations, that are in the four (goniais, corners) of the (gees earth) Gog and Magog. The word here rendered earth, is in similar connections rendered land, which it also signifies. In Matt. 10: 15, gee Sodom, (land of Sodom) 9: 26 went abroad into all that geen (land,) 27: 45. "Darkness over all the geen land," Acts 25: 39, they knew not the geen land, and many others, but this will suffice. Therefore we conclude, that the word here actually points out a particular locality, i. e. the land of Gog and Magog. It has been understood, that the nations so designated, are some of the tribes, formerly comprehended under the general term Scythians. It is then the nations inhabiting this region, whom Satan is to instigate to war against the saints.

In the 38, and 39 chapters of Ezekiel, we find a prophecy against Gog, the land of Magog, wherein it is said, this warlike prince shall come against the mountains of Israel, which are described as restored from their former waste and desolation, to a fertile and habitable condition.

The language in these chapters, and the concluding verses of the 19th ch. of Revelation, bear a striking resemblance to each other, and are thought by many to refer to one and the same event. If so, the first incursion of Gog is at the commencement of the thousand years, and the second at the end of that period, and this appears to be a reasonable construction.

The people of Israel dwell in their own land, (Ezek. 36 and 37 and compare 38: 8,) and this prince in the land of Gog and Magog, being seized with a desire of conquest, collects his forces against them.—During this period, however, the emissaries of Satan are instigating the kings of the earth to war, and they are gathered together in a place called Armageddon. Here the Revelator breaks off the thread of the subject, which he had under immediate consideration, while he relates another event, of vast importance to the Christian world, being nothing less than the fall of mystical Babylon, which is understood to be Papal Rome, and again re[illegible] in the 19th chapter, where it will [illegible] that the kings of the earth are [illegible] by the King of kings, and [illegible]. Therefore these events [illegible] presented to our view in con[illegible] apparent that they all have [illegible] in that mighty revolution, [illegible] declares is to convulse the [illegible] to the dawn of the Millennial period.

Whether this gathering of the kings of the earth is the same as Ezekiel's description of the incursion of Gog and Magog, it is evident that it is to transpire before the commencement of the thousand years; and if they are not one, then the only conclusion is, that the Gog and Magog of Ezekiel and John are one, who are to war against the saints at the end of the thousand years. Thus the question cannot be one of great importance, as the record in either case shows that a mighty revolution is to convulse the earth, at the commencement of the thousand years, when the kings of the earth are to be vanquished by the Messiah, and He shall "reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before His ancients gloriously." Yet a seed remains, whom Satan can subvert to his purposes, and the fact stands thus recorded, that "When the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed from his prison. And shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battle: the number of whom is as the sand of the sea.—And they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city, and fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them."

We have thus in as concise a manner as possible, perhaps too concise for perspicuity, endeavored to present our views of this subject. If any of our Advent Brn. deem them unscriptural, and can show us why they so consider them, we shall be happy to have them do so; for it is a subject whereon Christians ought to be united. If our Savior has declared that the Gospel shall be published among all nations, and commanded His followers to publish it, it is incumbent on them to obey; for, although He is able by the working of His Almighty power to subdue all things unto Himself, yet it has pleased Him by the foolishness of preaching, to save them that believe.

Therefore the weapon which the child of God has to wield, is the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God. Thus armed, the servants of the Most High should go forth, in compact ranks, and united efforts, (suffering no ism or variance of opinion to break or divide those ranks,) and with steadfast faith rely upon the promises of God, undismayed while they hear the mutterings of the distant thunder, which indicates the rising tempest; for although the kings of the earth gather together to war, we have the sure word of prophecy, by which we know that our Lord will ultimately sweep the sources of apostasy, infidelity and oppression from the face of the earth; and thus prepare the way for purity and truth to permeate the social mass.

Analogy of the First and Second Advents.

By WILLIAM SHEPHERD.

The Star and Magi of the first Advent—The Morning Star and the Second Advent now impending—Features of similarity hastily noticed.

Unto the Church of God in waiting:—

"Grace and peace from God our Father, and from our Lord Jesus the Messiah or Life-Giver. Blessed be God the Father of our Lord Jesus the Messiah, who in His great mercy hath begotten us anew by our Lord Jesus the Messiah, to the hope of life, and to an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and unfading, which is prepared for you in heaven; while ye are kept by the power of God and by faith, for the life that is prepared and will be revealed in the last times; wherein ye will rejoice forever, notwithstanding ye at the present time are pressed a little, by the various trials that pass over you; So that the proof of your faith may appear more precious than refined gold that is tested by fire, unto glory, and honor, and praise, at the manifestation of Jesus the Messiah."

Beloved of God:—In our last epistle, entitled 'Type and Antitype,' we omitted to consider one feature which has a very important bearing upon the Church in her present position. Let us then just glance at this by way of a timely admonition, as this is the only object we have in presenting it. We find that the Israelites subsequently to their being brought out from Egyptian bondage with a high hand and strong arm, and being safely conducted unto the eve of triumphant deliverance, they began to complain and murmur against Moses despite of all arguments and entreaties. See Ex. 14: 11, 12.—Here is distrust—a faithlessness toward God and His providence manifested, they are brought into a strait place—to the trial of their faith—they waver—regret that they have left Egypt, and wish to return—Moses encourages them, however, they proceed and are rescued. That this circumstance has its parallel with the Church now in waiting, Scripture abundantly testifies. The Apostolic exhortation no doubt has an express allusion to this. "Harden not your hearts as in the provocation, in the day of temptation in the wilderness * * * Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God. But exhort one another daily. * * For we are made partakers of Christ, if we hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end." Heb. 3: 8–17. See also ch. 4th. Indeed we shall discover by carefully examining the sacred word on this point, that it is fraught with the most stirring exhortations to prayer and watchfulness, just a little while preceding the return of our Lord Jesus, and that our Lord himself anticipated a deplorable state of things in the neglect of these exhortations and consequent faithlessness in regard to His coming again, in that remarkable passage recorded in Luke 18: 7, 8., and rendered in the Syriac thus:—"And will not God much more vindicate His chosen who call upon Him by day and by night, and have patience with them? I tell you He will vindicate them speedily, yet the Son of man will come; and will He find faith on the earth?"

But to the subject.

The "Morning Star" then, in Scripture (as are the luminaries of heaven,) is an emblem of supernatural light; but this celestial orb is highly distinguished from all others mentioned therein. It should rather be regarded as a signal light, or herald of a greater. Indeed its very name "The Morning Star"—is associated with the dawn of day—the rising Sun, &c.—But that it is an emblem of light, and a promising one, we are assured. And God grant that the Church in these trying times may be more fully illuminated with its beautiful and consoling rays.

That an analogy exists between the two Stars—the two Characters—(the Magi, and wise of Dan. 12: 10,) in the two Advents, we venture to say. Who were those "wise men from the east that came to Jerusalem" with such perfect assurance of beholding the infant Messiah? "Saying, Where is he that is born King of the Jews? for we have seen his Star in the east, and are come to worship him."—Surely they were not heathen as some have presumed to assert, but men divinely illuminated and instructed no doubt in the Oracles of God. They knew that they should see the Savior with a positive certainty, from the fact of their bringing with them those rich gifts; gold, frankincense and myrrh, which they cheerfully laid at the Babe's feet, as a faint outward expression of their inward and heartfelt adoration and unfeigned homage, to the Redeemer of the world. These men understood, and were not in darkness in regard to His first Advent. Neither John, His forerunner, the aged Simeon, or devoted Elizabeth professed a more firm assurance that Jesus was the Messiah, than these Magi. It may be said, then, that they were highly priviledged from the fact also of this mysterious orb, the visible Star, gently leading them to the holy object of their search; not so, however, more than the wise who are looking for the Savior's second appearing, as we shall presently notice.

Again; these men were not recognized by any professedly religious institution, or body, that we are aware of, yet possessed this superior knowledge of and love for the Messiah. Behold the striking similarity existing between them, in this particular, and those men who long for and love His appearing. Are those dear saints who occupy this blessed (Rev. 16: 15) position, recognized by any ecclesiastical body or professedly religious institute or system now in vogue, as the children of God, or Christians rooted and grounded in the faith of the Gospel. Let every heart respond for itself. These wise men from the east typify, in some important particulars, those who are looking for Jesus' second Advent. They were divinely illuminated, we way safely infer, and had access to sacred books predicting the time of the Messiah's birth or first Advent, together with the fact, "The Star which they saw in the east went before them, till it came and stood over where the young child was." No wonder they rejoiced under such unusual happy auspices, as we read, "When they saw the Star, they rejoiced with exceeding great joy." Let it be remembered that these Magi are designated as wisemen, a phrase which the Scriptures ever recognize as indicating the righteous or men of God, e. g. "The wise shall shine," "The wise shall understand," "Faithful and wise servant," "Five of them were wise," Dan. 12: 3, 10; Matt. 24: [illegible] 26: 2. There certainly is a remarkable resemblance observed here between the wise men of Matthew and those of Daniel: carefully examine the circumstances of each, and you will readily perceive it. And now, dismissing this part of our subject which lies in the past, we hasten to consider that portion which more immediately interests us, as it is yet in the future. We before observed that the Magi were not more highly favored, (if as much,) in regard to divine light and knowledge respecting the Advent, than the Church now in waiting. Let us see what God has promised in relation to this, and if what we assert is not affirmed by Him.—"Light is sown for the righteous, and gladness for the upright in heart." "Thy word is a lamp to my feet, and a light to my path." "The entrance of thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple," (or upright.) "Arise shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon." "The Lord shall be thine everlasting light," "I am the light of the world, he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness." "He that loveth his brother abideth in the light." Psa. 99: 11; 119: 105, 130; Isa. 60: 1, 20; John 8: 12; 1 John 2: 10; Rev. 3: 3.

"We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed as unto a light that shineth in a dark place until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in your hearts." 1 Pet. 1: 14.

This memorable passage affords us a key as to the nature and character of the light which we are now contemplating, It is needless to say that it is divine and spiritual, as the apostolic writings affirm. "For God who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God, in the face of Jesus Christ," that, "The eyes of your understanding being enlightened, ye may know what is the hope of his calling," &c. Is the Church illumined with this resplendent light presented under the beautiful figure of "the day-star by the Apostle? We trust she is, and may still richer and more refulgent communications from this divine source throw a halo of glory around her so that she may realize indeed that her light is come; this we pray of the Father through her highly exalted and ever blessed Advocate and Head, even Jesus the Messiah. Amen.

Again: "And after these things I saw another angel come down from heaven, having great power, and the earth (Church) was lightened with his glory." Rev. 18: 1.

Observe the chronology of this Angel's mission, and his language. "The earth (Church) was lightened with His glory.—This Angel is seen descending just previous to the downfall of Babylon and is represented as crying or proclaiming, "mightily, with a strong voice, saying, Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen, &c.," The language indicates a blessed state of things for the Church in this locality, (to which we are approximating with rapid flight,) in respect to divine illumination, "floods of light" are here implied—ah, more in regard to this Angel and the Church. The Church acts in harmony with him, partaking of his spirit and the sentiment of his annunciation, and will ultimately proclaim, "Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen, for strong is the Lord God that judgeth her."

And finally, on the promises of light and knowledge. "I will give him that (that overcometh,) the Morning Star."—Rev. 2: 28. This is one of the most splendid promises, one of the most soul-cheering, perhaps, which the entire Scriptures contain. And if the Magi "rejoiced with exceeding great joy, when they saw the star," heralding to them the first Advent of Jesus in his humanity, how much more shall the saints of God "rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory," when they realize this glorious promise, and, as it were, behold "The Morning Star," the harbinger of the Second Advent of Jesus in his divinity. If their hearts were ravished and their hopes brightened at the sight of that little orb that radiated its faint light around the Messiah in the manger, much more shall these weary pilgrims be glad, and their hopes renewed when the brilliant rays of the morning star shall enlighten their understandings, and throw its refulgent light on the coming of the Messiah in majesty. The first but a little preceded the time of the Gospel dispensation; but this, the fulness of times, or all previous dispensations. Glory to God, that we are almost there—on the eve of this era of grandeur. The Star in the east appeared at the first Advent—the morning star of the Apocalypse will appear at the second Advent—the first arose and gilded the eastern horizon, this will arise in the heart, as it were, gilding the horizon of the understanding and illuminating the mind—the light of the first rejoiced the hearts of those who beheld it, unerringly guiding them to the humble abode of the Messiah—the light of the second will equally comfort and guide to the knowledge of his coming in glory. The former introduced a period of time, the latter will usher in an eternal day when

Through vast creation wide,
While Jesus shall in glorious state,
With all His saints abide.

There is another difference in relation to these points, which we would not omit to mention. The first is simply called a "Star," the last, the "MORNING STAR;" consequently, it has a two-fold meaning, being not only an emblem of light, but the herald of that blissful dawn which precedes the everlasting day. Well might the Apostle say, speaking prophetically to the Church down here:—"ye are not in darkness that that day should overtake you" unawares. No, praise God, we are not in darkness in relation to this momentous event, but "have a more sure word of prophecy." "I will give him (the faithful,) the morning Star." Think you when a man perceives the morning star rising in the east, that the day will take him by surprise? Most assuredly not; so all that enjoy what is implied in this blessed promise, will be in readiness when the night is past—the day breaks—the clouds disperse—and Jesus is revealed, to hail Him with—"Lo! this is our God, and we have waited for Him."

And as it would not be expedient to prolong this article beyond its present limits, occupying thereby too much valuable space in the Crisis, we must hastily bring it to a close, invoking the Divine blessing to attend the same. May the perusal thereof prove conducive to the good of all who are interested in the things pertaining to the kingdom of God, leading them to a more careful examination of this subject. May they possess an unwavering determination by the grace of God to overcome, which must, as an inseparable consequence, result in the happy realization of what is implied in the promise of "The Morning Star."

The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ the Messiah be with all the saints. Amen.

For The Crisis.

The wicked not immortal; or the immortality of the soul disproved by Bible truth.

A lecture delivered by P. Tandy, Sept. 30, at Mill Village, Goshen N. H.

Respected neighbors, friends and brethren:—I arise at this time, feeling very solemn and humble in view of our true condition! I feel that we must all give a strict and impartial account to God, our great Judge, of our deeds done here, whether they are good, or bad, in the day of judgment, which is very fast approaching! How it becomes us to act as candidates for that awfully solemn scene!!—May the Lord help us, one and all, to act as we should, under all circumstances; that we may have divine approval. Our motto in the following remarks is, "To the Law and to the testimony;" and our theme, the wicked not immortal.

Various errors exist among men in regard to revealed truth. These errors go to show how very imperfect we are in knowledge—the mistakes committed in our education—the reluctance of the mind to investigate—and a great want of moral courage to step aside from the track marked out by learned men, but who, (most likely,) have conducted their own investigations under the influence of the fear of being denounced as heretics; if they should be led to results unlike to those who are reputed for wisdom. But, "if any man will be wise, let him become a fool that he may be wise." "The wisdom of this world is foolishness with God." We honor God only so far as we have right conceptions of His character, government, and purposes, and act in accordance with them. If we believe God will reward or punish men contrary to his own word of inspiration, we dishonor Him, however much sincerity and zeal we manifest. Truth and the honor of God are inseparable; and we cannot glorify our Father in heaven by erroneous opinions. Yes, (to be plain,) most professed Christians, if pressed on the subject, can give little better reason for what they believe, on many points, than, that their teachers told them so. They are thoroughly educated; they must be right.

It is our solemn duty to study carefully and prayerfully the holy Scriptures, and form our opinions of what they teach for ourselves, as we must answer for ourselves in the day of judgment. But in this study, the correct principles of interpretation are of the first importance. Without these, our appeal to the word of God may only serve to confirm us in error. The plainest truths of the Bible have been wrapped in darkness by pretending that the language of the Scriptures has a mystical or secret meaning, that does not appear in the words employed. Such a principle of interpretation, is a libel on Divine Revelation! The word of God professes to be a Revelation; and so plain, too, that the wayfaring man can understand it; and the Savior says, "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine." The language of the Bible, then, should be explained as we would the language of any other book, according to its plain and obvious meaning, unless there is a clear necessity for departing from it. A strict adherence to this principle is necessary, if we would be saved from the wildest errors, and see the children of God united in one spirit, and one body. With these remarks I proceed to the question at issue—namely, The wicked not immortal. The question is not, whether the righteous soul can be immortal, nor whether the souls of the righteous will be immortal; these point are admitted and abundantly proved by the Bible; but the question substantially is this—will the wicked who live and die in their sins, continue eternally, or without end in a state of conscious being in misery! God says, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die;" do we believe God's word? Are we willing to let God be true, but every man a liar? "To the Law and to the Testimony." Living as we do, on the eve of a new epoch in the history of the Church, and standing in the dawning light of a new dispensation, we may reasonably expect some clearer light, some more blessed truths to be evolved from the oracles of God; not however a new Revelation, but an eliciting of the light which for a long time has laid partially concealed, like the latent spark struck out by steel. Let me just remark here, that the doctrine which I advocate, is not new; it is as old as the Bible.

We now propound the inquiry, is the soul naturally immortal? Leaving all preconceived notions or opinions of men, let us examine the plain teachings of the word of the Lord on this subject. "To the law and to the testimony." To understand this subject we need to begin at the foundation; to ascertain of what elements man is constituted, and upon what the sentence of death was pronounced. Man, we find to have been formed out of the dust of the earth: and when God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, man became (not immortal, but) a living soul. It seems that God formed an organization which was perfect in all its parts; but the organization demominated man, was still insensate and inanimate; the principle of vitality was not there; therefore thought, feeling, animal motion and consciousness were as foreign from the lifeless mass as from any other clay. "But the Lord God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." As breath is the first and last indication of animal life, therefore it is taken for the life itself; the idea is, God communicated to the lifeless form the principle of vitality; notwithstanding that man at his first formation was actually possessed of every member, organ, muscle, &c., of the human body, yet he was without life; consequently without thought feeling, consciousness, &c., but the very moment the Lord breathed into him the breath of life, he became a living, breathing, moving and sentient being. Now let us admit this plain, simple, Bible fact; viz., that breathing into his nostrils the breath of life, was simply communicating to an inanimate system the principle of vitality, or animal life; and the idea of human philosophy, that at the creation, a house of clay was formed, and a soul, or immortal spirit was brought from some other region of the universe of God to inherit it, all vanishes from the mind by the power of truth. The true Scriptural principle being established, we at once can perceive, (if we will) that when a man's life is extinct, the power of vitality which sets in motion the machinery of the body and mind, and induces consciousness, is lost; consequently all the functions of the body and mind cease their action at death. And there can no more be thought, nor feeling, and motion, and consciousness in the man after vitality ceases, than there could be after his formation, prior to receiving the breath of life; for all sensation and consciousness depend on the organism of the man excited by vital action. We have dwelt thus long on this point because, we consider it fundamental; and if we heartily, and clearly entertain the scriptural view on this very important point, we shall be much better prepared to appreciate a biblical argument on the whole subject.—Now the question arises, what significance is to be attached to the sentence of death, as pronounced on the man as seen in Gen 3d chap? God plainly told Adam, that "In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." (The marginal reading is, dying, thou shalt die.) In explanation of this sentence the Lord tells Adam, that after a life of toil and suffering, he should drop again into his original dust, or element; or as the wise man expresses it, "Then shall the dust, (meaning mortal man) return to the earth as it was; and the spirit (or breath of life) shall return to God who gave it." This is what we all understand to be physical death. The privation of life, is simply reversing the process of man's creation. There is an actual return both of the body and of the spirit to their original state. The dust returns as it was, prior to its natural being, and the spirit or breath of life, or in other words principle of animal life, returns to God the fountain whence it came. As God gave life at first, He takes it away at death.

"THE EXCELLENCY OF THE LORD'S ANOINTED, OR, CHRIST THE PROMISED MESSIAH."

We have received a copy of a work bearing the above title, from the pen of Sr. Mary A Seymour. It consists of nearly 70 pp. 12 mo. Price, 8 cts. single, $5 per hundred. By forwarding $1 to A. N. Seymour, Hillsdale, Michigan, 12 copies will be received, post paid.

From what little examination I have been enabled to give to the work, I should esteem it a highly interesting and valuable treatise to enlighten the mind of any inquirer after truth in relation to the sonship of Christ.

Were the promises made to Abraham and his seed ever fulfilled? I would like to see something in your paper on this subject. E. W.

It is stated that a school or college for Turkish youth is about to be established at Versailles, the Sultan having made a grant of 1,500,000 francs for this purpose. Here some 300 Mussulmans will be instructed in the European languages, the sciences, and the arts as applied to industry.

THE DIFFICULTIES WITH MEXICO, ON THE TEXAN FRONTIER. Capt. Callahan has made a report to the governor of Texas, attempting to justify his destruction of the town of Piedras Negras, on the Mexican side of the Rio Grande. In this he says that whilst the Rangers were posted there, a force of 1200 or 1500 Mexicans appeared before it. On the 6th Capt. Callahan commenced crossing his horses over the Rio Grande to the American side, and during the day the Mexican and Indian force advanced to the attack. Capt. Callahan had taken possession of the two pieces of cannon in Piedras Negras, which were mounted and fired upon the Mexicans several times. Finding his force inadequate to defend itself while crossing the river from so overwhelming a force, Capt. Callahan as a last resort set fire to the town, between himself and the enemy. This checked the assault, and gave him protection during the balance of the day, and enabled him to cross over all his men and his horses, except about thirty. During the night he brought over the cannon, and mounted them on the American side to command both sides of the river. On the 7th he recrossed the balance of his horses except about twelve. His command has returned to the settlements.

Capt. Callahan then complains that he was deceived by the local Mexican authorities, who sent him a passport and all but invited his expedition, that they might be surrounded by an overwhelming force and massacred. Not a very likely story.

The Texas State Times attempts to justify the foray, stating that during the last fifteen months the Indians on the frontier had massacred more than forty men, women and children, and stolen about 2000 horses. The latter they sell to the Mexicans at a low price, and in consequence they are not only allowed a refuge there, but openly protected by the authorities of that country.

The affair has caused much excitement in Texas, and an appeal has been made to the people of the State to rally armed to the frontier, and in sufficient force to pursue the depredators across the Rio Grande, and demand of the local Mexican authorities their surrender, and prepared to enforce their demand

Cibolo, near the mouth of the Santa Clara, has been appointed the rendezvous, and the the 15th day of the present month as the time when the expedition will move.

The New York Courier and Enquirer observes, that this Indian war between Texas ahd Mexico will occasion the government much trouble, and intimates that the Texans are not altogether the long-suffering lambs which they represent themselves to be, and it is suspected that in many cases the Indian hostilities, of which we have only the Texan version, are provoked by murders and robberies previously committed by the white outlaws who infest our side of the border. The government troops are very numerous in Texas and abundantly sufficient to chastise any band of Indian depredators.

The Nicaraguan News. It appears that 280 passengers, besides the 50 recruits for the Walker expedition, were in the steamer from San Francisco to San Juan del Sur, before the attack on Granada; and that all these innocent passengers were put to much inconvenience and suffering by the fillibusters. On the arrival at Virgin Bay, they embarked in the steamer Virgin, but lest they should sail without "the command," the marauders detained their luggage; then seized the vessel, and set sail with it, with all the passengers on board, to attack the castle of San Carlos and summon it to surrender. On reaching San Carlos, a bombastic proclamation was prepared, to the effect that the Virgin had 210 armed men on board, and that their humane commander, wishing to avoid bloodshed, demanded an unconditional surrender of the port.

With this proclamation, Capt. Errioson, with two oarsmen, was sent on shore. The captain, with his oarsmen, were made prisoners, and in about twenty minutes after the landing of the boat, the commander of the port sent a reply in the shape of six cannon shot, each of which fell a safe distance from the steamer.

A boat with 25 men, which was sent to effect a landing, found the attempt hopeless, and the steamer returned to Virgin Bay, discharged the unhappy passengers on the beach at midnight, and then went off in the steamer Virgin at Granada. The troubles of the peaceful passengers were not yet over, however. While they were standing in and about the office of the Transit company at Virgin Bay, a detachment of full two hundred government troops from Rivas, commanded by Col. du Champ, came into town, and without a moment's warning, made a general assault upon the passengers by firing upon them and charging upon them with fixed bayonets. This assault caused a great stampede, most seeking shelter in the jungle. Five are supposed to have been killed, and several others wounded. The commander of the government forces was under the impression that they were all fillibusters.

On the afternoon of the 18th October, while the troops at San Carlos were exasperated by the insult offered them that day from the Virgin, the steamer San Carlos, with passengers from New York, Oct. 5, made her appearance up the river, and when within range of the guns was fired upon by the fort. The shot struck the steamer amidships, disabling the engine and killing two passengers—Mrs White and her infant daughter, and severely wounded her son.

St. Louis, Nov 2.—The Pacific Railroad Accident. The following are the details as far as received. The gentlemen who gave the sad tidings were on their way to the city as passengers on the Ben Bolt, and saw the train of cars pass up with the company on board, and exchanged salutations. The boat came to a landing and the train proceeded to the Gasconade river, about eight miles distant. Before the boat was ready a locomotive, which had followed the train for the purpose of rendering assistance in case of accident and seeing that all was right along the road came back from the river with the word that the bridge over the Gasconade, standing 35 feet above the water, had broken down while the train was crossing, and ten or eleven cars with their occupants had been precipitated into 20 feet of water.

The consternation of the men with the engine was so great that they could barely announce the fact, only adding that they thought at least 150 had gone out of the cars to walk over the bridge. There were probably 500 persons in the company. Two of our military companies were among them, the Greys and the National Guards, as were also many members of the press and private citizens. The locomotive came down to the train bound for St. Louis, which was immediately taken by the Superintendent and his men back to the scene of suffering and may be the means of saving many lives.

Serious Result. The accident on the Boston & Worcester road on Tuesday morning will probably result in the death of Miss Alice Taft, daughter of Dr Taft, of Framingham. Miss Taft and a younger brother were riding in a buggy across the track, just as the first down passenger train and the up freight train were approaching "Train's Crossing," and their attention was directed only to the freight train that was nearest. They waited a moment for it to pass them, and then drove directly across the track of the downward train. The engine struck the horse upon the hip, separated him from the vehicle, and killed him outright. The wagon was completely demolished, and the boy and girl thrown to the ground with great violence. The boy was not much injured, but the girl had two of her ribs broken and was otherwise injured. The train was running at its usual speed, and the engineer had given the customary warning by blowing the whistle of the engine.

Monachism in Austria. The Emperor of Austria has by a most humiliating and disgraceful act removed all those checks upon Papacy within his dominions which his ancestors had established after a severe and long protracted struggle, and has restored to the Catholic church all those immunities and privileges, the exercise of which must greatly detract from his own independence and dignity, and prove a blight and a curse to the nation Out of Spain no country has suffered more from the Papal rule than Austria. The worst evils of the Catholic system have prevailed there to such an alarming extent, and the usurpations of the Pope have been so threatening to the temporal authority, that successive Emperors have been forced in self-defence to resist the assumptions of the See of Rome The Emperor Joseph second, towards the end of the last century, succeeded at length in erecting some barriers against the encroachments of the spiritual power. It has remained for his successor, in this age of progress, to break down those barriers and to give free course to the desolating influences of Catholicism.

One article of the extraordinary concordat concluded between Austria and the Pope looks to the increase of the monastic institutions, so long the disgrace of Austria and all Catholic countries. In relation to these institutions a remarkable document has recently been brought to light. This is a petition of Ubaldus Borzinsky, a member of the order of the Brothers of Mercy, addressed to Pope Pius Ninth. Borzinsky has for many years resided at different monasteries of the order in Austria, and he has witnessed so much iniquity and corruption on the part of his brethren, that he has deemed it his duty to expose their conduct. Some of his manuscript was discovered, and in order to put a stop to his projected revelations, he was sent to the monastery at Prague, where he was kept in confinement. From here nearly a year ago he addressed his petition to the Pope. No notice was taken of the petition, but Borzinsky was soon after removed from Prague and confined in the monastery at Gortz, where he now remains

The petition reveals the fact that monachism at the present day is precisely what it was in the middle ages. The dissolute habits of the priors and monks, and the scenes of riot and debauchery enacted within the walls of the convents, as described by Borzinsky, are hardly surpassed by the monstrous disorders said to have been found in many of the religious houses in England, at the time of the suppression of monasteries by Henry the Eighth.

Such is monachism in Austria, such is the institution which Francis Joseph is willing to perpetuate Such are the clergy who are the spiritual teachers of the people. Such is indeed Catholicism, when freed from restraint and permitted to carry out its rotten and corrupt system The establishment of religious orders is a prominent feature of that system and is an important source of power to the church The iniquities practised by the members of these orders may in part be attributed to the unnatural lives which they are compelled to lead. But that such things should not only be tolerated but encouraged by any government, in this age of enlightenment and progress, can but excite our astonishment and indignation.

We cut the following from the Boston Daily Mail of Nov. 12:

The Threatened Rupture between the United States and England. In order to give our readers the fullest possible idea of the manner in which the recent warlike conduct of the English ministry is regarded by the British press, we give this morning extracts from the latest London and Liverpool papers that have come to hand

The London Morning Post, the mouthpiece of the aristocracy, says:

England and France, notwithstanding the contest in which they are engaged in the East, have the means, as well as the determination, to repress that spirit of lawless aggression which Americans have for some time past exhibited; and though the insulting and menacing tones of the Cabinet of Washington may be accounted for by the probable acquisition of the Russian North American territories, a great maritime war, with their exposed seaboard—with their comparatively small fleet—with their British neighbor, Canada, powerful, wealthy, devoted to the mother country, and able to repel invasion, is a course of policy from which we would fain hope the good sense of the more reflecting and honest portion of the American people will save their country. From such an unholy contest what good result could spring? The commerce of England and France might temporarily be cut up; but every American ship would be swept from the seas—all the ports of America would be blockaded—the whole seaboard of America, from Maine to Florida, would be exposed to attack, and all this bloodshed, all this ruin, all these evils, are to be encountered for the acquisition of a Haytian Sebastopol, from which Cuba can be more conveniently threatened!

* * * * * * *

The sensitiveness of the American Government appears very remarkable when their repeated and flagrant violations of the public law—witness Texas, Mexico and Cuba—are borne in mind We trust that the presence of the formidable British fleet which is assembling at Bermuda, will tend to cool both the arrogance and over sensitiveness of the American Government.

Fiendish Thieves. The St. Louis Republican gives the following account of thieving at the Gasconade Bridge, at the time of the occurrence of the late terrible accident:—"One man was discovered attempting to steal the watch of Mr Schuetze, who lay apparently insensible in one of the cars for several hours. He had succeeded in getting the watch, when he was observed, and such threats made as convinced him that it was best for him to give it up. It was intended to detain him, but in the excitement of the moment he made his escape. Others lost money in the same way. As soon as the accident happened, men seemed to flock in from the surrounding country, although no houses were to be seen, and it is a most forbidding part of the country for settlement. Where they came from, and in such a storm of lightning and thunder and rain, is a mystery; but there they were, ready to rob the dead, and to pick what ever valuables could be found, in the general confusion which followed for hours afterwards."

The Bible, and the Jews in America. A conference of Jews, composed of Rabbis and delegates from the various synagogues in the country, (the first ever held in the United States,) took place at Cincinnati, on the 17th ult. The first afternoon was devoted to preliminary discussion, and the consideration of a platform basing the entire proceedings of the conference upon the inspiration of the Bible and the teachings of the Talmud, which was finally adopted. The second day was devoted to the discussion of the derivation of the Talmud, whether it was of divine origin or the work of the elders of Israel in the days of Moses and Joshua; decided as the result of both—i. e., that it is partly spiritual, partly rabbinical—a divine treatise upon the Scriptures, and more particularly the Pentateuch.

Breadstuffs in South America. It is a singular fact that the grain crop in South America bids fair to be as short as it is in Europe. In Bellidot the price of flour has gone up to $40 a barrel.

Sentence for Illegal Enlistments. In the United States District Court in New York, Joseph Wagner, convicted of enlisting men for the British service, was brought up for sentence. The Judge (Ingersoll) said he would make an example of the prisoner, in order to deter others from a similar course, which might embroil us with the present belligerent powers of Europe. The Court then sentenced the prisoner to be imprisoned two years, and pay a fine of $100. Wagner was arrested in Boston, but was sent on to New York, the offence having been committed there.

Railroad Accident. A serious accident occurred on the Chicago, Alton & St. Louis Railroad, on the 29th ult., near the junction of the Illinois and Michigan Central roads, about 14 miles from Chicago. The passenger train from St. Louis, was moving at full speed, when it ran off the track in consequence of a switch having been carelessly left open. The engine and three cars were thrown from the track, breaking the first named, and smashing the tender, splintering the baggage, express and second class cars, and injuring a first class passenger car. Several passengers were injured. The baggage master and the express messenger of the train were seriously injured, and a young man by the name of Page, from Boston, a brakeman on the road, was caught between two cars in such a manner that the whole front end of the passenger car had to be cut away with axes before he was liberated. His thigh bone was badly crushed, and he was otherwise seriously hurt.

Electrical Display on Lake Erie Between 6 and 7 o'clock last evening there was a most brilliant electrical display upon the Lake. The heavens were clear, save to very near the Northern horizon, upon which a thick haze seemed to rest. From a few points West of North, Eastward 90 degrees, colums of fire, some perpendicular, others curved, shot up from the lake a distance 10 or 15 degrees, in rapid succession;—while in other parts of the sky were visible flashes as of heat lightning. The whole seemed more like a series of powder explosions than lightning When last seen, the jets of fire were apparently within a mile of the shore, but later were near the horizon. The wind was blowing a gale from the South.—[Cleveland Herald, Oct. 30.

Shocking Occurrence at a Lunatic Hospital.—Two Attendants Killed by a Lunatic. "It appears that a patient named John E. Clarke, who has been an inmate of the asylum for upwards of three years and a half, and who, during most of this time has been quite docile, and was employed in various ways about the establishment, frequently attending upon the family of Dr Waddell, in a fit of "impulsive insanity," seized an axe, and before any alarm could be given, struck down two of the attendants, and by repeated blows mangled them in a shocking manner, causing instant death.

The Bee says of the Know Nothings, "They are in power in New York, Ohio, California, Louisiana, Maryland, Kentucky, Delaware, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New Hampshire and Rhode Island—and have proved their ability to carry Pennsylvania on a square American issue. In a national contest, with a fair platform and strong leaders, they can carry Indiana, Illinois, Tennessee, Alabama, and Virginia—and we doubt not Florida, Mississippi, Arkansas and North Carolina.

EUROPEAN NEWS.

EXTRACTS FROM ENGLISH PAPERS RECEIVED BY THE ASIA.

Since the Arago sailed there is news that the Russians have themselves blown up their fortifications on Otchakoff Point opposite Kinburn, Fort Nicholas and other works mounting 23 guns. Kinburn and Otchakoff commanded the entrance to the bay of Dresper, and also served as outworks of Nicolaieff, hence by their capture the allies have full command of the great line of river communication lying in the rear of all the Russian forces in the Crimea.

The French and Sardinians have advanced from the Tchernaya and Baidas line and correspondence of the 13th says that the French posts were within 9 miles of Bakshi Seari, also close to the Russian possessions at Albat and Airgel, where, if at all, the Russians will make a stand.

October 12. The Russians from the north side of Sebastopol were falling back by detachments on Perekop; there was, however, no diminution of fire from the forts and batteries on the north side of the harbor, their fire for the past four days had been very active and chiefly directed against the Malakoff, and French quarters in the western part of the south side.

The British and French were engaged in clearing the ruins of the city.

A Russian dispatch from Berlin says: That on the 22d, the allies 40,000 strong marched from Eupatoria towards Toulat, but on the 23d, perceiving our lancers on their left flank, they returned behind Aktaschi.

Gen. Todleben is entrusted to fortify Nicolaieff.

The London Times says that Gen. Simpson has resigned or is dismissed. The Globe says that he is not re-called, but that physical ailment may induce him to resign his post. The Globe also says a new commander is appointed, but does not give his name. Rumor mentions Generals De Lacy Evans, Codrington, Markham, Sir John Campbell, and others, as his probable successor.

Major Delafield, Major Murdock, and Captain McLellan, American officers, had arrived in camp. A British general order provides them with rations during their stay in the Crimea.

Miss Nightingale has returned to Sebastopol.

The Moniteur publishes a list of the stores found in Sebastopol: One million shot and cartridges, and one million pounds of gunpowder.

The effective land strength of the allies in the Crimea, including sick, is officially reported to be 210,000 men.

A letter from St. Petersburg of the 15th, says that the allied successes had caused despondency, yet everything indicates the intention of Russia to continue the war.

The London Times has a noticeable editorial respecting American expansion. The Times says, "the English government is omitting no opportunity of reinforcing the West India squadron, and thus interposing a powerful barrier between Britain and the North American continent. At this moment North America is in profound peace with the whole world, yet it is not the less true that in her ports are fitting out at this moment piratical fillibustering expeditions, destined to carry war and bloodshed into the dominions of an unoffending neighbor.

"We cannot believe that those who are now engaged in enrolling unhappy men for these desperate and criminal enterprises, fully contemplate the success of a descent upon Ireland, for instance, as probable or even possible.

"If we can prevent the expedition from sailing or intercepting them mid-ocean, we shall have done much towards averting the dangers which must arise, should they be carried out to their natural development."

The London papers comment strongly upon Admiral Stirling's dilatory movements in the Pacific, by which, on the 20th of may, he permitted the Russian fleet to escape

Russia has come to an amicable understanding with the pope respecting Catholic bishops in Poland.

There are rumors that the governor of Nassau has committed a gross outrage against some American citizens. Particulars not at hand.

Asia. When the Russians in Asia heard of the fall of Sebastopol, they, on the 29th September, made an attack upon Kars. Turkish details of their repulse were received. The Russian loss is reported to be 2,000. Two Turkish redoubts were lost and retaken four times. The Hungarian General Kenunty commanded the Turks, in the absence of the English General Williams. The Russian General Mouravieff, with 80 guns, cannot continue the siege. The Russians have fortified all the passes leading to Tifles.

Omar Pacha is at Souchem Kale.

France. Paris papers say that splendid gold mines were discovered in Cayenne.

Belgium. The Chambers meet on the 14th November. The King of Belgium actively offers his mediation in the war.

The Assault on Kars. The Asia's news contains full details of the repulse of the Russians at Kars. According to Gen Mouravieff's despatch, at the very commencement of the onslaught, several of the principal Russian chiefs and commanders were slain, and the result was that the unity of operations was quite broken. The engagement, which lasted for seven hours and a half, was attended with great loss, but the blockade has now been established as before; and it is even said that they are preparing to attack Kars again.

A letter from Erzeroom shows the obstinate character of the defence. 800 Russians were slain before one redoubt alone, defended by 400 Turks. An English officer writes that the Russians left upwards of 2,000 men dead upon the field, and that their loss in killed, wounded, and prisoners, must have exceeded 6,000. All the European officers present with the Turks escaped, though many of them distinguished themselves.

Omar Pacha is at Lidana, in Turkish Georgia, and is concentrating his troops to march upon Akhaltzik, and so create a diversion in favor of Kars

Spain. The Borges faction has been put to the rout, with a loss of 8 killed and 16 wounded. 25 insurgents, of the band of Tofal, had been executed at Catalonia. The cholera was still very bad at Madrid.

Portugal. From Lisbon we learn that heavy rains had done great injury in the provinces, to large quantities of wheat and Indian corn.

Sweden. Admiral Virgin has left Stockholm on a secret diplomatic mission, it is believed to Paris, and it is added that he is the bearer of the King's ultimatum as to the conditions he requires as the price of his throwing up his neutrality and joining the Western powers in the prosecution of the war.

The blockade of the Baltic having almost ceased, a brisk coasting trade was springing up, and there were lying at the last accounts in Stockholm, about thirty decked and open Russian craft of different sizes, which have broken the blockade and crossed over from the coast of Esthonia, bringing cargoes of corn, potatoes, hops, hemp, and tallow, to barter for that precious article of consumption in Russia—salt. They buy this article here for 6 dollars per barrel, and state that if they return home in safety they shall sell it at 30 dollars, thus realising 500 per cent.

Heligoland. The sum of £40,000 in sovereigns having been landed here from England, the islanders were hoping they would now be paid the value of their potato land, taken from them to build the wooden barracks on for the German Legion and arbitrarily fixed at a penny per square foot. A transport ship had called to convey 500 of the German Foreign Legion to England.

Russia. Exhaustion of Men, &c. The Paris correspondent of the Empress says that, according to letters from St. Petersburg, the Emperor Alexander's mind is becoming affected.

The levy announced to take place in the provinces of Orenburgh and Samara (23 men in 1,000 soul) is calculated to produce 33,000 soldiers. This will bring up the total amount of the militia embodied in the course of the present year to no less than 380,000 men, exclusive of the Cossacks. The kingdom of Poland has been already drained of its last men, and is now perfectly exhausted. The Grand Duchy of Finland, also, is considerably drained of its population.

Greece. Advices from Athens of the 13th ult. state that the French and English envoys had declined to receive the new ministers. They are said to have demanded positive promises from the King: 1, in respect to the sympathy displayed for the Russian cause; 2, in regard to the large bands of robbers which disturb the peace and quiet of the country; 3, in respect to the Greek press.

Miscellaneous. Difficulties have arisen about the Austrian concordat with the Pope. Even the Austrian bishops complain of the powers conceded to the Holy See.

Obituary.

Died in Hill, N. H., Aug. 16th, Br. David Trumbull, aged 60 years.

Br. T. was a devoted and self-sacrificing Christian for 25 years previous to his decease. Oft was the pilgrim heart cheered by the welcome reception he was sure to meet at his hospitable mansion. The marked characteristics of his conversion were lively expressions of bouyant hope—confident faith—sure expectation of eternal blessedness in the world to come, which rendered his society agreeable and attractive to the disconsolate and despondent Christian.

In the relation of a husband he was devoted and kind; in that of a father, indulgent and affectionate; in that of a citizen, confidential and faithful. He lived in peace with God and died a saint.

Notices.

The work recommended a few weeks since by so many of the Preachers, is now written, and will go to the publisher's as soon as pledges are received sufficient to warrant the undertaking. As this is a gift to the cause except the actual expense, I do not feel it duty to borrow $4 or 500, and be compelled to peddle my own productions to get out of debt. If the preaching Brn interested would just name the thing to the Churches, and get some one or more in each place to pledge themselves for 10, 15, or 20, as they may choose, it will save the trouble of getting single subscribers at 50 cts. each.—Such a course would secure the object at once. 1,000 books will cost about $400. 50 pledges, 20 each, will warrant the undertaking. I have received pledges for over 100 without any effort. Now this is a short and easy method, and if done soon, the work will soon appear, and the Nos. be sent to those who pledge, for distribution. The seventh Trumpet. Rev. 11: 15.

By William Sheppard.

And the seventh trumpet sounded;
And the angel-voices high,
Loud through heaven and earth resounded,
From the portals of the sky.

With astounding proclamations,
Are the voices heard to say,
That the kingdoms of the nations
Are to quickly pass away.

As the Father now has taken
Mighty power of great renown,
And, each worldly kingdom shaken—
Gives them to His only Son.

Now, the four and twenty Elders,
Worship God before the throne;
Seraphim and holy martyrs,
Saints and angels join in one.

Joyful, praising, and extolling
Jesus—He who once was slain;
Jesus—organ anthems pealing,
Jesus—ever lives again.

He who "Was" before creation,
He who "Is" to ever be,
And to "Come" with full salvation,
Reigns through all eternity.

Wicked nations now united,
Tell the day of wrath has come,
Filled with anger, and affrighted,
Hating Christ, the Holy One.

And the grave no longer holds them,
Trumpet-called, the dead come forth,
"Small and great" appear before Him,
Christ, the Judge of all the earth.

Saints of every clime and nation,
Holy Prophets of our God,
High estate and lowly station,
All obtain their just reward.

Now the heavens open glorious
To the saintly penitent,
Singing anthems sweet and rapturous—
Lo! the Ark and Testament!

See! the lightnings! hark! the thunders!
Hear the angels' loud acclaim!
Earthquakes rend the globe asunder—
Jesus comes! He comes to reign!

Soon these scenes will burst upon us,
Soon the day of wrath will come,
Soon shall come the Judge to try us,
And the Angel cry, "'Tis done."

Then, oh! sinner, list the warning;
Turn, repent, no more delay;
See the day of Judgment dawning,
Lo! "the great and dreadful day."

Elizabeth City, N. J, May, 1854.

What seek ye from Earth?

What seek ye from earth? Seek ye grandeur or state,
The pride of the wealthy, the pomp of the great?
Seek ye honor, the honor that cometh from men?
And a name broad enrolled on the records of fame?

Or choose ye the quiet pursuits of the learned?
Has genius' bright fire on your heart's altar burned?
And would you the dim tracks of science explore,
Or in fancy's bright regions more fetterless soar?

Or seek ye for friendship, that jewel so choice?
Or does Love lure your soul with her Circean voice,
And charm you with visions of long peaceful life,
Afar from the busy world's tumult and strife.

Are such your fond dreams and pursuits? Listen, youth,
O, list to the counsels of wisdom and truth.
The objects you chase, tho' so tempting and fair,
Ere you grasp them, may vanish, like phantoms in air.

And should you secure them, what then would you gain?
Some pleasure, perchance, but more sorrow and pain;
For grandeur and wealth, tho' so brilliant they seem,
Too often but cover the canker within.

And Fame's but a bubble a breath may dispel,
And knowledge, ask yonder pale student, he'll tell
That, with all he through years of hard study has gained,
He scarcely as yet has the portals attained.

And friendship and love, though of all earthly joys
The sweetest and purest, how great their alloys!
How oft they prove false, and how fleeting at best!
Too often torn from us ere fairly possessed.

And are such, then, earth's treasures, so eagerly sought,
With health, life, aye! e'en with the soul often bought?
O! turn from them; let your best efforts be given
To those pure, fadeless treasures, found only in heaven!

[Selected. M. G. B.

Sermon by J. D. Merriam.

I Peter, 3: 15, "But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts, and be ready always to give an answer to every one that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear."

The gospel of Christ comes to us and speaks to our reason. The revelation of God to man is in harmony with the reasoning faculties which He has given him.—God, in his government over man, requires nothing but what the reason and judgment of His creatures acknowledge to be just and right. As saith the Lord by the prophet, "Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord."

In the text, we are required to sanctify the Lord God in our hearts. To sanctify is to set apart from a common to a holy use; it also represents the idea of cleansing. The Lord is represented in the Scriptures as [illegible] and knocking for admittance into the heart, "Behold I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come in to him and sup with him." By nature we are all sinners. We are full of uncleanness from the crown of our head to the sole of the foot. We are full of wounds, and bruises, and putrifying sores. We are strangers from the covenants of promise, aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, having no hope and without God in the world. We have all sinned and come short of the glory of God, and are in danger of eternal death. We are under the power of the God of this world, serving divers lusts, hateful and hating one another, dead, while we live. We are called upon to change masters; to serve the Lord instead of the Devil. "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve; if the Lord be God serve him, but if Baal, then serve him." "No man can serve two masters; for either he will hate the one and love the other; or else he will hold to the one and despise the other; ye cannot serve God and mammon."

To sanctify the Lord God in our hearts then, is to give ourselves up unreservedly to His control, to submit to His will, to become His servants, as saith the Apostle, "His servants ye are, to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness."

If then we have yielded ourselves to obey God, we are His servants; we sanctify Him in our hearts. He turns out the buyers and sellers, and takes up His own abode in them. Being united to Christ, we are in Him, and He in us. "Now, little children, abide in Him, that when He shall appear, we may have confidence and not be ashamed before Him at His coming." Having the Lord in the heart, produces a hope of glory to be revealed in the future. It is called by Paul, in his epistle to Titus, a blessed hope. In his letter to the Hebrews, he calls hope an "anchor to the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the vail."

A man hopes for that which he has not, but anticipates, expects and desires.—There is a ground for this hope to rest upon. The promise of God is the foundation of hope. God makes promises in His word to His children, of life and an inheritance in the future world. Faith grasps hold of the promises, causing joy and peace.

The hope of the Christian looks beyond the fleeting things of time and sense; it lays hold on eternal things; it opens to the mind glories to be revealed in the future, when Christ shall appear in his glory. Peter calls it a lively hope, or a hope of life. Hear him—"Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who, according to His abundant mercy, hath begotten up again to a lively hope, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an inherritance, incorruptible and undefiled and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation." Jesus Christ came to seek and to save that which was lost. "Thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins." We have then, in Christ, a Savior to save us now from the power and dominion of sin, and to save us in the eternal kingdom which He is to establish at His coming.

Now we are exposed to temptation; but we have salvation from it, through faith in Christ; for he has promised that in all the temptations common to man, He will provide a way for escape, that we may be able to bear them. Then in the hour of temptation we may have victory in Christ, and salvation from sinning against the God we love. As we have yielded ourselves to obey Him, it is our constant desire to know what He would have us do; and coming to a knowledge of His will we cheerfully obey Him, and when we are tempted to desert His service, for the service of the God of this world, it is good to have salvation from the temptation, that we may not disobey and thus grieve Him.

Having this hope in us it becomes us to be ready always to give a reason of the hope to every one that asketh us. Always ready, implies that we have the full assurance of hope in our hearts; that there be no misgivings in the mind about our relation to the Savior. To be always ready, means a great deal more than many are accustomed to think. If we have hope that Christ will soon come and give us an inheritance in an everlasting kingdom of life, we should always be ready to give a reason of this hope. It is not required of us to give a reason of the hope to those who do not ask it: but if the Lord is in our hearts, we cannot well live a great while without giving vent to the views and feelings upon the subject, which lies so near them. Having our hearts in heaven, our conversation will be there also. A man's character is developed by his conversation. If he is a man of the world, his conversation will be upon the things of the world; but if a man of God, he will speak the things of God; his conversation will be in heaven, from whence he looks for the Savior.

The manner in which the hope is to be given—it is to be presented in meekness and fear. The manner in which any doctrine is promulgated is often a barrier to its being received by the people. When a man comes to me in a denunciatory manner and brings a doctrine which he thinks is truth, and wants to have me believe it, thinking my salvation depends upon the reception or rejection of it; do you think that I shall be any more inclined to believe that he is in the right, than I should be if he came in the meekness and gentleness of Christ, and in a kind entreating way presented his arguments for my consideration? It becomes any one, when enforcing his views of things, to look well to the spirit which he possesses. In presenting our reasons for believing in the near approach of Christ to reign on the earth, we should not do it in a dogmatical manner, as though we were the only wise men in the world. There should be no arrogance; no assumption of what we do not possess; no desire to lord it over the heritage of God. It should also be presented with fear, or as the margin expresses it, with reverence.

We should have some reverence for men, or their opinions, so far as they are men of God. If men differ from us in our opinions, it will not do to stigmatize their views as worthless and wrong, without showing wherein the wrong consists, and pointing it out with meekness and love for the individuals holding them.

If, then, the Lord is in our hearts by faith, we can serve and obey Him, and always be ready to do good to our fellow men. The spirit of the Gospel is a spirit of benevolence, it confines not its exertions within the limits of a few individuals, but expands so as to live for the good of all our ruined, guilty race, and tries to alleviate the distress that is in the land.—It lifts up the hands which hang down, strengthens the feeble knees, is sight to the blind, ears to the deaf, is a support to the weak, and is patient toward all men.—How it goes out after the wanderer from the path of truth and rectitude; how it follows him, and with tears beseeches him to return to Father's house! How it goes after the poor of this world; does not say, be ye warmed and filled, while whithholding from them the things which would relieve their distress, but like Job, seeks them out, and makes their hearts rejoice. It does not stop when their physical wants are supplied, but seeks to set their minds on the true riches; to have them rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which God has promised to them that love and obey him. If it is overtaken in a fault, it will not scorn to receive a rebuke, but will love the one who is so faithful as to rebuke him, so much the more. Having this hope in us, being reviled, we bless; when having done well and suffered for it, we take it patiently. Being evil spoken of, we bear it; knowing that they falsely accuse our good conversation in Christ. It is better, if the will of God be so, that we suffer for well-doing, than for evil-doing. Having presented the reasons of our faith and hope, we are not to try to make men receive them on pain of damnation. Men are not made to be driven; they are to be reasoned with, persuaded, entreated, dealt with in kindness. Men are often persuaded to take a different position from one formerly occupied, by reasoning kindly and calmly with them. But when people undertake to drive, there is a spirit of opposition raised up at once, which cannot be quelled only by returning to reason and patience. It is time that all who love the appearing of Jesus should be able to give a reason of the hope in them with meekness and fear, that they should not be any longer carried about by every wind that blows, but should stand, having their loins girt about with truth, their lamps trimmed and burning, and they like unto men waiting for their Lord, that when he comes, they may be ready to receive him. My prayer is, that I and all the friends of Jesus may always be ready to give an answer to every one that asketh us a reason of the hope in us, with meekness and fear. May God help us so to do, and save us in His coming kingdom.—Amen.

For the Crisis.

Dear Br. Merriam:—I apprehend there is nothing more interesting to the true lover of the Bible, than expositions of the Scriptures, when presented in the spirit of humility and the simplicity of the Gospel. I have been led, recently, to exclaim, what hath God wrought for His church by the preaching of the Second Advent of Jesus Christ? Fourteen years ago the professed church was greatly in love with the world—ignorant of the claims of her rightful Lord, and her faith perverted, respecting the inheritance of the Saints.

At length the sound comes, the preaching of Jesus Christ is revived, "Repent ye for the kingdom of Heaven is at hand." The Angel swears by the God of Daniel and John that, "There should be time no longer." The nature of the kingdom is explained; its locality determined by the Scriptures of truth; its subjects proved to be the meek of the earth resurrected.—The mysticism that had been thrown around the Sacred Oracles began to break away. God is shown to mean just what He says. How progressive the light! Taking one step prepared us to take another, while some, through fear and unbelief, stopped and finally turned back. But the path of the just is proved to be as a shining light, that shines more and more. What love is begotten in our hearts for the character of God, His ever blessed Son, and the word of Holy Writ.

How important is a knowledge of the truth; for the more we understand of the relation of God's plans and purposes, the more we see to love and admire.

What a spirit of inquiry has been produced since we believed that ALL Scripture "was profitable."

How much more time is devoted to the study of the Word since it has been so abundantly proved that "the coming of the Lord draweth nigh."

The way is still onward. New truths are still in reserve to be comprehended by the children of God.

Who among us is satisfied with present attainments? Who among us will fear to present what God has given them, while Jesus says, "Freely ye have received, freely give?" It appears to me there is a withholding more than is meet; if so, poverty will ensue as surely as that God has spoken. The Spirit must be followed. God's word must be received and given to the Church as fast as it becomes due. If the professed ministers fail to do their duty, Israel must be judged, if a Deborah has to be raised up. It was once said to a sister in Israel, "If thou altogether holdest thy peace at this time, then shalt there enlargement and deliverance arise to the Jews from another place; but thou and thy father's house shall be destroyed: And who knoweth, whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?"—Dear Sisters, let us keep so humble as always to hear the voice of the good Shepherd, and more diligently than ever inquire, Lord what wilt thou have me to do? "Fear God and give glory to Him." Resolve to do duty as did Esther when she said, "I will go in unto the king, which is NOT ACCORDING TO THE LAW, and if I perish, I perish."

Dear Br. Merriam, I believe without a doubt that I shall have your prayers. You know that it is my desire that God should be glorified, whether in honor or dishonor, whether exalted or abased. I am instructed in every condition to be content.

"Now the God of Peace, who brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus Christ, that great Shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make you perfect in every good work to do His will, working in you that which is well pleasing in His sight, through Jesus Christ, to whom be glory forever and ever.—Amen."

While the Scriptures were being read in the family, a few mornings since, my faith became unusually lively, as I considered the characteristics of our Divine Redeemer as exhibited in His Life, and recorded by Luke and others. With deep emotions I inquired, who, who would not have such a personage to be Governor? Who would not fix their eye with intense anxiety on the appointed day for the kingdoms of this world to be given into His hands? Kingdoms full of confusion and wrong, oppression and hypocrisy, tyranny and bloodshed, exchanged for one of righteousness and peace. O, it is because they do not know Him, that any are unwilling to have Him reign over them. O that they did know Him and understand a little of the blessedness of that reign, when all wrong will be righted, the oppressed go free, the lame walk, the blind see, the deaf hear, the dead be raised to life, all tears wiped from all faces, because sin and all uncleanness shall have been washed away in the fountain of Jesus' blood, which has been opened, not only for Judah and Jerusalem, but in which the whole gentile world may find complete redemption.

"How sweet to reflect on those joys that await us
In yon blissful region, the Haven of Rest!"

But ah, there are scenes to pass between this and that. Respecting the nature of those scenes there are various opinions; but the word of God, like an immovable Rock, is the foundation on which we plant our feet; everything else is like drift-wood tossed on any and every wave. And one word of the Lord is just as good as another.

Yours, with much Christian affection,

Phebe.

For The Crisis.

Letter from Sr. S. E. Leavenworth.

Woodbury, Nov. 4th, 1855.

Br. Merriam:—We are stangers here, but it cheers my heart to learn that some are journeying on toward the better land. I am bound for the Kingdom, and hope soon to be a sharer in that glorious home. My heart is there, my home is there, and I expect to be there, when Jesus comes.

"O glorious hour! O blest abode!
I shall be near and like my God!"

Oh glorious hope! The hope of heaven is represented by the Apostle Paul, as an anchor of the soul. The most pious Christian does not find himself exempt from the cares and troubles of this life, or free from the conflicts and difficulties of the Christian life. He often finds himself tossed upon life's raging billows: but he enjoys strong consolation through the Hope that is set before him, which hope we have as an anchor of the soul. "But if we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it." Rom. 8: 25.

O be patient, Brn. and Srs., unto the coming of the Lord. Let us not recede from the path of duty, nor yield to despair: but run with patience the race set before us, looking unto Jesus, the Author and finisher of our faith. Let patience have her perfect work that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing. For we know that if our earthly tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands eternal in the heavens. Let us remember that light is sown for the righteous; we shall reap if we faint not.

Yours, Sarah E. Leavenworth.

For The Crisis.

Letter from Sr. M. K Heath.

Br. Merriam:—I still see the day approaching, when our Lord will come "in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory. And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet; and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other." With you, my beloved Br. in the Lord, and all that are His, at His coming, I hope to be gathered.

Brn. and Srs., some of us have talked much of going to the meeting in the New Jerusalem, which is above, the City of the great King, the mother of all who are Christ's and Abraham's seed. We desired, yea we believed and expected to be there. But this mortal has not yet put on immortality; still we sigh for a holy, peaceful clime; and to glow with the vigor of an endless life. Dear children, if we would be ready to go in to the marriage, we must watch and keep our garments, and patiently endure the trial of our faith in the immediate coming of the Bridegroom.

Says Peter: "Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you: but rejoice, in as much as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that, when His glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy." And again: "The trial of your faith, being much more precious than gold that perisheth though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise and honor and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ; Whom having not seen, ye love; in whom though now ye see him not, yet believing, ye rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory: Receiving the end of your faith, even the salvation of your souls."

Brn. and Srs., what folly it would be for us now to turn back in our hearts into Egypt, having come so far through the wilderness of the people. True the Lord said by the Prophet (Ezek. 20: 35, "I will bring you into the wilderness of the people," &c. Surely, He is faithful to perform all He has spoken; and He only is competent to vindicate His truth; and He knoweth them that trust Him. Blessed be His holy name.

Our confession for believing time, has been, and still is to those who ask a confession of us, we believed, and therefore we have spoken. In 1844 we took our Bibles and went forth to meet the Bridegroom; the time passed, and we were invited to go back to the Baptist Church. I think if we had accepted the invitation, and confessed that it was wrong to believe the time, as our Lord did not come, that they would have received us joyfully; but we viewed such a course to be perilous to ourselves, a dishonor to our Lord, and a grief to His people; to sacrifice truth and principle, to make union with those who had been willingly ignorant, and warring against the movement of 1844.

Said the objector in 1845, some of your time folks have exhibited a hard spirit, and they have done wrong, treated others unkindly, &c. True, two classes, our Lord said in the parable would go forth to meet Him: and now Brn. and Srs., in 1855 we have some of the same objections to meet; and our answer is, two classes have acted in each movement; and it yet remains to be seen, and known, who will be ready when our Lord comes.

"But, (says the objector,) you have two tarrying times."

No; there is but one mentioned in the parable, during which time they all slumber and sleep; but not so after a cry at midnight has been made, and ceases. I think, Brn. and Srs., the admonition of our Lord is especially due to us now, in this waiting time, where He says, "Watch ye therefore," also in Mark 13: 35–37. "Lest coming suddenly, he find you sleeping." We learn by this, if we do watch, we shall not be found sleeping. We see our position is different now, from what it was in the tarrying time spoken of in the parable. We must keep awake, and by grace through faith have a present salvation continually, in these critical moments surrounded as we are by trials and temptations.

And now may we abide in the vine, that our Father in heaven may be glorified, we be helps to each other, and teach transgressors the ways of the Lord, believing, while the lamp holds out to burn, the vilest sinner may come if he will, and take the water of life freely. Amen.

For The Crisis.

Letter from H. M. M.

Buffalo, N. Y., Nov. 3d, 1855.

Br. Merriam:—As a firm believer in the doctrine of the Second Advent of our blessed Savior, and of the final consummation and establishment of the saints' kingdom on the earth, I cannot resist the opportunity of addressing a few words to my fellow pilgrims through the medium of your valuable paper.

Allow me to say that though I cannot see (as can some of the Brn.,) with as much perspicuity and clearness as I could wish, respecting the chronological periods, yet, still it is my firm conviction that the war now so fearfully raging in the East, will know no cessation till the great God of battles, He whose right it is, shall come and claim the long disputed kingdom for His own, and take unto himself His great power, and reign. Let us all with overflowing hearts, and in grateful remembrance for the favors conferred upon us by the light which has illuminated our heretofore dark and worldly minds, emanating from the sure word of prophecy, cry, with the lonely inhabitant of Pergamos, "even so, come, Lord Jesus."

I find great consolation in the 11th ch. of Daniel, for there it is plainly declared that "the wise shall understand." My firm belief is, that if we are WISE, if we exercise proper faith in the testimony of Inspiration, if we are of those who in truth are looking for the blessed hope and the glorious appearing of our Lord and Savior, we shall understand not only that it is near, but even at the door.

It seems that all the prophecies are being quickly fulfilled, that the nations are fast filling up the cup of their iniquities, the kings of the earth and the mighty men are beginning to quake with fear, the wicked are oppressing, the evil servants are smiting, the world is careless and unconcerned, already the smoke and confusion of Armageddon are seen in the distant horizon, all faces are gathering darkness, fiends incarnate are busily engaged in their hellish work, the faithful are crying, "How long?" The spirit of lies and hypocrisy is abroad in the land, men are indeed waxing worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived. God is merciful, but still He is just, He will avenge the righteous, though He slay the wicked.

Brn., let us thank the Author of every good and perfect gift, for His many mercies bestowed upon us. May we continue humble, faithful and prayerful, exercising a truly christian spirit, and patiently waiting for the redemption spoken of by the Prophets and Apostles.

"For the Lord Jesus Christ shall descend from heaven with a shout and the voice of the Archangel, and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them to meet the Lord in the air, so shall we ever be with the Lord."

This is the Christian's hope, pure Advent doctrine. Who but a spirit of darkness would not exclaim,

"Amen and Amen!"

Yours, H. M. M.

For The Crisis.

Exposition of the 12th, 13th and 17th Chapters of Revelation.

BY DR. A. DECKER.

This relation of the Church and state, andt he beginning of the 1260 years, are very strikingly and distinctly marked in the 12th ch. and 6th verse. "And the Woman fled into the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there a thousand two hundred and three score days." This verse assures us, that the Woman flying into the wilderness, where they (the Kings of the earth) shall feed and nourish her, is in fulfilment of the divine purposes of God. God, "the Most High ruleth in the kingdoms of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will, and setteh up over it the basest of men," and it cannot be doubted, that the 1260 years of persecution, in the purposes of God, accomplish the salvation of thousands. The Church is in the greatest peril in time of peace, and during which, the Church so quickly fell away under the protection of the emperors of the fourth and fifth centuries.—Since the Jewish Polity passed away, the true Church has had no place prepared for her in this world. Under the Gospel dispensation the Church was promised tribulation and persecution. "In the world ye shall have tribulation! but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world." John 16: 33. "Yea, and all that will live godly in Christ Jesus, shall suffer persecution." (Paul.) Certainly, this is quite the opposite to being "fed and nourished." Jesus told His Disciples that He was going to prepare a place for them, not in this world, but in His Father's house where there were many mansions. That when He should come again, He might receive them to himself.

"That they shuold feed her," &c.—This declaration, could in no case be predicated of Christ or His ministers, feeding the true Church—for the true Church, in no sense, has been fed 1260 years during the Gospel dispensation, more thad at other times, (unless it was in the days of the Apostles,) if, it has reference to spiritual food—the "bread that came down from heaven!" Certainly, if we are to understand her being fed temporally, the true Church was in a state of famine during that whole period. It is quite certain, that they that should feed her 1260 years, whoever be meant, had not fed her before, nor were they to continue to feed her after that period had ended. The 1260 years, were a specific period, during which, only, they were to feed her.

The true Church has always been fed by the ministers of Christ, during the whole Gospel dispensation. Therefore, this can only be predicated of the kings of the earth who committed fornication with the nominal Church, and by whom she was fed during the specified period.—The manner in which they nourished her is clearly stated in the 17th ch. 4th v.—"And the Woman was arrayed in purple and scarlet color, and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls." Thus we see that the kings not only committed fornication with her, but fed and clothed her in all the pomp and splendor of the world. Indeed, the institutions of the Church were supported as the highest and most sacred institutions of the empire.—This fact is too well known to require additional proof from history.

We have now shown, to sum up, that the Catholic Church and the Greek empire with its seven heads, sustained to each other all the marriage relations of kings and queens, (for 1260 years.) "For she saith in her heart, I sit a queen, and am no widow," that is, she claims to have a husband—the kings of the earth—see ch. 18: 37. This relation is, first, by the union of civil and ecclesiastical institutions; secondly, the state is to feed, clothe, support and protect the ecclesiastical institutions, and thereby the Church. Third, the Church is to sustain the relation to the civil power of a mouth or prophet.—Fourth, as a consequence of the above relations, the civil power of the empire is to make war upon the saints—or tread the Holy City under foot, forty and two months. All must see at a glance, that the aforementioned events are all inseparably connected together. That when the civil power sustains this marriage relation with the nominal Church, it must, at the same time, begin to make war upon the saints of the true Church; for the two Churches are in direct opposition to each other. Therefore the civil power cannot support and protect the nominal Church, without casting out and treading under foot, the true Church; for any law that supports the former, acts with equal force against the latter. To be trodden under foot, is to be cast out, to be deprived of all power and privileges, to be persecuted, to be put to death. The prophecy, therefore, does not require that the saints should be persecuted unto death, immediately on the commencement of the forty and two months, (1260 years.)

I shall next endeavor to show by tracing up the history of the Greek empire, after its rise to the dominion of the west, A. D. 477, when this marriage relation took place, that so distinctly and incontrovertibly marks the beginning of the 1260 years. On the rise of the Leopard beast, the different sects and 23 divisions of the Church were of no inconsiderable number, and which under its two first emperors—Zeno and Anastasius—all equally enjoyed the rights and privileges of public worship. It is in ecclesiastical story, says Gibbon, (vol. 3, p. 523,) "that Zeno appears less contemptible, and I am not able to discern any Manichean or Eutychain guilt in the generous sayings of Anastasius, that it was unworthy of an emperor to persecute the worshippers of Christ, or the citizens of Rome." Thus free toleration continued during the reign of these two emperors.

These different factions, viz., Nestorians, Eutychians, Arians, Catholics, &c., were the bitterest enemies, and persecuted each other with the greatest vehemence. Therefore, before a marriage relation could be sustained between the Church and the state, these various divisions of the Church must first be united upon some general principle or law of faith, as established by the synods of the Church. The articles in the letter of St. Leo, were established by the council of Chalcedon in A. D. 451, as the creed of the orthodox or Catholic Church. (See Neander's History of the Christian Religion, vol. 2, p. 520.) Hence, it was upon this law of faith, that the union of the several divisions was demanded by the Catholic bishop—Hormisdas—and upon which the union was finally effected and established by the papal authority, as the law of the empire.

This is sufficiently proved by the following, from Gibbon Vol. 4 p. 531. "The reconciliation of the Greeks and Latins, established the tome—(letter) of St. Leo as the creed of the emperor and the empire." To establish the creed of the nominal Church is, incontrovertibly, to establish a union between the Church and the state, and to expose all who do not submit to this law "to the double edge of persecution," or to suffer whatever penalty there is attached to the violation of such law. I have before clearly shown, that the marriage relation between the Church and state, or Greek empire, was effected by establishing the synods of the Church, as state institutions, by which the decrees of the synods were published by royal authority as all other laws of the empire, and equally binding upon its subjects. All must see at a glance, that to establish the letter of Leo and the Council of Chalcedon (the creed, or law of faith, of the Catholic Church) as an ecclesiastical law of the empire, is to establish the Catholic Church, as the only one to be tolerated by the royal authority. Hence, the imperial power, takes the Catholic Church under its immediate care and protection; and all who violate the creed of the Church, also violate the law of the empire, and must suffer the penalty attached to such violation. The articles in the letter of Leo, have always been the law of faith of the Catholic Church since they were established by the council of Chalcedon. Therefore, Hormisdus, the Catholic Bishop, required that the letter of Leo and council of Chalcedon should be the basis of union, and established the ecclesiastical law of the empire. The following are the articles dictated by the pope Hormisdas to be signed by the emperor and all the Bishops of the whole east.

"First, that the emperor should receive, and by a declaration under his own hand, notify to all the Bishops in his dominions, that he received the council of Chalcedon, and the letter of Leo.

"Second, that the like declaration should be made and signed by all the Bishops in the east, in the presence of the people, and that they should, at the same time, anathematize Nestorius, Eutyches, Dioscorus, Aelurus, Petrus Mangus, Petrus Fullo, Acacius, and all their confederates; that is, all who had any way disobliged the Apostolic See.

"Third. That the Bishops who communicated with the Roman Church, and had been deposed or banished on that account, should be restored to their Sees.

"Fourth. That such Bishops as had persecuted the orthodox, or had been accused of heresy should be sent to Rome to be judged there."

Let it be especially noticed, that the second article required after the emperor's the signature of the bishops of the whole east; and that they should anathamatize all who had any way disobliged the Church of Rome, or the Apostolic See. The signatures, therefore, of all the bishops of the east, were necessary to its becoming a law throughout the empire. Inasmuch as the bishops held the entire ecclesiastical jurisdiction over their respective localities, or dioceses, therefore no ecclesiastical law could be carried into effect throughout the empire, without their signing the same laws or articles with the emperor. If this had not been the case, the pope would not have troubled himself about any one's signing the articles, further than the emperor. The first two legations sent into the east, by Hormisdas, under the reign of Anastasius, failed; but on the death of Anastasius, Justin, an avowed Catholic, was elected to the throne; upon which the pope sent a third legation into the east, which was finally successful. Justin, after having "caused the articles to be approved by the 'senate," compelled the bishop or patriarch of Constantinople to sign them without the least addition, exception, or limitation. I have not deemed the circumstances attending this, of sufficient importance to extend this article by a lengthy extract. All who are curious enough to know the circumstances, can refer to Bower's History, p. 310–323.—"The articles being thus signed by the patriarch, the name of Accacius, and with his the names of the other bishops who had succeeded him in the see of Constantinople ever since the beginning of the schism to the present time, namely, of Fravitas, Euphemius, Macedonius and Timotheus, were all, without distinction between Eutychian and orthodox, struck off the diptychs; nay, to complete the vengeance of the Apostolic See, and to extend it to all indiscriminately who had any ways disobliged their holiness, the names of the two emperors, Anastasius and Zeno, were, at the request of the legates, cancelled, together with those of the bishops. And now the legates, having obtained all they were enjoined to require, declared in the name of the blessed pope Hormisdas, the two Sees united again in charity and faith. Thus ended the first great schism (A. D. 519,) between the Churches of Constantinople and Rome, after it had lasted 30 years."

This union, it will be observed, was only between the Church of Rome, and the diocese of Constantinople, which was but a very small part of the eastern empire; and by no means accomplished the second article, which required not only the signature of the bishop of Constantinople, but of all the bishops of the east, "in the presence of all the people." The second article being unaccomplished, the third and fourth were equally so. That the union of the Churches was not yet completed, and consequently of the Church and state, even in the mind of the emperor, or the pope of Rome, is sufficiently proved by the following extract from the author of the above.

(Bower's history.) "The emperor was not satisfied with causing the articles sent from Rome to be received and signed by the patriarch of Constantinople, but to complete the union between the east and the west, resolved out of the abundance of his zeal for the unity of the Church, to oblige the other two patriarchs of Alexandria and Antioch, and the metropolitan of Thessalonica, to sign the same articles. Paul, who on the flight of Serverus from Antioch, had been substituted in his room, obeyed with great readiness, being a most zealous Catholic, but in other respects a disgrace to his order; insomuch that the Catholics themselves, offended at his lewdness, and scandalous life, obliged him to resign. He was succeeded by Euphrasius who began his episcopacy with anathamatizing the council of Chalcedon, and striking out of the diptychs the names of all the bishops who had assisted at that assembly, and with them the names of the popes from Leo to Hormisdas. But the governor of the province having let him know, that unless he recanted, the imperial edict must be put in execution, commanding all who did not receive the council and doctrine of Chalcedon, to be driven from their Sees, he repented what he had done, received the council, anathamatized all who did not receive it, replaced in the diptychs the names which he had erased a few days before, and signing the articles, was re-admitted to the communion of Rome. Timotheus, bishop of Alexandria, who had lately succeeded Dioscorus, the younger, in that See, bid, in a manner, defiance to the emperor, boldly declaring, that he would anathamatize, to his last breath, the council of Chalcedon, together with Leo and all his letters; that he scorned to receive laws of the bishop of Rome; and that he would neither be taught nor directed by them."

To Thessalonica was dispatched from Constantinople one of the Legates, John the Bishop, with several ecclesiastics in his retinue, and Count Licinius, a person of great distinction, was appointed by the emperor to attend them. But the terms of union seemed so very unreasonable to Dorothius, Metropolitan and Bishop of that city, that while the legate was reading them in a public assembly, he could not forbear snatching them out of his hand, and tearing them in his presence. There wanted no more to raise the populace who, falling upon the legate, and those who were with him, killed his host, and two of his ecclesiastics, wounded him dangerously in three places, and would have put an end to his life, had not Count Licinius brought, in great haste, the soldiery to his rescue." Dorothius, the Bishop, however, was finally brought to comply in "the following year 520, and at the same time wrote to the pope styling him in the address the most holy and blessed father and fellow minister, &c." "But, however lavish of his praise, he took care to avoid all expressions that could be construed into any kind of subjection, or even submission." The two patriarchs of Constantinople and Antioch, had, in compliance with the articles sent from Rome, struck out of the diptychs the name of Acacius, and together with his, the names of the orthodox Bishops who have died out of the communion of Rome, as I have related above; and their example was readily followed, with respect to the name of Acacius. But, as to the names of the other Bishops, the far greater part peremptorily refused to erase them, saying, that they had rather live forever separate from Rome than thus stigmatize the memory of so many eminent prelates who had deserved so well of the Catholic faith.—"The bishops were backed by their clergy; and the people joining both, began to mutiny, to exclaim against the pope, to complain of the emperor, for gratifying him in so unfavorable a demand, and, making the cause of the Catholic bishops the Catholic cause, to look upon all, who were for suppressing their names, as firm friends to Eutyches, and enemies to the Church. The emperor, Count Justinian, his nephew, and Epiphanes, the new patriarch, who had succeeded, in the beginning of this year, to John the Cappadocian, alarmed at the general discontent that reigned among the people, as well as the clergy, and dreading the effects of the popular zeal, instead of using violence with the refractory bishops, which they knew would be attended with a great deal of bloodshed, and might, in the end, cost the emperor the loss of his crown, resolved to recur to the pope, and try whether they could not pevail upon him to be satisfied with their erasing the name of Acacius alone. With this view Justinian wrote to Rome, first, acquainting the pope, that neither the people, the clergy, nor the bishops, though threatened with exile, nay, and with fire and sword, could be induced to omit, at divine service, the names of so many holy Catholic prelates; and, at the same time, conjuring his holiness, as he regarded the welfare of the Church, and the peace of the state, not to insist on that point, since he would thereby involve both in a new war, and more dangerous troubles than either had hitherto felt. "Your holiness," says he in his letter, "ought to consider the nature of things, and the difference of times; and, being satisfied with the condemnation of Acacius, of Dioscorus, of Timotheus Ælurus, Petrus Mongus, and Petrus Fullo, end at last this obstinate contest. It is not by persecution and bloodshed, but sacerdotal patience, that men are gained to God; by striving to gain souls, we often destroy both bodies and souls; it is by mildness and lenity alone that old errors can be corrected." How much Christian blood would have been saved, had the popes, or the emperors themselves, hearkened to this excellent lesson!

The patriarch, and the emperor, both wrote pressing letters to the same purpose. The patriarch accompanied his with a rich present to the pope, consisting of a chalice of gold, adorned with a great number of jewels, of a patin likewise of gold, another chalice of silver, and two silk veils. The emperor, in his letter, assures the pope, that he has spared no pains in causing the terms of union, prescribed by the apostolic See, to be received by all; but that upon some he cannot prevail, either by persuasions or menaces, to condemn those after their death, in whom they placed their greatest glory while they were living; that their obstinacy is proof against all dangers, and death itself; that he is extremely grieved to find the great work of an entire reconciliation, which he had so much at heart, thus retarded; but, on the other side, is no less unwilling to proceed to violence, and shed the blood of his innocent subjects; and therefore does not doubt but his apostleship, rather than oblige him to turn persecutor, will connive, for the present, at the names of the orthodox bishops being kept in the diptychs, and be satisfied with their condemning the memory of Acacius alone, the father as his holy predecessor Anastasius had required no more, to receive all to his communion, who professed the same faith. But the pope (521) was deaf to all remonstrances and reasons." He still insisted on the condemnation, not only of Acacius, but of all who had communicated with him, or his successors; and [illegible] the emperor had shown himself in his letter, utterly averse to persecution and bloodshed, he strove in his answer, to reconcile him to both.

The emperor, though so great a bigot, was so far from hearkening to the suggestions of the pope, that, on the contrary, greatly offended at his obstinacy, and [illegible] at his principles, he joined, in the end, his subjects against him; and, commending them for the regard they paid to the memory of their Catholic pastors, allowed them, without giving himself any farther trouble about the consent of his holiness, to keep all their names in the diptychs. The pope, finding he could not prevail, thought it advisable to dissemble; and wrote accordingly to the patriarch, empowering him to receive all to the communion of Rome, who, anathematizing Acacius, and the others mentioned above, condemned their memories. As no mention was made, in that letter, of the orthodox bishops, the patriarch obliged none to erase their names; nay, he replaced in the diptychs, with the approbation of the emperor, the names of Euphemius and Macedonius, which his predecessor had canceled; and the pope, by not disproving, tacitly approved, what he had done. And thus was an entire reconciliation at last brought about, we may say, in spite of the pope.

Here we have in the most extended sense the union of the Churches east and west, throughout the empire, and the establishment of the letter of Leo, and the council of Chalcedon—the ecclesiastical law throughout the empire. From this on, the Church and state walk hand in hand, together; the decrees of the synods being established by the royal authority. From this point, therefore, at the latest, we must commence the 1260 years. The Church represented by her synods, now sustains the relation of a mouth, or prophet, to the secular power.

This event, which had its commencement in 519, is the beginning, unequivocally, of the kings of the earth to commit fornication with the Woman—the Church. From this era, "they"—"the kings of the earth"—"nourished" the Woman (Church) during the 1260 years.

Much additional evidence will be brought to sustain this position as we proceed in our investigations.

For The Crisis.

Letter from Br. J. Morison.

NEW GLASGOW, C. E., } Oct. 30, 1855. }

Dear Brn. and Sisters:—All things remain unchanged, seed time and harvest, day and night, summer and winter continue in their wonted rounds. The busy mart of worldliness is full. Men are eagerly pursuing the phantoms of pleasure, and confiding in rainbow hopes of to-morrow. Therefore "wait on the Lord, and keep his way, and he shall exalt thee to inherit the land; when the wicked are cut off, thou shalt see it." Ps. 37: 34. "Therefore wait ye upon me, saith the Lord, until the day that I rise up to the prey; for my determination is to gather the nations, that I may assemble the kingdoms, to pour upon them mine indignation, even all my fierce anger; for all the earth shall be devoured with the fire of my jealousy." Zeph. 3: 8.

Truly the nations are now in the precise condition in which prophecy declares they will be at the sounding of the seventh Angel. See Rev. 11: 15–18. They are obeying the command, (See Joel 3: 9) "Prepare war, wake up the mighty men; let all the men of war draw near, let them come up. Beat your plowshares into swords, and your pruning-hooks into spears."

What next? See v. 13 and Rev. 14: 14. "Put ye in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe. Come, get you down; for the fats overflow: for their wickedness is great."

But, blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. The groaning creation will rejoice with singing [illegible] [illegible] it will be [illegible] weight of glory. O let the earth be filled with thy glory! Come, thou great Restorer, and cause the [illegible] be inhabited by the meek, and reign them in thy glory in the midst of thy people.

Dear Brn. and Srs., the end of all things is at hand. Let us live by faith, keep watching and praying always, that we may be accounted worthy to escape those things that are coming on the earth. Our disappointments here, if we hold on to the end, will only ripen us for the kingdom.—Amen.

Yours patiently waiting,

JAMES MORISON.

The World's Crisis.

LOWELL, NOV. 24, 1855.

Questions.

I shall publish the questions that may be sent in from time to time, if not convenient for me to answer them, as my time is so particularly occupied at present, having no clerk in the Office, I hope those who have the ability will reply.

Some questions were in type last week, but for want of room were necessarily excluded.

OUR FINANCIAL AFFAIRS.

Our Financial Affairs have looked somewhat discouraging, and therefore I have desired to save the Office all the expense possible. But payments have been made more freely of late, and I trust my situation will be less embarrassing for the future.

The Lord, I feel assured, is blessing the enterprise and stiring up the hearts of His people to write precious, stirling articles for the paper, and also to increase the means for its support. For my own part, I feel just as willing to dispense with every help and convenience possible, and to serve the flock without a farthing's compensation other than is needed to pay my unavoidable expenditures while I can realize, as I have of late, (Glory to God,) the precious smiles of my beloved Savior, as I should be with an income of thousands of dollars. Praise the Lord, I can rejoice that He has quickened me of late in His service, I feel revived in the spirit of my mind, and strengthened to pursue the heavenly pilgrimage.

All I desire is, to know that I am in the work of God, exerting my feeble instrumentality for the promotion of His glory —the advancement of His truth and the comfort and edification of His children. So long as this is the case, I am content; and if it please God that a fair compensation should be given for my labors, I would praise Him for temporal favor, and if not, all is well, glory to God. I would be delighted to serve the poor of the flock, and realize it is more blessed to give than to receive.

In some instances I am deeply affected on receiving remittances from those who are in indigent circumstances, and feel as though I would like to send the money right back. e. g., when I read such expressions as these, "I send you two dollars. This is the first two dollar bill I ever had, and I earned it by picking hops in the cold wind and rain," I feel as though I could devote my life for the benefit of such without a farthing's remuneration.

For the Crisis.

Question.

Br. Merriam:—Is the 3d v. of 1st ch. of 1st Pet. as rendered in our Bible, translated so as to give the full meaning?—Peter says, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead"? As it now reads, I should infer that the Church had the hope, and then lost it, and then was begotten again to it. Please answer.

Yours in the love of truth,

J. C. M.

Reply.

I find in the Greek margin a different reading from the ordinary Greek text, which runs thus: "hath begotten us again unto the hope of life."

If the Church were begotten again unto a hope of life through the resurrection of Christ from the dead, it is evident that their hope, as it were, died when their blessed Master was crucified and slain.—Notwithstanding He had so clearly taught them respecting His sufferings and death, they do not appear to have anticipated His dissolution; but were disappointed and disconsolate, and perhaps desponded, after His decease, until they were, as it were, re-created in Christ Jesus, and had their hope of eternal life in the world to come established by the victory over death which the great Captain of their salvation had achieved.

He had burst all the bars of death and opened the flood gates of glory to shine through the vista of the tomb, and reveal the blessedness of immortality in the world to come. This was a practical demonstration that His mission was divine; hence it became a confirmation of the hope previously entertained, but which had perhaps been shaken by the triumph of the powers of darkness over Him who was the object of their adoration and love, and the rock upon which their hope of life was built.

Question.

Br. Merriam:—I wish to inquire for information respecting the personality of the devil. Has he an actual, personal existence? When and from what place did he originate? He is generally believed to be omnipresent, and to tempt men to commit the sins of which they are guilty.

Will you or some one of your correspondents write on the above subject for publication in the Crisis as soon as may be convenient?

☞ The following report of the New Hampshire Conference, which we copy by request, would have appeared last week had it been convenient to publish it.

New Hampshire Conference, held at Lake Village, Oct. 18th, 19th, 20th, and 21st.

According to previous notice, the Conference convened at the chapel, Oct. 18th, at 10 o'clock A. M. After a most refreshing and encouraging season of singing and prayer, Elder B. Locke of East Weare, gave a very interesting discourse from the Epistle of Jude, vs. 1–3:—"Ye should earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints."

Afternoon At half past 1 o'clock, after appropriate exercises, Eld. John Morse, of Londonderry, gave a timely discourse from Neh. 4: 6. "So built we the wall: and all the wall was joined together unto the half thereof; for the people had a mind to work."

Eve. At half past six, Eld. J. V. Himes, of Boston, Mass., gave a profitable discourse from Mark 14: 8. "She hath done what she could." In speaking from this text, Br. Himes divided the discourse as follows:—

1. The things we can do.
2. Things we ought to do.
3. The reasons why we ought to do all we can. And first, Christ has done all He can do for man's salvation. Second, the devil is doing all he can to prevent man's salvation. And third, the reward God's people will receive, if they do all they can for the glory of God.

Friday morning, Oct. 19th. At 8 o'clock the ministering brethren met in conference and enjoyed a happy, brotherly interview for about two hours. Not a jarring note was heard.

At 10 o'clock the Conference met for business. After prayer and singing, the following officers were chosen; Eld. John Knowles, Moderator, and T. M. Preble, Clerk.

On motion, it was agreed that Brn. in the ministry and membership from other States, be invited to a seat, and take part in the action of the Conference.

After the business part of the Conference was past, Elder John Couch of Warner, came to the meeting, and on hearing read the doings of the Conference, heartily approved of what had been done, took part in the meetings, and said his sympathies were with us, although he did not feel prepared, at that time, to give his name as a member of the Conference.

Eld. David Leavitt, of Loudon Ridge, was present on Saturday, but was obliged to leave before we could consult with him particularly, in relation to the Conference and its doings. He is no doubt in sympathy with us.

On motion, agreed that a committee of three be chosen to prepare business for the Conference. Agreed that T. M. Preble, O. G. Smith, and J. Morse, be said committee, to report at the close of the afternoon meeting of worship.

On motion, agreed to hear reports from Brn. of the state generally, in their fields of labor. Remarks were then made by the following brethren:—Elders T. M. Preble, B. Lock, J. Morse, O. G. Smith, N. Glidden, jr., J. V. Himes, J. Knowles, Bro. A. K. Baldwin and C. K. Pike.—The state of the cause generally, was reported as much more encouraging than last year.

Quite a number have been baptized during the year past, and the prospect of greater union was more apparent in as much as several Brn. in the ministry, who had no symphathy with us or our Conference last year, are now preaching the Gospel of the kingdom, believing that the coming of our Lord is nigh at hand; and in view of which, they expressed themselves more than ever determined to labor for Gospel order and discipline in the Churches. Agreed to adjourn, to meet at the close of the afternoon meeting of worship.

Afternoon. Half past 1 o'clock. Public worship. Br. Himes addressed the people again; his text was Luke 11: 13. "If ye then being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him."

At the close of the meeting of worship, the Conference of business met according to adjournment. The committee on business reported the following preamble and resolution on which was unanimously adopted:

Whereas, there is great laxity among us as a people, on the subject of Church order and discipline, as taught in the New Testament, by which the ordinances and institutions of the Gospel are neglected to the distraction and confusion of the children of God, therefore,

Resolved That this Conference believe that the time has come for decided and immediate action to be taken for the purpose of bringing about the observance of Gospel order in the Churches and societies of Adventists in New Hampshire—by which, we only mean such order as is plainly taught by Christ and His apostles, according to the literal reading of the New Testament.

A report from the committee appointed last year "to take the supervision of the tract distribution," was called for—heard—and accepted. On motion, agreed that the same Brn T. M. Preble, J. Morse and J. Harvey, be a committee to take the supervision of the tract distribution within the bounds of the Conference for the ensuing year.

On motion, agreed that T. M. Preble, O. G. Smith and J. Morse, be a committee to prepare a circular letter to the Brn. within the bounds of the Conference, and publish the same, with the proceedings of the Conference, in the Advent Herald.

On motion, agreed that a committee of four be appointed with whom Brn. in New Hampshire, in destitute places, may correspond: and it shall be the duty of said committee to assist in supplying with preaching such destitute places: and if the committee cannot visit such places themselves, they are to do what they can to send some one else to preach the Gospel to the destitute.

Agreed that Elders John Knowles, O. G. Smith, Joseph Harvey, and T. M. Preble, be said committee.

On motion, agreed that we now adjourn to the call of the clerk and moderator, at such time and place as they may deem proper.

Eve. Preaching by Br. Himes from Rev. 21: 4. "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes."

Saturday Morning, Oct. 20th. Met at nine o'clock, and enjoyed a refreshing season in a prayer and social meeting. At half past 10, Br. Locke spoke from 2 Cor. 13: 5. "Examine yourselves whether ye be in the faith."

Afternoon. At half past 1, met again for public worship, and Br. Himes gave a discourse founded on Rev. 19: 7–9.—"Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him: for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready. And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white: for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints. And he saith unto me, Write, blessed are they which are called unto the marriage-supper of the Lamb. And he saith unto me, These are the true sayings of God."

Eve. Br. Himes again addressed the meeting. His subject was on the evidences of the Lord's soon coming; text, Dan. 12: 4. "But thou, O Daniel, shut up the words, and seal the book, even to the time of the end: many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." In this discourse he commenced giving what light he could on his present position, in relation to the coming of Christ.

Sabbath, Oct. 21st. Heavy rainstorm. Good audience, however. In the A. M. Br. Himes gave another lecture on his present position, founded on Dan. 12: 8–10. In the P. M. he contiued his subject, founded on Matt. 16: 3. "But can ye not discern the signs of the times?" In the evening, the writer gave a short discourse from 2 Peter 3: 11, 12, after which about one hour was spent in exhortation, singing and prayer.

Thus closed the second New Hamshire Conference: brotherly love, and increasing interest contiuing from the beginning to the close. No doubt much good will be the result of this meeting.

JOHN KNOWLES. Moderator,
T. M. PREBLE, Clerk.

For The Crisis.

An Exhortation.

BY H. L. HASTINGS.

Dear Brethren:—The painful circumstances of the past two years have often caused me to desire a home in the wilderness, and a resting place away from among the dwellings of those who professed to be looking for the Lord. Glad would I have been to have hushed my tongue in silence, and checked my pen in its course, and sank into the stillness of the grave, with the burning words of God smothered within my heart, if I thereby might have escaped the war and strife of earth and church, and promoted in any degree the peace and prosperity of the people of God.—But unto us it is given, on the behalf of Christ, not only to believe on Him, but also to suffer for His sake. And I know if I would share in the triumphs of my Savior's coronation, and the glory of His everlasting reign, I must first commence by the fellowship of His sufferings, and be made conformable to His death. And it is this which sustains my struggling soul amid the rising of the water-floods, and the wreck of earthly joys, and which lightens the darkness of the present night by the glory of the coming day.

Nothing but a suggestion of duty, (I trust from the Spirit of the Lord,) prompts me to write at this time. Health would forbid the exertion, for I write in constant and increasing pain; but God's will is my law. O for grace to do it in all things!

I cherish, dear Brn., a firm conviction, strengthened by each event of God's providence, and by every intimation of His word, that "the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." And though I deplore the positiveness with which many have assigned chronological "limits" for the fulfilment of the declarations of "the Holy One of Israel," yet I rest with all confidence upon the assurance of the sacred word, that the great and glorious accomplishment of the sublime predictions of Jehovah's prophets will soon be made manifest in the eyes of all the world.

In the accomplishment of chronological and consecutive predictions—in the fulfilment of earth's foretold governmental changes—in the completion of the Church's dark period of tribulation and disaster—in the national distress and perplexity—in the wars and commotions that prevail—in the moral corruption and unparalleled iniquity of the age—in the intensity of the desire of all nations for a brighter era, and a better day—in the strange and startling progress of the present age—in the diffusion of the Gospel of Jesus Christ—in the unsealing of long-hidden predictions of inspired writers—in the ten thousand "signs of the times" that throng us on every hand—I read with a solemn joy the glad yet awful declaration, "The coming of the Lord draweth nigh."

And I desire that no doctrine, no theory, no business, no pursuit, no pleasure, no sorrow, no trial, and no joy may ever remove the solemn, practical influence of this doctrine from my heart. I desire to view it as I should from Calvary. I desire to consider as a poor, guilty mortal should consider it, with all proper apprehensions of danger; and with all reasonable and scriptural anticipations of good.—"Not every one that saith, Lord, Lord, shall" find acceptance in that day. Not every brilliant hope of time shall be realized in eternity; and though it be sad to despond here, yet how much worse to go to the judgment deceived, and plunge at once from the heights of heavenly anticipation to the blackest abyss of darkness and despair. And that "many" shall be thus mistaken and disappointed, is the solemn declaration of Him in whose mouth no guile was found. And while nothing earthly would purchase from me that anticipation which I cherish of dwelling in the presence of Him whose trickling blood stained the height of Calvary for me, yet I would think soberly of myself, and weigh in the light of Scripture, and in the carefulness of self-examination, the solemn possibility that I may be among the lost at last, and become a castaway, even in sight of the eternal haven of repose.—In view of these circumstances, I feel deeply impressed with the importance of the following considerations.

We ought to love God. Faith is not love, hope is not love, activity is not love, form is not love. It is distinct from all these. It "is the fulfilling of the law." It is the end of the commandment. It is greater than faith or hope.—It is the spring of obedience. It is that which allies us to God and to heaven.—Without love we are nothing. Our prayers are an abomination—our songs an offence—our words hypocrisy—and our works a loathing before God. Do we love God? We loved Him once, when in the child-like simplicity of the Gospel. Have we left our first love? If so, knowledge, theories, truth, wisdom, and every thing else, are but worthless—they are the vainest of vanities, while Christ can say, "I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love." O, do we love God? Do our hearts kindle with the holy flame? Do we love His promises? Do we feast upon His rich, sweet word? Do we love His holy law? Do we delight to do His whole will? Are His commandments joyous? Are His chastenings welcome? Is His work our highest pleasure? Is the prosperity of His cause our noblest joy? Do we love Him more than self, friends, family, pleasure, money, fame, ease, reputation, honor, joy, or anything that we loved in the days of our sin and vanity? O, do we love God? If so, we may have hope in the day of Christ. If not, our hope is but as the spider's web

We ought to love the brethren. Mere respect is not love. Cool civility is not love. Exclusion is not love. Envy is not love. Hard words are not tokens of love. Mere words of kindness do not certainly indicate love. We are to love each other with pure hearts fervently.—We are to love our brethren whom we have seen, or else we do not love the unseen God. We are to be pitiful, and courteous, and kind, and tender-hearted and esteem others better than ourselves. We are to love in deed as well as in lip and tongue. We are to love those that reprove our wrongs full as well as we do those who justify us in them. We are to love them, not because they are rich, or witty, or talented, or beautiful, or agreeable; but because they love God, and because they are our brethren beloved by Jesus Christ. We ought to love them enough to lay aside our luxuries, and our superfluities to supply their needs. We ought to give to them when in necessity, generously, largely, according to our ability. What do I say? we ought to give to them? Yea, rather we ought to LAY DOWN OUR LIVES FOR OUR BRETHREN!! Are we ready for this? Do we love our brethren?

We ought to be meek and gentle. Have we not yet learned that arrogance, exclusion, and pride are the companions of error, rather than truth? Have we not learned that the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God? Have we not learned that by these means Satan tries to seduce us into a blind and mistaken zeal for God which is not according to knowledge? Let us "receive with meekness the engrafted word which is able to save our souls." Let us "in meekness instruct those that oppose themselves, if God peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth." Let us exhibit the meekness and gentleness of Jesus Christ our Lord in all our deportment in this world.

We must be self-denying. We have no right to earthly luxuries. Jesus never had them, though the earth was His with all its fulness. Our time is not our own. Our money is not our own.—Our talents are not our own. Our farms are not our own. Yea, we are not our own, we are bought with a price. It is not enough that the rich "sacrifice" their money—we must one and all deny ourselves; We have no time to waste on vanity. Not one moment for vain adorning; not one hour for idle pleasure; not one day for useless indulgence. We have no money to waste. Not one penny for costly array; not one mill for mere vain show; not one cent to gratify "the lust of the eye" and ape the "pride of life;" not one dollar for useless and expensive furniture, not one dollar for luxurious living, for the mere gratification of appetite, for the making a God of the belly. We are to deny ourselves and follow Christ. Do we do this? Are we self-denying Christians; or do we roll in luxury while a brother is pinched by want? Do we hoard up wealth while others suffer the loss of all things for Christ's sake? Do we deck and adorn our paltry carcasses, that may be rotting within a month, while others are wearing out with toil, and sinking, heartbroken, beneath the burdens of their lonely lot? Let us try ourselves. It is vain to preach to the rich unless those who preach, and those who are poor will deny themselves. A rich man has as good a right to hoard money as I have to waste it. He has as much right to gloat his eye with silver and gold, as I have to feast mine with gaudy finery or costly array. We must deny ourselves of every needless thing, and let every effort tell on the great interests which Jesus became poor that he might promote. Do we deny ourselves? Are we pilgrims here? Not mere butterflies at some summer watering place—but pilgrims with the pilgrim's staff, the pilgrim's garb, the pilgrim's weariness, and the pilgrim's anxious longing for his distant home? Are we dead to earth?—Are we living for the world to come? Are we citizens of another country hasting, yea pressing forward through this dark and stormy world to gain the peaceful rest that remains for the people of God?

We should be active. All can do something. We are to work while the day lasts—we are to labor, warning every man, and teaching every man. We are to work out our own salvation with fear and trembling—we are to enquire, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? We are to herald forth the truth of God. We are to scatter light as on the wings of the morning, being well assured that yet a little while and night will close our labors, and bring us either the laborer's reward, or the idler's damnation.—O then let us be active. The harvest is great, and those who are laborers are sinking beneath their multiplied toils. Some go to their farms—some to their merchandise. Some groan beneath the burden of temporal cares. Some know how to pray "Give us this day our daily bread," and they get it, too, thanks be to God. But much that might be done is undone for want of a whole-hearted zeal on the part of all God's children. We can work—we can give—we can write—we can scatter tracts—we can speak kind words—we can sympathise—we can sacrifice—we can PRAY! Will we do all these things? will we do it?

My Brn., let us awake! The shades of coming night loom awfully along our pathway! We hasten over the last portions of the pilgrim's course. The slumber of the enchanted ground is stealing over us. O awake! The Lord is at hand, and His reward is with Him to give to every man according as his work shall be! Let us be faithful to the end.

I thank God that He has given me strength beyond my expectations, to write these lines. I pray you, my Brn., receive them if they accord with the word of God. I beseech you, heed the admonitions, and suffer the words of exhortation. Ponder them. I know not when I shall write again, but I pray God that these imperfect lines may be a blessing to all who may read them. O Lord, let thine own blessed Spirit give power to the words of mortal man!

A little while, and aching heads and hearts will be known no more. And weariness and painfulness will be forgotten, and death swallowed up in victory. O blessed day! My bleeding heart gives it welcome. My weeping eyes look out to watch its rising beams! My whole soul rejoices in the anticipation of its glory. Come, blessed day! Come, thou morn of resurrection! Come, thou King of glory, thou bearer of the keys of death. O raise the treasures of my broken heart from their silent slumber! O give me back the joys that have been torn away by death. Unbind the burdens from the weary, and gather the glorious myriads of thine elect to the many mansions of thy Father's house. "Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen.

PEACE DALE, R. I.

ELECTION RIOT IN NEW ORLEANS. The New Orleans papers give the following account of the riots in New Orleans on the day of the recent election:—

"As noon approached, an excitement commenced at the eighteenth precinct, as we learn, in a contest for precedence in approaching the polls. Major Henry Blaize, one of the officers of a German military company, who assumed a championship on the Democratic side, struck an "American," and thereupon half a dozen revolvers were drawn on him. He started to run, and some 18 or 20 shots were fired at him. One bullet took effect in the thigh, another in his foot and a third passed across his breast.—Soon after several fights took place, and among others E. D. White, a city contractor, was badly beaten and wounded.

The next difficulty occurred at the 20th precinct. A man named Antoine Fuller, a native of France, who had his naturalization papers in his hand, was stabbed in the center of his abdomen. His friends put him into a cab, and conveyed him to the Charity Hospital, but he died before reaching it.

There is said to have been a Democratic majority of 60 or 70 in this precinct. At midnight a crowd forced their way into the engine-house where the inspectors of the 7th precinct were engaged in counting the votes. They at once ceed the inspectors and clerks to retire, when they seized the ballot-box and utterly demolished both box and the ballots.

Towards evening Dr Sherrer, who kept a drug store, at the corner of Greatmen and St. Ferdinand streets, was fatally wounded by a pistol shot, at the polling booth of the 20th district. It is said that he went to the poll, with his naturalization papers in one hand and a pistol in the other, and that, being opposed by an American, he fired at him and wounded him in the arm; the American then returned the fire, and the shot proved fatal. A man named Antoine Wall was also shot in his leg.

Several shots were fired at James Boylan, while he was on horseback, and a German was wounded in his face. Towards 11 o'clock, a party of men broke into the 9th precinct, and destroyed the ballot-box, with its contents."

☞ The following letter from Louis Kossuth in respect to the present movements of the papal government, we trust will be read with interest. We copy it from The Independent.

LONDON, Oct. 26, 1855.

To the Editors of The Independent:

Sirs:—The Concordat recently concluded between the Roman See and Francis Joseph of Austria, is a bold manifestation of the unremitting aspirations of Papacy toward universal dominion.

And it is again my dear native land, noble and unfortunate Hungary, that must bear the brunt of the battle for Christendom and civilization, or give from compulsory submission strength to the spirit of darkness for overshadowing the world.

There is no instance in history, not one, that the fault of forsaking a brother in his hour of need, while he struggled for the common cause of freedom, has so soon and to such an extent borne its fruits, as is the case with the inconsiderate neglect with which Hungary and Italy (Rome especially) were treated in 1849.

Remember the war, and ponder over the Concordat, and then say whether I am not right.

This Concordat is evidently calculated to transform the Austrian dominions (Hungary by the might of foreign invasion included) into a dominion of papal ambition; and the thirty-six millions of their inhabitants into as many instruments of Jesuitism.

It is a bold step The Pope plays a high game If the Vatican is allowed the time necessary for bringing in full operation the wheels of the machinery; if the Pontifical See succeeds in acquiring this addition to its power, then good-by, light, civilization, and progress—the danger to civil and religious liberty throughout the world, and to Protestantism especially, will become incalculable. Should on the other hand resistance, challenged with such temerity, happen to be kept smouldering under the dead weight of political oppression, (the word and the press being gagged,) then when under the blast of a political hurricane the smouldering fire will at once burst forth into wild raging flames, it is extremely probable that the flames will not stop at burning down for ever the proud structure of Papacy, but by a natural reaction may extend the conflagration on the "Christian religion" itself, in the abused name of which more evil has been wrought than in the name of anything else It is only an early change in the political condition of those thirty-six millions of people, and in the rest of Italy, that could prevent the danger without overshooting the mark.

And the means to effect that beneficent change? What is it if not revolution? Please tell me what else?

Yet we are blamed, because we wish for redemption by revolution. You may see England from complaisance (if not worse) for L. N. Bonaparte, who once actually plotted and executed an armed expedition from English soil—you may see England renew her alien bills, and expel the refugees, and when the hour of revolution strikes you may see the United States of America stand by and look on with the utmost cheer, like as the Romans cheered when a mortally wounded gladiator fell.

Well, it is as it is. Let me report on the Concordat:

It could not have escaped your attention that since Hungary and Rome had succumbed to foreign intervention, Papacy, restored to the Vatican, did lose no time to strengthen its power by partial but steady attempts on the civil authority of independent states. There is almost no country throughout Europe (not even England excepted) that did not experience some affront from the arrogance of the Roman Church. And it can not be denied that in more than one locality the civil authority of the states got the worst of it. Upon the whole (and notwithstanding the partial blows in Spain and Piedmont) the daring attitude of the "Ecclesia militans" resulted to the advantage of the Vatican. In England it actually gained ground by turning to ridicule an ill advised measure of the parliament, which the very government that introduced it dared not execute. In several provinces of Germany the pertinacity with which it challenged a conflict with the civil authorities has led to transactions which, though not conceding everything, still conceded something of which the Roman Church could not boast before. And plying its stratagems to circumstances, you will be bound to confess that even in the United States of America Papal influence has gained ground considerably these last four or five years. It must have gained ground, or else it would have been absolutely impossible to hear of the Know-Nothing movement, which, though ill-advised as a medicine, is still an unmistakable indication of the spreading malignity of the evil.

Having thus prepared the ground by practical success, the dogma of the "immaculate conception" has been imagined with which to test the extent of submission in the Roman Catholic world; and should the success of this feeler answer their hopes, they thought the time come for a sweeping aggressive measure, in the first instance to be directed against a great State, professing in its majority the Roman Catholic religion, and then with the additional power accruing therefrom, against the rest of the world.

Thus it came to pass that while the Bishops of the Roman Church were a few months ago deliberating at Rome on the dogma of the immaculate conception, some of us have been informed that the chief object of secret deliberations was nothing less than the organization of an extensive plan of aggressive campaigns against Protestantism, and that it is Francis Joseph of Austria upon whom the Holy Assembly has fixed for a champion. If my memory does not fail me, I mentioned the rumor in one of my letters, either to you or to the New York Times. It was little heeded at that time. The recently concluded Concordat corroborates the exactitude of the information most alarmingly.

Besides a very natural doubt partly of the absolute passive obedience, partly of the stability of L. N. Bonaparte, there are several considerations obvious that may have influenced the choice of the Pontifical See, both as regards the personal qualities of the chosen champion and the actual condition of the vast dominions he usurps.

As to his personal qualities, he is a worthy scion of that House of Austria which, with the solitary exception of Joseph II., in the long list of all its descendants that wore a crown, had never produced a man either tolerant and liberal, or talented, not to say a man of independent genius. Bigotry, dull-mindedness, with unscrupulous cruelty and unrelenting despotism, together with a hereditary attachment to the traditional principles of their House, are the characteristic features of this dynasty. And that young man there at Vienna proved certainly in every regard a worthy scion of that accursed stock. Bloody, cruel, unrelenting, like his ancestor, Ferdinand II., who, at a tender age, made at Notre Dame de Loretta, the ferocious vow to exterminate the heretics; his life, as far as it goes, proved to be bent on the realization of that historical maxim of another ancestor of his, Leopold I.—"Faciam Hungariam prius servam, dein Germanam, sic Catholicam" —the first point he brought by perjury and with Russian arms to momentary consummation; to accomplish the second he moves every stone, so the Roman See may well have thought him a proper tool for the third point, chiefly as he has already sufficiently evinced his inclinations in that direction by introducing arbitrarily the Jesuits to Hungary, whence they have been banished by law, and by having most unscrupulously deprived the Protestants of Hungary of their rights and autonomy. (On this I offer to give ample information to any of your religious societies, inclined to take an earnest interest in the matter; I say "earnest"—mere talking in America is of no profit) Besides, the young Nero of Austria had been nursed on the feeding bottle of bigotry. His mother—blood-stained Sophia—is a Wittelsbach, and the Wittelsbachs of Bavaria are the sworn esquires of ultra-montanism. Francis Joseph was evidently subject in blind obedience to the fiendish fascination of that woman, cruel and bigoted alike, or else he, when a boy yet, could not have acted as he did in Hungary. So there was a promising field to be worked upon by confessors. Imbued as he is with Jesuitic principles, it was an easy task to convince him that the spirit of staunch resistance his crimes have met with in Hungary, is not so much due to the instinct of self-preservation that makes the meanest worm snap at the heel of the trampler; as it is rather the result of that spirit of insubordination, which the impious (!) philosophy of his grand-uncle, Joseph II, has encouraged under the name of religious freedom; therefore, if he wishes to secure his throne, that spirit of insubordination must be crushed, and to crush it there is no means more permanently sure than to allow the Church a proper authority for bringing back his subjects to the habit of blind obedience What neither hangmen nor bayonets could achieve, the Holy Mother Church can, if but permitted to act.—They may have reminded him that the Lord promised to punish the sins of the sires in the sons; consequently that he has to atone for the misdeeds (!) of his predecessor Joseph, and had better conciliate Heaven by re-integrating the Church to its divine rights. At this prize the Church would grant him full absolution for murder, perjury, and all the crimes circumstances may have induced or may yet induce him to commit in the praiseworthy work of maintaining his divine right to oppress the nations.—And, last, not least, he may have been made to understand that his tottering throne needs to acquire a support; and as he neither can calculate on the affection of his subjects, nor (under existing circumstances) on aid from the Czar, it is not only necessary for the salvation of his soul, but also politically wise to conciliate the almighty support of the Imperishable Church, against which not the doors of hell itself can prevail; that in fact this is his only chance of safety from the spirit of revolution, which, to hear the Vatican, is but the offspring of Protestantism and free-thinking.

While the personal qualities of Lord Aberdeen's "young hope of Austria" made him just the man to be worked upon by such arguments, there is in the actual condition of his dominions an inducement for the Papal See to choose him for its champion, and his dominions for the first campaign.

The House of Austria (Joseph excepted,) had always been identified with superstitious bigotry; it always acted on the Roman Catholic principle. Spain, the Netherlands, Germany, Italy, Hungary, attest the fact. In the hereditary provinces of Austria, Protestantism never was allowed to prosper, in Hungary it had to stand in armor for two centuries, to defend its existence. The Austrian hereditary provinces were, and had remained an empire eminently Roman Catholic—and even Hungary remained in its majority Roman Catholic; the kingdom has been called "Regnum Marianum," the Virgin Mary having been declared the especial patroness of the realm; the Roman Catholic religion was holding a "dominant" position by law;—its clergy had been endowed with immense constitutional and civil privileges; by the stratagem of introducing the Latin language into the legislature, and the political as well as judiciary administration, it held for centuries almost a monopoly in the management of public affairs; the higher hierarchy of the Roman Catholic clergy was and is immensely rich in Hungary, and has besides the support of numerous monastic orders, several of them, as the Benedictinians, Ciscertites, Premonstratenses, likewise immensely rich. And yet, curious to say: there is no Catholic country on earth in which the ambitious See of Rome had so little power as in Hungary, nay, there is many a Protestant country in which Papacy could boast of a far greater political influence than in Hungary. The Hungarian nation has at all times known to draw a strongly marked line of distinction between religion and priestcraft; and while zealously faithful to the first did always with stern determination and indomitable energy oppose the second. Such was the spirit of the nation before and after the Reformation alike. Never did Hungary concede a jot from the independence of the nation and from the civil authority of the State, to the ambition of the Roman See. Every attempt at encroachment on the part of the Popes found the nation united as one man to oppose it. Whenever a Pope pretended to countenance something or somebody, the thing or the person was sure to be lost, from the simple reason of being countenanced by the Pope. It was a maxim with the nation, that no good can come from that quarter. The very communication between the clergy and the Roman See has been at all times so much controlled and watched, that the Roman Catholic clergy of Hungary, however mighty and influential, was kept utterly powerless to serve the worldly ambition of Papacy. And this sound cautious spirit of the nation resulted in imparting a highly pronounced sense of independence, national dignity, and patriotism to the Roman Catholic clergy itself. It is but paying a due homage to their merit to say, that the Hungarian Catholic clergy never has been so base, abject, and servile, as to betray the independence of their country and the dignity of their nation to the ambitious aspirations of the pontifical See. There was no trifling to be dared with Hungary on this point. It was before the Reformation yet, that King Mathias Corvinus gave to understand to Pope Sixtus IV, that the Hungarian nation will rather triple the double cross in their arms (pass "en masse" to the oriental church) than permit Papal interference with civil authority and national rights. And the popes knew that this admonition did but reflect the deep rooted character of the Hungarian nation.

This manly spirit and provident solicitude of the Hungarian nation could not fail to exert some influence even beyond our own frontiers, upon the hereditary dominions of the house of Austria—from which in an unlucky hour Hungary had chosen her kings. Thus it came to pass, that though the Hapsburghs (always Joseph II. excepted,) were all that the most sanguine expectations of pontifical ambition could wish, still the Popes never could succeed to make of Austria a Spain, or a Naples; the Austrian provinces in spite of Jesuits and Redemptorists never had become an efficient tool in the hands of the Popes toward universal dominion.

In fact it is no exaggeration to say, that it is Hungary that clogged the wheels of Papal omnipotence.

But if you ask me, by what means did Hungary maintain this glorious position well deserving the gratitude of all the Christian world?—I will answer you, it was by the free word, boldly resounding in the halls of our Diet, and more indomitably yet in those parliaments of freedom I mean the municipal assemblies There it was that under the protecting wings of unrestricted publicity we met the enemy,—there it was that we denounced his public violence and his secret tricks to the indignation of the people,—there it was, that any independent country gentlemen had sufficient power, by the thunder of a patriot's voice, to defeat the insidious stratagems of despot and priest; there it was that the Roman Catholic curate and chaplain felt himself safe to follow the impulses of his patriotic heart, and give with the authority of his office the lie to those who dared to profane the name of religion, by calling on it to support with the worldly ambition of the Roman Popes.

Now, sir! mark well the fact; the word is gagged in Hungary, and the halls of the assemblies are closed German Lazaronis imported from abroad by a sanguinary tyrant, dictate to the Magyar in his own house, what he has to believe, what he has to do. Now is the moment or never to break the manly spirit of Hungary.

You can now well imagine, sirs, why it is that the Pontifical See has fixed on Francis Joseph of Austria for the seneschal of its ambition; and you may well imagine what importance there is in turning Hungary to a tool of the Vatican.

I dare tell you, sirs, that if papacy is allowed time enough to deploy in Hungary all the machinations of the Concordat just concluded—darker days are in store for humanity than ever yet it was its fate to meet.

In my next, I will critically survey from a Hungarian point of view the twenty-six articles of the Concordat, and will now conclude with saying, that when the "Independence Belge," (neither liberal nor independent though it is) gets so much alarmed as to say "that unless the Church has to be everything and civil power nothing in the State, more cannot be conceded to the Pontifical See, than this Concordat concedes;" I, and every independant man will find reason to say, that if this Concordat is allowed to be carried in execution, in less than a quarter of a century, either the Popes will rule the world, or else the Christian religion will be swept away by one of those tremendous crises, which form the turning-points in the destinies of humanity. Unfounded War Panic in Eng'and.

New York, Nov. 15. The Collins steamship Pacific, Capt. Nye, from Liverpool 3d inst., arrived at her dock at half-past eight o'clock this morning.

She brings London and Liverpool dates to Nov. 3.

An extraordinary panic in England was occasioned by rumors of a war with the United States, and that Mr Buchanan had demanded his passports. Mr Buchanan was obliged publicly to contradict the rumor.

There was no news of importance from the Crimea. Both armies were going into winter quarters.

The London Times, in a series of skilfully malicious editorials, started the subject, which, exaggerated by the Provincial press, speedily attained such dimensions that extras were issued announcing that the American Minister had demanded his passports.

General astonishment and regret was excited by the announcement, and energetic protests were heard against Government, forcing the nation into so dangerous a war.

Our Liverpool agent telegraphed to his Excellency, the American Minister, who promptly and courteously sent him the following explicit contradiction of the rumor:

London, night of 2d. It is not true that the American Minister has demanded his passports from the British Government. There is no foundation for such a report.

Notwithstanding this an uneasy feeling remains in the public mind.

Nothing important from the seat of war, except the return of the Allies from their advance to their former positions, in expectation of an attack from the Russians

Nevertheless it is unlikely that any further operations will take place this season. Both armies are preparing for winter.

Some trifling successes have been gained by the fleets, which have now sailed towards the Gulf of Perekop.

Hamilton Seymour is appointed minister to Vienna.

Gen. Codrington is appointed commander in the Crimea, in place of Gen. Simpson.

Lord Stanley, Earl of Derby's son, is offered the Colonial Secretaryship

The difficulty between France and Naples is settled.

London, Saturday. Gen. Canrobert has embarked from Lubec for Stockholm, in a French steamer.

A despatch from Dantzic states that the bulk of the Allied fleet was about to proceed to Kiel.

A correspondent of the Cologne Gazette, writing from Berlin, alludes to rumors of peace, but they are looked upon in diplomatic circles as unfounded, not merely because Russia has resorted to a fresh levy of conscripts, but because every communication from that Empire discountenances the belief that Russia will make any concessions to the demands of the Western Powers. On the other hand, all the letters arriving from Vienna allude to rumors of peace.

The correspondence of the Daily News declares that Russia has positively intimated at both the Courts of the great German Powers, her willingness to negotiate upon the basis of the four points, and that the Allies of Dec. 2nd are not at all disinclined to resume diplomatic conferences, although the Western Powers have at the same time declared that they can only consent to such a step, when there is a sure prospect of attaining a satisfactory result

It is added that Austria is very far from declining the co-operation of Prussia.

The Prussian Gazette of the 30th Oct affirms, that at this very moment the French government intimates at Vienna its readiness to negotiate with Russia, on the basis of the four points, it adds that it is resolved to continue the war—and recommence military operations next spring with redoubled energy should peace not be concluded in the interim.

The British Government has prohibited the exportation to all foreign countries of salt petre, nitrate of soda, sulphate potash and chlorate potash.

From the London Times, November 1.

Present State of the Differences Between England and the United States.

When the war in the East first broke out, and England found herself in new and unwonted alliance with France, and an equally unwonted hostility with Russia, there was no power from which she received assurances of support more hearty, more satisfactory and more spontaneous, than from the United States of America. Even the minister of the Union in this country, unless we are misinformed, testified to the cordial sympathy of the cabinet of Washington and the nation over which it presides. He expressed an apprehension as to the durability of our alliance with France, and our ability, alone and unaided, to resist the overwhelming might of Russia. But he desired us to be under no apprehension on that account, for the United States were willing to make our quarrel their own, and aid us with thousands of stout hearts and brawny arms as ready to pluck down the despotism of the E[illegible] the wilderness and level the [illegible] the West. [illegible] government believed these [illegible] do not doubt the American [illegible] them, we cannot reasonably [illegible] rashness or credulity, or say that [illegible] doubtful authority, a strange or improbable story. Was it unlikely, a priori, that a nation whose noble boast it is that her soil is the chosen abode of freedom, whose every citizen is a missionary against the creed of despotism, should warm to a generous enthusiasm at a war waged for no selfish motive, but to curb barbarous insolence, and save Europe and Asia from being trampled under the heel of an overbearing autocrat? Was it likely that a population, recruited annually from the bitterest enemies of Russia, which has so often evinced a martial spirit, which swarmed to the obscure conflicts of the Mexican war, and has shed its blood so freely in nameless Indian quarrels, should stand aloof from a contest in which world-wide fame was to be won by the brave, and a fair occasion was offered of making American valor illustrious in the van of a conflict, on the decision of which depended the future destinies of the human race? We do not think so; and, therefore, unfortunate as the result has been, we cannot blame our ministers that, in their urgent need of men, they sought to avail themselves of the resources of the West, and to turn into a legitimate channel the irregular energies of those ardent spirits which have appeared so long to burn for an enterprise worthy of their courage. At the same time, the British government, while establishing depots for enlistment within its own dominions on the American continent, gave the most stringent orders that nothing should be done in the endeavor to obtain recruits to violate the municipal law of the United States—a direction which, with all deference to the American attorney-general, seems to us to show an intention to respect, instead of to violate, the national sovereignty of the Union.

However, it unhappily soon became only too apparent that the American minister and the British government had alike mistaken the disposition of our trans-Atlantic brethren. The sympathies of the land of freedom were found in great measure to be enlisted on the side of Russia. Whether it was a jealousy of the French alliance, a secret sympathy with the spirit of territorial aggression, wherever displayed, a desire on the part of the slaveholding states to counteract influences hostile to their domestic institutions, or that the Irish refugees had inoculated the Union with their hatred of England, we cannot say; but certain it is, that accounts began speedily to reach this country of the hostile spirit in which our attempts at recruiting were received, and the philo-Russian tone adopted, with a few honorable exceptions, by the whole American press, was but too apparent. The English government did not wait to hear more; it had been misled, and it hastened to retract its error. Orders were immediately despatched to America, to desist from all attempts at recruiting, and to give no cause of annoyance to the susceptibilities of the nation.

In the meanwhile, the American government had, as well as the British, made its observations on the state of public feeling, and determined not to neglect the opportunity of turning that feeling to account in the interest of the coming presidential election of 1856. Proceedings were instituted against persons who had acted, or were supposed to act, in the interest of the English recruiting service, and Mr Crampton, the most popular minister who has ever been accredited from this country to the Cabinet of Washington, was made the object of unmeasured abuse and vituperation. At the same time, the American government desired their minister in London to make the strongest representations at the conduct of Great Britain, and to demand a discontinuance of all endeavors at recruiting in the States. The British government answered, in the most conciliatory tone, that what was demanded had been already done, and offered explanations on the subject, which proved perfectly satisfactory to the American minister, who could not but remember his own sanguine anticipations of a contrary feeling; and so for a time the matter terminated.

But the American government was not so easily satisfied and returned to the attack with a despatch, of which we will only permit ourselves to say that it was ill-calculated to restore good feeling between the two countries, and by no means a fitting acknowledgment of the readiness shown by our ministry to recall a mistake into which they had been so innocently led. To this despatch the British government has returned a temperate, but firm and dignified reply, and has seconded its diplomacy by strengthening its West India fleet with the ships that have arrived from the Baltic.

In this position affairs now stand, and we appeal to the conviction of our readers whether these transactions do not disclose on the part of our own government a most commendable spirit of forbearance and moderation, and on the part of the government of the United States a desire to force a quarrel upon us at a period when we may well be supposed to desire, above all things, the continuance of our present friendly relations.

We trust that no word may fall from us to aggravate the ill-feeling which has been so unfortunately excited, or to embitter a quarrel which it is only due to our government and people to say they have done nothing to provoke, and are willing to do everything consistent with honor to allay. We cannot believe, notwithstanding the extraordinary language and conduct of the American government, that they can really wish to drive matters to the extremity towards which they are so recklessly urging them; but it is dangerous to sport with the susceptibilities of two brave and high spirited nations; and those who are thus eager in letting out the waters of strife, should consider well whether they have strength sufficient to close the flood-gates they have opened.

From the London Times, October 30.

Prospects of Peace---Influence operating upon the Czar. The following is extracted from the Vienna correspondence of the Constitutional, dated October 24:

"I am strongly inclined to believe that the late meeting of the principal diplomatic agents of Prussia at the Castle of Stolzemels, on the banks of the Rhine, where they assembled at the invitation of the King, is connected with certain efforts of the Berlin Cabinet to renew negotiations of peace between Russia and the Western Powers

"Prince Talleyrand used to say that the best kept diplomatic secret ceased to be one the moment it became known to three persons. The number of diplomatists summoned to Stoltenfels exceeding that number the remark of Talleyrand was the more fully verified on this occasion. Notwithstanding all the mystery observed at Berlin on the subject, it is undeniable that since the capture of Sebastopol secret negotiations have been carried on between the courts of Prussia and St. Petersburgh with regard to the contingencies which the daily successes of the allies no longer allow to be lightly treated.

"I must begin by rendering justice to the Cabinet of Berlin, that it feels the time has come to urge Russia to accept the four points before the allies increase their demands, as they have clearly the right to do, in virtue of the observation they formerly made. If we may form a conjecture from some conciliatory expressions, dropped by those statesmen who direct on the part of Prussia the secret negotiations just alluded to, it would appear that the Emperor Alexander is by no means so opposed to the suggestions of a wise and prudent moderation as the official and officious organs of Muscovite diplomacy would lead one to believe.

"On the contrary, it seems that the Empress Maria Alexandrowna, who has always exercised a legitimate and salutary influence over the mind of her august consort, is now earnestly laboring to secure to the young Czar an honorable medium of communication with the Western powers. The personal position of Count Nesselrode, whose retirement from office was lately announced without any foundation, was never more firmly established than at this moment, thanks to the powerful protection of the Empress.

"It appears quite certain that the journey just undertaken by the Emperor Alexander to the south of his empire is due to the suggestions of this lady, who wished to place the Czar in a position to judge of the state of public opinion, and to convince him that the country already suffers too much from the calamities of the war to desire the continuance of a struggle with a disorganized army, hereafter inaccessible to the electrifying influence of fanaticism. In proportion as the veteran troops of the Czar are decimated in unsuccessful engagements, the military spirit is becoming extinct in the Muscovite ranks, which will be less likely to stand in the open field, as they have lost all confidence in their leaders.

"By visiting the theatre of war, the Czar can satisfy himself by personal observation of many things carefully concealed from him, and his sudden resolution to send to the head-quarters of Prince Gortschakoff, Generals Count de Stackelberg and Baron de Benkendorff, the first of whom is attached to the Russian embassy at Vienna and the second to the embassy at Berlin, imparts great probability to the news just arrived from the Prussian capital, to the effect that the Emperor Alexander would make decisive overtures for peace, if Prince Gortschakoff could not maintain his position during the winter in the Crimea.

"On the other hand, the arrival in Berlin at the same time of the two Prussian Plenipotentiaries at the court of St. James' and the Tuileries suggests the idea that some new proposal is to be made by Prussia to the Western Powers, on the subject of which Baron de Bernsdorff and Count Hatzfeld are to receive the verbal instructions of King Frederic William, as well as of Baron de Manteuffel.

"Everything will necessarily depend on the nature and bearing of the propositions which Russia may deem it advisable to lay before the Western powers. If they merely were the basis of fresh negotiations, Prussia would be only losing her time—France and England, as I already mentioned in my letter on the 17th, being determined to accept only such propositions as may be immediately converted, without any previous discussion, into preliminaries of peace."

Progress of the War. Our English files, received by the Pacific, furnish a great variety of details of war intelligence, of more or less interest. Up to Oct. 20th, the weather in the Crimea continued fine, and road making and other preparations for winter were progressing most satisfactorily. Gen. Simpson, in his despatch of the 20th ult., says: "In consequence of the continued fineness of the weather great progress has been made in the construction of the road and railway. The divisions have all got some weeks' supply of rations in their camp, and I entertain no anxiety of there being a scarcity of anything during the approaching winter."

The orders for the movement of the Highland Division, under Sir Colin Campbell, towards Eupatoria, had been countermanded, in consequence of a telegraphic despatch from London, informing Gen Simpson of the intention of the Russians to attack the Allies in their position before Sebastopol. Col. McMurdo's Land Transport Corps is reported to be in a most efficient condition. Nearly 13,000 animals are now under the Col.'s command—four-footed ones we mean. There was some cholera among the newly arrived men of two of the Divisions, but the English army generally, is reported remarkably healthy.

On the whole, it would seem that the principal warlike work for this season is over; and that neither party in this bloody war is likely to make any great movement this late period of the year. Thus the London Times says, "we believe there can be no doubt that the operations for the expulsion of the Russians from the Crimea are abandoned for the present season. The main body of both armies will at once go into winter quarters. Five months of inactivity are thus before the armies of the East."

The naval armament destroyed by the Russians at Sebastopol, to prevent them from falling into the hands of their enemies, exceeded in number of guns the whole naval force of the United States. Gen. Williams, the commander-in chief at Kars, where the Turks have achieved what is perhaps, after all, their most brilliant success, has many friends in this country. He is the Col. Williams, whose assiduous protection of the American missionaries and the people of their charge, has been observed with gratitude and pleasure, more than once, by those interested in the missions in the east.

Notices.

The work recommended a few weeks since by so many of the Preachers, is now written, and will go to the publisher's as soon as pledges are received sufficient to warrant the undertaking. As this is a gift to the cause except the actual expense, I do not feel it duty to borrow $4 or 500, and be compelled to peddle my own productions to get out of debt. If the preaching Brn interested would just name the thing to the Churches, and get some one or more in each place to pledge themselves for 10, 15, or 20, as they may choose, it will save the trouble of getting single subscribers at 50 cts. each.—Such a course would secure the object at once. 1,000 books will cost about $400. 50 pledges, 20 each, will warrant the undertaking. I have received pledges for over 100 without any effort. Now this is a short and easy method, and if done soon, the work will soon appear, and the Nos. be sent to those who pledge, for distribution.

For The Crisis.

The Savior's Return to Heaven.

Long years have rolled away since Jesus left
This proud, ambitious world for Paradise.
His arduous work was done, and earnestly
He longed to tread the golden streets of heaven,
And breathe the pure air of His blessed home;
To gaze upon the towering battlements,
And shining walls of fair Jerusalem,
And by His Father's side sit down in peace.

The work His Father sent Him to perform
In this cold world was well and truly done.
The glorious kingdom offered to the Jews,
The Gentile's pathway lighted with new hope.
And meekly had He suffered and endured.
Mountain and desert witnessed long His tears,
His agonizing prayers, and weary hours.
Yet bore He all with brow serene and meek,
And the Divine impress of holy love
Was throned upon each feature, as He knelt
By Kedron's side to bathe His throbbing brow;
And e'en the silvery waters seemed to smile,
When Jesus' face was mirrored in their depths.

He'd tasted all the bitterness of death.
Forsaken by his Father He had died,
That He might drink the fulness of the cup,
Leave naught of agony or bitterness,
Of pain, or fierce temptation, e'en untried,
That He a perfect Captain might be made
Of our salvation, bringing through the light
Of His rich Gospel and His precious blood,
Both life and immortality to view.

Now He has won a glorious victory,
And gained redemption for a fallen race,
Justice is satisfied; the lost may live
He's overcome, and by His Father's side
Would fain sit down, and plead with blessed words,
For those beloved yet erring ones for whom
His soul still yearns with deathless tenderness.

But yet—He lingers. There's enchantment still
In one lone spot in pleasant Palestine.
A little band of houseless, homeless ones
He leaves behind, who've shared His wanderings,
And all His toil, and lov'd Him to the end.
He sees their future sorrows, agonies,
Their bitter sufferings and their cruel deaths,
And with a thoughtful love, surpassing far
A mother's tenderness for her first-born,
He gives a precious boon, a legacy
More rich than all the treasures of the earth.
"My Peace I leave with you," the Savior said.
The soft, sweet cadence of those sacred tones
Soothed them to holy peace. Their troubled hearts,
Sad. yet subdued, were strengthened to endure
The coming separation from their Lord.

And now the hour was come. The Savior blessed
The kneeling flock, who looked on Him with love;
And as their earnest gaze was upward cast,
"A cloud received Him" from their longing sight!
And Angel minstrels tuned their golden harps,
Pouring a gushing song of welcome, forth,
Till heaven's high arches rang with melody,
And the adoring hosts bowed low before
The Son with whom the Father was "well pleased."

A few in every age, have since that time,
Remembered Jesus; longed to see Him come,
And waiting for Him patiently the while,
They watch with earnest hearts, still girding on
The Gospel armor, and all trustingly
They look to share the Paradise of God.

Soon will the Great Deliverer appear.
Then, Christian soldier, gird thy armor on,
And let hope plume thy wings for life and rest;
Press forward in the warfare, for the strife
Will soon be finished; immortality
Will soon be given, and the happy day,
The welcome hour of rest will soon be here.
And O at last may our poor names be found
Written within the precious Book of life,
And may we find a blest, eternal home,
With all the ransomed throng, to die no more!

"Little Children, love one another."

A little girl with a happy look,
Sat slowly reading a ponderous book,
All bound with velvet, and edged with gold,
And its weight was more than the child could hold.
Yet dearly she loved to ponder it o'er,
And every day she prized it more;
For it said—and she looked at her smiling mother,
It said—"Little children, love one another."

She thought it was beautiful in the Book,
And the lesson home to her heart she took;
She walked on her way with a trusting grace,
And a dove-like look in her meek young face,
Which said, just as plain as words could say,
"The Holy Bible I must obey;
So mamma, I'll be kind to my darling brother,
For 'little children must love each other.'

I am sorry he's naughty and will not play,
But I'll love him still, for I think the way
To make him gentle and kind to me,
Will be better shown, if I let him see
I strive to do what I think is right,
And thus when we kneel in prayer to-night,
I will clasp my arms about my brother,
And say, 'little children, love one another.'"

The little girl did as her Bible taught,
And pleasant, indeed, was the change it wrought;
For the boy looked up in glad surprise,
To meet the light of her loving eyes;
His heart was full—and he could not speak—
But he pressed a kiss on his sister's cheek;
And God looked down on the happy mother,
Whose "little children loved each other."

For The Crisis.

Letter from Br. W. S. Campbell.

St. Paul, M. T., Nov. 8, 1855.

Dear Br. Merriam:—I arrived in this Territory, and landed here, Oct. 29th. I found the passage extremely tiresome—the more so as it occupied at least, 36 hours longer time than if I should have come—and I continued over Sunday, which was a source of great regret in view of the limited time I have to remain up here. I must look out and not get frozen up in this North Western world, for I could not well stay till Spring, nor afford to go down to Dubuque by stage.—I find here a beautiful country, and fine climate; certainly it is very mild now—much more so than our New England climate at this time of year. Latitude 45°. The altitude is said to be 16,000 feet above the level of the sea.

Now without another word about it, I shall turn to other and more important matters—the real object and interest of my coming to Minnesota.

St. Paul came to Athens, a city of pagans, and preached the Gospel to the philosophers and others who came to hear.—He came to the heathen metropolis of the world, and staid till some were converted, working at his trade. I came to a city named after him by the superstitious and ignorant who thus presume to honor him, and could not preach at all—not because they are pagans—for they are papists.—Catholicism is powerful in influence here They outvote all other denominations in Henepin and Dakotah Couunties—have already a large school and are building a College in this city, which numbers some 6,000 inhabitants—often cried up to 10. Not because there were no Protestant places of worship, for there are some five or six of the different denominations, (including one in the Scandinavian language,)—Not because I would not gladly have proclaimed the "Pauline Theology" to them, but because in the Christian city of St. Paul I could not find a place—I could not pay for any house or hall—and I could not pay my own expenses while I could start. Oh! could I have found some heathen "Areopagus" in which to have preached freely Jesus and the resurrection!

I did preach—first at Minneapolis—at St. Anthony's Falls, on Friday eve, Nov. 2d, to a good congregation, when I dealt with "Modern Sorcery" as severely as the Advent preachers are accustomed to in the East.

We obtained Chambers' Hall, and on Sunday eve, held services in the same place, by the kindness of Elder Ames, the Pastor of the Freewill Baptist Church. A large congregation of people attended, and listened, apparently, with deep interest. The subject was directly the coming of the Lord, and the kingdom of God, with some important indications of its approach. On Monday eve, in the same place, I spake on the prophetic position of the French Power in the Eastern war. I held one service at mid-day on Sunday, at Haposia, in the district school house—a good congregation came out. Was kindly entertained there by Mr. S. M. Cork.

After service—I rode 15 miles via St. Paul and St. Anthony, to my evening appointment—on horseback. Just had time to leave the saddle and step into the desk, when I felt the responsibility of speaking for my Master as I seldom have—and did speak—much to my own joy—on the great theme of salvation, by Christ's coming and glory.

I find I am a pioneer Advent preacher in this Territory. I cannot find that any other preacher of this blessed doctrine—has ever been into this land. There are a few families of our people, who are living in the hope of seeing more of the Brn. if the Lord does not come at once—and of seeing Him with all the faithful.

Br. Charles Raymond for the present will reside at Minneapolis. Br. Sydney Raymond has removed to Crow Riv r—where there are three families of our people—There is another family—Br. Chandler's at Monticello—and still another at Minnesota City, all I can hear of in this distant country.

How refreshing and gratifying it was to my pilgrim heart, to find a few even, who sympathise in the spirit and work of the Gospel! partakers of like precious faith!!

What joyful effort I put forth, in walking some six miles to find a believer in the coming of Christ, at hand!

I had walked on Thursday Nov. 1st, some ten miles—in the afternoon—the dull shades became deeper and more palpable over the great prairie which lay outspread to the west, the undulating expanse to the eastward grew more sombre every moment. The ancient song of the cataract came upon my ear—came over my feelings with its solemn and subduing harmony—the deluge chorus of these Mississippi Falls—struck at the birth of a world—or an anthem wakened, by a new life from some unknown, mighty convulsion of natural elements—brought upon my soul a force to entrance, to abstraction and new sentiment would have risen—and scenes without would have held fellowship with sympathies within. But I am not sentimental, no sir! [illegible] housed yet—I must find a bro[illegible] what a word, in a strange land. [illegible] came to his house, I said, [illegible] vent Preacher from the e[illegible] to visit you as the lovers of truth and expectants of the Kingdom." "Come in, brother! we are glad to see you" Right heartily was I received, gladly did I sit down, with that Church, which was in one house. I felt at home, we entered upon the great theme of "our hope," with a zest you, at the east, cannot experience. Those who have tired of the faith, and sickened upon the association they have held with the good and the true; should come west, to appreciate privileges, and if they should keep any where in the neighborhood of faith and love to God, they would love to meet with the toil-worn, lone-hearted servant of Christ, struggling in the deep conflict of faith.

Ah Br., it is a struggle, East or West! Dark are the elements which oppose, mighty the influences which offer a barrier to our front! Bright the hopes which sustain—blessed the reward which awaits!

Yours truly, W. S. Campbell.

The Resurrection.

By Br. S. Ayres.

Dear Br. Merriam:—My soul is full and overflowing, and I want to speak unto others as I would that they should speak unto me, were I in the same dilemma in which thousands appear to be, who are yet honest and dear children of the kingdom. But tradition, I am satisfied, holds them as it held me for more than twenty years. O who can realize the power of tradition! Thanks be to God who has by a train of His providences led me to desire to understand His word more perfectly, and; to God be all the glory for the light that shines upon my pathway in the midst of the surrounding perils of these last days, and amidst those of apostatizing from the faith once delivered to the saints.

The subject upon which I wish to speak is one full of glory and interest to all—it is the resurrection of the dead. Not particularly because some are denying the greater part of the dead a resurrection, but to inquire, when are the dead raised? Tradition says, that a part of them will be raised at the coming of Christ, and the remainder a thousand years afterwards.—But what saith the Scripture? "if they speak not according to the law and the testimony it is because there is no truth in them." I am aware that many will say that this is a settled question with them, and so turn away. It is not for such that I speak.

The Apostle says that we should prove all things. And says Jesus, "He that hath an ear to hear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the Churches." It is this class that I expect to benefit if I have the truth. Not that I expect to advance any new doctrine, but I do expect by the help of God to draw out of His store-house "things both new and old," and thereby show what the Spirit saith unto the Churches upon this subject.

First, I appeal to the words of our Savior as recorded in John 5: 28, 29.—"Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth, they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation." It would seem that this Scripture alone was enough to satisfy any candid mind, seeing that the word does not contradict itself; but such has been the sophistry and tradition of these last times, it will be neccessary to prove the point at issue.

First I would ask, "what manner of speech is this?" Is it a parable, or a figure of speech? I answer it is neither; and to say it is symbolic is most preposterous. Then I ask again, what can it be? I answer, it is plain-spoken, literal language—most assuredly it is. Let us be sure—for remember, that if we settle this as such, all is plain; and with it all other Scriptures must and will harmonize, or we must give the infidel his case—which I will not do, no, not for a moment. "Get thee behind me, Satan."

Now let us look at the subject again.—What does our Savior say is coming?—The hour, does He not? What does He say will take place in THE hour, the definite hour? "All that are in the graves shall hear his voice." Query. Have any been laid in the grave, except the righteous? Let all answer for themselves. What further says our Savior respecting them? "and shall come forth." Who? Those that are in their graves. What is their character? "They that have done good," that is one class; but is that all? no!—"and they that have done evil."—That makes two classes. Now who can believe these sayings? God forbid, that any should turn away and call them hard sayings.

But, says one, I want some proof, that this takes place all in one hour—as though the words of Christ were not sufficient—and this we are happy to give. Says the great Apostle to the Gentiles (1 Thess. 4 ch. 16 v.,) "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first." The term "first" here used, does not imply that it will be prior to the resurrection of the wicked.

This is not the argument of the Apostle—as the subsequent verse shows; for, says he, "Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord." So we perceive that while he says the righteous are to be raised first, he means before the living are caught up; so that both can be caught up together to meet the Lord. Not one word is said that forbids the idea of the wicked being raised at the same time.

Now the proof is this. If this is the time when the voice of the Son of God is heard so as to awake the dead—and they come forth out of their graves—it must include both classes as we have before mentioned, unless it can be shown that his voice will be heard again (and subsequently to this time,) to awake the dead—which is not to be found in the Scripture.

Had it not been for a misunderstanding of that symbolic book, the Revelation, I do not see how it could have been otherwise understood—then that the dead shall all come out of their graves in the hour that is coming as Jesus says; or as Isaiah when he says that "the earth shall cast out the dead," the righteous and the wicked.

Well, some may say, if you will make all other Scriptures harmonize with it, I could believe. This is just what I have undertaken to do, or enough to show that this view of the subject must be correct, as we cannot now speak of all of them. If this is proved by the positive texts of Scriptue, all inferential and symbolic Scripture must and will bend to them, unless, as we before said, we give the infidel his case, or as some have undertaken to show, all literal Scripture must be decided by one text of symbolic Scripture found in Rev. 20th ch.

That the Bible contradicts itself, no child of God is willing to admit—then with this fact in our minds, we will proceed to fulfil our promise. We will now turn to Dan. 12th ch. 2d v. "And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." When does this take place? By reading the first v. we learn that it is at the time when Michael shall stand up; and at that time when there is to be such a time of trouble as there never has been since there was a nation. This gives us the chronology of the event, and no evading it. Here those who are raised or awake at this time are qualified in as strong terms as our Savior has done it; for he says "some shall awake to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt;" and both classes at that time when Michael shall stand up, and at the time of trouble. Ques. Is this time of trouble a thousand years long?—Then unless there are to be two resurrections of the wicked, this will agree with what Christ says, that all in the graves shall come forth in the "hour."

Isaiah also testified to this point. Let us read Isa. 26: 19, 20. "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise; Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust: for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead. Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee: hide thyself as it were for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast."

I will now present some positive testimony from Rev. 1: 7. "Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him: and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him."

This occurs when Jesus comes in the clouds of heaven.

Now if the Roman soldiers who crucified the Savior were wicked men, it is a settled point that some of the wicked are to be raised in order to see His coming in the clouds of heaven.

Again: (Matt. 26: 64) when Jesus was arraigned before the high priest, He said to him, "Hereafter shall ye see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven."

This is proof positive that another wicked man will be raised to see Jesus coming in the clouds of heaven.

"Wherefore, beloved, seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent that ye may be found of him in peace without spot and blameless." But grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. To whom be glory both now and forever. Amen.

For the Crisis.

The greatest Prize by mortals ever gained.

By N. Lazell.

Creation's Grand Lottery is soon to be drawn! The prizes are of intrinsic worth—of immense value! The number of prizes cannot be told! but each applicant can be supplied. And all who procure a genuine ticket, and retain the same until the day of drawing, will be entitled to a share in the prizes, which will be promptly awarded without discount on that day. Therefore an invitation is extended to all the inhabitants of earth; high and low, rich and poor, bond and free; all the posterity of Adam are invited to come and secure a title to this "Pearl of great price," which can now be obtained by all on the most liberal terms, which may be specified as follows:—

To all those who have no money, "come and buy, without money, and without price!"

Those possessing this world's goods, inasmuch as it is for their especial benifit, they are earnestly invited to sell, and invest in this grand enterprize. It will prove a safe and profitable investment, for the Proprietor is Prince of the kings of the earth; and the rightful heir to the WHOLE WORLD; having purchased it with His own blood. He, being obedient in all things unto His Father, and righteous in all His ways, having been slain by the powers of darkness, His Father raised Him again from the dead! and having life in Himself, He gave unto His Son, also, to have life in Himself. As there can be no blanks drawn by the genuine tickets, the prize must be won by each possessor on that day! They will soon be disposed of, and the present moment affords a favorable opportunity to all who will improve the same, to gain an immense fortune—the true riches! a treasure "where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal."

As the great decisive day of drawing is fast approaching and hasteth greatly, the sons of earth are earnestly importuned and entreated to avail themselves of these last opportunities of securing a title to a share in this great inheritance. Then come! ye thirsty, sorrowing, suffering, groaning, dying sons of earth! Oh come to the fountain of life and felicity; come to heaven's storehouse, and secure a title to an everlasting prize! come, while time's last golden moments linger! "It is the last call of mercy," and soon will it be said it is too late! Do not procrastinate, the prize must soon be won, or lost forever!

All who have purchased titles are urgently solicited to give heed to the instructions they have received from the Proprietor, and His agents, from time to time, all of which are recorded in the grand scheme of the Proprietor. Moreover they are entreated not to sell, barter, or lose the same, lest they, on the coming day, like one of old, be compelled to seek to regain it, when too late, in vain with tears!

The names of all possessing tickets on the day of drawing, will have been registered, in a book called the Book of life, which book will then be opened, and all whose names are there found recorded will be acknowledged as heirs to a glorious and everlasting inheritance, even the Kingdom of God! and will live and reign with Jesus Christ their King forever and ever!

"Who is the Blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords? Who only hath immortality! to Him be honor and power everlasting!"

It is proper here to say that the enemy and rival of the Proprietor, has issued and circulated everywhere false titles, whereby many have been and are still liable to be deceived; and if they do not make an effort to ascertain their validity, they are in danger of approaching that day holding worthless titles, all of which (by the way,) will be found to lack the Seal of the great Proprietor. Therefore He has given us the grand scheme, which contains His whole plan, the conditions, purposes, and designs, and the principles of the final decisions of the great day! This plan will be found of the greatest practical utility, as it is a perfect Detecter, so that every title may be tested by this great standard. This grand scheme devised by Infinite wisdom, and thus far executed and fullfiled by Almighty power, may be found recorded in an old book called the Bible! Therefore every ticket, that does not correspond with this plan, in all points, and, which does not bear the name of the great Proprietor, written with His own hand, in letters of blood, is worthless. Therefore all are requested to search the record, to study the plan, and seek to understand the will of the Proprietor, and all His requirements, that they may obtain a title that will be found valid on the great, decisive coming day!

For The Crisis.

Letter from Br. D. C. Hart.

Willimansett, Nov. 4th, 1855.

Dear Brn. and Sisters in the Lord:—It does my soul good to receive the Crisis weekly. My heart is made glad to see the Brn. and Srs. so strong in the belief of the speedy coming of Jesus. My prayer is,

"Fly swift around, ye wheels of time,
And bring the welcome day."

We have each of us a duty to do, in order to enter that heaven of eternal happiness. I am poor in this world's goods, but bless God I am rich in faith, looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of our great God and Savior Jesus Christ. When He shall come in the clouds of heaven we shall be caught up to meet our long-expected King in the air. Then the graves will be opened, the dead that are in them will come forth, and the sea will give up its dead to be judged every one according to their deeds done in the body. I bless God that I was snatched as a brand from the burning, and my hope founded on a rock.—Here are trials and temptations, but we must endure the scoffs and frowns of this ungodly world. Christ tells us in this world ye shall have tribulation; but bless God, we shall not always endure them, for Christ has promised us a kingdom under the whole heavens which will never be destroyed.

As I look around me, I find the world all ready to harvest. Soon the tares will be gathered into bundles, and the wheat into the barn; and then the tares will be burned up with unquenchable fire.

Brn. and Srs., let us be up and doing while the day lasts; for we shall rest when He who is our life shall appear.—There are many in this place who, I fear, will come short of that heavenly rest unless they make their peace with God before that awful day overtakes them.—When they shall see Christ coming in the clouds of heaven, there will be no hope for the sinner then. Oh that I may be able to say, "I have fought the good fight, I have kept the faith, henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of life" that fadeth not away. Oh that every one could say they will have Jesus to reign over them. I wish it were so, but they will not. I know that here are trials and temptations to draw us away from the fold of Christ; but blessed be God—I am determined to see the end of the Christian race, and have a seat at the right hand of the Father.—There we shall meet our friends who have long been slumbering in the dust, and be with them forever and ever. There all tears will be wiped away, there the tree of life will bear its fruit every month, and the leaves are for the healing of the nations. Abraham and Isaac and Jacob and all the prophets will be there, to sing the song of Moses and the Lamb forever and ever.

I love all my Brn, and Srs., although scattered over all the earth; but bless the Lord, when Christ shall come, He will send his holy angels to the east and west, north and south, and gather them together to meet Him in the air.

Pray for me, Brn. and Srs., that I may hold out to the end and at last meet you in that heavenly Kingdom.

Yours, waiting for that blessed hope.
D. C. Hart.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Br. M. Grant.

East Boston, Nov. 3, 1855.

Br. Merriam:—The following expression of principles which I have copied from the Christian Messenger, so fully meets my own feelings; and I think it expresses the sentiments of most, if not all of our brethren; that I send it for insertion in the Crisis.

"We are Christians, to the exclusion of all the names of faction and party; but not to the exclusion of the good of any party.

The Bible is our rule, to the exclusion of all the creeds, covenants, disciplines and articles of faith ever prepared by uninspired men, and imposed upon the Church.

Christian character is our only test of fellowship and communion, to the exclusion of all the shibboleths of party and tests of bigotry ever urged upon the humble followers of Christ."

Yours in love, M. Grant.

Exposition of the 12th, 13th and 17th Chapters of Revelation.

By DR. A. DECKER.

The edicts of Justin in A. D. 523, are unequivocal evidence of the previous union of the Church and state. "He had sworn to exterminate the heretics, and Arians;" and "published edicts to compel the Arians to be converted, and threatened them with the most cruel punishments," which, to a considerable extent, he carried into effect. They were deprived of their Churches and of the freedom of worship, and were persecuted in many other respects. And although, "in despair, they had recourse to Theodoric," King of the Goths, who obliged Pope John "to go as embassador to Constantinople, to cause Justin to revoke his decree;" and, although Justin made promise to the Pope "to yield to the Arians the freedom of worship;" still, this does not diminish the weight of evidence in the least, furnished by the edicts, to prove that the union of the Church and State had previously been effected; and did at that time exist; for it was only upon that ground, that the edicts could be issued.

First, the ground of union must be agreed upon, and settled by the two parties—the Church and the civil power.

And second, the imperial edicts are then necessary to carry this law into execution; and it is only upon this principle, that the imperial decrees could be promulgated.—It is not possible, therefore, that, simply an edict or edicts against heretics, could mark the commencement of the prophetic period, no more than they could produce a union of the Church and State.—Hence, Hormisdas fully understood this matter, when he required, in connection with the imperial signature, the signature of all the bishops of the east.

The old adage that it takes two to make a bargain, is true in this case. Indeed, how could it be determined who were heretics, against which the edicts were issued, unless the ecclesiastical law of the empire had been previously settled; and by which law, their guilt as heretics were to be judged, or, determined. Hence, these edicts are positive evidence, that the letter of Leo, and the council of Chalcedon, as Gibbon justly attests, (as I have before shown,) had previously been settled, as the law of the Emperor and of the empire. The edicts themselves, bear sufficient evidence, that Justin considered himself bound to carry into execution this law, which he had previously signed, after causing it to be passed by the senate, and which was afterwards signed by all the bishops of the east. Either, the saints were given into the hands of the little horn, or leopard beast, by this law being thus established, I say it without fear of successful contradiction, or, that event is yet to be looked for in the future. For in what sense could the saints be said to be in the hands of the little horn since 1781, if they were not in his hands at that time? It is quite certain, also, that Justin did not revoke his decrees against the heretics and Arians, and it is not credited by many historians, that he ever made the promise above mentioned. On the contrary, they "maintain that the Pontiff, so far from acquitting himself of the mission with which he was charged by the king, Theodoric, encouraged the emperor in the extravagant designs he had formed, of exterminating the Arians." A striking evidence of this is, the fact, that all agree that on his return from his embassy, John was arrested at Ravenna, with the senators that accompanied him. Theodoric, whose moderation had never failed during a very long reign, would never have committed this act of violence if he had not had certain proof of the treason of his ambassadors. The Pontiff was condemned to finish his days in prison, in which he died on the 27th of March, 526." (De Cormenin's History of the Popes, p. 104.)

That the Greek authority commenced making war upon the saints immediately after the union of the Church and Empire, from 519 to 521 these edicts furnish indisputable evidence. For, these edicts included as the subjects of the emperor's vengeance, all who were not orthodox or Catholics, or, all who did not acknowledge as a law of faith, the letter of St. Leo and the council of Chalcedon. For the decrees were issued against all heretics, as well as Arians. And all were condemned as heretics, who did not acknowledge this law of faith. Although it is true, that opposing factions to the Catholic Church were not all suppressed or completely annihilated at this time, yet, it is none the less true that the Catholic Church was the only Church tolerated by the imperial laws; all others were, in the eyes of the law, heretics. Indeed, if such objections were of force at all, we should have to look for the accomplishment of the prophecy yet in the future; for at no one time during 1260 years in the past, have the different opposing factions, viz., Arians, Nestorians, Memphysites, Eutychians, &c., been entirely suppressed. And if it be objected that the imperial laws could not extend into Italy, and that free toleration existed under Theodoric, king of the Goths, I answer, the same objection continues with equal force during the reign of the Lombards in Italy, up to 776, when, as before mentioned, they were subdued by the victorious arms of Charlemagne. A position which would do violence to the whole prophecy, and which no Adventist would be willing to take.

The Goths and Lombards, as I have before shown, represented the Dragon power in the west, and, I shall adduce sufficient evidence, in my remarks, on the 17th ch., to prove beyond question, that the Dragon power runs parallel with the beast, for more than two and a half centuries. This objection, therefore, is without weight. The question is not when all the opposing factions were suppressed, and compelled to submit to the authority of the Church of Rome; for this required no inconsiderable time and number of imperial edicts to accomplish, if, indeed, it ever was accomplished, but, at what period was the union of the Church and State effected, at which time, the war to exterminate all others as heretics, who did not acknowledge, or submit to the creed of the Church, and of the empire began? for the Nestorians and, more especially, the Eutychians or Monophysites flourished, and were very numerous in the east, during the sixth, and the greater part of the seventh century. After Justinian succeeded to the throne in A. D. 527, the Eutychian or Monophysite party, through aid of Theodora, the emperor's wife, became so powerful as to form a society in Constantinople, "under the very eyes of the emperor, whose branches extended throughout all parts of the empire;" and a Monophysite was "elevated to the episcopate of the imperial residence."—In the year 535, Anthimus a Monophysite, through the aid of Theodora, was eventually nominated patriarch of Constantinople, but Anthimus, however, was soon deposed, and the presbyter Mennas was nominated in his place. "The new patriarch, in the year 536, invited the bishops who happened to be then present in Constantinople, to meet in a synod, for the purpose of putting a final seal on the condemnation of Monophysiteism and its defenders. The emperor, Justinian, accompanied the decrees of this council with a confirmatory law." "The leaders of the Monophysite party should keep away from the residence, and from all the more important cities, they should live quietly and without disturbance, as private persons, and take good care how they corrupted others, and led them into blasphemy; the writings of Serverius should be burned," and "every person who dared to transcribe them, should suffer the loss of his right hand." (See Neander, Vol. 2 p. 133–135.) The Monophysites, from this era, were very much oppressed, until the latter part of this century, when, they were again restored by "a man whose name was Jacob," "To a most flourishing state, in Syria, Mesopotamia, Armenia, Egypt, Neubia, Abyssinia, and other countries." "And when their Churches grew so numerous in the east, that they could not all be conveniently comprehended under the sole jurisdiction of the patriarch of Antioch, he appointed as his assistant, the primate of the east, whose residence was at Tagritis, on the borders of Armenia." "The laborious efforts of Jacob," "were seconded by Theodosius, Bishop of Alexandria;" and thus, the Monophysites obtained a solid and permanent settlement; and from this period, (578,) they continued under the jurisdiction of the patriarchs of Antioch, and Alexandria. Many other sects flourished considerably at this time in the east. (See Mosheim's Church history, vol. 1 p. 171.) In the seventh century, the Arians flourished in Italy, under the protection of the Lombards, who, for the most part, were converted to their doctrines. Under the reign of the emperors Heraclius, Constans, and Constantine Pogonatus in the east, also, the Nestorians and Monophysites enjoyed the greatest liberties. In fact they obtained a complete triumph over the Catholic party; and the emperor Heraclius published an edict in 630, in favor of one will, or Monophysite doctrine; which, was solemnly confirmed by a council assembled by Cyrus, who had been promoted by the emperor to the See of Alexandria. "As to the Roman pontiff, he was entirely overlooked in the matter, as his council was not deemed necessary, in an affair that related entirely to the eastern Churches." Thus, the emperor, and all the bishops of the east, became converted to the Monothelites, which continued to be the prevailing party up to 680; when "Constantine Pogonatus, the son of Constans, in pursuance of the advice of Agatho, the Roman pontiff, summoned the sixth oecuminical or general council, in which he permitted the Monotholites, and pope Honorius himself"—who had also embraced the Monotholite doctrines under the reign of Heraculius in 633—"to be solemnly condemned in the presence of the Roman legates, who represented Agatha in that assembly, and confirmed the sentence pronounced by the council, by the sanction of penal laws enacted against those who should dare to oppose it." Mosheim, vol. 2d, pp. 184, 185.

I have now followed the history of the Roman Church in this respect, sufficiently far to show how entirely unworthy of the least consideration are such objections to our position. I might follow this much further, and show that these different factions continued to exist under more or less prosperity, during every age of the Church. But I have followed it sufficiently far, to show that these factions existing after 321, can be no objection to the commencement of the prophetic days at that period. Although the emperor Phocas conferred the title of universal bishop on the Roman Pontiff, in A. D. 606, yet, "we find in the most authentic accounts in the transactions of this country, that not only several emperors and princes, but also whole nations, opposed the ambitious views, and disregarded the authority of the bishop of Rome. Not only was the east, as the above extract shows, "but even in Italy, his supreme authority was obstinately rejected, since the bishop of Ravenna and other prelates refused an implicit submission to his orders." Also, "the Britons and Scots, and the Churches in Gaul and Spain, attributed as much authority to the Roman Bishop, as they thought suitable to their dignity, and consistent with their interests." See Mosheim, v. 1, p. 178. Indeed, the emperor Constans, in A. D. 630, ordered Pope Martin who treated the imperial laws to establish the Monophysite doctrine with contempt, to be seized and carried into the isle of Naxos, where he was kept a prisoner under most cruel treatment, for a whole year. See the above history, p. 185.

If the Papacy is meant by the "little horn" of Dan. 7th, then there is no period for the commencement of the 1260 days prior to 755; when Pepin, emperor of France, made a grant to the See of Rome, "The exarchate of Ravenna, Pentapolis, and all the cities, castles and territories which he had seized in the Roman dukedom." For territorial dominion is indispensable, in order to be symbolized by a "horn" in the book of Daniel.—Therefore, as the Papacy as a horn, without territorial dominion, has no foundation in the prophecies, so have the dominion, and universal supremacy of the bishop of Rome, continuing from A. D. 606, no foundation in history; and therefore, cannot be considered an objection.

In the first years of the reign of Justinian, A. D. 527, he issued an edict to compel all men, whether Jews, Gentiles, or Christians, to embrace and profess the Catholic faith, (the letter of Leo and the council of Chalcedon,) within the short space of three months; and such as did not, were declared infamous, and as such, excluded from employments both civil and military, rendered incapable of leaving anything by will, and their estates confiscated, whether real or personal. See Brown's History, p. 334; Gibbon, vol. 4, p. 528. That this edict was issued in 527 instead of 529, as some suppose, is sufficiently proved from the fact, that Baronius copies this edict from the code of Justinian, (see note at the bottom of p. 529 of Gibbon vol. 4,) the collection of which he caused to be commenced in the first year of his reign, and was completed, says Gibbon, in fourteen months. Taylor, in his Manual of Modern History, p. 334, corroborates the testimony of Gibbon. He says, Justinian "issued an edict dated the 3d of Feb. A. D. 538, (which was within the limits of the first year of his reign,) addressed to the senate of Constantinople, in which he declared his resolution of collecting into a single volume, not merely the laws in the three previous codes of Gregory, Hermogenianus, and Theodosius, but also the laws that had been published by imperial authority since the formation of the Theodosian Code." This edict, therefore, in order to have been collected into this code, must have been issued in A. D. 527, as Baronius dates it, and was one of the first acts of the emperor, on his accession to the Byzantine throne; and there is no event just 1250 years from A. D. 527, that could possibly mark the end of that prophetic period. Again, this edict does not differ materially, from the edicts of the preceding emperor, Justin; both aim to accomplish the same end, that is, to unite all men in the one faith, by the same means—cruel punishments or persecutions. And as I have before remarked in regard to the edicts of the former, this edict furnishes the most incontestable proof that there was a union between the Church and State at that time; and that the leopard beast, or Greek government, was hostile to, and making war with the saints.—But, before this edict can claim any consideration, as marking the beginning of those prophetic days, it is necessary to show that the union had just taken place, and this is the first edict, or, it might be said, the first gun fired at the saints, after such union.

It should be noted that this is only one of scores of edicts, promulgated by the same emperor, of like character, during the whole period of his reign; and each edict, bearing evidence, that the work of uniting all men in one faith, had not been accomplished. Indeed, I have already shown, that, the Monophosite party were in a very flourishing state, even in Constantinople, nine years after the promulgation of this edict, and that they were suppressed by a council, whose decrees were accompanied by the royal authority. To which one of these numerous edicts, then, shall we attach the most importance? Is it to those with which the war began, or, when it ended, or somewhere in the middle or heat of the contest? Certainly, the beginning and end of the war upon the saints, harmonizes with the beginning and end of the 1260 days or years; which is clearly proved by the prophecy. (I mean the war of the Leopard beast on the saints.)

As it is not possible that, simply an edict issued against heretics, could produce a union of the Church and State; and as there was no event that occurred between the edicts of Justin, and those of Justinian bearing upon the prophecy; therefore, any importance that is attached to the edicts of the latter, only falls back to increase the weight of those of the former; and, also, proves the more positively that, the union preceded them all; since there was nothing of that kind that transpired between them, and especially so, since as before remarked, these edicts were all of the same character. One edict, it is true, may be more severe than another, and be more effectually carried into execution; but, this does not alter the answer to the question—when did the war begin? If simply, an edict issued against the saints or heretics, was of a character to unite the Church with the State, then indeed, the Roman Church has been united, and consequently dissolved, several hundred times during those prophetic days.

From the above considerations, it will be seen that, a union of the Church and Civil power must first be effected by the mutual agreement of, and signed by the two parties concerned; and that the imperial edicts, then follow as a consequence to support and carry out the law of this union. Therefore, the edict of Justinian in A. D. 527, is of no importance whatever, as to marking the beginning of these prophetic days—further, than it proves that period must have commenced sometime prior to the issuing of that edict; therefore, A. D. 521 is the latest point, at which we can commence those prophetic days. To say that Justin did not make war upon the saints in his edicts against all who opposed the Catholic faith, would be to deny the plainest, and best authenticated facts in history.

Letter from Br. B. P. Manning.

GOFFSTOWN, N. H., Nov. 11, 1855.

Dear Br. Merriam:—I am yet looking with much anxiety for the return of the Son of God from heaven to earth again, to take His great power and reign on the throne of His Father David. I have great reason to thank God and take new courage, that I am not left to take my own course and so fall to rise no more. It is God that upholds me in these days of peril.

While I look over the face of the earth, and see the wickedness that is increasing, day by day, my heart cries out, come, Lord Jesus, and, come quickly. I am satisfied that God has led His little Church in these last days into truth, and not into error. I do believe we have fulfilled the parable of the ten Virgins. I must hold on to the past, until I can find something better. Much has been written on the 25 chapter of Matthew. To my mind it is very plain. I believe we fulfilled the first part in '44, up to the 5th v. "While the Bridegroom tarried, they, the virgins, all slumbered and slept." (6 verse) "And at midnight there was a cry made, Behold, the Bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him."

I expected that the cry would bring the Lord; but we find, another "while" spoken of, (10th v.) "While they went to buy, the Bridegroom came; and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage; and the door was shut." It took yet time for the vision to tarry, or, in other words, the Bridegroom to tarry, in order to have a slumbering time; it must also take time after the cry is made for the foolish to say unto the wise give us of your oil, for our lamps are gone, or are going out; then comes the last "while" spoken of in the parable. "And while they went to buy, the Bridegroom came, &c. Now I understand that the Cry must be finished, before the second "while" can be fulfilled. It took 11 years to fulfil the first "while," I cannot say how long it will take to fulfil the second, but the Lord will come in this last while, and "blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame." Rev. 16: 15.

Dear Brn., I cannot take the position some of the Brn. and Srs. have, that we have not had the Cry; I am confident that there will never be a cry made that will move the world again till Jesus comes.

Dear Brn., trust in God; the blessed Savior will come and save the little Church. O how I feel when I learn that one has given up that we have had the true Midnight Cry. O Brn., let us not "cast away our confidence, which hath great recompence of reward." Heb. 10: 35. Again: vs. 38, 39, "Now the just shall live by faith; but if any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him. But we are not of them that draw back unto perdition; but of them that believe to the saving of the soul."

Again; let us take heed to Paul's advice to his Corinthian Brethren. 2 Cor. 6: 14–18. "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers, for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness; and what communion hath light with darkness? And what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? for ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, And will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty."

And James 5: 7–20. "Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold, the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain. Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts: for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh. Grudge not one against another, brethren, lest ye be condemned, behold, the Judge standeth before the door. Take, my brethren, the prophets, who have spoken in the name of the Lord, for an example of suffering affliction, and of patience. Behold, we count them happy which endure. Ye have heard of the patience of Job, and have seen the end of the Lord; that the Lord is very pitiful, and of tender mercy. But above all things, my brethren, swear not, neither by heaven, neither by the earth, neither by any other oath, but let your yea be yea, and your nay, nay; lest ye fall into condemnation. Is any among you afflicted? let him pray. Is any merry? let him sing psalms. Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him; anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord: And the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him. Confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed. The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much. Elias was a man subject to like passions as we are, and he prayed earnestly that it might not rain; and it rained not on the earth by the space of three years and six months. And he prayed again, and the heaven gave rain, and the earth brought forth her fruit. Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him, Let him know, that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins."

O my dear Brn., "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us that we should be called the sons of God; therefore the world knoweth us not because it knew him not." I John 3: 1.

V. 18. "My little children let us not love in word, neither in tongue, but in deed and in truth."

Let us remember Paul to his Brn. in 1 Thess. 5: 14-23. "Now we exhort you, brethren, warn them that are unruly, comfort the feeble-minded, support the weak, be patient toward all men. See that none render evil for evil unto any man; but ever follow that which is good, both among yourselves, and to all men. Rejoice evermore. Pray without ceasing. In every thing give thanks: for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you. Quench not the Spirit. Despise not prophesyings. Prove all things; hold fast that which is good. Abstain from all appearance of evil. And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."

The World's Crisis.

LOWELL, DEC. 1, 1855.

Particular Notice.

☞ We have received a pressing call for labor in the vineyard at River Point.

Particular request is made for preaching on the first or third Sabbath in Dec. Some faithful and devoted servant of Jesus Christ who can give meat in due season is desired.

The location is in the town of Warwick, 11 miles from Providence, R. I., from which city passage may be taken by railroad. Who will respond?

☞ We frequently have calls for back numbers of the Crisis, which we are happy to supply so far as we have them; but our supply of some of the recent numbers is exhausted. Sorry we had not struck off more.

To the Readers of the Crisis.

Dear Brethren:—We address this letter to you to inform you that when the Crisis stopped, as a paper for gratuitous circulation, the Office was in debt two-hundred dollars, which must soon be paid, and as we believe the readers of the Crisis have no disposition to make the Publishing Committee pay the bill we therefore make the following proposition:—

"That each reader of the Crisis while it was a free paper be invited to send to the Office (of their own free will) the amount which they may deem it a privilege or duty to pay; and if more than the 200 dollars should be sent, it shall be appropriated for sending the Crisis to the poor.

And now, dear Brn., we think that we need say no more, for in every case when we have informed you that pecuniary aid was needed to support the Crisis, you have responded faithfully and cheerfully. God bless the cheerful giver. Amen.

WARNER, Nov. 23, '55.

For The Crisis.

"Wherefore comfort one another with these words." 1 Thess. 4: 18.

BY SR. A. MUSSEY.

Br. Merriam:—I feel to-day like one of old; "while I was musing, the fire burned; then spake I with my tongue." And although I cannot speak with my tongue to all I would be glad to, yet I can take my pen, and write to the dear saints scattered abroad, who have obtained like precious faith with me.

Thank God, the sun shines—light emanates from His blessed Word. Glory to God for the rich store-house to which we have free access. Praise the Lord for the fountain that is opened for Jerusalem and Judah to wash in and be clean. And not only Judah and Jerusalem, but provision has been made for the whole world; if they would, they might come, wash, and be clean. The sound has gone out to the ends of the earth. Yes, His voice is heard through the whole universe. Hear it, ye who will; "look unto me, all ye ends of the earth, and be ye saved: for I am God, and there is none else." "Ho! every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money, come ye, buy and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk, without money, and without price." Praise God, the poor can come as well as the rich, "the poor have the Gospel preached unto them." Again: "In the last day, that great day of the feast, Jesus stood and cried, saying, If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink." "Come unto me, all ye that labor, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest to your souls. For my yoke is easy and my burden is light." True—O, true, my Lord, thy yoke is easy, and thy burden is light!

Sinner, will you listen to the last call of mercy that lingers for you?

"The Gospel sounds a sweet release
To all in misery,
And bids them welcome home to peace,
This is the jubilee."

Backslider, turn again to your Father's house where there is bread enough and to spare; come, drink again from the fountain of life; unless you do, speedily, you will cry, "lost, lost, I am lost forever!"

Luke-warm professor, thou too mayest come and buy "gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich, and white raiment, that thou mayest be clothed, and anoint thine eyes with eye-salve that thou mayest see." Said he who stood in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear my voice, and will open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me." Hear him all, high and low, rich and poor, black and white, male and female; hear His voice, obey His words, repent of your sins, prepare to meet your God, and all will be well.

When I commenced this epistle to my Brn. and Srs., I little thought my mind would lead me to write as I have; but the will of the Lord be done, not mine; and may the Spirit of God attend His truth, and souls be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus.

And who are the Apostles' brethren whom he exhorts to comfort one another with these words? and what are the words that will comfort them? "But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them that are asleep, that ye sorrow not as others that have no hope For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord.—Wherefore comfort one another with these words."

Then the Apostles' brethren are those who are comforted with the words that Jesus is coming down the parted skies to raise the dead and change the living, and take them home. Yes, oh yes, none others will be comforted with such words as these. Praise the Lord, to-day I feel that I can claim my relationship with the Apostle; for even the thought of that day and the glory that attends it comforts me.

And furthermore He has told us there was a Crown laid up in heaven for Him, and not for Him only, but for all them that love His appearign. And has Paul received his crown? No; for he said, he was to have it, at the appearing of Christ when He will judge both the living and the dead. Then all that love the appearing of the blessed Lord are the Apostle's Brn., and will receive their crowns together. Praise God—what glory gilds the sacred page! And will He come? Yes, O yes, most assuredly He will; for He said if He went away, He would come again. Did He die on the cross? Was He buried? And did He rise again? Yes, on the cross the healing fountain gushed from His wounded side. Joseph begged His body and buried Him in his own tomb hewn out of the rock; and the third day He rose again.—He burst the bonds of death, and rose triumphant o'er the grave. Then just as sure as He "died and rose again, even so them also that sleep in Jesus, will He bring with Him." And whence will He bring them? From the graves, where they are quietly reposing in this perilous time. Peace be to their slumbers until Jesus awakes them, "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord."

Be comforted then, ye that mourn for your friends; for Jesus died and rose again according to the Scriptures—He ascended on high, a Mediator between God and man; but He comes, lo! He comes again; and His voice will pierce the tombs; and your loved ones will come again from the land of the enemy. Yes, He will ransom them from the grave; He will redeem them from death. Hear Him; "O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy destruction; repentance shall be hid from mine eyes." Then, oh then, on the new Earth there will be no death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things shall have passed away. Praise ye our God for the promises of His word And is His promise sure, that He will come again? Surely He has spoken the word; and it shall be done; God has appointed the day, and when it comes we shall surely see Him whom we love. He most certainly arose from the tomb, for Mary went early in the morning on the first day of the week, to embalm His body, but Jesus was not there, He had arisen; for lo; an Angel had come down from heaven and had rolled away the stone from the door of the sepulchre and sat thereon. The sepulchre was empty, Jesus had risen; away ran Mary preaching the resurrection of the Saviour, first of all; then it was a frail Woman that first preached a risen Savior—He appeared to his disciples in various places; and when He appeared among them He always breathed peace upon them, "peace be unto you; my peace I leave with you, not as the world giveth give I unto you."

When He had finished up His work on earth, and was about to ascend up to His Father, He led His disciples out as far as Bethany, and after having given them His last instruction, promising to be with them to the end of the world, He was parted from them, and a cloud received Him out of their sight.

How often have I thought of those lonely disciples after their beloved Master was taken from them. They had followed Him, they loved Him and His words were music in their ears; but He was taken and by wicked hands, was crucified and slain. They were disappointed in their hopes, and scattered; but when the good news came, that He had risen they could hardly believe for joy; He was among them again, and their hearts were made glad. And Peter exclaimed from the fulness of his heart, "blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ who, according to His abundant mercy, hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Christ from the dead," &c. How glad were they to enjoy the society of Him they loved once more; but He could not tarry with them long, and from mount Olivet he must ascend. While I view them taking their last walk with Him, and wending their way up the Mount sorrowful and sad, talking as they journeyed along, with tears coursing down their cheeks that that was their last personal interview with Him, and He was about to leave them to be with them no more in this world, no wonder their hearts were sad, no wonder they wept, and no marvel if God pitied them in their lonely condition, left, as they were, in a wicked world like lambs among wolves. But while they were conversing together, Jesus was taken from them, and in a moment was out of their sight. They stood gazing upward, no doubt hoping to get one more glimpse of their Master; but alas He had passed from their sight—they could behold Him no more. They stand gazing still in breathless silence. All heaven was moved at the reception of Christ to take His Mediatorial seat, at His Father's right hand—God looked down from the height of His abode, He saw those lonely Galileans looking upward after their beloved Lord, He would comfort their hearts, so He sends His ministering Angels down to earth with words of consolation to His beloved children. Instantly they come with the cheering intelligence that their beloved Master would return again to earth—Hear it, O ye skeptics, who believe not in a literal, personal Jesus to come, and are ridiculing those who are looking for Him to return as He went away. "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven shall so come again in like manner as ye have seen Him go into heaven." And did those angelic messengers comfort the hearts of those lone disciples? and did they believe that very same Jesus would come again? Most assuredly, and joy filled their souls. The Lord knew this would comfort them, and the Apostle Paul knew it would comfort his Brn. to be assured He was coming again. Then returned they to Jerusalem from the Mount of Olives, and they went up into an upper room where the other disciples were, and soon were at their devotions—a united band.

"And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place. And suddenly there was a sound from heaven as of a rushing, mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. (Brn., I would to God it were with us as it was with the disciples then, that we were all of one accord, and one mind, and were all filled with the Spirit of God. Then we could labor together, and God would be honored and souls saved.) And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance." And why did God move them to speak with other tongues? Because "there were among them, Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven." It was His will that they should hear the Gospel in their own native tongue wherein they were born, and then return to their own country, spread the news abroad, and preach Jesus and the resurrection This, then, looks like the work of God. It was for His glory then, but a question arises, is it for His glory now? Tell us, ye who can.

"Praise our God, all ye his saints; give thanks at the remembrance of his holiness." Then we will comfort one another with the blessed assurance that Jesus is coming again. Yes, the very same Jesus that went away will come again in like manner as He went away.—And though we have been disappointed in the time, we shall not be in the glorious event, if we hold fast the beginning of our confidence firm unto the end; for He is faithful who has promised. Although human calculations have failed, God's time will never fail; for at the time appointed the end shall be. And now let all who thought we could not serve God without definite time, be assured we can, and can enjoy just as much of the presence of God as in days that are past.—We have the whole Bible for our guide, and that will lead us safely through this wilderness world to the bright portals of endless day. And that blessed Book teaches us the coming of the Lord draweth near. "Grudge not one against another, brethren, for behold, the Judge standeth before the door." Glory to God, my sky is clear, my mind serene, and peace like a river, dwells within. I shall see Him whom absent I love, whom not having seen, I adore.

Peace be with the Brn., and love with faith from God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. Grace be with all who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity.

For the Crisis

Letter from Br. J. Lyle.

NEWARK, N. J., Nov. 1855.

Dear Br. Merriam:—I have frequently wished that some of the simple yet heart-moving testimonies, to which I have the pleasure of listening in our Newark meetings, were published in your paper for the edification of God's dear children scattered abroad.

I do not mean by this that others do not have as good food as we do; many, I trust, are feeding on the same heavenly bread. But I am certain that many precious fragments are wasted, or at least, might be spared from all our tables, that would refresh many a pilgrim, if it could be found in the store-house of the Crisis.

But who will gather up these crumbs? who can do it? I confess my inability. I may repeat the words I hear, but it is very difficult to trace the precise connection, and impossible to exhibit the tones of brotherly kindness, the gestures and features of earnestness, that impress the minds of hearers with deep convictions of the honesty and sincerity of the speaker.

Says the proverb, "To the hungry soul every bitter thing is sweet;" so it is with me in hearing the Brn. speak. It imparts fresh strength to my weak soul; no matter how humble the witness, how crooked the sentence, or lame the language, I hear he voice of the Shepherd in it, and esteem it as great riches in comparison with the learned eloquence of the sounding brass, and tinkling cymbals of sectarian tradition that is robbing God of His glory, and depriving perishing souls of the key of pure scriptural knowledge.

A Sabbath or two ago I attended our meeting as usual. After singing and prayer, Br. M—— rose up in his seat, (we do not use the desk ourselves,) and talked a little while to us. The remainder of the morning was occupied in the same way by Br. F—— who enlarged on what the preceding Br. had advanced, and reviewed the path over which we had journeyed thus far, showing the direction of Providence in all the past, and exhorting all who had engaged in the great dispensational message to hold fast the begining of their confidence firm unto the end.

I will give you the main portion of Br. M——'s testimony as well as I can. He read a few verses from the Gospel by John and remarked:—

"Before the Savior left the world He gave His disciples plain directions which were to guide them in their pilgrimage through this world. Their welfare depended on their strict obedience to the Master's instructions. They were very sad when He told them He was about to be parted from them; but He comforted them with the assurance that it was needful for them that He should go away that they might have the Comforter, the Spirit of truth sent to them who should bring all things to their remembrance that they had ever heard from His lips; so that all the faithful and true sayings of their living Head might be handed down to the latest age of the world. He also assured them that He would come again and receive all the children of His fold and give them possession of mansions which He would prepare for them, and dwell with them forever in the restituted earth. Now it is certain, my Brn., that unless the disciples had obeyed these instructions they would not have realized the great blessing of Pentecost.

If they had turned back to the Synagogues, and joined the hypocritical Scribes and Pharisees, or had gone back into the world, all would have been lost. But we see these poor disciples sorely tried when Jesus was slain; their confidence was almost gone, some of them despondingly say, "we trusted that it had been He which should have redeemed Israel; and beside all this, to day is the third day since these things were done!" Jesus revealed himself! dispelled their doubts—thus prepared with renewed confidence they waited according to orders for the descent of the Comforter. It came. The sayings of the ascended Lord were brought fresh to their minds—quotations from Moses, the Prophets and Psalms. What scenes and sayings of the seven years' ministry of the Divine Teacher were revealed!—And these things have been reported by them to us, who believe on Jesus through their word."

Our case, my Brn., is somewhat similar to that of the disciples in their state of despondency; but we must not turn back, nor take up with any substitute for the blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the Great God and our Savior Jesus Christ. I believe we have been doing the will of the Lord. It is His will that we should be thus tried, to prove us; and just as sure as Jesus revealed himself after His death and resurrection to His disciples, so surely will He honor us in due time, and let all the enemies of truth see that we have not followed cunningly devised fables.

My Brn., if the Lord has not led the Advent people, I do not know where to look for a people that He ever has led. If people that have renounced the world and made such sacrifices of its riches, honors and pleasures; whose earnest cry has been "Lord, show us the truth and we will walk in it," have not been led by the Holy Spirit, I do not know how to understand the Scriptures and Christianity.—"O let us watch, wait and be faithful."

I must not make this article any longer—perhaps what I have written will be set aside for something better. All right. I am well pleased with whatever use is made of my poor articles; but should this be accepted I may venture hereafter to note down some other testimonies and send them to the Crisis.

Be encouraged, dear Br. Merriam, your labor is not in vain. May all the blessings of the twentieth Psalm rest upon you and all that are waiting for the Redeemer to come to Zion.

Yours in hope, JOHN LYLE.

For the Crisis.

Questions.

Dear Br. Merriam:—I wish to ask B. P. Hildreth a few questions through the Crisis relative to the day of Judgment.—Sr. H., you say the thousand years cannot be in the past; for this thousand years of Rev. 20 is the antitype of the first Sabbath after creation. Paul says—Heb. 4: 3, "the works were finished from the foundation of the world; for he spake in a certain place of the seventh day on this wise, and God did rest the seventh day from all his works."

Did God measure off the seventh day by evening and morning and commence His labor again the eighth? or did His rest from creation continue until to-day? And if so, will not the antitype agree with the type? When we enter upon that rest will it not continue for ever?

Sr. H. where will the saints and Christ reign during the thousand years?

If on the new earth, where will the wicked receive their perdition after the end of the thousand years? for they receive their perdition in the burning of the earth that now is, their reign cannot be on this earth; for this is reserved for another purpose, that is, the perdition of ungodly men.

You say "the beast and false prophet were cast ALIVE into a lake of fire, Rev. 19: 20, at the beginning of the thousand years," where is that lake of fire during the thousand years, so that the Devil can be cast into THE lake of fire where the beast and false Prophet were, and THEY (Murd.) shall be tormented? Are not the three identified when cast into the lake of fire? If one is literal, are not the three? Referring to 2 Pet. 3: 14, you say, "Here we learn that the day of Judgment is the day of perdition of ungodly men, and that, it is the day of the Lord, and at the same time the day of redemption to all the inhabitants of the new earth, and likewise that its length will be a thousand years."

How can the wicked receive their perdition in the day of the Lord, when the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished?

Is not 2 Pet. 3: 8, thrown in to show that the great work of burning the heavens and earth, and perdition of ungodly men, can be accomplished in one day, (as Christ said in Luke 17: 29, 30,) "for one day with the Lord is as a thousand years?" does not Christ teach that the wicked are burned IN this age?

Yours in love desiring the truth.

Questions.

Br. Merriam:—What are your views of the thousand years spoken of in Rev. 20th? Are they in the past, or to be in the future? If in the past, when did they commence, and end? When was Satan bound, and when, and how, was the camp of the saints and the beloved city compassed about? (1.)

Do we not understand by John 1: 1-3, 14; 17: 5; Col 1: 15, 16, 17; 2 Cor. 8: 9, that Christ was co-eternal with the Father? and if so, He of course was Immortal; then what became of that Immortality when He took upon himself the human nature? (2) INQUIRER.

REPLY.

(1.) Some articles have just appeared in the Crisis involving this subject, written with much ability. Please refer to them.

(2.) The testimony of Scripture is, I think, decisive in favor of the pre-existence of Christ—that He existed "before Abraham," and even "before the world was;" but I do not apprehend that His existence was co-eternal with the Father—from the fact that He was the "Son of God"—"the beginning of the creation of God" &c., which implies that His existence was derived from the Father. For light on this subject permit me to refer you to the work of Sr. Seymour, recently issued from the press, an advertisement of which you will find in another column.

Questions.

NEWPORT, Nov. 18th, 1855.

Br. Merriam:—I perceive by reading the Crisis that the general opinion of the writers is that the earth is the Sanctuary, and that its cleansing will be accomplished by fire at the end of the 2300 days, (at the coming of Christ) Other writers in the Crisis believe that the earth will not be cleansed by fire till one thousand years after Christ comes. Now I want to ask some of this last class of writers to inform me, through the Crisis, whether the 2300 days reach to the end of the thousand years, or terminate near this time as we have heretofore believed. And if they are soon to end, what event are we to look for called the cleansing of the Sanctuary?

Letter from Br. W. S. Campbell.

LA CROSSE, WIS., Nov. 1855.

Dear Br. Merriam:—In my last I mentioned the brief visit I made in Minnesota, which I hope was not without its good results as opening the door for farther efforts in the same field, which I intend to put forth, if Providence shall open the way.—On my way up, I became acquainted with R. R. Wood—Methodist Presiding Elder on La Crosse district, who seemed very much to desire me to call at his place; but I found no opening, and shall do nothing beyond seeing two or three acquaintances. Ministers of the different denominations seem all to be very pleasant about my work of preaching the Lord's coming, till I preach Jesus and the resurrection as securing man's immortality—then they are sometimes filled with indignation, and sometimes—simply let me—"severely alone."

The place is new but flourishing; and is expected to be an outlet to the Northwestern portion of this state; but as I have but little to do with such prospects, and as your readers are looking for the "world to come" glory—instead of the physical, political, or commercial glory of this, (and I most heartily join them,) I will not weary them.

Some, who love the beautiful and sublime, would be filled with admiration if allowed to behold the wild scenery of the Mississippi. Its glassy surface is broken by innumerable islands—its dark and dismal bottoms covered with the deep wood of primitive growth—with unbroken forest gloom—the vast marsh, where silence seems to hold primeval sway—at once a desolation and a sublimity—drear in its extent, and grand in its inspiration. Then comes again to view the continuous bluff—broken here and there by ravines and gorges—and rising at points almost perpendicularly for hundreds of feet—with faces and palisades of limestone—bringing to mind old ruined fortresses and castles—and giving evidence of a water mark vastly above the present—behind this facia of rock, from a needle-like point descending so suddenly that I thought of a cone halved towards the base. The legendary rock of Wenona is prominent among these—in fellowship with the clouds.

There is lake Pepin in which nature aimed, as always, at her own harmony—for it is an expansion of the river, with many islands above and below—its rugged shores indented by numerous small bays—the whole highly picturesque. In the morning the sun casts its golden tinge from bluff top to bluff top—over the burnished bosom of the river—far upon the prairie waste—up the river valley where some other stream seeks union with the great "Father."

But we have fact as well as fancy. I find a sad emotion rising at times, and only suppressed by the reflection that the cause of Christ is nearest and dearest of all. It is difficult to persuade men to believe. In the rush after wealth and worldly honor, who wishes to give time to reflection—to religion—to faith in the Second Advent doctrines?

If my family were once with me in Minnesota, I could gladly make it my field of effort, with all its trials. And now I touch that point, permit me to ask, if the preacher's family escapes its trials, east or west? I have not spoken—I could speak of my companion in life, far from her kindred and friends—even in the east—with a fortitude, a perseverance, a self-denial, an economy enduring, ennobling, christian, and for the work of the Lord.—But I desist.

Yours truly,

W. S. Campbell.

Our enemies within. Beyond all doubt, the worst of our enemies are those we carry about with us in our own hearts. Adam fell in Paradise, Lucifer in heaven, while Lot continued righteous among the inhabitants of Sodom.

BOOK NOTICE

☞ We have received from the Publisher, H. L. Hastings, Peace Dale, R. I., a handsome volume, entitled "The Voice of the Church on the reign of Christ." If we should be asked, "what book in connection with the Bible is most needed at the present day?" we should answer without hesitation, "The Voice of the Church on the reign of Christ."—This valuable work is a light shining in a very dark place; and settles, as far as evidence can settle any question, that Christ's personal reign has been the doctrine of an uncorrupted Church in all ages. We can but just notice the book at present, hereafter, we may present our readers with some extracts.

The Publisher deserves the thanks of all who love the truth, and we advise Christians to manifest their gratitude by procuring a copy of the work of the publisher. Price, $1,00.—[From "The Star of Destiny." July.

☞ The following letter is from H. Bonar, L. L. D., of Kelso, Scotland, the Editor of the London Quarterly Journal of Prophecy, and author of numerous interesting works on prophecy, one of which, "The Morning of Joy," had sometime ago attained a circulation of 42,000 copies in England, besides being republished in this country.

Kelso, Oct. 22d, 1855.

Mr H. L. Hastings:—

Dear Sir,

I have safely received your volume, "The Voice of The Church," &c. Accept my thanks for your kindness and courtesy. I mean to go through your work more carefully; but meanwhile I have made a run through it in order to get an idea of its nature. I like it, and think it fitted to be useful. I only wish you had in your quotations, distinguished more explicitly between those who were really pre-millenialists, and those who only give utterance to a longing for a better state of things, and for the appearing of Christ. With this remark, I again express my approbation of the book, and subscribe myself,

Yours, with Christian regard,

Horatius Bonar.

Important Invention in Warfare. It is understood that the late destruction at Sweaborg was chiefly effected by means of bombshells charged with a liquid combustible. We are informed that an invention precisely of the nature of these shells was communicated to Lord Hardinge, in April, 1854, by Mr Wm Hutton, writer in Stirling. From the accounts supplied to their government by the Russian authorities in Sweaborg, as to the operation of the shells charged with liquid, thrown into the town by the British fleet, Mr Hutton is fully satisfied, that the admiralty had adopted his suggestion. The effects of these shells will probably soon be experienced at Odessa. Mr Hutton has, he believes, discovered another preparation for charging bombshells, of a nature so fearfully destructive to human life, that he has resolved not to divulge it.—[Scotsman.

☞ We publish to-day another letter from Kossuth which, we trust, will be read with interest. It may appear somewhat obscure, but by reading it attentively and studying the import of the language, much may be learned respecting the present movements and designs of the papacy.

London, Nov. 2, 1855.

To the Editors of the Independent:

Sirs:—Although the ratifications of the Concordat recently concluded between the Pope and Francis Joseph of Austria, were exchanged on the 27th of September last, the official publication is likely to be delayed until December next, it being customary to have such transactions first notified by the Pope to the Holy College of Cardinals, in full consistory assembled, which cannot be held earlier than in December. It is reported that the Pope desires in this instance to give to the notification of his triumph all the "pump and circumstance" of a formal allocution; calculated to transform into an exultation of unprecedented victory, the little sorrows at recent partial reverses in Spain, Piedmont, Switzerland, and even Naples. Because it is a fact curiously reflecting on the unparalleled stolidity of Francis Joseph of Austria, that while he goes so far as perfectly to destroy civil authority in his States, King Bomba himself, brutal and bigoted as he is, and in nominal dependency upon the Roman See besides, even with regard to his own investiture, still has dared not to submit to the boundless arrogance of the Jesuits. Archbishop Bizzari, sent to Naples on an extraordinary mission relative to the subject, was bound to return "re infecta" to Rome, after several months of unavailing exertions.

But while the official publication of the Concordat is thus deferred, the greediness of the bankrupt Austrian finance department led to an anticipated disclosure of its contents. Some Piedmontese convents recently abolished there, possessed certain estates in Lombardy. The proprietors having ceased to exist, the Austrian government, greedy and needy of cash, sequestrated the estates for sale, as "res nullius."—The Pope however did not mean to allow this; he claimed the estates, maintaining that though the convents in Piedmont had been illegally (!) suppressed, their estates did not cease to be the property of the monastic orders to which those suppressed convents belonged. (Do you perceive the bearing of Papal domination implied in the plea? The question is pending yet.—Most likely the issue will be, that some members of the abolished Piedmontese convents will be transplanted to Lombardy to establish new convents there upon the revenues of the disputed estates. However the Austrian finance department is in a too deranged condition not to try some resistance on money matters. Thus it came to pass, that while Francis Joseph was sojourning at Ischl, some busy body from the office of Mr Bruck at Vienna, has sent a "mild" extract of the Concordat to the Gazette of Venice, intended to support the soft remonstrance, that while Austria is making such immense concessions, it is not over generous in his Holiness to grudge such trifling profit to the empty coffers of the Viennese treasury.

Thus is it the matter came to publicity, before the executive measures for giving at the very onset full effect to the provisions of the Concordat, had been duly concerted with the willing in the clerical ranks, and the less willing put out "of harm's way."

But as the text, thus prematurely published, had not done full justice to the triumph of the Roman See, the ultra Catholic French paper L'Univers has been furnished an authentic analysis of the text, which it published, guaranteeing the exactitude. It is this version of the Univers, which caused even Belgian papers to express their regret at the extent to which the utter degradation of the civil power has been conceded. The London Times had a leader on the subject, coinciding with the opinion I expressed in the "Atlas" the same day—that no Pope, not the proudest and boldest of them, not in the darkest age of superstition, had ever claimed, or any sovereign ever conceded so much. The Times' article, good though rather tame, does not dissimulate, that "every barrier against ecclesiastical encroachment is overthrown," and that the rights conceded to the Bishops "will bring every citizen completely under ecclesiastical rule." I did not happen to see the version of the L'Univers; the analysis I am about to offer to your readers is founded on the milder version of the Gazette of Venice.—They may judge by it, whether even the milder version is not fit to alarm all true Christian men; as not only fully justifying the conclusions at which the Times arrived, but in fact annihilating all civil authority, and threatening the extinction of the light of freedom, reason, and civilization to the profit of priestly domination and obscurantism.

The Concordat contains twenty-six articles.

Art. 1. Guarantees the maintenance and protection of the Roman Catholic religion with all the rights and privileges secured to it "by the sacred canons."

You will perceive the dangerous principle masked with the name of "religion." That no State should interfere with the dogmas of any religion consistent with the general laws of morality, and with the order of a well regulated society, thus much certainly every just, righteous, and liberal man will own. But to speak of "rights and privileges" which the Church (here masked with the name of religion) shall enjoy in any independent State, not such as that State has conceded, but such as that Church abroad! chooses to dictate shall be its rights and privileges—that is a principle, absolutely incompatible with the elementary requisites of any civil society. It makes the State and its civil structure absolutely dependent upon a foreign power. Especially does this provision infringe on the social rights of the Protestants, living in a country subject to this provision, as the very existence of Protestantism is contrary to the "rights and privileges" of the Roman Catholic religion, as secured by their own canons. You of course know, that except the Pontifical dominions of Italy, there is not one single State all over the world, that ever had accepted all the Roman Catholic canons, (beyond the boundaries of dogmas) for binding—every one, even the most bigoted, have at all times maintained the power to forbid, or to limit their always ambitious, often cruel and sanguinary regulations. Such has been most particularly the case with Hungary. This article places the "rights and privileges" foreign priests may arbitrarily have arrogated to their religion, above the control of the laws and of civil authority.

Art. 2. Abolishes the "Placetum Regium." Hungary had at all times inflexibly adhered to the rule, that no pontifical Bull, Breve, or any order whatsoever shall be published or obeyed, without being previously sanctioned and allowed by the government. If I be not mistaken, the same has been the case in Austria. With Hungary the right of "Placeti Regii" is as old as Hungary itself. Without this right not Francis Joseph is any more the ruler of the Austrian Empire, but the Pope. A State admitting of this has lost its independent condition. It has become a vassal of the Vatican.

Art. 3. Allows the right of the Bishops to communicate without control with the papal chair, and to issue instructions and ordinances; and Art. 4 allows the Bishops full right to punish the clergy who may offend against the discipline of the Church, and condemn to punishment those who may offend against the canons of the Church—while Art. 5 authorizes the bishops to refuse to ordain those priests whom they may consider unworthy; as also to found or to divide livings and rectories.

Until now in Hungary the intercourse between the bishops and the Roman See was held under the control of the government by the right of "supremæ inspectionis circa sacra." In case the government had abused this right, there was the Diet to redress the grievance; the bishops had but to present their complaints there, where besides, the bishops had seat and vote. The minor clergy were protected by the laws and institutions of the country from arbitrariness on the part of the bishops. The municipal assemblies of the counties watched with untiring attention over the maintenance of the constitutional rights and the personal security of every citizen, whether clerical or laical. The priests were members of those assemblies, as before 1848 every nobleman, (priests had the privilege of nobility; with 1848 every citizen. In case of complaint against the arbitrariness of the bishops, the county assemblies, being the only executive organ in penal matters, refused to order the execution, made representations to the government, and if no redress followed, brought the matter under the cognizance of the Diet. Whatever person went through the regular instruction in the seminaries, and passed examination, the bishops could not refuse to ordain him; and the foundation or division of livings and rectories did not depend upon them.

Now the Jus Placeti being abolished, the bishops are left unprotected against the arbitrariness of the Pope. They in their turn have full arbitrary power over the clergy; they can refuse to ordain those whom they may think not fit instruments for carrying out the orders they receive from Rome without control; they can confer favors, and they can punish arbitrarily. Under this combination of arbitrariness, superposed one on another, it would be a wonder if the Hungarian Roman Catholic clergy would not be divested of patriotism and of that manly spirit of national independence by which it was distinguished before. The good will be eliminated, punished, or broken by disciplinary persecution, (and nobody to protect them—you can have no idea of the horrors of such a situation,) the priesthood will be recruited only from the ranks of willing tools, and the whole Roman Catholic clergy must by and by become but a vast engine of Papal ambition. The unprotected state of perfect servitude to which the minor clergy (those, who to use their own expression, are "in cura animarum") is reduced by the Concordat, makes such a dreadful change in their situation, that if, God helping, Hungary could soon resume its struggle for independence, I feel perfectly satisfied that the Roman Catholic clergy would stand foremost in devotion and sacrifices for our regeneration; but if on the one hand the conspiracy of kings and on the other hand the indolence of free nations unite in keeping up the "statu quo—" if this Concordat is allowed only ten years to work, then the Roman Catholic clergy must under its influence become in Hungary likewise, what it is already in some other countries, the most dangerous enemy to freedom both civil and religious.

Art. 14. The principal dignitaries of the chapter are to be nominated by the papal chair, where there is no right of patronage. (In Hungary all the dignitaries of all the chapters have been nominated by the government. There was no question of right of patronage about them. It was a "reserved right of the crown," which is now transferred to the Vatican.)

Art. 15. gives (to the Emperor the privilege (the Pope gives! him the privilege!) of appointing to deaneries and rectories when there is a right of patronage belonging to religious and school property, but he must choose one of three persons whom the bishops shall propose. Thus even deaneries and rectories, everything where there is money to get, passes into the hands of the bishops, and through them to the Pope. Art. 4. The bishops alone have the right to appoint their vicars and counselors. Until now the law has appointed them in Hungary. The vicar was the "prepositus" of the chapter; and the counselors were the chapter, all of them nominated by the government, consequently not servile tools of the bishops, but dignitaries of independent standing, the whole of them a coordinate not subordinate authority. Many a right, privilege and immunity did not belong to the bishops alone, but to the bishop with the chapter. (Episcopus cum capitulo.) All this is now perfectly overturned; and to crown the collational power of the Popes. Art. 16 declares that the Papal chair has full power to establish new Sees, and to make new divisions of those already existing." The Emperor is admitted to the modest share of consenting only. Until now the Papal chair had absolutely no power to do anything of the kind in Hungary.

This analysis of the articles referring to the organization of the papal army will have proved to you how the machinery is meant to work for bringing all the Roman Catholic clergy of Hungary and Austria under an absolute dependence upon the Papal chair—and this, together with the regulations relative to the monastic orders, will enable you fully to appreciate the danger implied in the other articles, which I shall analyze in my next.

State of Public Feeling in Russia. Every private account, and every newspaper correspondence, confirms the truth of what I mentioned yesterday, as coming from the Constitutionnel, about the state of the public mind at St. Petersburg. I happened last evening to meet a Russian lady, who is allowed to remain here (as, indeed, are a great many) on account of her health. She gave me quite the same description of things which is given by the generality of French newspaper correspondents, and assured me that her husband's letters all spoke in the same terms; but to this she added an argument, which is that of every Russian nearly whom I have met, and has been more than once repeated by the Russian organs of the German press; it is this:—

"We are anxious and discouraged; we are all but ruined; and distress and privation of every kind is threatening us; but we can bear all this for a much longer time than you fancy, and, if we determine to hold out obstinately, as many persons highly placed in Russia believe we will do so, because we are, compared with you, a barbarous nation; feel less our disasters and wants than you would; and at the end you will be more impatient for peace than we shall." I repeat this, because I know it is but the repetition of a serious conviction among many Russian 'politicians.' As to the discouragement, however, I take that to be very, very great throughout all ranks.—[Paris Correspondent of the Manchester Guardian.

Fatal Affray—A Policeman Killed and Another Seriously Wounded. New Haven, Sunday evening, Nov. 25. A shocking affair took place in this city last night. Two policemen named Thomas Cummings and Wm Grant, attempted to arrest a drunken man in an Irish groggery in Morocco street, when a gang of ruffians present extinguished the lights, and commenced an attack upon the officers and beat them so fiercely that one of them, Cummings, has since died of his wounds, and the other, Grant, is in great danger.

Mr Cummings was sexton of St. Paul's Church. He reached there and began his ordinary duties preparatory for Sunday services, and was found dead near the furnace this morning. His skull was ascertained to have been fractured by a slung shot.

The Cholera in Brazil. New York, Nov. 31. The Herald has a letter from its Rio Janeiro correspondent, dated Oct. 9. Cholera had committed dreadful ravages in the Province of Bahia and along the coast. In Bahia 15,000 persons died so rapidly that difficulty was found in getting help to bury the bodies, and although the sailors of the Imperial Navy lent their aid many of the deceased had to be burned. Two thousand of the inhabitants of Rio were swept away, but the disease was fast disappearing. The slave population had suffered severely.

Sebastopol after its Capture. I spent yesterday in the famous Sebastopol, or rather in what remains of it, and feel the task of describing all I saw a most difficult one; one knows hardly where to commence, and I presume it will be as perplexing to know where to leave off. I went by the Mamelon Vert and the Malakoff, and entered the ruined city by the breach in the rear of the latter. Such a wonderful scene of desolation was surely never witnessed before. For miles and miles the ground is plowed and torn up by shot and shell, which lay about in enormous quantities. The Mamelon is a good deal cut up while the Malakoff looks as if the soul had been upheaved by some violent convulsion, and to the depth of some twenty or thirty feet. Hundreds of thousands of balls and fragments of shells lay about, with helmets, shakos, bayonets, parts of muskets, scraps of uniform, &c., &c., but the bodies of the slain have long since been buried in the trenches, and nothing now marks the presence of violence and death save the numerous bloody great coats and Russian stretchers which lay around, and the sickening smell from the very shallow graves where thousands of the Czar's soldiers are sleeping their last sleep just below the surface of their mother earth.

From the Malakoff we descended into one of the suburbs of Sebastopol. The buildings immediately in rear of the fortification were knocked into shapeless heaps of stones, and down to the water's edge not a house but had many shell and shot holes through its roof and walls.

In this suburb, which had evidently been inhabited by a poorer part of the population, parties of French and English soldiers were busy plundering. The streets were encumbered with heaps of various articles, chiefly made up of chairs, tables and a few cooking utensils, all of the most common description. The Russian batteries across the bay were only three-quarters of a mile distant, and they could plainly see what was going on. I expected every moment they would open fire, the more so as the allied batteries were sending shells and rockets into the north side incessantly, and making very fair practice. As we got farther on, near the splendid dock-yard which has cost the Russians so much toil and money, they actually did send a flight of shells, which burst over our heads high in the air; the fragments flew far beyond us, but without hurting any one as I could learn. Earlier in the morning, no less than five French soldiers were killed in the town by the bursting of a single shell.

The dock-yard and arsenal are very fine establishments, the buildings equal to any in the world. There are no less than six dry docks, the whole cut out of the solid rock, which rises some fifty or sixty feet high all round the yard. All the buildings are shattered most fearfully—there is hardly a square yard without a shot hole. Enormous numbers of guns were found in the vicinity, with large reserve magazines of powder. One reason given why the Russians do not answer the Allied fire with more industry is that they are short of ammunition. The French and English are now pitching heavy shell into the north side at the rate of about thirty per hour, but without reply. This firing is within sight from the door of the hut in which I write this, but I am already too much used to it to go out to look.—[Cor. N. O. Picayune.

EUROPEAN NEWS.

EXTRACTS FROM ENGLISH PAPERS RECEIVED BY THE CANADA.

The mail steamship Canada, Capt. Stone, from Liverpool on the morning of the 10th inst., arrived at Halifax, Nov. 22, at 4 o'clock P. M.

The War. The most important feature of the week's news is the effort made by France and England to bring Sweden into an active alliance. Gen. Canrobert is in Stockholm charged with this mission, and Sweden is required either to assent or refuse.

Peace Rumors. It is reported from Berlin that the Czar has recently made confidential communication to Prussia and Austria of his wish to renew negotiations, and that M. Bourqueney, French Ambassador, has returned to Vienna with fresh instructions to meet the contingency of proposals from Russia. It is further said that Prince Gortschakoff, Diplomatists from Vienna, and Russian Ministers from other German Courts, are certainly to meet the Czar at Warsaw in the middle of the month, when the question of the renewal of negotiations will be settled. It is also stated that the Emperor of France is favorable to a renewal of diplomacy.

The Danube. The Austrian Gazette states authoritatively that a French camp of 50,000 men is being formed at Silistria.

The Crimea. There is absolutely nothing to report. The armies are engaged in building huts for the winter, with occasional military promenades and exchange of long shots with Cossack pickets.

Several rumors of battles near Simpheropol have turned out false.

Letters from Sebastopol say that the Russian projectiles from the north side reach almost every spot of the city. A desultory fire is kept up on both sides. The allies say that the Russians, although keeping up fire, are making preparations for a retreat.

General L'Vaillant is appointed French Governor of Sebastopol.

Sir Colin Campbell taking offence at the appointment of Gen. Codrington, has asked leave to return to England.

The following is the substance of several official despatches and letters:

"The French will garrison Kinburn, consequently the English returned to Sebastopol Nov. 3. All the Turkish forces for Asia have left Sebastopol."

Gen Simpson, on Oct. 27, says the weather is magnificent, and the British troops healthy. Exchange of prisoners had arrived from Odessa.

Odessa intelligence of Oct. 27 says Gen. Todleben is fast rendering Nicolieff defensible. Below Spasska, where the river is only 600 fathoms broad, gunboats, manned by crews of the former Black Sea fleet, are stationed. Batteries are being erected on both sides of the river. The inhabitants of Nicolieff and Kherson are informed that the cities may be attacked, and a large proportion have gone into the interior at the government expense.

It is reported that Odessa will be disarmed and the guns sent to Nicolieff.

General Loders with the grenadiers and cavalry is posted between Kinburn and Kherson.

It is confirmed that the Czar and the Duke Constantine witnessed the capture of Kinburn from Otchakoff. The Czar has returned to St. Petersburgh direct from Nicolieff without staying at Warsaw.

The squadron of the Bug have towed out two rafts of oak timber worth $100,000. Beyond this nothing has been done except making reconnoissances.

St. Petersburg despatches say that the Russian army in the Crimea has provisions sufficient for eight months.

The Vienna paper Fremden Blatt learns from Prince Gortschakoff's headquarters, that the Russian army in the Crimea amounts to 200,000 men.

The grenadier corps mainly had arrived at Simpheropol, accompanied by 3000 wagons drawn by oxen. So the army is provided for six months, and Gortschakoff will not expect convoys after November, when the steppes will be covered with snow.

Asia. Omer Pacha has opened friendly communications with Schamyl. Selim Pacha is to establish himself at Erzeroum, with the Turkish Imperial Guard, whence he will threaten the rear of the Russian army, besieging Kars. Omer Pacha commenced his advance on Kutais on the 20th, with 22 battalions. Accounts from Persia mention the departure of the ambassador for St Petersburg.

Latest. Rumored Bombardment of Nicolieff. Vienna, Nov. 3. Despatches have been received at the Turkish Embassy, stating that the bombardment of Nicolieff commenced on the 29th of October, and was continued the whole of the following day. The result was not then known. It was added that the Emperor Alexander had been induced to leave the place before the bombardment began, but the Duke Constantine would not be prevailed upon to leave the town.

Turkey. Constantinople, Oct. 29. It is said that the Sultan will visit Paris and London in the spring of next year, having made his intention to that effect known to the Grand Vizier and principal ministers.

Great Britain. The excitement respecting the war with the United States has quite subsided, and the leading journals are ashamed of the panic they had created, and attempt to excuse it, and let themselves down gently by attributing it to what they call the hostile attitude of the American government to an election ruse on the part of the President or his Cabinet, although it is notorious that the excitement was begun, fostered and kept alive by the London Times. Intelligent Englishmen of all ranks, express themselves pained and humiliated by the whole affair.

Spain. Unfriendly relations are arising between Great Britain and Spain. Firstly, in reference to the case of Mr Boylan, the British resident of Santiago, who was expelled from Cuba last April, notwithstanding the agreements of Spain to submit his grievances to the arbitration of Mr Muir, the British Consul at New Orleans. Secondly, with reference to the appointment of Don Domingo Moostich as Governor of Fernando Po. Great Britain demands indemnification for Mr Boylan's losses, and says that as Don Moostich is an old slave trader, his appointment is insulting to British feelings, and must be cancelled.

Holland. Mr Fillmore has been visiting the King of Holland.

Italy. The misunderstanding between Sardinia and Tuscany remains unsettled, pending a reference to the Cabinets of England and France.

The sailing of the Anglo-Swiss legion from Genoa is countermanded until the spring.

King Victor Emmanuel, of Sardinia, was to arrive in Paris about the 20th inst., and in England early in December, accompanied by several of his cabinet.

The correspondent of the London Post, writing from Naples 30th ult., says there is no longer any doubt that a revolutionary movement has broken out in Sicily. Some of the insurgents have been taken and shot. It is difficult to get details. The authorities say the movement is not of a political nature, but is occasioned by cholera and scarcity. This remains to be seen.

Austria. The new financial measures engross public attention. The new Concordat is not yet published.

The Arch Duke Maximillian has met with a serious accident at Trieste, having been thrown from his carriage and received a fracture of the skull.

From Russia the communications seem to convey a more warlike feeling, but this may be nothing more than the cover to an urgent anxiety for peace.

Obituary.

Died in Kingsbury Ind. Nov. 6th, Theodore Catlin, in the 51st year of his age.

Br C. was afflicted with a chronic disease, consequently he did not enjoy good health for a number of years previous to his death.—His friends for sometime past have been aware that he could not continue long, yet so rapid was his decline that his death at the time was quite unexpected.

Br. C. had been an Adventist for a number of years, and often expressed a desire to live to see the Savior come. But he, like many others who have anticipated that day, has fallen under the power of death, and is now sleeping sweetly in the grave, waiting for Him to appear who is the "resurrection and the life," and who is to rob the grave of its victims, and "destroy him that had the power of death, that is the devil."

May the blessing of heaven rest upon the friends who are left to mourn, and especially on our Sr., the companion of the deceased.

Notices.

The work recommended a few weeks since by so many of the Preachers, is now written, and will go to the publisher's as soon as pledges are received sufficient to warrant the undertaking. As this is a gift to the cause except the actual expense, I do not feel it duty to borrow $4 or 500, and be compelled to peddle my own productions to get out of debt. If the preaching Brn interested would just name the thing to the Churches, and get some one or more in each place to pledge themselves for 10, 15, or 20, as they may choose, it will save the trouble of getting single subscribers at 50 cts. each.—Such a course would secure the object at once. 1,000 books will cost about $400. 50 pledges, 20 each, will warrant the undertaking. I have received pledges for over 100 without any effort. Now this is a short and easy method, and if done soon, the work will soon appear, and the Nos. be sent to those who pledge, for distribution.

Particular Notice.

☞ We have received a pressing call for labor in the vineyard at River Point.

Particular request is made for preaching on the first or third Sabbath in Dec. Some faithful and devoted servant of Jesus Christ who can give meat in due season is desired.

The location is in the town of Warwick, 11 miles from Providence, R. I., from which city passage may be taken by railroad. Who will respond?

☞ We frequently have calls for back numbers of the Crisis, which we are happy to supply so far as we have them; but our supply of some of the recent numbers is exhausted. Sorry we had not struck off more.

To the Readers of the Crisis.

Dear Brethren:—We address this letter to you to inform you that when the Crisis stopped, as a paper for gratuitous circulation, the Office was in debt two-hundred dollars, which must soon be paid, and as we believe the readers of the Crisis have no disposition to make the Publishing Committee pay the bill we therefore make the following proposition:—

"That each reader of the Crisis while it was a free paper be invited to send to the Office (of their own free will) the amount which they may deem it a privilege or duty to pay; and if more than the 200 dollars should be sent, it shall be appropriated for sending the Crisis to the poor.

And now, dear Brn., we think that we need say no more, for in every case when we have informed you that pecuniary aid was needed to support the Crisis, you have responded faithfully and cheerfully. God bless the cheerful giver. Amen.

WARNER, Nov. 23, '55.

For The Crisis.

"Wherefore comfort one another with these words." 1 Thess. 4: 18.

BY SR. A. MUSSEY.

Br. Merriam:—I feel to-day like one of old; "while I was musing, the fire burned; then spake I with my tongue." And although I cannot speak with my tongue to all I would be glad to, yet I can take my pen, and write to the dear saints scattered abroad, who have obtained like precious faith with me.

Thank God, the sun shines—light emanates from His blessed Word. Glory to God for the rich store-house to which we have free access. Praise the Lord for the fountain that is opened for Jerusalem and Judah to wash in and be clean. And not only Judah and Jerusalem, but provision has been made for the whole world; if they would, they might come, wash, and be clean. The sound has gone out to the ends of the earth. Yes, His voice is heard through the whole universe. Hear it, ye who will; "look unto me, all ye ends of the earth, and be ye saved: for I am God, and there is none else." "Ho! every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money, come ye, buy and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk, without money, and without price." Praise God, the poor can come as well as the rich, "the poor have the Gospel preached unto them." Again: "In the last day, that great day of the feast, Jesus stood and cried, saying, If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink." "Come unto me, all ye that labor, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest to your souls. For my yoke is easy and my burden is light." True—O, true, my Lord, thy yoke is easy, and thy burden is light!

Sinner, will you listen to the last call of mercy that lingers for you?

> "The Gospel sounds a sweet release
> To all in misery,
> And bids them welcome home to peace,
> This is the jubilee."

Backslider, turn again to your Father's house where there is bread enough and to spare; come, drink again from the fountain of life; unless you do, speedily, you will cry, "lost, lost, I am lost forever!"

Luke-warm professor, thou too mayest come and buy "gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich, and white raiment, that thou mayest be clothed, and anoint thine eyes with eye-salve that thou mayest see." Said he who stood in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear my voice, and will open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me." Hear him all, high and low, rich and poor, black and white, male and female; hear His voice, obey His words, repent of your sins, prepare to meet your God, and all will be well.

When I commenced this epistle to my Brn. and Srs., I little thought my mind would lead me to write as I have; but the will of the Lord be done, not mine; and may the Spirit of God attend His truth, and souls be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus.

And who are the Apostles' brethren whom he exhorts to comfort one another with these words? and what are the words that will comfort them? "But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them that are asleep, that ye sorrow not as others that have no hope For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord.—Wherefore comfort one another with these words."

Then the Apostles' brethren are those who are comforted with the words that Jesus is coming down the parted skies to raise the dead and change the living, and take them home. Yes, oh yes, none others will be comforted with such words as these. Praise the Lord, to-day I feel that I can claim my relationship with the Apostle; for even the thought of that day and the glory that attends it comforts me.

And furthermore He has told us there was a Crown laid up in heaven for Him, and not for Him only, but for all them that love His appearign. And has Paul received his crown? No; for he said, he was to have it, at the appearing of Christ when He will judge both the living and the dead. Then all that love the appearing of the blessed Lord are the Apostle's Brn., and will receive their crowns together. Praise God—what glory gilds the sacred page! And will He come? Yes, O yes, most assuredly He will; for He said if He went away, He would come again. Did He die on the cross? Was He buried? And did He rise again? Yes, on the cross the healing fountain gushed from His wounded side. Joseph begged His body and buried Him in his own tomb hewn out of the rock; and the third day He rose again.—He burst the bonds of death, and rose triumphant o'er the grave. Then just as sure as He "died and rose again, even so them also that sleep in Jesus, will He bring with Him." And whence will He bring them? From the graves, where they are quietly reposing in this perilous time. Peace be to their slumbers until Jesus awakes them, "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord."

Be comforted then, ye that mourn for your friends; for Jesus died and rose again according to the Scriptures—He ascended on high, a Mediator between God and man; but He comes, lo! He comes again; and His voice will pierce the tombs; and your loved ones will come again from the land of the enemy. Yes, He will ransom them from the grave; He will redeem them from death. Hear Him; "O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy destruction; repentance shall be hid from mine eyes." Then, oh then, on the new Earth there will be no death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things shall have passed away. Praise ye our God for the promises of His word And is His promise sure that He will come again? Surely He has spoken the word; and it shall be done; God has appointed the day, and when it comes we shall surely see Him whom we love. He most certainly arose from the tomb, for Mary went early in the morning on the first day of the week, to embalm His body, but Jesus was not there, He had arisen; for lo; an Angel had come down from heaven and had rolled away the stone from the door of the sepulchre and sat thereon. The sepulchre was empty, Jesus had risen; away ran Mary preaching the resurrection of the Saviour, first of all; then it was a frail Woman that first preached a risen Savior—He appeared to his disciples in various places; and when He appeared among them He always breathed peace upon them, "peace be unto you; my peace I leave with you, not as the world giveth give I unto you."

When He had finished up His work on earth, and was about to ascend up to His Father, He led His disciples out as far as Bethany, and after having given them His last instruction, promising to be with them to the end of the world, He was parted from them, and a cloud received Him out of their sight.

How often have I thought of those lonely disciples after their beloved Master was taken from them. They had followed Him, they loved Him and His words were music in their ears; but He was taken and by wicked hands, was crucified and slain. They were disappointed in their hopes, and scattered; but when the good news came, that He had risen they could hardly believe for joy; He was among them again, and their hearts were made glad. And Peter exclaimed from the fulness of his heart, "blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ who, according to His abundant mercy, hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Christ from the dead," &c. How glad were they to enjoy the society of Him they loved once more; but He could not tarry with them long, and from mount Olivet he must ascend. While I view them taking their last walk with Him, and wending their way up the Mount sorrowful and sad, talking as they journeyed along, with tears coursing down their cheeks that that was their last personal interview with Him, and He was about to leave them to be with them no more in this world, no wonder their hearts were sad, no wonder they wept, and no marvel if God pitied them in their lonely condition, left, as they were, in a wicked world like lambs among wolves. But while they were conversing together, Jesus was taken from them, and in a moment was out of their sight. They stood gazing upward, no doubt hoping to get one more glimpse of their Master; but alas He had passed from their sight—they could behold Him no more. They stand gazing still in breathless silence. All heaven was moved at the reception of Christ to take His Mediatorial seat, at His Father's right hand—God looked down from the height of His abode, He saw those lonely Galileans looking upward after their beloved Lord, He would comfort their hearts, so He sends His ministering Angels down to earth with words of consolation to His beloved children. Instantly they come with the cheering intelligence that their beloved Master would return again to earth—Hear it, O ye skeptics, who believe not in a literal, personal Jesus to come, and are ridiculing those who are looking for Him to return as He went away. "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven shall so come again in like manner as ye have seen Him go into heaven." And did those angelic messengers comfort the hearts of those lone disciples? and did they believe that very same Jesus would come again? Most assuredly, and joy filled their souls. The Lord knew this would comfort them, and the Apostle Paul knew it would comfort his Brn. to be assured He was coming again. Then returned they to Jerusalem from the Mount of Olives, and they went up into an upper room where the other disciples were, and soon were at their devotions—a united band.

"And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place. And suddenly there was a sound from heaven as of a rushing, mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. (Brn., I would to God it were with us as it was with the disciples then, that we were all of one accord, and one mind, and were all filled with the Spirit of God. Then we could labor together, and God would be honored and souls saved.) And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance." And why did God move them to speak with other tongues? Because "there were among them, Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven." It was His will that they should hear the Gospel in their own native tongue wherein they were born, and then return to their own country, spread the news abroad, and preach Jesus and the resurrection This, then, looks like the work of God. It was for His glory then, but a question arises, is it for His glory now? Tell us, ye who can.

"Praise our God, all ye his saints; give thanks at the remembrance of his holiness." Then we will comfort one another with the blessed assurance that Jesus is coming again. Yes, the very same Jesus that went away will come again in like manner as He went away.—And though we have been disappointed in the time, we shall not be in the glorious event, if we hold fast the beginning of our confidence firm unto the end; for He is faithful who has promised. Although human calculations have failed, God's time will never fail; for at the time appointed the end shall be. And now let all who thought we could not serve God without definite time, be assured we can, and can enjoy just as much of the presence of God as in days that are past.—We have the whole Bible for our guide, and that will lead us safely through this wilderness world to the bright portals of endless day. And that blessed Book teaches us the coming of the Lord draweth near. "Grudge not one against another, brethren, for behold, the Judge standeth before the door." Glory to God, my sky is clear, my mind serene, and peace like a river, dwells within. I shall see Him whom absent I love, whom not having seen, I adore.

Peace be with the Brn., and love with faith from God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ Grace be with all who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Br. J. Lyle.

NEWARK, N. J., Nov. 1855.

Dear Br. Merriam:—I have frequently wished that some of the simple yet heart-moving testimonies, to which I have the pleasure of listening in our Newark meetings, were published in your paper for the edification of God's dear children scattered abroad.

I do not mean by this that others do not have as good food as we do; many, I trust, are feeding on the same heavenly bread. But I am certain that many precious fragments are wasted, or at least, might be spared from all our tables, that would refresh many a pilgrim, if it could be found in the store-house of the Crisis.

But who will gather up these crumbs? who can do it? I confess my inability. I may repeat the words I hear, but it is very difficult to trace the precise connection, and impossible to exhibit the tones of brotherly kindness, the gestures and features of earnestness, that impress the minds of hearers with deep convictions of the honesty and sincerity of the speaker.

Says the proverb, "To the hungry soul every bitter thing is sweet;" so it is with me in hearing the Brn. speak. It imparts fresh strength to my weak soul; no matter how humble the witness, how crooked the sentence, or lame the language, I hear he voice of the Shepherd in it, and esteem it as great riches in comparison with the learned eloquence of the sounding brass, and tinkling cymbals of sectarian tradition that is robbing God of His glory, and depriving perishing souls of the key of pure scriptural knowledge.

A Sabbath or two ago I attended our meeting as usual. After singing and prayer, Br. M—— rose up in his seat, (we do not use the desk ourselves,) and talked a little while to us. The remainder of the morning was occupied in the same way by Br F—— who enlarged on what the preceding Br. had advanced, and reviewed the path over which we had journeyed thus far, showing the direction of Providence in all the past, and exhorting all who had engaged in the great dispensational message to hold fast the begining of their confidence firm unto the end.

I will give you the main portion of Br. M——'s testimony as well as I can. He read a few verses from the Gospel by John and remarked:—

"Before the Savior left the world He gave His disciples plain directions which were to guide them in their pilgrimage through this world. Their welfare depended on their strict obedience to the Master's instructions. They were very sad when He told them He was about to be parted from them; but He comforted them with the assurance that it was needful for them that He should go away that they might have the Comforter, the Spirit of truth sent to them who should bring all things to their remembrance that they had ever heard from His lips; so that all the faithful and true sayings of their living Head might be handed down to the latest age of the world. He also assured them that He would come again and receive all the children of His fold and give them possession of mansions which He would prepare for them, and dwell with them forever in the restituted earth. Now it is certain, my Brn., that unless the disciples had obeyed these instructions they would not have realized the great blessing of Pentecost.

If they had turned back to the Synagogues, and joined the hypocritical Scribes and Pharisees, or had gone back into the world, all would have been lost. But we see these poor disciples sorely tried when Jesus was slain; their confidence was almost gone, some of them despondingly say, "we trusted that it had been He which should have redeemed Israel; and beside all this, to day is the third day since these things were done!" Jesus revealed himself! dispelled their doubts—thus prepared with renewed confidence they waited according to orders for the descent of the Comforter. It came. The sayings of the ascended Lord were brought fresh to their minds—quotations from Moses, the Prophets and Psalms. What scenes and sayings of the seven years' ministry of the Divine Teacher were revealed!—And these things have been reported by them to us, who believe on Jesus through their word."

Our case, my Brn., is somewhat similar to that of the disciples in their state of despondency; but we must not turn back, nor take up with any substitute for the blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the Great God and our Savior Jesus Christ. I believe we have been doing the will of the Lord. It is His will that we should be thus tried, to prove us; and just as sure as Jesus revealed himself after His death and resurrection to His disciples, so surely will He honor us in due time, and let all the enemies of truth see that we have not followed cunningly devised fables.

My Brn., if the Lord has not led the Advent people, I do not know where to look for a people that He ever has led. A people that have renounced the world and made such sacrifices of its riches, honors and pleasures; whose earnest cry has been "Lord, show us the truth and we will walk in it," have not been led by the Holy Spirit, I do not know how to understand the Scriptures and Christianity.—"O let us watch, wait and be faithful."

I must not make this article any longer—perhaps what I have written will be set aside for something better. All right. I am well pleased with whatever use is made of my poor articles; but should this be accepted I may venture hereafter to note down some other testimonies and send them to the Crisis.

Be encouraged, dear Br. Merriam, your labor is not in vain. May all the blessings of the twentieth Psalm rest upon you and all that are waiting for the Redeemer to come to Zion.

Yours in hope, JOHN LYLE.

For the Crisis.

Questions.

Dear Br. Merriam:—I wish to ask B. P. Hildreth a few questions through the Crisis relative to the day of Judgment.—Sr. H., you say the thouand years cannot be in the past; for this thousand years of Rev. 20 is the antitype of the first Sabbath after creation. Paul says—Heb. 4: 3, "the works were finished from the foundation of the world; for he spake in a certain place of the seventh day on this wise, and God did rest the seventh day from all his works."

Did God measure off the seventh day by evening and morning and commence His labor again the eighth? or did His rest from creation continue until to-day? And if so, will not the antitype agree with the type? When we enter upon that rest will it not continue for ever?

Sr. H. where will the saints and Christ reign during the thousand years?

If on the new earth, where will the wicked receive their perdition after the end of the thousand years? for they receive their perdition in the burning of the earth that now is, their reign cannot be on this earth; for this is reserved for another purpose, that is, the perdition of ungodly men.

You say "the beast and false prophet were cast ALIVE into a lake of fire, Rev. 19: 20, at the beginning of the thousand years," where is that lake of fire during the thousand years, so that the Devil can be cast into THE lake of fire where the beast and false Prophet were, and THEY (Murd.) shall be tormented? Are not the three identified when cast into the lake of fire? If one is literal, are not the three?

Referring to 2 Pet. 3: 14, you say, "Here we learn that the day of Judgment is the day of perdition of ungodly men, and that, it is the day of the Lord, and at the same time the day of redemption to all the inhabitants of the new earth, and likewise that its length will be a thousand years."

How can the wicked receive their perdition in the day of the Lord, when the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished?

Is not 2 Pet. 3: 8, thrown in to show that the great work of burning the heavens and earth, and perdition of ungodly men, can be accomplished in one day, (as Christ said in Luke 17: 29, 30,) "for one day with the Lord is as a thousand years?" does not Christ teach that the wicked are burned IN this age?

Yours in love desiring the truth.

E. G. HIGGINS.

Questions.

Br. Merriam:—What are your views of the thousand years spoken of in Rev. 20th? Are they in the past, or to be in the future? If in the past, when did they commence, and end? When was Satan bound, and when, and how, was the camp of the saints and the beloved city compassed about? (1.)

Do we not understand by John 1: 1-3, 14; 17: 5; Col 1: 15, 16, 17; 2 Cor. 8: 9, that Christ was co-eternal with the Father? and if so, He of course was Immortal; then what became of that Immortality when He took upon himself the human nature? (2) INQUIRER.

REPLY.

(1.) Some articles have just appeared in the Crisis involving this subject, written with much ability. Please refer to them.

(2.) The testimony of Scripture is, I think, decisive in favor of the pre-existence of Christ—that He existed "before Abraham," and even "before the world was;" but I do not apprehend that His existence was co-eternal with the Father—from the fact that He was the "Son of God"—"the beginning of the creation of God" &c., which implies that His existence was derived from the Father. For light on this subject permit me to refer you to the work of Sr. Seymour, recently issued from the press, an advertisement of which you will find in another column.

Questions.

NEWPORT, Nov. 18th, 1855.

Br. Merriam:—I perceive by reading the Crisis that the general opinion of the writers is that the earth is the Sanctuary, and that its cleansing will be accomplished by fire at the end of the 2300 days, (at the coming of Christ) Other writers in the Crisis believe that the earth will not be cleansed by fire till one thousand years after Christ comes. Now I want to ask some of this last class of writers to inform me, through the Crisis, whether the 2300 days reach to the end of the thousand years, or terminate near this time as we have heretofore believed. And if they are soon to end, what event are we to look for called the cleansing of the Sanctuary?

Letter from Br. W. S. Campbell.

LA CROSSE, WIS., Nov. 1855.

Dear Br. Merriam:—In my last I mentioned the brief visit I made in Minnesota, which I hope was not without its good results as opening the door for farther efforts in the same field, which I intend to put forth, if Providence shall open the way.—On my way up, I became acquainted with R. R. Wood—Methodist Presiding Elder on La Crosse district, who seemed very much to desire me to call at his place; but I found no opening, and shall do nothing beyond seeing two or three acquaintances. Ministers of the different denominations seem all to be very pleasant about my work of preaching the Lord's coming, till I preach Jesus and the resurrection as securing man's immortality—then they are sometimes filled with indignation, and sometimes—simply let me—"severely alone."

The place is new, but flourishing; and is expected to be an outlet to the North-western portion of this state; but as I have but little to do with such prospects, and as your readers are looking for the "world to come" glory—instead of the physical, political, or commercial glory of this, (and I most heartily join them,) I will not weary them.

Some, who love the beautiful and sublime, would be filled with admiration if allowed to behold the wild scenery of the Mississippi. Its glassy surface is broken by [illegible] islands—its dark and dismal bottoms covered with the deep wood of primitive growth—with unbroken forest gloom—the vast marsh, where silence seems to hold primeval sway—at once a desolation and a sublimity—drear in its extent, and grand in its inspiration. Then comes again to view the continuous bluff—broken here and there by ravines and gorges—and rising at points almost perpendicularly for hundreds of feet—with faces and palisades of limestone—bringing to mind old ruined fortresses and castles—and giving evidence of a water mark vastly above the present—behind this facia of rock, from a needle-like point descending so suddenly that I thought of a cone halved towards the base. The legendary rock of Wenona is prominent among these—in fellowship with the clouds.

There is lake Pepin in which nature aimed, as always, at her own harmony—for it is an expansion of the river, with many islands above and below—its rugged shores indented by numerous small bays—the whole highly picturesque. In the morning the sun casts its golden tinge from bluff top to bluff top—over the burnished bosom of the river—far upon the prairie waste—up the river valley where some other stream seeks union with the great "Father."

But we have fact as well as fancy. I find a sad emotion rising at times, and only suppressed by the reflection that the cause of Christ is nearest and dearest of all. It is difficult to persuade men to believe. In the rush after wealth and worldly honor, who wishes to give time to reflection—to religion—to faith in the Second Advent doctrines?

If my family were once with me in Minnesota, I could gladly make it my field of effort, with all its trials. And now I touch that point, permit me to ask, if the preacher's family escapes its trials, east or west? I have not spoken—I could speak of my companion in life, far from her kindred and friends—even in the east—with a fortitude, a perseverance, a self-denial, an economy enduring, ennobling, christian, and for the work of the Lord.—But I desist.

Yours truly,

W. S. CAMPBELL.

OUR ENEMIES WITHIN. Beyond all doubt, the worst of our enemies are those we carry about with us in our own hearts. Adam fell in Paradise, Lucifer in heaven, while Lot continued righteous among the inhabitants of Sodom.

BOOK NOTICE

☞ We have received from the Publisher, H. L. Hastings, Peace Dale, R. I., a handsome volume, entitled "The Voice of the Church on the reign of Christ." If we should be asked, "what book in connection with the Bible is most needed at the present day?" we should answer without hesitation, "The Voice of the Church on the reign of Christ."—This valuable work is a light shining in a very dark place; and settles, as far as evidence can settle any question, that Christ's personal reign has been the doctrine of an uncorrupted Church in all ages. We can but just notice the book at present, hereafter, we may present our readers with some extracts.

The Publisher deserves the thanks of all who love the truth, and we advise Christians to manifest their gratitude by procuring a copy of the work of the publisher. Price, $1,00.—[From "The Star of Destiny." July.

☞ The following letter is from H. Bonar, L. L. D., of Kelso, Scotland, the Editor of the London Quarterly Journal of Prophecy, and author of numerous interesting works on prophecy, one of which, "The Morning of Joy," had sometime ago attained a circulation of 42,000 copies in England, besides being republished in this country.

KELSO, Oct. 22d, 1855.

Mr H. L. Hastings:—

Dear Sir,

I have safely received your volume, "The Voice of The Church," &c. Accept my thanks for your kindness and courtesy. I mean to go through your work more carefully; but meanwhile I have made a run through it in order to get an idea of its nature. I like it, and think it fitted to be useful. I only wish you had in your quotations, distinguished more explicitly between those who were really pre-millenialists, and those who only give utterance to a longing for a better state of things, and for the appearing of Christ. With this remark, I again express my approbation of the book, and subscribe myself,

Yours, with Christian regard,

HORATIUS BONAR.

Important Invention in Warfare. It is understood that the late destruction at Sweaborg was chiefly effected by means of bombshells charged with a liquid combustible. We are informed that an invention precisely of the nature of those shells was communicated to Lord Hardinge, in April, 1854, by Mr Wm Hutton, writer in Stirling. From the accounts supplied to their government by the Russian authorities in Sweaborg, as to the operation of the shells charged with liquid, thrown into the town by the British fleet, Mr Hutton is fully satisfied that the admiralty had adopted his suggestion. The effects of these shells will probably soon be experienced at Odessa. Mr Hutton has, he believes, discovered another preparation for charging bombshells, of a nature so fearfully destructive to human life, that he has resolved not to divulge it.—[Scotsman.

☞ We publish to-day another letter from Kossuth which, we trust, will be read with interest. It may appear somewhat obscure, but by reading it attentively and studying the import of the language, much may be learned respecting the present movements and designs of the papacy.

LONDON, Nov. 2, 1855.

To the Editors of the Independent:

SIRS:—Although the ratifications of the Concordat recently concluded between the Pope and Francis Joseph of Austria, were exchanged on the 27th of September last, the official publication is likely to be delayed until December next, it being customary to have such transactions first notified by the Pope to the Holy College of Cardinals, in full consistory assembled, which cannot be held earlier than in December. It is reported that the Pope desires in this instance to give to the notification of his triumph all the "pomp and circumstance" of a formal allocution; calculated to transform into an exultation of unprecedented victory, the little sorrows at recent partial reverses in Spain, Piedmont, Switzerland, and even Naples. Because it is a fact curiously reflecting on the unparalleled stolidity of Francis Joseph of Austria, that while he goes so far as perfectly to destroy civil authority in his States, King Bomba himself, brutal and bigoted as he is, and in nominal dependency upon the Roman See besides, even with regard to his own investiture, still has dared not to submit to the boundless arrogance of the Jesuits. Archbishop Bizzari, sent to Naples on an extraordinary mission relative to the subject, was bound to return "re infecta" to Rome, after several months of unavailing exertions.

But while the official publication of the Concordat is thus deferred, the greediness of the bankrupt Austrian finance department led to an anticipated disclosure of its contents. Some Piedmontese convents recently abolished there, possessed certain estates in Lombardy. The proprietors having ceased to exist, the Austrian government, greedy and needy of cash, sequestrated the estates for sale, as "res nullius."—The Pope however did not mean to allow this; he claimed the estates, maintaining that though the convents in Piedmont had been illegally (!) suppressed, their estates did not cease to be the property of the monastic orders to which those suppressed convents belonged. (Do you perceive the bearing of Papal domination implied in the plea? The question is pending yet.—Most likely the issue will be, that some members of the abolished Piedmontese convents will be transplanted to Lombardy to establish new convents there upon the revenues of the disputed estates. However the Austrian finance department is in a too deranged condition not to try some resistance on money matters. Thus it came to pass, that while Francis Joseph was sojourning at Ischl, some busy body from the office of Mr Bruck at Vienna, has sent a "mild" extract of the Concordat to the Gazette of Venice, intended to support the soft remonstrance, that while Austria is making such immense concessions, it is not over generous in his Holiness to grudge such trifling profit to the empty coffers of the Viennese treasury.

Thus is it the matter came to publicity, before the executive measures for giving at the very onset full effect to the provisions of the Concordat, had been duly concerted with the willing in the clerical ranks, and the less willing put out "of harm's way."

But as the text, thus prematurely published, had not done full justice to the triumph of the Roman See, the ultra Catholic French paper L'Univers has been furnished an authentic analysis of the text, which it published, guaranteeing the exactitude. It is this version of the Univers, which caused even Belgian papers to express their regret at the extent to which the utter degradation of the civil power has been conceded. The London Times had a leader on the subject, coinciding with the opinion I expressed in the "Atlas" the same day—that no Pope, not the proudest and boldest of them, not in the darkest age of superstition, had ever claimed, or any sovereign ever conceded so much. The Times' article, good though rather tame, does not dissimulate, that "every barrier against ecclesiastical encroachment is overthrown," and that the rights conceded to the Bishops "will bring every citizen completely under ecclesiastical rule." I did not happen to see the version of the L'Univers; the analysis I am about to offer to your readers is founded on the milder version of the Gazette of Venice.—They may judge by it, whether even the milder version is not fit to alarm all true Christian men; as not only fully justifying the conclusions at which the Times arrived, but in fact annihilating all civil authority, and threatening the extinction of the light of freedom, reason, and civilization to the profit of priestly domination and obscurantism.

The Concordat contains twenty-six articles.

Art. 1. Guarantees the maintenance and protection of the Roman Catholic religion with all the rights and privileges secured to it "by the sacred canons."

You will perceive the dangerous principle masked with the name of "religion." That no State should interfere with the dogmas of any religion consistent with the general laws of morality, and with the order of a well regulated society; thus much certainly every just, righteous, and liberal man will own. But to speak of "rights and privileges" which the Church (here masked with the name of religion) shall enjoy in any independent State, not such as that State has conceded, but such as that Church abroad! chooses to dictate shall be its rights and privileges—that is a principle, absolutely incompatible with the elementary requisites of any civil society. It makes the State and its civil structure absolutely dependent upon a foreign power. Especially does this provision infringe on the social rights of the Protestants, living in a country subject to this provision, as the very existence of Protestantism is contrary to the "rights and privileges" of the Roman Catholic religion, as secured by their own canons. You of course know, that except the Pontifical dominions of Italy, there is not one single State all over the world, that ever had accepted all the Roman Catholic canons, (beyond the boundaries of dogmas) for binding—every one, even the most bigoted, have at all times maintained the power to forbid, or to limit their always ambitious, often cruel and sanguinary regulations. Such has been most particularly the case with Hungary. This article places the "rights and privileges" foreign priests may arbitrarily have arrogated to their religion, above the control of the laws and of civil authority.

Art. 2. Abolishes the "Placetum Regium." Hungary had at all times inflexibly adhered to the rule, that no pontifical Bull, Breve, or any order whatsoever shall be published or obeyed, without being previously sanctioned and allowed by the government. If I be not mistaken, the same has been the case in Austria. With Hungary the right of "Placeti Regii" is as old as Hungary itself. Without this right not Francis Joseph is any more the ruler of the Austrian Empire, but the Pope. A State admitting of this has lost its independent condition. It has become a vassal of the Vatican.

Art. 3. Allows the right of the Bishops to communicate without control with the papal chair, and to issue instructions and ordinances; and Art. 4 allows the Bishops full right to punish the clergy who may offend against the discipline of the Church, and condemn to punishment those who may offend against the canons of the Church—while Art. 5 authorizes the bishops to refuse to ordain those priests whom they may consider unworthy; as also to found or to divide livings and rectories.

Until now in Hungary, the intercourse between the bishops and the Roman See was held under the control of the government by the right of "supremæ inspectionis circa sacra." In case the government had abused this right, there was the Diet to redress the grievance; the bishops had but to present their complaints there, where besides, the bishops had seat and vote. The minor clergy were protected by the laws and institutions of the country from arbitrariness on the part of the bishops. The municipal assemblies of the counties watched with unitiring attention over the maintenance of the constitutional rights and the personal security of every citizen, whether clerical or laical. The priests were members of those assemblies, as before 1848 every nobleman, (priests had the privilege of nobility; with 1848 every citizen. In case of complaint against the arbitrariness of the bishops, the county assemblies, being the only executive organ in penal matters, refused to order the execution, made representations to the government, and if no redress followed, brought the matter under the cognizance of the Diet. Whatever person went through the regular instruction in the seminaries, and passed examination, the bishops could not refuse to ordain him; and the foundation or division of livings and rectories did not depend upon them.

Now the Jus Placeti being abolished, the bishops are left unprotected against the arbitrariness of the Pope. They in their turn have full arbitrary power over the clergy; they can refuse to ordain those whom they may think not fit instruments for carrying out the orders they receive from Rome without control; they can confer favors, and they can punish arbitrarily. Under this combination of arbitrariness, superposed one on another, it would be a wonder if the Hungarian Roman Catholic clergy would not be divested of patriotism and of that manly spirit of national independence by which it was distinguished before. The good will be eliminated, punished, or broken by disciplinary persecution, (and nobody to protect them—you can have no idea of the horrors of such a situation,) the priesthood will be recruited only from the ranks of willing tools, and the whole Roman Catholic clergy must by and by become but a vast engine of Papal ambition. The unprotected state of perfect servitude to which the minor clergy (those, who to use their own expression, are "in cura animarum") is reduced by the Concordat, makes such a dreadful change in their situation, that if, God helping, Hungary could soon resume its struggle for independence, I feel perfectly satisfied that the Roman Catholic clergy would stand foremost in devotion and sacrifice for our regeneration; but if on the one hand the conspiracy of kings and on the other hand the indolence of free nations unite in keeping up the "statu quo—" if this Concordat is allowed only ten years to work, then the Roman Catholic clergy must under its influence become in Hungary likewise, what it is already in some other countries, the most dangerous enemy to freedom both civil and religious.

Art. 14. The principal dignitaries of the chapter are to be nominated by the papal chair, where there is no right of patronage. (In Hungary all the dignitaries of all the chapters have been nominated by the government. There was no question of right of patronage about them. It was a "reserved right of the crown," which is now transferred to the Vatican.)

Art. 15. gives! to the Emperor the privilege (the Pope gives! him the privilege!) of appointing to deaneries and rectories when there is a right of patronage belonging to religious and school property, but he must choose one of three persons whom the bishops shall propose. Thus even deaneries and rectories, everything where there is money to get, passes into the hands of the bishops, and through them to the Pope. Art. 4. The bishops alone have the right to appoint their vicars and counselors. Until now the law has appointed them in Hungary. The vicar was the "prepositus" of the chapter; and the counselors were the chapter, all of them nominated by the government, consequently not servile tools of the bishops, but dignitaries of independent standing, the whole of them a coordinate not subordinate authority. Many a right, privilege and immunity did not belong to the bishops alone, but to the bishop with the chapter. (Episcopus cum capitulo.) All this is now perfectly overturned; and to crown the collational power of the Popes. Art. 16 declares that the Papal chair has full power to establish new Sees, and to make new divisions of those already existing." The Emperor is admitted to the modest share of consenting only. Until now the Papal chair had absolutely no power to do anything of the kind in Hungary.

This analysis of the articles referring to the organization of the papal army will have proved to you how the machinery is meant to work for bringing all the Roman Catholic clergy of Hungary and Austria under an absolute dependence upon the Papal chair—and this, together with the regulations relative to the monastic orders, will enable you fully to appreciate the danger implied in the other articles, which I shall analyze in my next.

KOSSUTH.

State of Public Feeling in Russia. Every private account, and every newspaper correspondence, confirms the truth of what I mentioned yesterday, as coming from the Constitutionnel, about the state of the public mind at St Petersburg. I happened last evening to meet a Russian lady, who is allowed to remain here (as, indeed, are a great many) on account of her health. She gave me quite the same description of things which is given by the generality of French newspaper correspondents, and assured me that her husband's letters all spoke in the same terms; but to this she added an argument, which is that of every Russian nearly whom I have met, and has been more than once repeated by the Russian organs of the German press; it is this:—

"We are anxious and discouraged; we are all but ruined; and distress and privation of every kind is threatening us; but we can bear all this for a much longer time than you fancy, and, if we determine to hold out obstinately, as many persons highly placed in Russia believe we will do so, because we are, compared with you, a barbarous nation; feel less our disasters and wants than you would; and at the end you will be more impatient for peace than we shall." I repeat this, because I know it is but the repetition of a serious conviction among many Russian politicians. As to the discouragement, however, I take that to be very, very great throughout all ranks.—[Paris Correspondent of the Manchester Guardian.

Fatal Affray—A Policeman Killed and Another Seriously Wounded. New Haven, Sunday evening, Nov. 25. A shocking affair took place in this city last night. Two policemen named Thomas Cummings and Wm Grant attempted to arrest a drunken man in an Irish groggery in Morocco street, when a gang of ruffians present extinguished the lights, and commenced an attack upon the officers and beat them so fiercely that one of them, Cummings, has since died of his wounds, and the other, Grant, is in great danger.

Mr Cummings was sexton of St. Paul's Church. He reached there and began his ordinary duties preparatory for Sunday services, and was found dead near the furnace this morning. His skull was ascertained to have been fractured by a slung shot.

The Cholera in Brazil. New York, Nov. 21. The Herald has a letter from its Rio Janeiro correspondent, dated Oct. 9. Cholera had committed dreadful ravages in the Province of Bahia and along the coast. In Bahia 15,000 persons died so rapidly that difficulty was found in getting help to bury the bodies, and although the sailors of the Imperial Navy lent their aid, many of the deceased had to be burned. Two thousand of the inhabitants of Rio were swept away, but the disease was fast disappearing. The slave population had suffered severely.

Sebastopol after its Capture. I spent yesterday in the famous Sebastopol, or rather in what remains of it, and feel the task of describing all I saw a most difficult one; one knows hardly where to commence, and I presume it will be as perplexing to know where to leave off. I went by the Mamelon Vert and the Malakoff, and entered the ruined city by the breach in the rear of the latter. Such a wonderful scene of desolation was surely never witnessed before. For miles and miles the ground is plowed and torn up by shot and shell, which lay about in enormous quantities. The Mamelon is a good deal cut up, while the Malakoff looks as if the soul had been upheaved by some violent convulsion, and to the depth of some twenty or thirty feet. Hundreds of thousands of balls and fragments of shells lay about, with helmets, shakos, bayonets, parts of muskets, scraps of uniform, &c., &c., but the bodies of the slain have long since been buried in the trenches, and nothing now marks the presence of violence and death save the numerous bloody great coats and Russian stretchers which lay around, and the sickening smell from the very shallow graves where thousands of the Czar's soldiers are sleeping their last sleep just below the surface of their mother earth.

From the Malakoff we descended into one of the suburbs of Sebastopol. The buildings immediately in rear of the fortification were knocked into shapeless heaps of stones, and down to the water's edge not a house but had many shell and shot holes through its roof and walls.

In this suburb, which had evidently been inhabited by a poorer part of the population, parties of French and English soldiers were busy plundering. The streets were encumbered with heaps of various articles, chiefly made up of chairs, tables and a few cooking utensils, all of the most common description. The Russian batteries across the bay were only three-quarters of a mile distant, and they could plainly see what was going on. I expected every moment they would open fire, the more so as the allied batteries were sending shells and rockets into the north side incessantly, and making very fair practice. As we got farther on, near the splendid dockyard which has cost the Russians so much toil and money, they actually did send a flight of shells, which burst over our heads high in the air; the fragments flew far beyond us, but without hurting any one as I could learn. Earlier in the morning, no less than five French soldiers were killed in the town by the bursting of a single shell.

The dock-yard and arsenal are very fine establishments, the buildings equal to any in the world. There are no less than six dry docks, the whole cut out of the solid rock, which rises some fifty or sixty feet high all round the yard. All the buildings are shattered most fearfully—there is hardly a square yard without a shot hole. Enormous numbers of guns were found in the vicinity, with large reserve magazines of powder. One reason given why the Russians do not answer the Allied fire with more industry is that they are short of ammunition. The French and English are now pitching heavy shell into the north side at the rate of about thirty per hour, but without reply. This firing is within sight from the door of the hut in which I write this, but I am already too much used to it to go out to look.—[Cor. N. O. Picayune.

EUROPEAN NEWS.

EXTRACTS FROM ENGLISH PAPERS RECEIVED BY THE CANADA.

The mail steamship Canada, Capt. Stone, from Liverpool on the morning of the 10th inst., arrived at Halifax, Nov. 22, at 4 o'clock P. M.

The War. The most important feature of the week's news is the effort made by France and England to bring Sweden into an active alliance. Gen. Canrobert is in Stockholm charged with this mission, and Sweden is required either to assent or refuse.

Peace Rumors. It is reported from Berlin that the Czar has recently made confidential communication to Prussia and Austria of his wish to renew negotiations, and that M. Bourqueney, French Ambassador, has returned to Vienna with fresh instructions to meet the contingency of proposals from Russia. It is further said that Prince Gortschakoff, Diplomatists from Vienna, and Russian Ministers from other German Courts, are certainly to meet the Czar at Warsaw in the middle of the month, when the question of the renewal of negotiations will be settled. It is also stated that the Emperor of France is favorable to a renewal of diplomacy.

The Danube. The Austrian Gazette states authoritatively that a French camp of 50,000 men is being formed at Silistria.

The Crimea. There is absolutely nothing to report. The armies are engaged in building huts for the winter, with occasional military promenades and exchange of long shots with Cossack pickets.

Several rumors of battles near Simpheropol have turned out false.

Letters from Sebastopol say that the Russian projectiles from the north side reach almost every spot of the city. A desultory fire is kept up on both sides. The allies say that the Russians, although keeping up fire, are making preparations for a retreat.

General L'Vaillant is appointed French Governor of Sebastopol.

Sir Colin Campbell, taking offence at the appointment of Gen. Codrington, has asked leave to return to England.

The following is the substance of several official despatches and letters:

"The French will garrison Kinburn, consequently the English returned to Sebastopol Nov. 3. All the Turkish forces for Asia have left Sebastopol."

Gen Simpson, on Oct. 27, says the weather is magnificent, and the British troops healthy. Exchange of prisoners had arrived from Odessa.

Odessa intelligence of Oct. 27 says Gen. Todleben is fast rendering Nicolieff defensible. Below Spasska, where the river is only 600 fathoms broad, gunboats, manned by crews of the former Black Sea fleet, are stationed. Batteries are being erected on both sides of the river. The inhabitants of Nicolieff and Kherson are informed that the cities may be attacked, and a large proportion have gone into the interior at the government expense.

It is reported that Odessa will be disarmed and the guns sent to Nicolieff.

General Luders with the grenadiers and cavalry is posted between Kinburn and Kherson.

It is confirmed that the Czar and the Duke Constantine witnessed the capture of Kinburn from Otchakoff. The Czar has returned to St. Petersburgh direct from Nicolieff without staying at Warsaw.

The squadron of the Bug have towed out two rafts of oak timber worth $100,000. Beyond this nothing has been done except making reconnoissances.

St. Petersburg despatches say that the Russian army in the Crimea has provisions sufficient for eight months.

The Vienna paper Fremden Blatt learns from Prince Gortschakoff's headquarters, that the Russian army in the Crimea amounts to 200,000 men.

The grenadier corps mainly had arrived at Simpheropol, accompanied by 3000 wagons drawn by oxen. So the army is provided for six months, and Gortschakoff will not expect convoys after November, when the steppes will be covered with snow.

Asia. Omer Pacha has opened friendly communications with Schamyl. Selim Pacha is to establish himself at Erzeroum with the Turkish Imperial Guard, whence he will threaten the rear of the Russian army, besieging Kars. Omer Pacha commenced his advance on Kutais on the 20th, with 22 battalions. Accounts from Persia mention the departure of the ambassador for St. Petersburg.

Latest. Rumored Bombardment of Nicolieff. Vienna, Nov. 3. Despatches have been received at the Turkish Embassy, stating that the bombardment of Nicolieff commenced on the 29th of October, and was continued the whole of the following day. The result was not then known. It was added that the Emperor Alexander had been induced to leave the place before the bombardment began, but the Duke Constantine would not be prevailed upon to leave the town.

Turkey. Constantinople, Oct. 29. It is said that the Sultan will visit Paris and London in the spring of next year, having made his intention to that effect known to the Grand Vizier and principal ministers.

Great Britain. The excitement respecting the war with the United States has quite subsided, and the leading journals are ashamed of the panic they had created, and attempt to excuse it, and let themselves down gently by attributing it to what they call the hostile attitude of the American government to an election ruse on the part of the President or his Cabinet, although it is notorious that the excitement was begun, fostered and kept alive by the London Times. Intelligent Englishmen of all ranks, express themselves pained and humiliated by the whole affair.

Spain. Unfriendly relations are arising between Great Britain and Spain. Firstly, in reference to the case of Mr Boylan, the British resident of Santiago, who was expelled from Cuba last April, notwithstanding the agreements of Spain to submit his grievances to the arbitration of Mr Muir, the British Consul at New Orleans. Secondly, with reference to the appointment of Don Domingo Moostich as Governor of Fernando Po. Great Britain demands indemnification for Mr Boylan's losses, and says that as Don Moostich is an old slave trader, his appointment is insulting to British feelings, and must be cancelled.

Holland. Mr Fillmore has been visiting the King of Holland.

Italy. The misunderstanding between Sardinia and Tuscany remains unsettled, pending a reference to the Cabinets of England and France.

The sailing of the Anglo-Swiss legion from Genoa is countermanded until the spring.

King Victor Emmanuel, of Sardinia, was to arrive in Paris about the 20th inst., and in England early in December, accompanied by several of his cabinet.

The correspondent of the London Post, writing from Naples 30th ult., says there is no longer any doubt that a revolutionary movement has broken out in Sicily. Some of the insurgents have been taken and shot. It is difficult to get details. The authorities say the movement is not of a political nature, but is occasioned by cholera and scarcity. This remains to be seen.

Austria. The new financial measures engross public attention. The new Concordat is not yet published.

The Arch Duke Maximilian has met with a serious accident at Trieste, having been thrown from his carriage and received a fracture of the skull.

From Russia the communications seem to convey a more warlike feeling, but this may be nothing more than the cover to an urgent anxiety for peace.

Obituary.

Died in Kingsbury Ind. Nov. 6th, Theodore Catlin, in the 51st year of his age.

Br C. was afflicted with a chronic disease, consequently he did not enjoy good health for a number of years previous to his death.—His friends for sometime past have been aware that he could not continue long, yet so rapid was his decline that his death at the time was quite unexpected.

Br. C. had been an Adventist for a number of years, and often expressed a desire to live to see the Savior come. But he, like many others who have anticipated that day, has fallen under the power of death, and is now sleeping sweetly in the grave, waiting for Him to appear who is the "resurrection and the life," and who is to rob the grave of its victims, and "destroy him that had the power of death, that is the devil."

May the blessing of heaven rest upon the friends who are left to mourn, and especially on our Sr., the companion of the deceased.

Notices.

The work recommended a few weeks since by so many of the Preachers, is now written, and will go to the publisher's as soon as pledges are received sufficient to warrant the undertaking. As this is a gift to the cause except the actual expense, I do not feel it duty to borrow $4 or 500, and be compelled to peddle my own productions to get out of debt. If the preaching Brn. interested would just name the thing to the Churches, and get some one or more in each place to pledge themselves for 10, 15, or 20, as they may choose, it will save the trouble of getting single subscribers at 50 cts. each.—Such a course would secure the object at once. 1,000 books will cost about $400. 50 pledges, 20 each, will warrant the undertaking. I have received pledges for over 100 without any effort. Now this is a short and easy method, and if done soon, the work will soon appear, and the Nos. be sent to those who pledge, for distribution.

For The Crisis.

What meaneth it?

What can mean this great commotion
Of the nations far and near,
Like the waves of troubled ocean
When the wild storm-clouds appear?

Oh, tell me why this waking up
Of mighty men, but to the fray?
To drink that bitter, bitter cup
Prepared for them in God's great day?

Oh bitter cup! but they must drink,
For God hath said it must be so,
E'en now they tremble on that brink,
Where waves of terror roll below.

The rush of nations soon must come,
As mighty waters to the deep,
The morning breaks—the fray's begun,
Although the world unheeding sleeps;

Except the weak and scattered few
Who wait for that eternal day,
When He they love shall meet their view,
Saying, "Ye faithful, come away!"

Oh happy day! soon may it come!
Then we shall lay our armor by,
The battle fought—the victory won,
And meet the Savior in the sky.

PAULINGS.

For The Crisis.

The wicked not immortal; or the immortality of the soul disproved by Bible truth.

A lecture delivered by P. Tandy, Sept. 30, at Mill Village, Goshen N. H.

"To the Law, and to the Testimony." Now mark; if the spirit, (or soul) be conscious and enjoys an independent existence after its release from the body, then by parity of reasoning, it was conscious and enjoyed an independent existence before its connection with the body; for certain it is, that if the fact that the spirit returns to God, proves that it exists as a conscious being in His presence, then the fact that it came from God proves that it existed as a conscious being in His presence before its connection with the body. But I am bold to assert, that the Word of God gives no such intimation. Such a statement is not a Bible sentiment. It presents no such idea as that a living, immortal soul entered as a tenant into the corporeal frame of the man, to be liberated again at death. The idea of Scripture on this point is simply this, the lifeless man becomes a living soul, (not as my opponents vainly suppose, or infer, an immortal soul!) But the sentence of death, (some imagine, for they have no Bible for this either;) cannot touch the soul, for that is immortal, say they. If any one at this enlightened age of the world dare say, that the sentence of death cannot touch the soul, it being immortal; we want them to bring forward the proof, we mean the Bible proof; inferential proof, or a guess so will not do, we must have a "thus saith the Lord."

My opponents may say the soul is an invisible, intangible, immaterial substance, uncompounded and therefore indivisible and cannot die! It is true, that human wisdom (which is foolishness with God) asserts this, but what saith the Scripture? "The soul that sinneth it shall die."—Ezek. 18: 20. Here the principles of human philosophy and the teachings of the word of God are in direct antagonism!—If the soul be naturally immortal, its essential condition is, that it cannot die; but if we examine critically many passages of holy writ, we shall find abundant testimony to the contrary.

"To the Law and to the testimony."—Turn to the passage quoted above, also the 4th verse of the same chap; and also Prov. 16: 17. "The highway of the upright is to depart from evil; he that keepeth his way preserveth his soul." Job 33: 22, 28, 30. "Yea, his soul draweth near to the grave, and his life to the destroyers." He will deliver his soul from going into the pit, and his life shall see the light." To bring back his soul from the pit, to be enlightened with the light of the living."

We might refer to numerous passages of similar import, but these must suffice for the present. It is here clearly represented that in case of pain and disease the soul draws near to the grave; which could not be the case if it were immortal, and not subject to death. Ps. 49: 6–9. "They that trust in their wealth, and boast themselves in the abundance of their riches, none of them can by any means redeem his brother, or give to God a ransom for him; for the redemption of his soul is precious, and it ceaseth forever; that he should still live forever, and not see corruption." Ps. 49: 14, 15.—"Like sheep they are laid in the grave; (or in the dust,) death shall feed on them; and the upright shall have dominion over them in the morning; and their beauty shall consume in the grave. But God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave; for He shall receive me. Selah."

Hence, it appears obvious that all the wealth of the wicked cannot save them from death. The body and soul of the sinner must die. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." Ezek. 18: 4th and 20th. No one with all his riches can redeem his dearest friend, that he should still live, and not see corruption in the grave; for the redemption of the soul is too precious to be purchased with money. Although they may arrive at all the opulence and splendor of the world, yet all their pleasures must finally end in death! "Man that is in honor, and understandeth not, is like the beasts that perish." "Like sheep they are laid in the grave; but (says the Psalmist,) God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave."

Here the contrast is brought to view, and it is simply this; that while the wicked will ultimately be consumed, or destroyed, and no redemption of their souls is promised; the righteous, through the merits of Him who died to redeem their souls from the power of the grave, have a lively hope of deliverance, when the Redeemer comes the second time, (and not till then;) and then they will sing, "O death where is thy sting! O grave where is thy victory!"

Again, we never read in the Scriptures of divine truth, of an immortal, imperishable, or undying soul; or of a soul that can never die; or that must live forever, and be in its existence parallel to the throne of God. Hence, we feel at full liberty from the word of God, to state, that immortality is never applied, in any form to the sinner out of Christ. But, on the other hand, the opposite truth (of non-immortality) is clearly revealed in the word of God.

An evasion of this truth is sometimes resorted to by saying, the death of the soul is spiritual death. In relation to the idea of its being spiritual death, there are some considerations which render it very absurd.

1st. It is explained in Gen. to be returning unto the dust, which certainly cannot mean spiritual death.

2d. "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive, (or be resurrected) "As by the offence of one, judgment came upon all men to condemnation; even so by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon all unto justification of life." The one assertion, you see, my friends, is as broad as the other; and both include all mankind: therefore, it is inevitable, if it be spiritual death that spiritual life must be the eternal inheritance of all men; consequently, (if this be true,) the doctrine of universal salvation is true.

3d. If it be spiritual death, i. e. death in trespasses and in sins, the penalty of the law demanded is sin, not punishment; but being dead in trespasses and in sins is the crime and not the punishment of the sinner.

4th. To make the law of God honorable, its demands must be fully met; and Jesus was without sin, and never spiritually dead in trespasses and sins. He could not have paid the price of Redemption in that sense. Hence let me remark, that formerly I could not understand the true relation of the atonement to the demands of the law. I could not see how Christ stepped in, in place of the transgressor, and presented a vicarious sacrifice, dying, the just for the unjust—being made a curse for us, &c. But with my present views, the nature of the atonement opens in clear, rational and beautiful light. I can now see how He is the "Savior of all men;" how "as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive;" how "He made popitiation for the sins of the whole world;" how "judgment came upon all men unto justification of life;" and how infants can be saved. Now the penalty of the law being natural death, He (Christ) suffered its penalty by pouring out His soul unto death; and thus He abolished death, or took off the Adamic penalty from the whole human race; or rather, we might say, He purchased their ransom from the power of the grave.—Thus the whole human family will have a resurrection. Our Savior thus showed forth victory over death, in vindicating the sinner's cause. Hence Jesus says, "I am He that liveth and was dead; and behold I am alive forevermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell, (hades, or the grave) and of death; (Rev. 1: 18.)—The death of the soul is in consequence of personal, or actual sin. But the question comes up, may it not be eternal death, or endless suffering? Answer; if, an atonement were made by vicarious suffering, then the suffering endured, in order to make it vicarious, must precisely meet the case. Hence, whatever death our dear Redeemer endured, the same must answer the demand of the law, and be the identical death to which the sinner is condemned. We can see at once, that it was not endless misery; but it was the death of the cross or physical death which He endured.

For the Crisis.

"I will bring distress upon men; and they shall walk like blind men." Bible.

By S. S. Brewer.

No. 1.

Dear Reader:—The above is the language of Inspiration; and whatever God has spoken by holy Prophets, His own almighty arm will do.

In a preceding verse it reads thus.—"The great day of the Lord is near. It hasteth greatly, even the VOICE of the day of the Lord. The mighty man shall cry there bitterly." In the Revelation we find a parallel. "In the days of the VOICE of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound, the mystery of God should be finished as he hath DECLARED to his servants the prophets." That is, as He has from time to time made known His purposes to the Church through His Prophets.

First, notice some of God's declarations to His servants the Prophets.

Gen. 6: 13. "And God said unto Noah, The end of all flesh is come before me; for the earth is filled with violence through them; and, behold, I will destroy them with the earth."

Gen. 18: 17, 18. "And the Lord said, Shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do; Seeing that Abraham shall surely become a great and mighty nation, and all the nations of the earth shall be blessed in him?"

Isa. 46: 9, 10. "Remember the former things of old: for I am God, and there is none else; I am God, and there is none like me. Declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient time the things that are not yet done, saying, My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure."

Isa. 42: 9. "Behold, the former things are come to pass, and new things do I declare; before they spring forth, I tell you of them."

Amos 3: 7. "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets."

John 15: 15. "Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his lord dooth: but I have called you friends: for all things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you."

Such, dear reader, has been the mercy of uncreated benevolence in all past ages, notwithstanding man's base ingratitude and wilful rejection of oft repeated warnings and judgments.

In "the Revelation of Jesus Christ which God gave to him to show unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass," there seems to be a period called THE DAYS of the voice of the seventh angel. The Apostle speaks of the voice of the Prophets being read every Sabbath day, and the Jews fulfilled them. Acts 13: 27, "For they that dwell at Jerusalem, and their rulers, because they knew him not, nor yet the voices of the Prophets which are read every Sabbath day, they have fulfilled them in condemning him." It would seem from the above language, that whatever the Prophets have spoken to us in connection with the coming of the Lord is their voice announcing to us to prepare for the sublime and awful realities of that great day.

About the time that the Man of sorrows made His appearance among His own to be rejected by them, a mysterious personage appeared, clothed in singular raiment, and declared—"I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness." Here John uttered the voice of the Prophet Isaiah.—"Prepare ye the way of the Lord;" and it seems to me the language of the Revelator in speaking of the days of the voice of the seventh Angel has reference to the language of the Savior in Luke 21st, "distress of nations with perplexity."—This state of things is the very last link in the consecutive chain of events leading from the destruction of Jerusalem to the sign of the Son of man in heaven.

Also—it is in harmony with His holy Prophet. Hear him announce the day near and then use the expression "the VOICE OF THE DAY." If they of Jerusalem heard the voices of the Prophets read, in like manner heard the—so to speak—anti-typical voice of John sounding forth verbally the declaration of their Prophets Isaiah and Malachi, (Isa. 40: 3; Mal. 3: 1,) here the language of the holy seers in the above instances had its literal accomplishment; and during the period called those days were the days of the voice for the preparation for Christ's first Advent.

Says Dr. A. Clark on Matt. 3: 3, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord," "The idea is taken from the practice of eastern monarchs, who, whenever they entered on an expedition or took a journey through a desert country, sent harbingers before them to prepare all things for their passage; and pioneers to open the passes, to level the ways, and to remove all impediments. The officers appointed to superintend such preparations were called by the Latins stratores.

"Diodorus' account of the march of Semiramis into Media and Persia will give us a clear notion of the preparation of the way for a royal expedition. "In her march to Ecbatana she came to the Tarcean mountain which, extending many furlongs, and being full of many craggy precipices and deep hollows which could not be passed without making a great compass about, being desirous therefore of leaving an everlasting memorial of herself, as well as shortening the way, she ordered the precipices to be digged down and the hollows to be filled up at great expense. She made a shorter and more expeditious road, which to this day is called from her, the road of Semiramis. Afterward she went into Persia and all the other countries of Asia subject to her dominion; and wherever she went she ordered the mountains and precipices to be leveled, and raised causeways in the plain country, and at great expense made the ways passable.

"Semiramis, according to Rollin, was born at Ascalon, a city of Syria, and she it was that undertook the building of ancient Babylon. She it was that undertook to surpass all her predecessors in magnificence, and employed two millions of men in order to carry out her ambitious designs."

In like manner the Revelator would have us understand by the expression, "in the days of THE VOICE of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound," (one has rendered it, when he shall delay to sound,) that some time would transpire from the commencement till he had finished sounding. In ch. 11: 15, it reads, "the seventh angel SOUNDED." Turn and read vs. 15–17 It seems to me that the effect of the seventh angel's mission, is to arouse the nations and produce the condition referred to by the Savior in the 21 of Luke—"Distress of nations with perplexity." Also to fulfil His declaration by the VOICE of the holy prophets. Isa. 23: 9. "The Lord of hosts hath purposed it, to stain the pride of all glory, and to bring into contempt all the honorable of the earth." Also the declaration of the apocalyptic angel. It causes the angry condition of the nations. We purpose to notice in the next articles, the distress and anger of the nations.

The FIFTH ANGEL sounded five months—prophetic time—or one hundred and fifty years, commencing A. D. 1299 and ending in 1449. Then commenced the sounding of the SIXTH ANGEL, to continue an hour, a day, a month and a year—beginning at the close of the fifth angel's period, dating from 1449, the above prophetic time would carry us down to 1840. Then commenced, in all probability, "the days of the voice of the seventh angel," called in ch. 11: 14, the third wo, or the QUICKLY.

We are doubtless now in the closing days of the quickly, and the harvest is ripening. Both tares and wheat are now fitting for their place of destination. May God in mercy grant us power to watch and pray, and keep our garments unspotted from the world. Amen.

LAWRENCE, Mass.

For The Crisis.

Letter from Dr. A. Decker.

BUFFALO, Nov. 19th, 1855.

Dear Br. Merriam:—I was not aware until this evening that any one had ever written on Rev. 12th, and had taken the same view in regard to the Woman that I did. But having just been handed the following, taken from the "Voice of Truth and glad Tidings," published in 1844, I send it to you for publication; believing a correct understanding of this symbolical "Woman" to be of much importance.

Yours, in love of the truth,

DR. A. DECKER.

"Having, as we believe, ascertained what the "beast is, we next inquire, what does the "Woman" symbolize? It symbolizes the nominal Church. "For the Lord hath called thee a woman." Isa. 54: 6. "A woman clothed with the sun," Rev. 12: 1. These and other passages speak of the Church under the similitude of a Woman, which we think no one will deny. But is the harlot Woman in Rev. 17th, the same with the Woman clothed with the sun, in the 12th ch.? We think they are the same, with the exception that her last state is a state of dissipated prostitution, or apostacy.

"It is admitted, and long advocated by, all Protestants, that the Church has apostatized from its primitive purity. Paul predicted that there should come a "falling away" before the man of sin should be revealed, (2 Thess. 2,) and we think this same falling away is referred to by John in Rev. 12th, in the history there given of the "Woman." He first sees her clothed with the sun, &c. But she soon flees into the wilderness, a place of disorder and darkness, (Jer. 2: 31,) a fit place for the earth to help her. God should have been her only help. Eagles' wings are also given her. The wings of an unclean, proud and destructive bird, such as were plucked from the proud king of Babylon, Dan. 7th. Did God give His pure Church such wings that she might escape from her enemies into the wilderness? we cannot believe it; neither does John say He did. But he says, "to the Woman were given two wings of a great eagle." Then who did give them? The "earth helped the Woman," we think gives the correct answer.

All this we think took place under the reign of Pagan Rome; and that her wilderness state, the "place prepared of God," did not commence until the rise of the beast in ch. 13th, which was to continue forty two months, the same length of time that the woman was to be in the wilderness. Doubtless both cases refer to the same time. The Woman does not fly while in the wilderness, but fled into it.—The wilderness is her place, prepared of God, where they "shall feed her for a time, and times, and half a time," or 1260 years.

It is thought by those of an opposite view, that the Woman should be viewed in the light of purity while in her place in the wilderness, because God prepared it for her. But has not God prepared the place for the "Devil and his angels?"—Certainly: and must they therefore be pure? No one will contend for this.—Neither do we believe the Woman was pure while in "her place" 1260 years.—Far from it. She was holding unlawful connection with the "beast," or kings of the earth, during this time. "THEY fed her,' (Rev. 12: 6) not God. With what did they feed her? "And I saw the Woman drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus." Rev. 17: 6. Blood, then, was her food! The beast shed it, and the Woman drank and became intoxicated with it. She lived in a state of dissipation and fornication with the kings of the earth while in "her place." "With whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication." Rev. 17: 2. If this is not her character, why does John talk of her being the "MOTHER OF HARLOTS?" v. 5th. In her state, or place of concubinage, and since she has taken her seat on the beast, she has brought forth a numerous progeny of illegitimate daughters, who have soon imitated the example of their mother, or grand, or great grand-mother, and like her have become harlots."

For The Crisis.

GREENLAND, N. H. Nov. 16, 1855.

Letter from Sr. H. H. Hodgdon.

Dear Br. Merriam:—I am glad that the Crisis is continued as a messenger of glad tidings to the meek, a preacher of speedy deliverance to the lone captives who are waiting for redemption, and a warning to the world of the "day of wrath" that is just at hand. The many warm-hearted epistles which appear in its columns from those of like precious faith, are like cold water to a thirsty soul; and I hope it will be continued till the Chief Shepherd shall appear. How many times when cast down and almost discouraged, have I taken up the Crisis, and there found something from the pilgrims scattered abroad, that would raise my drooping spirits, and draw my mind forward to the glorious day of Israel's redemption; and I felt as though I could forget the things that were behind, and press forward with renewed courage, to reach the mark, and gain the prize—a share in the inheritance which is soon to be revealed, and which is promised to all those who love the appearing of Jesus.

Truly ours is a blessed hope while we remain here in this wilderness of sin and wo; without it, earth would present a dark picture indeed to those who have no treasure here.

We look around in the earth and see iniquity everywhere abounding; evil men and seducers waxing worse and worse, deceiving others, while they themselves are being deceived by the great adversary, and are going blindfold to destruction. Others, who were once the people of God, and walked according to His Word, and in the light of His countenance, have closed their eyes to the light, and turned away their ears from hearing the truth; though still retaining a form of godliness, they deny the power, and are sleeping securely on the eve of the Judgment, utterly regardless of the day of wrath so soon to burst upon this devoted world.

But thank God, the light is still shining, for all who are willing to receive it; and still "In lingering tones of mercy" the last note of warning is sounding, for all who are willing to heed it.

I am glad that there are still a few who are not ashamed of the "Hope of the Gospel," but are earnestly contending for the faith once delivered to the saints, and who are willing to confess to a scoffing world that they are pilgrims and strangers in the earth; and that like Abraham they are seeking a better country—even a heavenly; and are looking for a city which hath foundations: one that will stand when the cities of the nations will fall, and a mighty earthquake shall cause the foundations of the earth to shake, and it shall flee, together with the heavens, from before the face of its Creator.

O who would not want to have a shelter then—to be hid away with the people of God, while His wrath is poured out upon His enemies, without any mixture of mercy? And then, after the deluge of fire has swept over the earth, to see it restored to its Eden glory, to be permitted in possession of immortality to range the fair fields of Paradise, to know that the destroyer cannot enter there, to see Him who gave His life for us, but who will be the light and joy of the Eternal City, and the undisputed Sovereign of the renewed Earth—surely this will far more than repay us for all we may have suffered here; though the way may sometimes be dark and thorny, afflictions be many and severe, and our hearts may be grieved with trials sore, yet with the blessed hope of soon meeting all the redeemed in the Paradise of God, we can say,

What are all our trials here,
If Jesus counts us meet
With that enraptured host to appear,
And worship at His feet.

The waves may beat high, and the tide run hard against us, yet while we have the assurance that our Father is at the helm, we will face the storm, yet a little while longer, knowing we shall soon enter the haven of Eternal Rest.

"Yes He will come, no longer fear
Though earth and hell assail;
His Word attests the moment near,
And that can never fail."

Yours in hope,

HARRIETT H. HODGDON.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Br. M. Grant.

BAKERSVILLE, CT., Nov. 20th, '55.

Dear Br. in Christ:—Allow me to say a word of my tour in Conn., for the last two weeks. Br. Mathewson has been my true yoke fellow in trying to feed the flock of God. Our meetings have all been as good, and many of them better than we anticipated. This remark is particularly true of Winsted, Newfield and East Otis. We found the children of God in Plymouth Hollow, Waterbury, Cheshier and Bristol, in a very healthy condition.

Some have apparently drawn back unto perdition, but most are seeking to be fully conformed to the will of their heavenly Master. I am happily disappointed in the state of things in this part of the vineyard.

I saw Br. A. M. Higgins soon after my arrival in Ct., who has been visiting the different Churches in this state, and he remarked, "I have never seen them stand so well as at the present time." I expected to hear the opposite, but have found from observation, facts to confirm the statement. There are some exceptions, but those who are Christians, are trying to be better than they have ever been. They seem determined to be among those who will sing the conqueror's song, when paradise is restored.

Although the day was stormy, last Sabbath, and the traveling bad, still we had a very large gathering at East Otis.—Our social meeting at noon was excellent, while several spoke heartily of their determination to continue in the service of their Redeemer.

A Methodist sister came several miles for the purpose of being buried with Christ in baptism. The Lord gave her great peace of mind in obeying His requirements.

I have never known a case of baptism where a rich peace of mind was not bestowed in return for their obedience.

For myself, I would say, that I have never felt more determined to be a Christian than now.

The Lord is good to me, praise His holy name.

Your Br. in Christ. M. GRANT.

Exposition of the 12th, 13th and 17th Chapters of Revelation.

BY DR. A. DECKER.

(Concluded)

Having thus clearly established the latest point at which the 1260 prophetic days could commence, as I think, I shall next examine the Prophetic history in regard to "seven heads." I have already shown by a reference to the 17th chapter, that these heads arose in a consecutive manner, one only bearing rule at a time; and represented "seven kings," or kingdoms, which became the heads, or agents of the Greek government by virtue of sustaining the same relation to the Catholic Church. No one of these heads can be justly understood as representing the Greek empire, since that is properly symbolized by the "beast," as separately considered from the seven heads. The head peculiar to the beast, is never spoken of in prophecy; for it takes the whole beast to represent a kingdom. Hence, three of the kingdoms of the book of Daniel, are represented simply by a beast, with all its component parts, and no one part of those kingdoms is represented by the head.—But when we come to the Leopard beast, of Dan. 7th, it is spoken of as having four heads—denoting the four kingdoms into which the Greek empire was finally divided, after the death of Alexander the Great; as though the leopard beast which represented that empire in its embodied state had no head—that is, the head peculiar to the beast, which represented the empire before it was divided, was not reckoned with the four, and is never spoken of in prophecy; otherwise the beast would have been represented with five heads instead of four. The Leopard beast of Rev. therefore, represents the original kingdom, or, Greek empire; and the seven heads represent the seven succeeding kingdoms, which become its heads or agents, by virtue of sustaining certain relations, and carrying out the same principles or laws. To make the Greek empire simply a head, would be to say that there was nothing but heads, or turn the Church of Rome into the beast; and thus make the Greek empire her head or agent, which would be to contradict the prophecy as well as the history, which makes the Church the mouth or prophet of the beast, as I have before shown.

About the middle of the eighth century the Greek empire became so weakened, as no longer to be able to protect the interests of the Catholic Church. Hence, Pope "Stephen second, in his difficulties with the Longobards, then threatening Rome and the possessions of the Roman Church, applied to Pepin, king of France, from whom he obtained that assistance which he had sought for in vain from the feeble government of the east Roman emperors." "By degrees the connection between the popes and the east Roman or Greek emperors grew continually more feeble, and in place of this antiquated relation, came in the new one to the emperors of the Franks." (Neander, Vol. 3 p. 119, 120.) Thus of the leopard beast, A. D. 755 Charlemagne, successor to Pepin, subdued all nations that had settled in upon, and divided the western empire, to his imperial authority, and was crowned in 800 by pope Leo 3d, in the name of the Roman people; and thus constituted the emperor of western Rome. Out of this empire, therefore, the succeeding heads are to arise, in the order before mentioned, each being crowned by the pope, and sustaining the same relation to the Church.

SECOND HEAD—HOUSE OF SAXONY.

About the middle of the tenth century, "the character of the princes of the Carlovingian line" which continued to reign in France, became "too little distinguished to challenge the obedience of Italy."—Hence, Otho the Great, of the House of Saxony, descended from the Alps in A. D. 961, and obtained the conquest of Italy; and received at the hands of Pope John 12th the imperial crown.—Hallam's Middle Ages, pp. 126, 227.

THIRD HEAD—HOUSE OF FRANCONIA.

The princes of the Saxon nation continued to reign until A. D. 1024, when they were succeeded by the princes of the House of Franconia. Conrad 2d was the first of the Franconian line of emperors See Hallam, p. p. 128, 228.

FOURTH HEAD—HOUSE OF SWABIA.

At the death of Henry 5th the line of emperors of the Franconian nation was extinguished, and the princes of the House of Swabia succeeded to the dominion of Italy in A. D. 1138, (Hallam, p. 230,) and continued to reign until 1268, when the "last prince of the House of Swabia fell by the hand of Charles, duke of Anjou."

FIFTH HEAD—HOUSE OF ANJOU.

Charles, Duke of Anjou, was crowned by the Pope, king of Naples, at the above date, 1268. (See Taylor's Manual of Modern History, pp. 129, 130; Hallam, p. 149.)

SIXTH HEAD—HOUSE OF SPAIN.

The House of Anjou or kingdom of Naples became the fifth head, and continued to 1550, when the kingdom of Naples was succeeded by Spain.

SEVENTH HEAD—HOUSE OF AUSTRIA.

Spain was finally succeeded by the House of Austria, which obtained the dominion of Italy in the year 1700. Austria, therefore, is the seventh and last head (or king) of the leopard beast. I have omitted a reference to the history in regard to the rise of the last two heads, in consequence of its being already so well known. That the seventh head is the one that John saw wounded and healed again, is sufficiently proved by the 10th verse.—"He that leadeth into captivity, shall go into captivity; he that killeth with the sword, must be killed with the sword."—This gives us the time when this wounding was to be accomplished, and shows that the seventh, and last head was not to be wounded, until after the period of making war upon the saints had expired; and the beast had finished his work in this respect.

By the wounding of this head, and healing it again, we are not, however, to understand that this head was cut in two, and thus making the eighth head out of the seventh. All must see at once, that it was the same seventh head after it was healed, that it was before it was wounded! to wound a head and heal it again, could in no sense make two of it! I shall show presently, that France became the eighth head, from some time before the "two witnesses" were slain; and consequently, the two-horned beast, that spoke like the dragon. This will be shown by a reference to the 17th chapter; which I now propose for a short time to consider, and which will enable us to understand, more perfectly, this part of the prophecy. By a careful comparison, it will be seen that, John commences the history of the Woman and of the red beast, or Dragon, in the 17th ch., precisely where he left off in the 12th. In the 12th ch., the history is brought down to where the wilderness state begins, and the Woman fled into it; and were it not for the 17th ch., we should have remained entirely ignorant of her future history; nor should we have known but very little about the further history of the dragon. In the first and second verses, the Angel promised to show John the "judgment of the great whore, that sitteth upon many waters,"&c. In the third v. the Angel is represented as carrying John in the spirit into the wilderness, (into which the woman fled, the last he saw of her in the 12th ch.) "And I saw a woman sit upon a scarlet colored beast, full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns."

In the 7th v., the Angel promises to satisfy John's wonders, by telling him "the mystery of the Woman, and of the beast that carrieth her, which hath the the seven heads and the ten horns"—Thus he saith, (v. 8th) "the beast that thou sawest was, and is not, and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and go into perdition." Let it be remembered that John in his visions, always travels forward; consequently the Angel started with John, "in the spirit," from the isle of Patmos, or, from the other side of the wilderness state; and when John arrived into the wilderness, the first thing he saw, (in traveling down the stream of time) was the Woman seated upon a scarlet colored beast. But John did not stop here; for in the eighth v. just quoted, he is represented as having passed clear by the beast. "The beast that thou didst see was, and is not," (Whiting,) and consequently, had previously (to where he is now represented as standing) descended into the bottomless pit; and which is sufficiently proved from the fact, that the beast, at a future period, was to (shall) ascend out of the bottomless pit and go into perdition; and they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, (whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world,) when they shall behold the beast that was, and is not, and will be," (Whiting,) or, when he "shall ascend out of the bottomless pit," which is the obvious meaning—that is, they shall wonder at the beast that was, and is not when they shall see him coming up again out of the pit; for, doubtless, "they" had supposed that after he was cast into the pit, he would never get out; or, "they" would never see him again.—But in this they were to be disappointed, which would cause them so much to wonder! That the Angel and John were still in the wilderness at the time the Angel gave John the above instruction in the 8th v. is sufficiently proved from the fact that they had not yet passed the 6th king. V. 10th. "And there are seven kings: five are fallen, and one is, (the sixth,) and the other (the seventh,) is not yet come." This shows how far through the wilderness they had gone at the time the Angel stopped to give John this information, and also, proves that the seven kings (of which I have spoken in my remarks on the 13th. ch.) reigned during the interval while the red beast was shut up in the bottomless pit. That John saw the scarlet beast upon which the Woman was seated, in the first part of the wilderness, and that these seven kings all existed inside of that period, I shall now prove by comparing the 11th v. of this ch. with the 7th v. of the 11th ch.

V. 11th. "And the beast that was, and is not, even he is the eighth, and is of the seventh, and goeth into perdition."

This proves that the "beast that was," (upon which John saw the Woman sitting,) "and is not," (at the time John received this instruction,) and should "ascend out of the bottomless pit," (at a future period,) should be the eighth head—not a head wounded and healed, but "the beast that was, and is not, and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit," "even he is the eighth."

Ch. 11: 7. "And when they (the two witnesses) shall have finished their testimony, the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit, shall make war against them, and shall overcome them, and kill them."

This verse gives us the chronology when this beast ascended out of the pit, and also proves that France, as far back as 1792, constituted the eighth head; since it has been unquestionably proved that France at that time slew the two witnesses. Austria, therefore, as I have before shown, is the seventh and last head of the leopard beast; for that beast had just seven heads, and no more, though one was wounded and healed again.—That the red or scarlet colored beast of the 17th ch. is synonymous with the red beast or dragon of the 12th ch. instead of the leopard beast of the 13th ch., is clearly proved from the following considerations.

First, the color identifies the beast of the 17th ch. with that of the 12th. If any one doubts that the serpent or dragon is called a beast in the Bible, let them refer to Gen. 3: 1.

Second:—The scarlet beast was shut up in the bottomless pit, for the most part of the 1260 days or years, and ascended out at the end of that period; and which therefore, could only be predicated of the dragon, since the leopard beast "made war with the saints," and exercised power "over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations," during that whole period: consequently could in no sense be said to be in the bottomless pit, and which sufficiently distinguishes it from the scarlet colored beast.

Third:—The scarlet beast is not only shown to be the dragon from the fact that as soon as he ascends out of the pit he immediately begins to make war against the "two witnesses," and thus shows that he has lost none of his original disposition and hatred to the word of God in consequence of having thus passed through it, but, in the 16th ch. and 13th v. he is incontrovertibly shown to be the Dragon, out of which, one of the three unclean spirits goes to gather the nations to the battle of the great day of God Almighty.

Fourth:—France is emphatically the infidel kingdom in modern Europe; and therefore can only fitly represent the Roman pagan empire, as symbolized by the dragon.

Fifth:—It is shown also by the 13th v. of the 16th ch., that the eighth head which represents the dragon, and the seventh head which represents the leopard beast, run parallel with each other from the time the eighth head ascended out of the bottomless pit; and although the leopard beast makes war upon the saints only 1260 years, and afterwards is wounded to death, yet his deadly wound is healed, and thus he continues with the dragon to the judgment; since they are both together under the pouring out of the sixth vial; which of itself is sufficient to prove the distinction between the scarlet and leopard beast; for the dragon is unquestionably, the eighth head, and consequently the scarlet colored beast—since the prophecy never recognizes but one ruling power at a time. The leopard beast, therefore, never goes into the bottomless pit, but continues, not, however, as the ruling power, but upon the principle that "their lives were prolonged for a season and a time"—from the time that he arose out of the sea, until he is "cast alive into the lake of fire burning with brimstone."

Sixth:—The seat of the Woman was in Rome, the capital of the western empire—the territory of the dragon. Hence the Woman sits upon the dragon until he was cast into the bottomless pit* under the reign of Charlemagne, emperor of France. The Woman seated upon the dragon, shows that since he was cast down upon the earth, she has, by virtue of her connection with the Greek government, obtained the victory over him; and now he is compelled to carry her, or yield to her authority. That the Goths, Lombards, and Saxons ruled in Italy and the western empire, while the Church of Rome existed and was seated quietly in its capital, is a fact attested in history.

Seventh:—The fact that the Leopard beast, had "crowns upon his horns," is another mark that distinguishes him from the scarlet beast; which, in this respect also, identifies the latter with the Dragon. The above, I think, is sufficient on this point. That the ten horns of the Dragon or scarlet colored beast are not synonomous with the fourth beast of the book of Daniel, is clearly stated in the 12th verse. "And the ten horns which thou sawest, are ten kings, which have received no kingdom as yet." Therefore, they were future to where John was then represented as standing; which was six sevenths of the way through the wilderness; ("Five are fallen, one is, and the other is not yet come,") and could not possibly represent the ten original kingdoms, represented by the horns of the fourth beast of Daniel 7th. The Revelation represents the partition of the Roman empire, by seven heads, since there were only seven of the ten horns that bore any considerable rule, sufficient to be denominated heads of the western empire; the last of which—the Saxons—was compelled to submit to the Catholic faith in 780 or 81, (See Mosheim, vol 1,) which ended the Dragon power.—The heads, of course, must be of the character of the beast to which they belong; therefore, must be Dragon: which was the character of those nations. The seven heads of the scarlet beast, should not be confounded with the seven kings, which have already been shown to be the heads of the leopard beast; and the heads of the leopard beast and those of the Dragon cannot be synonymous. The seven heads are interpreted to be "seven mountains;" thus showing, that the heads are not synonymous with the kings. The seven mountains, however, are not to be understood literally. An example of this kind of interpretation—interpreting one symbol by another, is furnished in the 11th ch. 4th v., where the two witnesses are interpreted to be, "two olive trees, and two candlesticks." If the seven heads are the seven literal mountains in Rome, then indeed, the Woman has always sat upon them; but, we find that, although the Church has never changed her geographical position; yet she is represented, subsequent to the beast descending into the bottomless pit, as sitting upon "many waters;" which, by interpretation, are "many nations," &c. These many waters, therefore, must be synonymous with the seven kings; upon which the Woman sat after she ceased to sit upon the scarlet colored beast—for the Angel took John into the wilderness to show him the Woman, that sitteth upon "many waters;" and the first that John saw after he arrived there, she was sitting upon a scarlet beast; therefore, she must have sat upon many waters while the beast was in the bottomless pit. Of course when the beast went into the pit, his heads must have gone in with him; for it would not be in accordance with the law of prophecy, for him to be shut up in a pit, while any of his heads, by which he is represented, are in existence. Hence, the Dragon, and the leopard beast, as represented in their last heads are both spoken of under the pouring out of the sixth vial. This is sufficient to show that the seven heads, and seven kings are not the same; and, also, to prove a wide distinction between the scarlet colored, and Leopard beast; since the latter must have ruled through his seven heads, while the former was shut up in the pit; or else, there was no ruling power during that period at all. For it is positive, that it was in the latter part of the wilderness state, that the scarlet beast was in the pit, since he ascended out as soon as the 1260 days or years ended, and made war upon the "two witnesses," and continued to be the highest ruling power, from that time until he goes into perdition. The same is true also of the two-horned beast, which comes up out of the earth, and consequently a pit, and succeeds, or exercises "all the power of the first, (leopard) beast before him," which clearly proves that he (the two-horned beast) did not come up until that period had ended; for during 1260 full years, the Leopard beast was to exercise power over "all kindreds, and tongues and nations," and, therefore, could not be succeeded, until that period had ended. As the two-horned beast comes up out of the earth or pit, at this time, it is clearly evident that he went in some time previous; an explanation of which, can only be found in the 17th ch., which is the key to the 12th and 13th chs. Therefore, the two-horned beast is nothing more or less, than the Dragon coming out of the pit, into which he must have been previously cast. For there is no other power presented in this prophecy, that could have been cast into the pit, to thus have ascended out, but the Dragon.

The two-horned beast, and the eighth head therefore, are one and the same.—France is the only nation in modern Europe, that has spoken like the Dragon; which on independent ground, is sufficient to prove France to be the two-horned beast. The "two horns" were the house of Orleans and Bourbon—the two lines of princes that claimed a right to the throne, and which were always professional adherents to the religion of Christ, or, "like a Lamb." France, therefore, only fulfils this symbol, and which is further evident from the fact that, France from the time the two witnesses were slain, has been the ruling power in Europe. I will now, to sum up this part of the argument, and to present it in as clear light as possible with my ability, state it thus. As the eighth head and two-horned beast, ascended out of the earth, or bottomless pit, at the same time—at the end of the 1260 years; and as the eighth head is the ruling power from that time on, which is, also, true of the two-horned beast, and as under the pouring out of the sixth vial, the Dragon is the only power besides the leopard beast and false prophet, which latter, I have in a former article shown to be the Church of Rome, therefore, the eighth head and two-horned beast are the same. And as the French nation slew the two witnesses, and is the world-wide known infidel power that spake like the Dragon, and consequently, the only one that can be justly called the Dragon; and has been the ruling power in Europe, from the time the two witnesses were slain to the present; therefore, France is the power meant. Having thus clearly established, as I think, that Austria is the seventh and last head of the leopard beast, I shall next show, when that power ceased to tread the "Holy city" under foot, or to "make war with the saints." That this war belonged exclusively to the leopard beast, and was to cease under the seventh head, or Austria, is sufficiently proved from the fact, that the eighth head was not to ascend out of the bottomless pit, until after the two witnesses had finished their prophecy, and, therefore, could have nothing to do with making war upon the saints, or treading the "Holy city" under foot any part of the 1260 days. This period, therefore, belongs exclusively to the leopard beast. "Power was given unto him to make war (Marg.) forty and two months."

The eighth head, therefore, is entirely out, or this side of this period, and whose specific work is to make war against the "two witnesses," and overcome and kill them after they had finished their testimony; which is entirely distinct from that of the leopard beast, and cannot come within the same period. Any effort, therefore, to fix upon an event that occurred in France, as marking the end of those "days," must be without the least foundation. It is Austria alone that can fulfil this part of the prophecy, by "terminating all relation with the court of Rome," and "abolishing the odious tribunal of the Inquisition," and establishing free toleration throughout the empire, thus putting an end to the union of Church and State, that was established no later than 521. That this was accomplished in 1781, 1260 years from that date, the following extracts most unequivocally prove.

In 1781, Joseph 2d, emperor of Austria, to carry into effect more fully those principles of reform introduced by his mother just before her death, published the following edict of toleration:—"By

* The "bottomless pit"—This expression must be symbolical, and as such must represent a system of corrupt, religious doctrines—such as those of the Church of Rome, which has no bottom or foundation in truth or the word of God. It was into this that the Dragon power of the western Roman empire was forcibly cast, and shut up. First, by the power of the Greek government; and secondly, that of France under the emperor Charlemagne, which compelled the Goths, Vandals, Lombards, Saxons, &c., to embrace the doctrines of the Church of Rome and submit to her authority, by the sword; and it was out of this pit, also, that France emerged, as the eighth head, when that power threw off the Catholic yoke, and became, or "spake as a Dragon."

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn. they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send us as much in addition to their subscription as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside and direct to Eld. JONAS MERRIAM, Editor of the World's Crisis, Lowell Mass.

For The Crisis.

Exposition of the 12th, 13th and 17th Chapters of Revelation.

BY DR. A. DECKER.

(Concluded)

Having thus clearly established the latest point at which the 1260 prophetic days could commence, as I think, I shall next examine the Prophetic history in regard to "seven heads." I have already shown by a reference to the 17th chapter, that these heads arose in a consecutive manner, one only bearing rule at a time; and represented "seven kings," or kingdoms, which became the heads, or agents of the Greek government by virtue of sustaining the same relation to the Catholic Church. No one of these heads can be justly understood as representing the Greek empire, since that is properly symbolized by the "beast," as separately considered from the seven heads. The head peculiar to the beast, is never spoken of in prophecy; for it takes the whole beast to represent a kingdom. Hence, three of the kingdoms of the book of Daniel, are represented simply by a beast, with all its component parts, and no one part of those kingdoms is represented by the head.—But when we come to the Leopard beast, of Dan. 7th, it is spoken of as having four heads—denoting the four kingdoms into which the Greek empire was finally divided, after the death of Alexander the Great; as though the leopard beast which represented that empire in its embodied state had no head—that is, the head peculiar to the beast, which represented the empire before it was divided, was not reckoned with the four, and is never spoken of in prophecy; otherwise the beast would have been represented with five heads instead of four. The Leopard beast of Rev. therefore, represents the original kingdom, or, Greek empire; and the seven heads represent the seven succeeding kingdoms, which become its heads or agents, by virtue of sustaining certain relations, and carrying out the same principles or laws. To make the Greek empire simply a head, would be to say that there was nothing but heads, or turn the Church of Rome into the beast; and thus make the Greek empire her head or agent, which would be to contradict the prophecy as well as the history, which makes the Church the mouth or prophet of the beast, as I have before shown.

About the middle of the eighth century the Greek empire became so weakened, as no longer to be able to protect the interests of the Catholic Church. Hence, Pope "Stephen second," in his difficulties with the Longobards, then threatening Rome and the possessions of the Roman Church, applied to Pepin, king of France, from whom he obtained that assistance which he had sought for in vain from the feeble government of the east Roman emperors." "By degrees the connection between the popes and the east Roman or Greek emperors grew continually more feeble, and in place of this antiquated relation, came in the new one to the emperors of the Franks." (Neander, Vol. 3 p. 119, 120.) Thus of the leopard beast, A. D. 755. Charlemagne, successor to Pepin, subdued all nations that had settled in upon, and divided the western empire, to his imperial authority, and was crowned in 800 by pope Leo 3d, in the name of the Roman people; and thus constituted the emperor of western Rome. Out of this empire, therefore, the succeeding heads are to arise, in the order before mentioned, each being crowned by the pope, and sustaining the same relation to the Church.

SECOND HEAD—HOUSE OF SAXONY.

About the middle of the tenth century, "the character of the princes of the Carlovingian line" which continued to reign in France, became "too little distinguished to challenge the obedience of Italy."—Hence, Otho the Great, of the House of Saxony, descended from the Alps in A. D. 961, and obtained the conquest of Italy; and received at the hands of Pope John 12th the imperial crown.—Hallam's Middle Ages, pp. 126, 227.

THIRD HEAD—HOUSE OF FRANCONIA.

The princes of the Saxon nation continued to reign until A. D. 1024, when they were succeeded by the princes of the House of Franconia. Conrad 2d was the first of the Franconian line of emperors See Hallam, p. p. 128, 228.

FOURTH HEAD—HOUSE OF SWABIA.

At the death of Henry 5th the line of emperors of the Franconian nation was extinguished, and the princes of the House of Swabia succeeded to the dominion of Italy in A. D. 1138, (Hallam, p. 230,) and continued to reign until 1268, when the "last prince of the House of Swabia fell by the hand of Charles, duke of Anjou."

FIFTH HEAD—HOUSE OF ANJOU.

Charles, Duke of Anjou, was crowned by the Pope, king of Naples, at the above date, 1268. (See Taylor's Manual of Modern History, pp. 129, 130; Hallam, p. 149.)

SIXTH HEAD—HOUSE OF SPAIN.

The House of Anjou or kingdom of Naples became the fifth head, and continued to 1550, when the kingdom of Naples was succeeded by Spain.

SEVENTH HEAD—HOUSE OF AUSTRIA.

Spain was finally succeeded by the House of Austria, which obtained the dominion of Italy in the year 1700. Austria, therefore, is the seventh and last head (or king) of the leopard beast. I have omitted a reference to the history in regard to the rise of the last two heads, in consequence of its being already so well known. That the seventh head is the one that John saw wounded and healed again, is sufficiently proved by the 10th verse.—"He that leadeth into captivity, shall go into captivity; he that killeth with the sword, must be killed with the sword."—This gives us the time when this wounding was to be accomplished, and shows that the seventh, and last head was not to be wounded, until after the period of making war upon the saints had expired; and the beast had finished his work in this respect.

By the wounding of this head, and healing it again, we are not, however, to understand that this head was cut in two, and thus making the eighth head out of the seventh. All must see at once, that it was the same seventh head after it was healed, that it was before it was wounded! to wound a head and heal it again, could in no sense make two of it! I shall show presently, that France became the eighth head, from some time before the "two witnesses" were slain; and consequently, the two-horned beast, that spoke like the dragon. This will be shown by a reference to the 17th chapter; which I now propose for a short time to consider, and which will enable us to understand, more perfectly, this part of the prophecy. By a careful comparison, it will be seen that, John commences the history of the Woman and of the red beast, or Dragon, in the 17th ch., precisely where he left off in the 12th. In the 12th ch., the history is brought down to where the wilderness state begins, and the Woman fled into it; and were it not for the 17th ch., we should have remained entirely ignorant of her future history; nor should we have known but very little about the further history of the dragon. In the first and second verses, the Angel promised to show John the "judgment of the great whore, that sitteth upon many waters,"&c. In the third v. the Angel is represented as carrying John in the spirit into the wilderness, (into which the woman fled, the last he saw of her in the 12th ch.) "And I saw a woman sit upon a scarlet colored beast, full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns."

In the 7th v., the Angel promises to satisfy John's wonders, by telling him "the mystery of the Woman, and of the beast that carrieth her, which hath the the seven heads and the ten horns"—Thus he saith, (v. 8th) "the beast that thou sawest was, and is not, and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and go into perdition." Let it be remembered that John in his visions, always travels forward; consequently the Angel started with John, "in the spirit," from the isle of Patmos, or, from the other side of the wilderness state; and when John arrived into the wilderness, the first thing he saw, (in traveling down the stream of time) was the Woman seated upon a scarlet colored beast. But John did not stop here; for in the eighth v. just quoted, he is represented as having passed clear by the beast. "The beast that thou didst see was, and is not," (Whiting,) and consequently, had previously (to where he is now represented as standing) descended into the bottomless pit; and which is sufficiently proved from the fact, that the beast, at a future period, was to (shall) ascend out of the bottomless pit and go into perdition; and they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, (whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world,) when they shall behold the beast that was, and is not, and will be," (Whiting,) or, when he "shall ascend out of the bottomless pit," which is the obvious meaning—that is, they shall wonder at the beast that was, and is not when they shall see him coming up again out of the pit; for, doubtless, "they" had supposed that after he was cast into the pit, he would never get out; or, "they" would never see him again.—But in this they were to be disappointed, which would cause them so much to wonder! That the Angel and John were still in the wilderness at the time the Angel gave John the above instruction in the 8th v. is sufficiently proved from the fact that they had not yet passed the 6th king. V. 10th. "And there are seven kings: five are fallen, and one is, (the sixth,) and the other (the seventh,) is not yet come." This shows how far through the wilderness they had gone at the time the Angel stopped to give John this information, and also, proves that the seven kings (of which I have spoken in my remarks on the 13th. ch.) reigned during the interval while the red beast was shut up in the bottomless pit. That John saw the scarlet beast upon which the Woman was seated, in the first part of the wilderness, and that these seven kings all existed inside of that period, I shall now prove by comparing the 11th v. of this ch. with the 7th v. of the 11th ch.

V. 11th. "And the beast that was, and is not, even he is the eighth, and is of the seventh, and goeth into perdition."

This proves that the "beast that was," (upon which John saw the Woman sitting,) "and is not," (at the time John received this instruction,) and should "ascend out of the bottomless pit," (at a future period,) should be the eighth head—not a head wounded and healed, but "the beast that was, and is not, and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit," "even he is the eighth."

Ch. 11: 7. "And when they (the two witnesses) shall have finished their testimony, the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit, shall make war against them, and shall overcome them, and kill them."

This verse gives us the chronology when this beast ascended out of the pit, and also proves that France, as far back as 1792, constituted the eighth head; since it has been unquestionably proved that France at that time slew the two witnesses. Austria, therefore, as I have before shown, is the seventh and last head of the leopard beast; for that beast had just seven heads, and no more, though one was wounded and healed again.—That the red or scarlet colored beast of the 17th ch. is synonymous with the red beast or dragon of the 12th ch. instead of the leopard beast of the 13th ch., is clearly proved from the following considerations.

First, the color identifies the beast of the 17th ch. with that of the 12th. If any one doubts that the serpent or dragon is called a beast in the Bible, let them refer to Gen. 3: 1.

Second:—The scarlet beast was shut up in the bottomless pit, for the most part of the 1260 days or years, and ascended out at the end of that period; and which therefore, could only be predicated of the dragon, since the leopard beast "made war with the saints," and exercised power "over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations," during that whole period: consequently could in no sense be said to be in the bottomless pit, and which sufficiently distinguishes it from the scarlet colored beast.

Third:—The scarlet beast is not only shown to be the dragon from the fact that as soon as he ascends out of the pit he immediately begins to make war against the "two witnesses," and thus shows that he has lost none of his original disposition and hatred to the word of God in consequence of having thus passed through it, but, in the 16th ch. and 13th v. he is incontrovertibly shown to be the Dragon, out of which, one of the three unclean spirits goes to gather the nations to the battle of the great day of God Almighty.

Fourth:—France is emphatically the infidel kingdom in modern Europe; and therefore can only fitly represent the Roman pagan empire, as symbolized by the dragon.

Fifth:—It is shown also by the 13th v. of the 16th ch., that the eighth head which represents the dragon, and the seventh head which represents the leopard beast, run parallel with each other from the time the eighth head ascended out of the bottomless pit; and although the leopard beast makes war upon the saints only 1260 years, and afterwards is wounded to death, yet his deadly wound is healed, and thus he continues with the dragon to the judgment; since they are both together under the pouring out of the sixth vial; which of itself is sufficient to prove the distinction between the scarlet and leopard beast; for the dragon is unquestionably, the eighth head, and consequently the scarlet colored beast—since the prophecy never recognizes but one ruling power at a time. The leopard beast, therefore, never goes into the bottomless pit, but continues, not, however, as the ruling power, but upon the principle that "their lives were prolonged for a season and a time"—from the time that he arose out of the sea, until he is "cast alive into the lake of fire burning with brimstone."

Sixth:—The seat of the Woman was in Rome, the capital of the western empire—the territory of the dragon. Hence the Woman sits upon the dragon until he was cast into the bottomless pit* under the reign of Charlemagne, emperor of France. The Woman seated upon the dragon, shows that since he was cast down upon the earth, she has, by virtue of her connection with the Greek government, obtained the victory over him; and now he is compelled to carry her, or yield to her authority. That the Goths, Lombards, and Saxons ruled in Italy and the western empire, while the Church of Rome existed and was seated quietly in its capital, is a fact attested in history.

Seventh:—The fact that the Leopard beast, had "crowns upon his horns," is another mark that distinguishes him from the scarlet beast; which, in this respect also, identifies the latter with the Dragon. The above, I think, is sufficient on this point. That the ten horns of the Dragon or scarlet colored beast are not synonomous with the fourth beast of the book of Daniel, is clearly stated in the 12th verse. "And the ten horns which thou sawest, are ten kings, which have received no kingdom as yet." Therefore, they were future to where John was then represented as standing; which was six sevenths of the way through the wilderness; ("Five are fallen, one is, and the other is not yet come,") and could not possibly represent the ten original kingdoms, represented by the horns of the fourth beast of Daniel 7th. The Revelation represents the partition of the Roman empire, by seven heads, since there were only seven of the ten horns that bore any considerable rule, sufficient to be denominated heads of the western empire; the last of which—the Saxons—was compelled to submit to the Catholic faith in 780 or 81, (See Mosheim, vol 1,) which ended the Dragon power.—The heads, of course, must be of the character of the beast to which they belong; therefore, must be Dragon: which was the character of those nations. The seven heads of the scarlet beast, should not be confounded with the seven kings, which have already been shown to be the heads of the leopard beast; and the heads of the leopard beast and those of the Dragon cannot be synonymous. The seven heads are interpreted to be "seven mountains;" thus showing, that the heads are not synonymous with the kings. The seven mountains, however, are not to be understood literally. An example of this kind of interpretation—interpreting one symbol by another, is furnished in the 11th ch. 4th v., where the two witnesses are interpreted to be, "two olive trees, and two candlesticks." If the seven heads are the seven literal mountains in Rome, then indeed, the Woman has always sat upon them? but, we find that, although the Church has never changed her geographical position; yet she is represented, subsequent to the beast descending into the bottomless pit, as sitting upon "many waters;" which, by interpretation, are "many nations," &c. These many waters, therefore, must be synonymous with the seven kings; upon which the Woman sat after she ceased to sit upon the scarlet colored beast—for the Angel took John into the wilderness to show him the Woman, that sitteth upon "many waters;" and the first that John saw after he arrived there, she was sitting upon a scarlet beast; therefore, she must have sat upon many waters while the beast was in the bottomless pit. Of course when the beast went into the pit, his heads must have gone in with him; for it would not be in accordance with the law of prophecy, for him to be shut up in a pit, while any of his heads, by which he is represented, are in existence. Hence, the Dragon, and the leopard beast, as represented in their last heads are both spoken of under the pouring out of the sixth vial. This is sufficient to show that the seven heads, and seven kings are not the same; and, also, to prove a wide distinction between the scarlet colored, and Leopard beast; since the latter must have ruled through his seven heads, while the former was shut up in the pit; or else, there was no ruling power during that period at all. For it is positive, that it was in the latter part of the wilderness state, that the scarlet beast was in the pit, since he ascended out as soon as the 1260 days or years ended, and made war upon the "two witnesses," and continued to be the highest ruling power, from that time until he goes into perdition. The same is true also of the two-horned beast, which comes up out of the earth, and consequently a pit, and succeeds, or exercises "all the power of the first, (leopard) beast before him," which clearly proves that he (the two-horned beast) did not come up until that period had ended; for during 1260 full years, the Leopard beast was to exercise power over "all kindreds, and tongues and nations," and, therefore, could not be succeeded, until that period had ended. As the two-horned beast comes up out of the earth or pit, at this time, it is clearly evident that he went in some time previous; an explanation of which, can only be found in the 17th ch., which is the key to the 12th and 13th chs. Therefore, the two-horned beast is nothing more or less, than the Dragon coming out of the pit, into which he must have been previously cast. For there is no other power presented in this prophecy, that could have been cast into the pit, to thus have ascended out, but the Dragon.

The two-horned beast, and the eighth head therefore, are one and the same.—France is the only nation in modern Europe, that has spoken like the Dragon; which on independent ground, is sufficient to prove France to be the two-horned beast. The "two horns" were the house of Orleans and Bourbon—the two lines of princes that claimed a right to the throne, and which were always professional adherents to the religion of Christ, or, "like a Lamb." France, therefore, only fulfils this symbol, and which is further evident from the fact, that, France from the time the two witnesses were slain, has been the ruling power in Europe. I will now, to sum up this part of the argument, and to present it in as clear light as possible with my ability, state it thus. As the eighth head and two-horned beast, ascended out of the earth, or bottomless pit, at the same time—at the end of the 1260 years; and as the eighth head is the ruling power from that time on, which is, also, true of the two-horned beast, and as under the pouring out of the sixth vial, the Dragon is the only power besides the leopard beast and false prophet, which latter, I have in a former article shown to be the Church of Rome, therefore, the eighth head and two-horned beast are the same. And as the French nation slew the two witnesses, and is the world-wide known infidel power that spake like the Dragon, and consequently, the only one that can be justly called the Dragon; and has been the ruling power in Europe, from the time the two witnesses were slain to the present; therefore, France is the power meant. Having thus clearly established, as I think, that Austria is the seventh and last head of the leopard beast, I shall next show, when that power ceased to tread the "Holy city" under foot, or to "make war with the saints." That this war belonged exclusively to the leopard beast, and was to cease under the seventh head, or Austria, is sufficiently proved from the fact, that the eighth head was not to ascend out of the bottomless pit, until after the two witnesses had finished their prophecy, and, therefore, could have nothing to do with making war upon the saints, or treading the "Holy city" under foot any part of the 1260 days. This period, therefore, belongs exclusively to the leopard beast. "Power was given unto him to make war (Marg.) forty and two months."

The eighth head, therefore, is entirely out, or this side of this period, and whose specific work is to make war against the "two witnesses," and overcome and kill them after they had finished their testimony; which is entirely distinct from that of the leopard beast, and cannot come within the same period. Any effort, therefore, to fix upon an event that occurred in France, as marking the end of those "days," must be without the least foundation. It is Austria alone that can fulfil this part of the prophecy, by "terminating all relation with the court of Rome," and "abolishing the odious tribunal of the Inquisition," and establishing free toleration throughout the empire, thus putting an end to the union of Church and State, that was established no later than 521. That this was accomplished in 1781, 1260 years from that date, the following extracts most unequivocally prove.

In 1781, Joseph 2d, emperor of Austria, to carry into effect more fully those principles of reform introduced by his mother just before her death, published the following edict of toleration:—By

* The "bottomless pit"—This expression must be symbolical, and as such must represent a system of corrupt, religious doctrines—such as those of the Church of Rome, which has no bottom or foundation in truth or the word of God. It was into this that the Dragon power of the western Roman empire was forcibly cast, and shut up. First, by the power of the Greek government; and secondly, that of France under the emperor Charlemagne, which compelled the Goths, Vandals, Lombards, Saxons, &c., to embrace the doctrines of the Church of Rome and submit to her authority, by the sword; and it was out of this pit, also, that France emerged, as the eighth head, when that power threw off the Catholic yoke, and became, or "spake as a Dragon."

this edict be granted to all members of the Protestant and Greek Churches, under the denomination of Acatholici or Non-Catholics, the FREE EXERCISE OF THEIR RELIGION. He declared all Christians of every denomination equally citizens, and capable of holding all charges and offices in every department of state; he permitted every community consisting of three thousand souls, resident in any town, to build a church, provided they could establish a permanent fund for the support of a preacher and the relief of the poor; and he ordered a new translation of the BIBLE to be made in the German tongue.

These innovations, introduced with such precipitancy by the FIRST Sovereign of Europe, whose ancestors had evinced so warm an attachment to the Catholic faith, alarmed the see of Rome, and occasioned the memorable journey of Pius VI. to Vienna, which commenced on the 27th of February, 1773. * * * The Pontiff, however, obtained only some works of distinction; his exhortations and remonstrances were received with coldness and reserve," and "even his presence at Vienna did not, for a moment, suspend the progress of ecclesiastical reforms." Pius, chagrined at the inflexibility "of the emperor, and mortified by an unmeaning ceremonial and an affected display of veneration for the Holy Church while it was robbed of its richest possessions and deprived of its most valuable privileges, quitted Vienna at the expiration of a month, equally disgusted and humiliated, after having exhibited himself a disappointed suppliant at the foot of the throne which had been so often shaken by the thunders of the Vatican." [Coxe's House of Austria, vol. 3, pp. 591-3.

Although the emperor of Austria commenced these reforms in 1780, yet the above extract is sufficient to prove, that the work was not finished till 1781.—Here, however, the work of establishing free toleration, is fully accomplished.—Here Austria, (the last head of the leopard beast) not only ceases to make war with the saints, and grant them, under the head of protestants or non Catholics, THE FREE EXERCISE OF THEIR RELIGION; but, declares all Christians of every denomination equally citizens, and capable of holding all charges aud offices in every department of state. Is the holy city trodden under foot here, when they are raised to equal citizenship, and to enjoy all the rights, privileges and immunities, by the royal authority, of the Catholics themselves? Where is the letter of Leo and the council of Chalcedon now, that has been so long the law of the emperor, and the empire? Is it enforced by the imperial edicts here? Are the decrees of the Synods any longer published or accompanied by the royal authority to enforce submission? Did the emperor or his successor assemble the councils of the Church, to decree laws for the empire, either civil or ecclesiastical, and enforce them upon his subjects, after this period? Do the "kings of the earth," of which Austria was the last, continue to "feed" or nourish the Church by enriching and supporting her institutions, when the above extract declares, the Church was robbed of its richest possessions, and deprived of its most valuable privileges? Many of the Churches were, also, stripped of their images and ornaments, and reduced to their primitive simplicity, That the union of Church and State, or, court of Rome and of Austria, was completely broken up in 1781, is clearly stated in the following from Bower's History of the Popes, v. 3, p. 394, and which is corroborated by the testimony of De Cormenin, v. 2, p. 403.

However, all the sovereigns did not exhibit the same taste as Louis XVI. and the prince of Austria. The Emperor Joseph II. avowed that he was disgusted with the debauchery of the pontifical family; and in his indignation he declared, that he was resolved to terminate all relation with the court of Rome, and to overthrow ultramontanism in his states. He began by permitting his subjects in Germany and Italy to speak and write on all religious topics. He prohibited the publication of bulls, briefs, decrees or any other acts emanating from the Roman court, throughout his dominions. He subjected the monastic orders to the jurisdiction of the ordinary prelates, and interdicted all their correspondence with their foreign superiors. He suspended the reception of novices in the convents. He secularized a great number of friars and monks; declared the colleges of the missions and the seminaries withdrawn from all dependence on the court of Rome, disposed of the bishoprics, benefices, and abbeys, made the prelates take an oath of fidelity, restrained the franchises of the asylums, and regulated the external discipline of the parishes. At length he began to punish the refractory. He deprived Cardinal Migazzi, archbishop of Vienna, of his revenues, because he was the open enemy of all reforms. He drove from their sees, parishes, and colleges, the prelates, the priests, and the Jesuits, who persecuted the Abbe Ploner, director of the seminary of Brixen in Moravia, under the pretext that he was a Jansenist. He suppressed and effaced from the missals the constitution Unigenitus, and the bull in Cœna Domini; and at last, he abolished the odious tribunals of the Inquisition, and prohibited his subjects from recurring to Rome for dispensations.

This edict of the emperor Joseph was enlarged at intervals during his reign, and "was retained and even extended by Leopold 2d," who succeeded to the throne in 1790. To extend the 1260 years, therefore, this side of 1781, with such positive and unequivocal testimony, is, to my mind, utterly impossible. The 1335 days or years, must, consequently end sometime in the coming year; indeed I look for the coming of the blessed Lord daily: and have no fears that the present arrangement will prove a failure. I believe the "MIDNIGHT CRY" has sounded, and,

Though midnight hour, God's word sheds light,
Its brilliant rays dispel the gloom;
The Pilgrim's pathway still grows bright,
The King is coming soon!
Then tune your harps once more, and sing,
Your sweetest strains to Zion's King;
And blend your songs in gushing strains,
For soon Messiah reigns!

The World's Crisis.

LOWELL, DEC. 8, 1855.

To the Advent Brethren generally.

The time has come, when we, the undersigned, feel it to be our duty to appeal to you, dear Brn., and especially to all who have ever been readers of "The Second Advent Watchman," in behalf of Br. J. Turner, on whom has fallen the burden of the debt which the Association owed the office of publication at the time the "Watchman" was discontinued.

Br. Turner, having been the Editor of the Watchman and the Treasurer of the office, had necessarily assumed responsibilities besides the labor he was performing in the office, to a considerable amount, encouraged to do so by the pledges of the Association, made on the hope that the subscribers could all be induced to pay their dues, so that the debt due him for labor and money paid out, amounted, when the paper was discontinued, to $872, without interest—This debt did not accumulate by a fault of Br. Turner; he had a right to expect it all paid, for there was due the office, from subscribers, at the same time, over $2,100, which, on account of the course of things, has not been paid.

This debt remains unpaid, and Br. Turner is seriously embarrassed for the want of this, his honest due; and we think it is the duty of the brethren who have ever been readers of the Watchman, to unite in an immediate effort to pay this debt by donation. This debt is trifling for the body to pay, and it can be paid by a trifling individual sacrifice; but if not paid by donation, it must be a dead loss to Br. Turner, and to him, a heavy loss.

Br. Turner is really poor, and the want of this money has made him so, and he assures us that, unless he can have this debt paid, he must go into some employment, aside from his calling, to support his family, and pay debts incurred for the Association.

We very much mistake the feelings of Adventists, if they will allow this to be so, after all the labors and sacrifices of Br. Turner for the last twelve years. We feel confident that brethren looking for the Lord, and who desire to do unto others as they would that others should do unto them, will gladly bear a share of this burden, and thus relieve Br. T., who has already suffered under it too long. We believe we shall not appeal to the Church in vain. Brn., let this debt be paid at once; it is Br. Turner's due. Let us not leave this debt unpaid till the judgment; the consequences may be fearful.

1st. Let all who were owing for the Watchman when it stopped, if able, pay their dues immediately; if poor, pay what they can.

2d We invite all preachers who were readers of the Watchman, to present our request to the Churches, and encourage them to assist in paying this debt, and when convenient, where there are those who may wish to give something and yet can give but little, take contributions for this object.

3d. Let every former reader of the Watchman give for this object according to his or her ability—those who have much, can afford to be liberal, and we hope they will be.

Now, Brn., let this business be attended to at once—let there be no delay. All money raised for this object must be directed to Eld. J. Turner, Hartford, Ct., and all money received shall be duly credited in the Reformer and Crisis.

L. TIFFANY,	HARLOW FYLER.

EXPLANATION.

The statistics embodied in the above appeal to the Church have been furnished from my accounts kept with the Association and the office, which accounts have been duly examined, year by year, except the last year of the existence of the Watchman; nevertheless I am responsible for the statistics, and am willing to satisfy any one or more of the correctness of them, who will take the trouble to review my accounts, should any doubt exist.

But, brethren scattered in different places, who have signed, and who still may sign their names to the document, are regarded only as signing the appeal to the church to pay the debt, and not as vouchers for me or my account—that is furnished by myself; and, if it is desired, I am ready to affirm its correctness according to law.

Some may be in doubt in regard to the amount, since quite an effort was once made to pay the debt by donation. These are the facts. At one time, about March, 1854, the debt was reduced to less than five hundred dollars, but soon after that, very many stopped their papers without paying up, and as most of those who did not stop their paper had paid, I was obliged to continue, with trifling receipts, and did so, hoping that all would come right at the end of 1854. So thought the Committee, but as they were disappointed, they ordered the Watchman closed at that time. Thus the debt was increased from a little short of five hundred dollars, to what it now is.

Some have said, send bills to those who are indebted, and demand payment. Brethren, this has been done repeatedly. When the Watchman stopped, we sent bills to all who owed us, and scarcely received enough on them to pay for the trouble.

Dear Brn.—All who contribute to the payment of this debt will indeed be giving, and all you thus give will benefit me; but remember, it is not a gift to ME, but to the Association. Every dollar is my just due, but if you give it to the Association, and I get my due, I shall be most grateful to every donor.

I do not wish those who are really poor to give for this debt; I would rather lose it all alone. If other preachers wish to use their influence in the matter, if they will forward their names, they will oblige.

JOSEPH TURNER.

☞ I would add in respect to the above Circular, that I deem it a duty for all who are indebted for the Watchman, to remit funds as soon as practicable for the liquidation of the same. I do feel, that as Christians our business affairs ought to be transacted upon a different principle from that of worldlings; and we ought to hold ourselves as much in readiness to discharge our every debt, when we do not expect the arm of the law to be applied, as if our goods were liable to attatchment. OWE NO MAN ANY THING is written in living characters on the divine record, and no man, if he possess the ability, can be acquitted in the Great Day, without observing the command.

I would further say, that as the Advent body has been so much implicated in this affair, a pressing demand seems to be made upon the benevolence of those who have not become personally pledged for any portion of the amount due. ED.

Fulfilment of Prophecy.

BY H. PRATT.

Dear Br. Merriam:—I feel constrained to say a few words to the scattered flock upon the subject of the fulfilment of prophecy; and though I shall be able only to give an introduction in this, yet I hope to be able at a future time to bring out some facts relative to this great subject, which now in a special manner is agitating the minds of some of our Brn. in some sections, that will be beneficial to the scattered flock.

We frequently hear it said that prophecy is history written in advance; therefore is unconditional, and must be realized or fulfilled; but the great question still pending, is, "What is truth?" Prophecy is a prediction, of future events; therefore, whenever God by His Prophets speaks of His great purpose respecting the restitution, faith says it must be accomplished.—This world is reserved unto fire, just as certainly as there was a flood of waters. From, or by this "burning" day, the new earth and heavens are produced, which, says Peter, "we look for, according to his promise." The will or conduct of men or nations, will not effect this glorious purpose; it MUST BE! and "we according to his promise," with confidence may "look for" it. Praise the Lord! The beauty and grandeur contained in His word concerning this restituted or new earth, will be realized, and none can hinder. "For thus saith the Lord that created the heavens; God himself that formed the earth and made it; he hath established it, he created it not in vain, he hath formed it to be inhabited." Isa. 45: 18. All glory to His name! This is His purpose, and "The Lord of hosts hath sworn saying, Surely, as I have thought, so shall it come to pass; and as I have purposed, so shall it stand." Isa. 14: 24. Amen.

But there are other prophecies concerning nations and people that were to be fulfilled on condition of obedience or disobedience. That this is the truth, and that prophecies or predictions concerning nations and kingdoms are conditional, we read in the Scriptures of truth. "At what instant I shall speak concerning a nation and concerning a kingdom to pluck up and to pull down, and to destroy it, If that nation against whom I have pronounced turn from their evil, I will repent of the evil that I thought to do unto them. And at what instant I shall speak concerning a nation and concerning a kingdom to build and to plant it; If it do evil in my sight that it obey not my voice, then I will repent of the good wherewith I said I would benefit them." Jer. 18: 7-10.

But says the objector, there are promises connected with prophecy that are conditional, but no prophecy is conditional.—What is truth? Let the Scriptures of truth answer.

Jer. 26: 12. "Then spake Jeremiah unto all the princes and to all the people, saying, The Lord sent me to PROPHESY against this house and against this city all the words that ye have heard.

V. 13th. Therefore now amend your ways and your doings and obey the voice of the Lord your God; and the Lord will REPENT him of the evil that he HATH PRONOUNCED (or prophesied) against you."

Upon this principle of action we shall proceed to the investigation of the Fulfilment of Prophecy.

For the Crisis.

"Above all these things put on Charity, which is the bond of perfectness."—"Love is the fulfilling of the law."—"God is love."

BY J. A. PACKARD.

The Religion of Jesus Christ possesses in itself a principle of vitality; and Jesus, Paul and John testify that love is the vital part of Religion. Hence, he that is destitute of this, though his profession may be as high as heaven, is compared to sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal; i. e., he is destitute of the saving grace of God.

It is lamentable, when we look upon those professing to follow Christ, to see how little pure charity is manifest; there are many classes of Religionists in the world, but there are few who have charity for any save their own, or those of like profession.

On one occasion the disciples thought they were all that were holy; and outside of their little number, there could be no good accomplished. They said to Christ, "we saw one casting out devils in thy name, and we forbade him." They saw him doing the same work that they were commissioned to do, yet they forbade him. Why was it? O, simply because he followed not with them. He might have differed in some respects from them.—They lacked charity. The answer that Jesus gave them shows them contracted in their feelings. Said He, "Forbid him not." Why? "for he that is not against us, is for us.'

Look at our example, and see charity in all its bearings; that, that never faileth. His was divine—He left the realms of His Father and visited this diseased and ruined world. Beaming with love, melting with compassion, He flew to our relief.—How compassionate! How sympathising! He becomes a slave himself, that He may "preach deliverance to the captives, and the opening of the prison doors to them that are bound, and proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord."

See Him at His work of mercy. The world is an Aceldama, a vast lazar house, a conquered province, subject to sin and death. He scatters health around him; He gives eyesight to the blind; He bids the lame to walk; those suffering from hunger, Hfeeds, the very dead He restores to life and joy. He beholds the weeping widow, and hastens to wipe away her tears. He visits the house of mourning and fills it with the song of praise.

Behold Him ascend the Mount of blessing. He takes his seat; heavenly light shines around him; the majesty of holiness encircles His brow. Love, divine love, looks out from His wondrous eyes; the manna of wisdom drops from His lips; He assembles around Him the poor—the mourners—the persecuted—and showers upon them the blessings of an endless life. He rescued the conquered province from the grasp of the foe; destroyed the power of death, and opened unto man, poor, lost man, the portals of immortal life. "He wept that man might smile; He bled that man might live; He seized our dreadful right, the load sustained, and heaved the mountain from our guilty world." As was the Divine Founder, such is the religion He established.

Christianity is a noble system of charity. It teaches man to feel another's woe, to seek another's good; to breathe, instead of revenge, forgiveness and affection; for the aged, the halt, the maimed and the blind, it erects asylums of comfort and repose; and for the sufferings of all classes it supplies an antidote. It not only seeks out the suffering poor among God's little ones, but also feeds and clothes to the extent of its ability. It does not stop with man's temporal interests, it goes out after the backslider, it weeps over the careless sinner, it exhorts men to repentance and faith toward God, it never faileth; other religions are a fable—a delusion—a shadow.

Christianity is alone benevolent; in its Founder, in its essence, and in its operations, intensely benevolent. True Charity acts from motives of love to God as well as man; hence ingratitude does not restrain him, nor opposition make him afraid. True Charity does not hold any man's person in admiration; it moves as did its Founder, into the humble cot, it visits the palace—both alike to do them good, it never vaunts itself, is kind, it never says, "I am holier than thou," but is full of mercy, it loves its enemies, and seeks to do them good, it never moves for the sake of opposition—it leads its possessor to study to be quiet, and to seek meekness and righteousness. Consequently it wrongs no man.

Finally: he that possesses such Charity lays up a good foundation against the time to come, and when he shall have sown the seeds of benevolence here, he will reap a harvest of everlasting love; for "whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap."

My Br., would you gain the prize for which you started, labor that you may be found in possession of that Charity which never faileth. O how many have made ship-wreck of their faith by first becoming uncharitable; some have measured others by themselves, and because they failed to understand alike, there has ensued a hard, denunciatory spirit. Charity, the great mainspring to religion, is broken, the individual falls.

Brn. we must have fervent Charity among ourselves. What if we do not all think alike and see alike now, we shall when that which is in part is done away. O let us remember the exhortation of the beloved disciple, and love one another not in word, but in deed and truth, always bearing in mind that Charity is greater than faith or hope, and without it we cannot be saved.

Yours in hope. J. A. PACKARD.

For The Crisis.

Letter from Br. W. Sheldon

WEST HAWLEY, Mass., Nov. 21st, 1855.

Dear Br. Merriam:—I am still in quest of eternal life in the world to come. My interest in things pertaining to the Kingdom of God, is increasing. The Kingdom will come in due time, and the dear saints of all climes and ages, will be congregated to celebrate the praises of the once suffering man of Calvary, in a blooming Paradise.

"O! hail happy day!"

Let us not overlook the practical part of the Gospel. There is evidently a lack of vital godliness among us. "Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine," says Jesus, "and DOETH them," &c.

The Lord has blessed me much, of late, in the promulgation of the Gospel. I expected to have gone further westward before the present time, but circumstances have prevented. I am resolved to keep at work in the Master's vineyard, under all circumstances, as far as health will permit, till I receive a discharge from the Chief Shepherd, at His appearing.

W. SHELDON.

For The Crisis.

Dear Br. Merriam:—As I am necessarily detained to-day from meeting with those who are looking for and loving the appearing of our blessed Savior, I thought that I would address a few lines to the Crisis by the help of the Lord. Though at present not a subscriber, yet through the kindness of a beloved Br., I am permitted to read it from week to week. If it should please the Lord, I should be glad to send in for the paper, not so much that I may have the paper, because that I have the reading of it, but that I might help sustain so valuable an enterprize; but the Lord will sustain His own cause, and I am glad to see you so much encouraged and the receipt list enlarged. I love to have the children talk about their home, and I hope by the grace of God to be one of that happy family that shall never again be broken up. Here we meet a beloved Br. or Sr., enjoy their company for a little season, and then we have to give the parting hand and meet the cold frowns of the world. No wonder that that little company disliked to part with their Master, and that their hearts were made sad when He told them that He must go away; and how cheering the promise, "If I go away, I will come again." Is it any wonder that they asked Him, "Lord wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" How they longed for the time to come when their Savior would be their companion forever. And can the burdened child of God help but cry in these times of peril, Lord, has not the set time to favor Zion come? Oh how I long to get home. I expected ere this to have been in God's everlasting Kingdom; but here we are yet as it were hemmed in on every side, despised by the world, held in contempt by the nominal Church; but thank God, that although by foes despised, by friends forsaken, we know we fare as well as our Savior did, and we are to consider Him who endured such contradiction of sinners, lest we faint in our minds.

If any one asks what is my present position as to time, I reply, I cannot see wherein we are wrong, and yet I do not see good old Daniel stand in his lot. But may we not be in the day of the Lord so often spoken of by the prophets? Isaiah speaks of it in the 13th ch. from the 6th to the 13th vs., and in many other places. It looks to me as though we had entered upon that time of trouble spoken of in Dan. 12: 1.

Oh, how can I help longing to be away from strife and contention, and where the children shall be gathered to their own Father's house—to those many mansions that our Savior has gone to prepare for us.

But how that syren song is sung in these last days by christendom, "Death is the gate to endless joy," in plain contradiction to the word of God. I believe it to be a dangerous theory, and I do thank the Lord that ever I embraced the plain, simple truths of the Gospel, that the dead are really and truly dead, and without a resurrection must remain so forever. Oh praise the Lord for His goodness to me, and I hope to praise Him throughout the ceaseless ages of eternity.

Oh how great things the Lord hath in store for them that love Him.

From one that loves the appearing of Jesus. N.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Br. S. H. Waldron.

PORTLAND, Nov. 10th, 1855.

Beloved Br. Merriam:—I am glad to hear that the Brn., and Srs., begin to heed your call for communications to fill the columns of the Crisis, and I hope that they will feel the importance of continuing so to do, thereby encouraging your heart and helping you in your arduous labors of love as an Editor. Notwithstanding the encouragement, the prayers, and all the articles for your paper, I am aware that it must stop without money, which would be a sad disappointment to me. It is true that the laborer is worthy of his hire, for no man has a right to withhold our wages from us; and again, we have no right to make a bad use of our earnings. I, for one, can find no better use for a dollar than to expend it for the continuance of your paper until the Lord shall come. I hope that the Spirit of Jesus, which is the spirit of prophecy, will continue to shine, and still more clearly from its columns, that the household of faith may receive their portion of meat in due season.

Why, Brn. and Srs., we shall not always have this privilege of writing, talking and exhorting each other as the great day of the Lord approaches. Therefore let us not be weary in well doing but work while the day lasts, striving to do all that we possibly can in building each other up in the most holy faith; for the night cometh wherein no man can work. We cannot do too much for our Lord and Master, if we should work day and night until He comes, even if He could tarry 10 years longer.

Do we consider as we should that Jesus laid down His life for us, that we through His death and sufferings might be made rich? Let the rich man boast of his riches in this life, they are nothing in comparison with the riches of Christ's Kingdom promised to all those who look for and love His appearing.

SILAS H. WALDRON.

For The Crisis.

Letter from Sr. A. P. Morrill.

WOLCOTT, Nov. 13th, 1855.

Dear Br. Merriam:—I think I feel thankful to my Heavenly Father, that the Crisis is thus far sustained, and for the good spirit it possesses. O how beautiful and heavenly to see Brethren laboring and walking together in love, bearing one another's burdens, and so fulfilling the law of Christ!

My heart is made glad and encouraged while I read the soul-stirring communications from my dear Brn. and Srs. of like precious faith; and yet after all how few and far between are they who are truly and indeed looking for Jesus. But, oh, I long for that day to be ushered in when our Father's children shall be gathered from the east, west, north and south, to meet in the kingdom of God with all those who have gone before, eternally safe from all the ills of this poor, sin-cursed, fire-doomed world.

"O! I long to be there, and the thought that 'tis near, Makes me almost impatient for Christ to appear!"

My dear Brn. and Srs., although strangers to each other, for the most part, yet I would say to you that I am bound for the Kingdom amid all the storms and perils of these last days; I am striving with all my heart to make my way through by watching, and praying, and purifying my own soul by obeying the truth.

While I read Sr. Mussey's letter in the last No., I could say in truth, she is my

... many others. I know well how to sympathize with her on many points. I am almost entirely alone; where I live there are but few Advent believers, and seldom, Advent preaching.—But the signs of the times proclaim in thunder tones, the speedy coming of the blessed Jesus, our great Deliverer.

O let us all be ready and waiting; for the coming of the King of kings draws near.

Your unworthy Sr. in tribulation, expecting deliverance soon.

A. P. MORRILL.

For The Crisis.

Letter from Br. McCullock.

NEW LEBANON, N. Y., Nov. 9th, 1855.

Br. Merriam:—I feel my own weakness and inability to write to the edification of the Church, but thought perhaps some of the children would like to hear from us in New Lebanon.

We have had no preaching since March. Br. Grant came here then and broke the bread of life to us, and we had a glorious season. Since that time we have been enjoying much of the presence of the Lord, but with limited circumstances. We have a prayer-meeting every Sabbath evening, and that with the Crisis is our only means of comforting each other. Some of us attended the Cheshire Campmeeting, and had our souls greatly refreshed. Few attend our prayer-meetings; but the Lord blesses us with the outpouring of His Spirit. I feel, for one, willing to take up my cross and endure all things for Christ's sake, knowing that the day is at hand when He will judge me in righteousness.

O, dear Brn. and Srs., let us all bear in mind the responsibility that is resting upon us who are looking for the return of our glorious Lord, and live for the Kingdom, knowing that the promise is only to them that endure unto the end. Are we all ready with our lamps burning? or have some gone back to the world, saying "my Lord delayeth His coming," and heaping up wrath against the day of wrath? Ah yes, when we cast our eyes over the Advent ranks, and see the falling away since the passing of the time, it makes my heart sad, and I thank God I am not of that number that draw back unto perdition. I believe we have reached the last link in the prophetic chain, and the kingdoms of this world are soon to become the kingdom of our Lord and His Christ. I bless the Lord for the glorious prospect that we are so soon to realize. In my judgment we have had the true Midnight Cry, and it will not cease until the Lord comes.

Watchman, take courage—your work is almost done. Christian, fight a little longer and you will win the prize.

Your Br. in Christ waiting for immortality. N. McCULLOCK.

In striking off the outside of the paper, the printer for want of room was obliged to leave out a part of Br. Brewer's article, viz. the following:

A THIEVES' EXCHANGE. The Rev. Thomas Hugo, Curate of St. Botolph, London, in a letter to the London Times gives the following description of a thieves' Exchange, which is located in the heart of that great city, and which hitherto has bid defiance to all the efforts of the police for breaking it up:

"In the heart of London, on every successive Sunday in the year, in various streets, alleys, and courts to the north of Houndsditch, and therefore in my own immediate neighborhood, are congregated upwards of fifteen thousand persons engaged in traffic of various kinds, and constituting what is called the 'City Exchange Fair.' The trade is carried on principally in Cutler street, Phil's Buildings, City Exchange, Exhibition Mart, Harrow alley and Petticoat lane, places notorious in the annals of crime for outrages and abominations of all descriptions. The articles offered for sale consist for the most part of wearing apparel and jewelry, and the fair lasts for the greater portion of the day. I speak from personal observation and inspection, and hesitate not to characterize the place as one of the very foulest sinks of profligacy and crime to be found within the length and breadth of London. Of the fifteen thousand individuals there assembled, some are Jews of the lowest grade, but the great majority are nominally Christians; uniting together in forming a multitude of the most ignorant, lawless, brutal and degraded ruffians that the metropolis can furnish. In this vile haunt crimes are both plotted and perpetrated; for, in a spot at the entrance to Harrow alley, I was myself informed, on the occasion of one of my visits, by one of our excellent police, that of all the males there congregated, of various ages, and to the number of several hundreds, every individual had been a convicted felon. Stolen property is here disposed of to any extent, 'and no questions asked;' and an inducement is thereby held out to thieves from every quarter to bring hither the results of their crimes, assured of their immediate and safe disposal. I could furnish you with many details of this den of horrors, but I will content myself with affirming that if there be an epithet in the English tongue more descriptive than another of a place reeking with blasphemy, clamor, and obscenity, and of a loathsome assemblage stained with every vice named or nameless, I would select and apply it to this foulest of foul scenes and filthiest of filthy multitudes. No man can possibly imagine it who has not visited the place and seen it with his own eyes."

The above I clipped from the Boston Journal of July 23d. It is from the pen of a minister of the Established Church.

St. Louis, Nov. 30. Mob Law—Murder and Arson. We have accounts from Independence to-day, stating that three armed Free Statemen had attempted to drive Mr Coleman, a pro-slavery settler, from his claim near Hickory point. Mr C. killed one of his assailants, when a mob gathered together, drove him and other settlers off, and then burned their houses.—The ringleaders were arrested by Marshal Jones, and taken to Lecompte.

Goveror Shannon has called out the militia. Many citizens from Independence, Weston and St. Josephs, have gone to offer their services to the Governor, to restore order. The people of Lawrence are in arms, and have five pieces of artillery.

A number of houses have been burned in Douglas Co., and several families driven to Missouri for refuge. The "law and order" people of the Territory are rallying in large numbers to assist the sheriff in the execution of the laws.

Sixceen houses were burned at Hickery Point, and several of its citizens were missing.

Washington, Dec. 4th. The National Intelligencer says the President received a despatch yesterday from Gov. Shannon of Kansas, announcing that civil war in that Territory was actually threatened, and requesting prompt assistance from the Government. The President has ordered that troops be immediately despatched from the nearest posts to the scene of disaster.

From China. The California papers furnish intelligence from China to the 22d of August, but there is no news of importanee. The accounts of engagements between the Rebels and Imperialists, in which tens of thousands are killed, are recorded with a mere flourish of the pen. It is estimated that in the province of Canton alone one million persons have been killed in battle, starved, or executed since these disturbances commenced. Sir John Bowring has written a letter to the Commander of the U. S frigate Powhattan, highly complimentary to the officers and crew of that vessel, for their gallant conduct in an encounter with a large fleet of Chinese junks on the 4th of August.

Explosion—Loss of Life. Richmond, Va., Nov. 28. Another explosion took place at the English Co.'s coal pits, in Chesterfield county, on Monday. Four men were instantly killed and four others badly burned.

Selected For The Crisis.

Trust in God.

Whither, whither art thou tending,
Pilgrim of life's thorny path,
Often on thy journey bending,
Low before the tempest's wrath?
What the strong, the blest assurance,
Filling all thy yearning soul,
That can give thee such endurance,
To attain some unseen goal?

When the day is dark and dreary,
What inspires thy trustful song?
What, when thou art faint and weary,
Makes thy aching limbs so strong?
Is there naught can damp thy ardor,
Turn thee from the rugged way,
Wilt thou even press the harder
When some trial bids thee stay?

Surely it must be some present—
Ever present help is thine,
Which can make the way so pleasant,
Howsoe'er its steps incline—
Which can make thy spirit willing
Onward, onward still to press,
Thine appointed lot fulfilling,
With such trusting hopefulness.

O! it is no secret hidden,
What can give such strength and joy,
For it ever comes when bidden,
Giving all the soul employ.
Thou hast only sought the treasure,
Which to all that ask is given,
And thy soul is filled with pleasure,
Feeling that her home is heaven!

☞ Extract of a letter from Italy published in The Independent:

The Pope is having a good deal of trouble lately, both on the part of his own people and on the part of the upholders of his tottering throne. The General in chief of the French troops in Rome lately visited carefully a number of convents and public buildings which, in the beginning of the French occupation, were transformed into barracks. On this occasion he clearly intimated that the French emperor intended soon to reinforce the garrison in Rome, and a dispatch from France announced the departure of a division for the eternal city. It was immediately supposed that these new troops were intended to act against the King of Naples, and even the solemn declaration of the French Moniteur, disavowing the famous manifesto of Murat, was powerless to remove the impression at first produced. It is well known also that the renewed application of the punishments of the lignate or bastinado, and of the cavaletto, has been severely blamed by the French government, and has caused the French minister to remind the pontifical government of the reforms mentioned in the letter to Edgar Ney, and not yet granted by his holiness. This latter fact especially has caused much anxiety in the high circles, for the very letter is considered as a kind of sword of Damocles, threatening forever the very existence of the clerical power in the states of the church.

Alas for the patrimony of St. Peter! It is, all over, and more than at any other time in this season of the year, infested with thieves and highway robbers. Two gangs of thieves especially are just now becoming celebrated on account of their deeds of daring. One headed by Lazzarini carries on its depredations in the cities and villages surrounding Bologna, the other having for its chief Affiiti Guiseppe spreads terror in the Romagnola Ferrarese. The first of these assailed Monsignor Ginnasi at the very gates of Imola, and compelled him to pay the sum of six thousand dollars to obtain his freedom. When the Pope heard it, he caused a circular to be issued reminding the prolegats of their duty to take measures to put a stop to so much audacity. But what can be done when the police are either unprovided with means of action, or careless, or, as is often the case, the very associates of the thieves? As to the Austrians garrisoned in the towns, they say: Show us where are the robbers and we will attack them, but it is no business of ours to hunt for them over the country. The first attempt to find out the malefactors is characteristic of the childishness of the pontifical officers. Having heard that the robbers were in the habit of communicating with one another by means of some telegraphic signs, they had the bright idea of putting a carabiniere at the top of the steeple of the village churches, armed with spying glass, and looking all day long around, trying to discover in the distance some strange signal indicative of the presence of the robbers! Large sums of money have been promised to all who might bring one of these, dead or alive. It has not yet produced any result. The lower classes of Italy admire and envy, much more than they blame, a successful highway robber; having nothing to lose they have no reason to fear them, and were it not for the danger which attends that kind of business, large numbers would engage in it.

The disease of the vine—oidium—has destroyed most of the wine harvest in the Roman States and in Tuscany. In the former country very little wine, but of excellent quality, has been obtained, a papal decree has been issued forbidding the exportation of the precious liquid. In Tuscany where for several years past the wine crop has entirely failed, the archbishop of Florence has published a series of prayers on the subject, addressed, not to God, but to the patriarch Noah. One of these prayers is as follows: "Most holy patriarch Noah, who, in the course of your long life, have employed yourself to plant the vine, and to gratify mankind with that precious liquor which quenches our thirst, comforts and cheers us all, look down upon our vines which after your example we have hitherto cultivated, and seeing them languishing and desolate by the effects of the plague which before vintage has destroyed their fruits, . . . be moved with compassion toward us, etc, etc." An indulgence of forty days is granted by the archbishop to all those who piously recite the prayers of which we have translated an extract.

Apropos of Tuscany, the rupture of diplomatic intercourse between that country and the Sardinian government is now complete. You know what was the cause of it. The Grand Duke, at the instigation of Austria, had refused to receive the young count Casati, as attache of the Sardinian embassy. The circumstances of the case made it a serious insult against Sardinia, and her firmness on this occasion has increased the growing regard and attachment which is felt for that country by all the liberal minded Italians. As a sign of the times, it is worthy of remark that many of the noblest of the Italian patriots have lately declared in a public manner, that if Italy is to become one under any monarchy, the only monarch worthy of the support of patriots is Vittorio Emmanuele, the present king of Piedmont. Even some of the republican leaders, Manin among others, have expressed that belief.

A very important circular letter of the Pope to the heads of the Piedmontese clergy has been recently published, in spite of the denial made to the priests to take any copy of it, and of the injunction to keep secret its contents. The object of the letter is to define clearly and to set into distinct categories all those who are under sentence of excommunication in Sardinia, on account of their participation in the making or the carrying out of the law against the convents. Considering the immense number of those included in the categories, it would have been shorter and just as good to say plainly that, with few exceptions, the whole nation is excommunicated. It must be said that the terrible penalty is borne with great fortitude by the people; indeed, it seems as if they did not care at all for it, and they make fun, to-day, of what a few years ago would have overwhelmed them with terror.

Extraordinary State of Atmosphere.

To the Editor of the N. Y. Herald.

From the first day of the present month to the 7th, both inclusive, the aurora borealis has shone every night above the clouds, and much of the time it corruscated from 6 P M till 6 A. M. The evening following its cessation, before and after sunset, the western sky was most gorgeously attired—decorated with the most brilliant colors, intermixed or bordered by others of more yellow tint; a most impressive closing of the long auroral term. But one thunder storm has yet been heard from as occuring with in this protracted auroral term, and that was on the first day of November, and was present as a witness of that mournful catastrophe on the railroad from St. Louis to Jefferson City, which clad St. Louis in habiliments of woe and lamentation.

The equilibriations have been numerous during this extraordinary state of atmosphere, and have followed each other in quick succession.

Thursday, 1st, the temperature was in equilibria from 10 P. M. of 31st, to 5 A. M. of 1st November—eight hours; equilibriated from before 3 P. M. till past 9 P. M.—seven hours; from 12 P. M. till 8 A. M. of Friday—nine hours; from before 6 P. M. till 1 A. M. Saturday—seven hours; from before 4 A. M. till past past 2 P. M.—eleven hours; from before 3 P. M. till past 10 P. M.—seven hours; from before 5 A. M. of Sunday till past 11 A. M.—seven hours; from before 6 P. M. till past 10 A. M. of Monday—seventeen hours. Inequilibria from before 2 P. M. till 7 A. M. of Tuesday—nineteen hours; equilibriated from before 1 P. M till past 9 A. M of Wednesday—twenty-one hours; from before 10 A. M., till past 7 P. M.—ten hours; from before 8 P. M. till past 4 A. M. of Thursday—nine hours. The equilibriations ceased with the auroral term. The terms of equilibriation and in-equilbria during the boreal display make twelve several and distinct terms.

What I denominate in-equilibria is that state of atmosphere during which the temperature remains unchanged for a term of seven or more consecutive hours, and equilibrated when the change is but two degrees for a like term, indicating, as determined by long continued and carefully recorded observations, terrene action at distant points. ONE WEEK LATER

EUROPEAN NEWS.

EXTRACTS FROM ENGLISH PAPERS RECEIVED BY THE ATLANTIC.

Turkish Victory over the Russians.

The Atlantic arrived at New York Friday, Nov. 30.

She left Liverpool at four o'clock on the afternoon on the 17th inst., and brings 175 passengers, and has experienced heavy westerly gales for the last ten days.

Latest dispatches report officially from Lord Stratford de Radcliffe a victory gained November 5th by Omar Pasha, over 10,000 Russian troops, mostly Georgian militiamen, at the river Ingour, which he crossed with his forces, amounting to 20,000 men, at four points, capturing 60 prisoners, 3 guns, and killing and wounding 400 of the enemy. Turkish loss 300.

A private dispatch, which evidently refers to the same encounter, says that the Turks crossed the River Anakava, and stormed the Russian redoubts, after which they pushed forward towards Kutais.

Kars is still besieged, but appearances indicate that the Russians will retire to Tiflis.

Nothing new is received from the Crimea.—Both armies are preparing for the approach of winter. Only a few ships remain in the Dneiper, and the bulk of the fleets are returning to Constantinople.

Peace rumors are again extremely prevalent but vague. Diplomacy, however, is active, especially at Stockholm, Vienna and Brussels.

A desultory fire was kept up between the north and south sides of Sebastopol. The fortifications of both sides were being augmented.

The latest dates from the seat of war, received by mail, are to the 3d inst. The weather continued fine.

Prince Gortschakoff's latest dispatch says.—"Nothing new in the Crimea. The enemy continues to occupy the valley of the Baidar, where they have two divisions."

Messrs Brown, Shipley & Co. report Liverpool cotton market closed quieter at last week's prices. Breadstuffs slightly advanced. Provisions firm—rather dearer. There is a pause in the sugar excitement.

The money market is unexpectedly stringent.

A Russian cadet who had deserted, reports that Gortschakoff is determined to hazard an attack. The Allies continue every night to reinforce their advanced posts and support them with field artillery.

The War. The dates from the Crimea, by mail, are only to the 3d of Nov., though the telegraphic intelligence is to the 12th. No important movement had been made before Sebastopol or in the Crimea, up to the latest date, though the weather continued very favorable. The Russians and the Allies were both erecting new batteries on opposite sides of the harbor of Sebastopol, and were still employed in firing on each other; but without much effect. It is said that important subterranean works have been discovered near fort St. Nicholas.

The fortifications at Kinburn have been completely repaired, and are garrisoned for the winter by three battalions of French troops, supported by a number of gun-boats. The allied fleet in the Black Sea has chiefly withdrawn to Constantinople; about 23 steamers are still remaining in the Dnieper, and the Bug, and vicinity. The Emperor Alexander has gone back to St. Petersburg. The exports of breadstuffs is said to be absolutely prohibited from all Russian ports; exportations from all Turkish ports are also forbidden, while importations are admitted duty free. Sweden is expected to follow the example of Russia and Turkey and prohibit the exportation of all breadstuffs.

The War in Asia. There are but few particulars of the defeat of the Russians at the river Ingour, by Omar Pasha, on the 6th of Nov.—The Ingour rises in the Caucasus, and flows into the Black Sea near its south-eastern extremity in Georgia. On approaching it the Russians were found posted in force (one account says ten and another twenty thousand,) partly entrenched on the opposite side, with deep water between. The Turks nevertheless charged through the river up to their armpits, attacked the Russian redoubts and completely routed them. The Russians left 400 dead on the field of battle, among whom were two superior officers and 100 subalterns. The Turks lost 68 killed and had 200 wounded.

A letter from Trebizonde, dated Nov. 1st, stated that the Russians had already sent away their baggage from before Kars, to Alexandropol, and were preparing to raise the siege.

Despatches from General Williams to Earl Clarendon, give the details of the celebrated defence of Kars from the assault of the Russians on the 29th of September. From these despatches it appears, that the Russians, at about four o'clock in the morning, attacked the Tahmasb front of the defences, in three columns, supported by 24 guns. They advanced to the assault in three different places. Their approach was early discovered by the garrison, and all needful preparations were made to receive them. Expecting to surprise the Turks, the Russians came steadily and boldly on until within range, when they were suddenly met by a crushing fire of artillery from all points of the line. This unexpected reception, however, only drew forth loud hurrahs from the Russian infantry, as it rushed up the hill, on the redoubts and breastworks. These works poured forth a fire of musketry and rifles, which told with fearful effect on the close column of attack, more especially on the left one, which being opposed by a battalion of 450 Chasseurs, armed with Minie rifles, was after long and desperate fighting completely broken, and sent headlong down the hill, leaving 850 dead on the field, besides those carried off by their comrades.

The central column of the Russians, after fighting desperately for several hours was also beaten back with great loss. The right column was for a time more successful; supported by a battery they succeeded in turning the left flank of the Turkish defences and taking the redoubt in the rear, while their infantry penetrated considerably behind the Turkish position. At this critical moment reserves were brought up from different quarters and suddenly falling on the advancing Russians put them to routs and pursued them with great destruction.

In another direction the Russians succeeded in their assault on some small redoubts and connected breastworks. Reinforcements were speedily ordered up, and the redoubts were retaken after having been in the Russian hands but a little time.

Gen. Williams says of this combat, which lasted nearly seven hours, that "the Turkish infantry, as well as artillery, fought with the most determined courage; and when it is recollected that they had worked on their entrenchments, and guarded them at night throughout a period extending to nearly four months, I think your lordship will admit that they have proved themselves worthy of the admiration of Europe, and established an undoubted claim to be placed amongst the most distinguished of the troops."

Greece. Considerable remark has been excited by the New United States Minister to Greece paying a formal visit to the Russian Minister, who returned the visit on board the American ship-of-war. There is a statement in the French papers that the United States make offer to pay up the indebtedness of Greece to England and France, in consideration of receiving the Island of Milo, for 90 years. Athens letters of the 9th November, announce the departure of the American Squadron for Constantinople; also that the legislative session closed on the 6th.

Spain. A Declaration by Espartero about the Western Alliance. Paris, Nov. 14. I am enabled to transmit you the following as the exact sense, and as near as I can remember, the exact words of a declaration made by Espartero a few days ago to a political personage now in Paris, who had asked the duke whether there was any truth in the rumors of a projected alliance between Spain, and France and England:

"There is not at present any alliance. But Spain is a Latin nation, and if the war goes on, she will certainly take part in it ultimately on the side of France and England. I incline to think that the war will become general in the spring. Should events compel Spain to draw the sword in this quarrel, you may be assured, that the manner of her doing so will be such as to sustain the old Castilian glory, and that she will not accept a ship, a man, or a crown piece, from any power in the world."—[Correspondence of the London News.

The troubles in Saragossa are over, and order is restored.

The New Prussian Gazette announces that immense beds of sulphur have been discovered on both sides of the Volga, near Samara. The Russian government has given orders for the instant working of the beds, which are said to be "more valuable to Russia than a discovery of old at this juncture."

☞ The pope being hard pressed for money to maintain his secular government, has sold for $80,000 the magnificent tiara which Queen Isabella of Spain presented to him only last spring. The Christians of Spain are highly indignant at an act showing so slight a regard to their queen.

Obituary.

"How peaceful and how powerful is the grave." Byron.

I was forcibly reminded of this truthful expression of the Poet, last week, while standing by the grave of little brother Freddy. He was a darling boy! We loved him—oh how well! God saw how our affections were twining around him, and to teach us the great lesson that all here is passing away, permitted death to overpower him. But his sufferings are over—his body once racked with pain is at rest—no noise will disturb his slumber.

Truly the grave is peaceful. It is also sacred. There lie God's little ones. Angels are guarding their dust. The hope of a resurrection has forever abolished the heathen form of burning the dead. If there is a place on earth where I love to linger, it is beside the grave of loved ones; there the resurrection looks most glorious. Oh, how joyful that day will be when we are all gathered home! How blessed the hope—how bright the prospect of the Christian! He looks forward to a time of reparation, to a glorious resurrection. The reign of death is almost ended; the Prince of Life is coming soon! Then let us grieve no more for the little one, Requiescat in pace.

MARION A. COTTON.

PITTSFIELD, Mass.

Died in Cheshire, Mass., after a few hours of severe suffering with the croup, Fred B. Wood, son of Simeon and Reliance E. Wood, aged 14 months.

My heart is filled with pain and sorrow as I write to communicate the melancholy intelligence. Our dear little Fred was a bright, active child, interesting to all who knew him.

He observed things that transpired around him very minutely, would often take his little Testament, sit down and read, (after his manner of reading,) and then kneel by his little chair and pray with his little hands clasped, and often would he sing. The sweet, precious words he used to speak, are dear in our memories.

But ah! death has done its cruel work; our hearts are broken; we listen for his little footsteps and for his sweet voice, but we hear them not.

The Lord chastises, but not willingly. Praise His holy name, He also sympathises. "Though He slay me, yet will I trust in him."

The funeral services were attended by Br. M. Bachelor, who preached from Jer. 31 15-17.

The loved, the bright, the beautiful,
From life must pass away;
And bitter are the tears that fall
Above the sleeping clay.

We've laid our little Fred away,
Within the silent tomb,
We turn and leave him there alone,
In darkness and in gloom.

We've put away his little clothes,
He'll never need them more,
But soon immortal robes of white,
He'll wear forevermore.

His playthings we have laid aside,
No more they'll please his eye,
But soon a golden harp he'll sport,
With joy that ne'er will die.

Yes, dearest child, short is thy stay
Within thy narrow bed;
Thy little form may scarcely feel
Corruption's withering tread,

Ere thou shalt hear thy Savior's voice:
"Arise, ye dead, and sing,
Where is thy victory, now, O grave?
And where, O death, thy sting?"

"His own soft hand shall wipe the tears
From every weeping eye,"
And bid our sighs and sorrows end
In glory and in joy.

Thy dearest form will then again
With life and warmth be filled,
Our bleeding hearts with joy, and love,
And gratitude be swelled.

R. E. WOOD.

Died in Jamaica, Vt., Oct. 16th, Sr. Hannah Stiles, in the 67th year of her age. Also, under the same roof, Sr. Sarah Fish, aged 31 years, youngest daughter of Sr. Stiles.

Sr. Stiles was deprived of her companion some years since, who died at the Insane Asylem in Brattleborough. She formerly belonged to the Congregational Church.

Sr. F. has left a little girl about seven years old, and a companion whom she supposed to be dead, who left his family about four years ago, for the golden mines of California. But since her decease, intelligence has been received by her friends, that he is alive and intends to return the coming Spring. May the Lord prepare his heart to greet his family on the new earth.

Srs. S. and F. embraced the Advent faith about a year and a half ago, and were buried with Christ in baptism. Since that time, they have been looking, with us, for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the King of kings.

In their dispositions they were kind, affectionate, sympathetic; loving and beloved by all who knew them. But they are gone to the enemy's land; their work is done, their sufferings are ended. Mother and daughter are now sleeping side by side, in Jesus; prepared to awake when the trumpet of God shall sound, and come forth, glowing with immortal beauty, and shouting, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"

Notices.

The work recommended a few weeks since by so many of the Preachers, is now written, and will go to the publisher's as soon as pledges are received sufficient to warrant the undertaking. As this is a gift to the cause except the actual expense, I do not feel it duty to borrow $4 or 500, and be compelled to peddle my own productions to get out of debt. If the preaching Brn interested would just name the thing to the Churches, and get some one or more in each place to pledge themselves for 10, 15, or 20, as they may choose, it will save the trouble of getting single subscribers at 50 cts. each.—Such a course would secure the object at once. 1,000 books will cost about $400. 50 pledges, 20 each, will warrant the undertaking. I have received pledges for over 100 without any effort. Now this is a short and easy method, and if done soon, the work will soon appear, and the Nos. be sent to those who pledge, for distribution.

For The Crisis.

Lazarus and the Rich Man.

Oh, behold poor, dying Lazarus!
View his sufferings o'er and o'er!
Naked, starving, and afflicted,
Was there ever one so poor!

View him at the rich man's dwelling;
Hark! the humble suppliant's prayer!
Nothing but the crumbs desiring—
No relief for him was there!

None to bind his wounds, all bleeding,
None to pour in oil and wine,
Though the man of wealth sat feasting,
Robed in garments rich and fine

Dogs, as faithful, good physicians,
Came to Lazarus, licked his sores,
Dumb, yet friendly, docile creatures,
Showed compassion to the poor!

Oh, take courage, blessed children,
Poverty is but a rod;
You shall eat the bread of heaven—
Live by every word of God!

For the Crisis.

"I will bring distress upon men; and they shall walk like blind men." Bible.

By S. S. B.

No. 2.

In my previous article I endeavored to present to the reader the meaning of the expression—"the voice of the day of God"—as being synonymous with, "the days of the voice of the seventh angel." If that be correct, we have been in those days since 1840; consequently when the seventh angel's mission closes, the mystery of God is finished.

"But in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound, the MYSTERY OF GOD SHOULD BE FINISHED, as he hath declared to his servants the prophets."

The Apostle Paul in his Epistle to the Ephesians doubtless refers to the same mystery. Eph. chap. 1: 9—10:

"Having made known unto us the MYSTERY OF his will, according to his good pleasure, which he hath purposed in himself: That in the dispensation of the FULNESS OF TIMES he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth; even in him."

The fulness of times—Barnes, in his notes on this passage, explains it thus:

"When the times were fully completed—when all the periods should have passed by which he had prescribed, or judged necessary to the completion of the object. The period referred to here is that when all things shall be gathered in the Redeemer, at the winding up of human affairs, or the consumation of all things."

The same time is doubtless referred to in the 3d chap. of Acts, 20—21 verses:

"And he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you: Whom the heaven must receive, until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets, since the world began."

Professor Murdock, in his translation of the Syriac which is esteemed the most correct New Testament version, renders the 21st verse thus: "WHOM THE HEAVENS RETAIN UNTIL THE COMPLETION OF THE TIMES WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF HIS HOLY PROPHETS OF OLD;" consequently when all times are completed, His mediation terminated, the seventh angel sounds. Then he descends from heaven.

Rev. 11: 14—18:

"The second wo is past; and behold, the third wo cometh quickly. And the SEVENTH ANGEL SOUNDED; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever. And the four and twenty elders, which sat before God on their seats, fell upon their faces, and worshipped God, Saying, We give thee thanks, O Lord God Almighty, which art, and wast, and art to come; because thou hast taken to thee thy great power, and hast reigned. And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the TIME OF THE DEAD, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and SHOULDEST DESTROY THEM WHICH DESTROY THE EARTH."

The language of the apostle to the Church at Thessalonica, is strictly in point just here, and harmonizes with the gathering together in one—(In Christ—in His Kingdom—all His saints.)

1st Thess. 4: 13—18:

"But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first: Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore, comfort one another with these words."

In the above language the apostle most clearly sets forth the bringing to life of all that sleep in Jesus, and the translation of all that are His AT HIS second glorious Advent. Hence, in writing to his son Timothy in the Gospel, he declares he "will judge the quick and the dead at His appearing." See 2d Tim. 4: 1:

"I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom."

See also 1st Cor. 15: 51—54,

"Behold, I shew you a mystery: We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed.—For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory."

Again it is declared that he will "be revealed from heaven with His mighty Angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.—Who shall be punished with an everlasting destruction from the presence of God, When he shall come to be glorified in his Saints, and to be admired in all them that believe." Is it not perfectly plain and conclusive, that when He is glorified in one class, the other class is punished with an everlasting destruction? And the parables of our Lord Jesus confirm this. E. g., notice the one in Matt. 13. He there declares the tares and the wheat shall grow together until the harvest, and that the harvest is the end of the world.—And at the harvest He will send His angels to gather the wheat—the children of the kingdom—into the garner and burn up the chaff. So then when the wheat is harvested the tares are also cast into the furnace to be burned. Hence the tares are burned at the close of this age or dispensation; and, the next is a field or age WITHOUT TARES.

Matt. 13: 47—50.

"Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a net, that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind: Which, when it was full, they drew to shore, and sat down, and gathered the good into vessels, but cast the bad away. So SHALL IT BE AT THE END OF THE WORLD: THE ANGELS SHALL COME FORTH, AND SEVER THE WICKED FROM AMONG THE JUST, And shall cast them into the furnace of fire: there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth."

When it was full, when the Gospel was preached for a witness unto all nations, then the net was drawn to the shore—the good gathered into the kingdom—the bad cast into the furnace of fire. Mark the 49th verse—"so shall it be in the end of the world."

We will now proceed to view the condition of the world according to the best information we can obtain from the most reliable scources. We will notice very briefly the so called bulwark of Christianity—old Protestant England.

John Cumming, in commenting on the Infidelity of the age, remarks of the City of London:—

"Within a radius of eight miles of St. Paul's cathedral there are about two millions of people—the largest population ever assembled within the limits of a city. If all the churches and chapels—Protestant, Established, Dissenting, Roman Catholic, and Socinian—were as full as they could hold, there would not be within them one-fourth of that mighty population. If I take them at a season when the weather is fine, and the public health good, and every thing is favorable, you will find the average attendance to be each only one-fourth full. If that be the average, the result will be that there are never more in church on one Sunday, in all denominations, than, if I take the largest, about 200,000 people, out of a population of two millions. And how many, do you think, of that number, are communicants?—Startling fact! awful stain upon the missionary zeal—the aggressive efforts of the metropolis! there are scarcely 60,000 who so far profess the gospel as to avail themselves of the opportunity of commemorating the dying love, and receiving the pledges of the second advent of the Lord Jesus Christ. So true is this, that the steamboats and the railways alone carry from the metropolis every Sunday morning a greater population than all the churches and chapels together any one day contain."

He states further, that there are in London, 200,000 Roman Catholics; 12,000 children trained to pick pockets, with the greatest tact, speed and success, or to plunder houses with the best chance of escape; 3000 receivers of stolen property; 4000 are annually committed for crimes; 10,000 gamblers; 20,000 live by begging; 30,000 regular thieves; 150,000 habitual gin-drinkers; 150,000 of both sexes, who lead a life of debauchery and licentiousness. "Thus there is a greater number of ostensibly depraved and abandoned characters in the service of Satan, than there are during Sunday in the house of Prayer."

"This great city sends annually a million of money for the conversion of the ends of the earth, and rightly so,—but alas, there are millions more needed for the conversion of the population at home. And melancholy and painful spectacle! in the midst of this scene of demoralization, ignorance, and crime, the ministers of the everlasting gospel are found quarrelling and disputing with each other about details of discipline and forms of worship."

Such is the condition of the Emporium of the world, after all that has been and is now being done in one of the most enlightened protestant governments on earth. It is truly dark—dark—amid the setting rays of the Gospel of the son of God.

What a mass of moral putrefaction.—It presents a most heart-sickening picture, and this too in Protestant England. Truly the advocates of the temporal Millenium must conclude that it is a dark Harbinger for the dawning of the Millenial Glory!—Add to the above startling facts the testimony of Rob't Atkins of Liverpool. In speaking of the condition of the Church, he has said in an article I have before me:

"Apostasy, apostasy, apostasy, is engraven on the very front of every church; and did they know it, and did they feel it, there might be hope; but, alas! they cry, We are rich, and increased in goods, and stand in need of nothing: and thus blasphemy is added to apostasy."

And now while such a mass of horrid creatures are festering in their slime, amid those dens of deepest and most foul iniquity and the Church so drunk with the riches and pleasures of the world as to be insensible of her danger, this truly Protestant government is now waging war with Russia in order to assist the most licentious government on earth! O what a progression! It is downward; yes, and long has it been so—slow in the beginning, in comparison to the rapid velocity with which it now rushes to the very depths of heaven daring oppression, cruelty and injustice.

Thus England is spending millions for armies, fleets and engines of death to burn cities, sink vessels and murder and mangle thousands that never did an action to bring such cruel and unmitigated wrath upon them. O turn for one moment to the bodies of the mangled survivors taken, reeking with blood, to the hospitals—hear the groans of the wounded and the dying. O how dark the picture! poor earth is teeming with the curse.

The lazar-house, sad, noisome, dark, wherein are laid
Numbers of all diseased, all maladies,
Of ghostly spasm, or racking torture, qualms
Of heart-sick agony, all feverous kinds,
Convulsions, epilepsies, fierce catarrhs,
Intestine stone and ulcer, colic pangs,
Demoniac frenzy, moping melancholy,
And moon-struck madness, pining atrophy,
Marasmus, and wide wasting pestilence,
Dropsies and asthmas, and joint-racking rheums

I will close this article with an extract from the London Quarterly Journal of Prophecy:

"We look for no times of righteousness in these last days. We have been warned to expect evil, and not good—progressive evil, not progressive good—until the Lord come.

"The age of progress is not the present; it is the age to come. In the present there is the development of evil,—in the future, the development of good. Man is now putting forth his power to the utmost in efforts after progress.—Poor progress at the best, yet much boasted of! It is but man's progress; it is but finite development. Man is now put to the proof. He is allowed to do his best, and he is given time to do it in. God will not hinder the attempt, nor hurry him in making it. Full time, ample scope, large opportunity, will be granted. Man ruined a world; it is to be proved whether he can rebuild it. He ruined it in a day; he is given six thousand years to attempt its reconstruction—His downward progress was swift enough; it is to be tried whether his upward progress will be as rapid, or whether there can be such a thing as upward progress at all, when he is left alone. God has been putting him to the proof. He says to him, 'Try to govern the world;' man tries it, but fails. He says to him, 'Try to regenerate a world;' he tries it, and fails. He says to him, 'Fertilize the earth;' he tries it, and fails. He says to him, 'Try to advance—make progress—increase in knowledge;' man tries it, and fails It will not do. Man's day has been a long one but it has been a day during which, in all possible circumstances and with all advantages, he has been proved helpless, ignorant, evil; unfit to rule, and unfit to be left without a ruler; unfit to teach, and unwilling to learn; unfit to be intrusted with the care or management of aught within the world's wide circle—from the atom of crumbling dust beneath his feet, up to his own imperishable soul.

"When God has made this proof to the universe of man's utter incapacity; when he has demonstrated man's unworthiness of trust, and inability for any progress, save a downward one, he sets him aside as 'a despised and broken vessel,' in order to bring in the 'greater man,'—ay, the greater than man, even his own eternal Son. The great experiment of 6000 years is now drawing to a close. The vast but awful demonstration is now nearly complete. The case is most manifestly going against man. King, prince, noble, peasant, beggar; statesman, diplomatist, master, parent, child, servant; poet, philosopher, artist, mechanic—all have had their long age of trial, and all have failed. The verdict will soon be given, and the sentence pronounced.

"At this crisis we now stand. At the close of a long series of experiments, made to see what man could do, we find the world as wicked and lawless (to say no more) as at the first. Peace has not spread her reign among the nations, nor misrule departed. Righteousness does not sit on the throne of the nations, nor does holiness beautify the homes of the children of men. Man's merchandise is not consecrated to God, nor his wealth laid at the feet of Jesus.—The heart remains still deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked. Oppression, murder, cruelty, selfishness, lust, sedition, strife and hatred, are still uneradicated, unsubdued, unmitigated. Man has found no cure for these maladies. They rage on, but he is powerless. The curse still pervades the earth and poisons the air. Man cannot disinfect it. The thorn and thistle still shoot up their prickly memorials of the primal sin. Man cannot uproot them. Disease still haunts the body, and man says, 'Depart,' in vain. The 'rooted sorrow' still keeps place in memory, scorching health's freshness, and tearing down life remorselessly—man vainly endeavoring to pluck it out. Death still smites down its daily myriads, and man tries in vain to bribe or disarm it. The grave still receives the loved, and preys upon the beautiful—man pleading in vain that it should give back the joy of his heart and the desire of his eyes!

"Such are the fruits of the first Adam's doings, and such the powerlessness of his children to remove so much as one of the ten thousand evils. It has been proved that man can ruin, but not restore, a world. His attempts at restoration have been sad and mischievous failings. His attempts at progress have been abortive; so that progress in evil, progress in alienation from God, is the feature of greatest prominence in his history.

"But this progress in evil has a limit. God has set bounds to it which it cannot overpass.—He will not allow this earth of His to be totally a hell. He will make the sin of man to praise Him, and He will restrain the remainder thereof. A certain amount and a certain duration He will allow, but no more. Neither of these is indefinite; and we seem to be nearing their boundary.

It is well. For then shall the good displace the evil, and the blessing the curse. The second Adam is at hand, and, with him, the kingdom and the glory. He brings the cure. He knits the broken world. He rebukes disease and sorrow. He binds death. He rides the grave. He delivers creation. He sets up a righteous, peaceful throne. He draws aside the curtain that hid heaven from earth, making them as one—the inner and the outer chamber of the one tabernacle of Jehovah—and setting up the true Jacob's ladder, on which the angels shall be seen ascending and descending, still ministering in holy service to him and to his saints in the day of the kingdom, as heretofore they have done in the day of tribulation and shame.

That is the age of progress! What progress, when God shall set his hand to it! In the light of that ever-widening knowledge, in the blaze of that ever-brightening glory, how vile, shall seem the progress of the dishonored past! Not merely like age's recollection of childhood's trivialities and wasted time, but like morning's remembrance to the drunkard of last night's revelry and lust; like the King of Babylon's remembrance of his seven years' sojourn with the beasts of the field!"

Blandford, Nov. 11, 1855.

Dear Bro. Merriam:

The following articles I cut from the "Cincinnati Dollar Times." To me they are highly interesting, and I doubt not, will be to the readers of our "precious Messenger." Indeed, in these days of cavil and infidelity, any confirmation of the Scriptures is, to the Bible student, of deep interest. Reading "Layard's" article brought to my mind the beautiful lines of Lord Byron, entitled

The Destruction of Sennacherib.

"The Assyrian came down, like the wolf o'er the fold,
And his cohorts were gleaming with purple and gold,
The sheen of their spears, was like stars on the sea,
When the blue wave rolls nightly o'er deep Galilee.

"Like the leaves of the forest, when summer is green,
That host, with their banners, at sunset were seen;
Like the leaves of the forest, when Autumn
hath flown,
That host on the morrow, lay withered and strown.

"For the angel of Death, spread his wings on the blast,
And he breathed in the face of the foe as he passed;
The eyes of the sleepers waxed heavy and chill,
Their hearts but once heaved, and forever stood still.

"There lay the steed, with his nostrils all wide,
But through them there rolled not the breath of his pride;
The foam of his gasping lay white on the turf,
And as cold as the spray of the rock-beating surf.

"And there lay the rider, distorted and pale,
With the dew on his brow, and the rust on his mail;
The tents were all silent, the banners alone,
The lances unlifted, the trumpets unblown.

"The widows of Asher, were loud in their wail,
And the Idols were broke in the temple of Baal;
The might of the Gentiles, unsmote by the sword,
Was melted like snow, in the glance of the Lord."

And then the "Written rocks of Syria."—Says Job, "O that my words were now written! that they were graven with an iron pen and lead in the rock forever!" and there, in those rocks, is the history of the wanderings of God's chosen people, engraven "in the rock forever."

Yours, hoping for immortality when our "King comes." N. M. Henry.

Layard's Confirmation of Scripture.

After all the attention which has been given to Layard's discoveries among the ruins of Nineveh, we doubt whether the public mind in general is fully aware of the nature and extent of the confirmation which they bring to the truth of Scripture history. It may be useful here to set out, in the briefest form, a specimen of some of the general results of these discoveries.

They show, in conformity with the tenor of Scripture, that the earliest ages were not, as many think, barbarous ages; but that the race of men, originally enlightened from a divine source, had, at first, a high degree of general knowledge, which they gradually lost through their defection to idolatry. It has been demonstrated by those excavations, not only that a high state of the arts existed in Nineveh a thousand years before Christ; but also, that in the earliest ages of that city, dating but a few centuries from the flood, their sculptures were the best. In this remarkable result the Egyptian and Assyrian antiquities also agree.

It is also proved, contrary to the general impression, that idolatry was introduced when men had a better knowledge of the true God than afterwards prevailed; that it did not grow up as a religion of nature, by the ineffectual attempts of men to find the true God. But it was introduced as an expedient of men in order to obscure what knowledge of God they possessed, because they did not like to retain God in their knowledge. This is shown in the fact, that the earliest representations of God found in these sculptures are the best, and immeasurably exceed anything of the kind existing in after ages; especially in their approach to the true idea of God. So that idolatry came in not for want of light, but by an abuse of light. Men, knowing God, and yet not willing to glorify him as God, became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened.

The scripture accounts of the great antiquity of Nineveh and the Assyrian Empire agree with these records dug out of the ruins of Nineveh. The Scriptures date the building of the city not long after the flood; and the fact that the same marble materials have been used in successive structures, and that ancient buildings had been placed on the ruins of those still more ancient, and other unmistakable indications, the conclusion is made clear, that the city had all the antiquity which the Scriptures ascribe to it.

Those monuments also bear upon them the record of the fulfillment of prophecy. Nahum prophesied that the city would be plundered of all its treasures, so that none would be left. Layard has found, in all its excavations, nothing in the form of gold or silver; a fact which is remarkable, if the city had not been thoroughly plundered before it was burned. The prophet foretold, that the invaders would obtain easy access to some portions of the city; and that, wherever the inhabitants should resort to the strong holds, these would be burnt. Now the ruins show just this result; that some part of the city were destroyed by fire, and others escaped.

But a more striking confirmation is found in the fact, that inscriptions, on the ruins of one of the palaces, gives the records of the military career of Sennacherib, with just such a series of conquests, and just such boasting of them, as the Scriptures ascribe to him. For instance, the Bible tells us that Hezekiah rebelled against the King of Assyria; that in the fourteenth year of Hezekiah's reign, Sennacherib came up against all the fenced cities of Judah, and took from Hezekiah three hundred talents of silver and thirty of gold.—Now compare this with the historical inscription on Sennacherib's palace; "Because Hezekiah, King of Judah, did not submit to my yoke, I took, and plundered, forty-six of his strong fenced cities and innumerable smaller towns, but I left him Jerusalem his capital city; and because Hezekiah still refused to pay homage, I attacked and carried off the whole population which dwelt around Jerusalem, with thirty talents of gold and eight hundred talents of silver." This agrees with the Bible account, except in respect to the quantity of silver. As to this, the one account may describe what was delivered by Hezekiah, and the other the whole product of his plunder.

The chamber of Sennacherib's palace presents, in sculptures and inscriptions, the seige of the Jewish city Lachish. The king is sculptured, in royal pomp, on his throne, and over his head is this inscription, "Sennacherib, the mighty king, king of the country of Assyria, sitting on the throne of judgment before the city of Lachish; I give permission for his slaughter." In the Scriptures, the destruction of the city of Lachish is represented to have been his most difficult work; and, of course, it was a victory on which he would most plume himself, as these sculptures show that he did.

Another coincidence appears in this, that in the historical sculptures there are marks of a sudden and final interruption of the work, such as would naturally follow from the violent death of the king as described in the Bible.

In the ruins of Babylon there is no sculptured marble. The city was built all of brick. The bricks often have characters stamped upon them. In one instance a huge palace is formed of brick thus stamped; and the same characters exhibit the name of "Nebuchadnezzar." The prominent characteristic of Nebuchadnezzar was his pride—such as was revealed in that speech: "Is not this great Babylon that I have built, by the might of my power, and for the honor of my majesty?" Now, these ruins of the palace, in every brick of them, give just the echo of that boasted speech. Thus, after so many centuries, God has brought forth, from the ruins of these cities, voices in response to what the inspired penman had recorded so many centuries before.

The written Rocks.

We would call the reader's attention to the remarkable confirmations which have recently been afforded, both of existence and wide spread of Writing, in the Mosaic Age, and of the strict accuracy of Scripture history.

We allude to the Written Rocks of Sinai, on which the researches of Mr. Charles Foster, (besides those of other authors) have thrown considerable light.

Journeying, in through, along the Wady Mokatteb, or Written Valley, we see inscriptions on the rocks around us, which must arrest our attention, and which will awaken within our mind the same deep interest that they have created generally, throughout the known world.

We shall be struck with the height at which many of them are written. So high up those precipitous rocks that we are puzzled to settle how they managed to engrave them there. Were scaffoldings erected, or were ropes and baskets let down from the top of rocks, to give the adventurous artist a somewhat precarious footing?

What a multitude of them there are!—And so, what a number of scribes must have been hard at work digging in those hieroglyphics. They extend so far along the rocks that it will take us an hour, at least, to walk to the end of these profuse carvings.

What a variety of figures are visible! Some are men standing—others men moving. Further on, men evidently in the act of supplication; their hands are raised towards heaven. Here are more men, but they are sitting. And here are camels, horses, mules, and riders upon them armed with spears, swords and shields, fighting, drawing the bow, hunting, &c.

Remark, if you please, that on the whole, these inscriptions are executed in a rude and unskilful manner. They are very far from equalling cotemporary specimens of Egyptian art. The latter must have been executed at leisure, as well as by accomplished skill; and these writings on the rock have evidently been executed in haste, by a large number of willing, but not highly skilled laborers.

Now, as we look at these, we ask what was their origin—their date—their author—their meaning? Those Arabs, seated with their becoming gravity, viewing us with some curiosity, cannot read them for us.

In 1772, a Franciscan monk, with a number of followers, passed through the Written Valley, and tried to decipher them. He could not find the key. Yet he had with him men who understood Arabec, Greek, Hebrew, Syriac, Coptic, Armenian, Turkish; men who could speak Latin, and most modern languages.—None of those linguists had the slightest knowledge of the characters engraved on these rocks. Yet somebody must have inscribed them. And they must represent some language. Who shall ascertain it?

We are in a country where there is nothing to be had either to eat or drink.—It must have been some mighty company of pilgrims, passing through this desert, who left behind them this extensive record of their transit, if we only could read it.

We find that various opinions have been held. Cosmas, an Alexandrian merchant, who lived in the year 585, was the first to announce their discovery, thought they were done by the Israelites. In 1743, a zealous bishop offered £500 to anybody who could copy them. We have not heard of any claimant for this reward; but several of them were afterwards copied. Professor Beer, of Leipsic, thinks they were the work of some pilgrims of the early ages. But this is improbable and impossible. They could neither have had the time or means of executing them. With as great improbability they have been ascribed to the Christians living and shepherding their flocks in that neighborhood.

Forster, however, professed to have solved the enigma. We believe he has done so successfully. He agrees with the thoughtful old merchant of Alexandria. They were, he says, the work of the ancient Israelites, during their forty years wandering in the wilderness.

Look at them again and listen to his reasons. They clearly show that they are the work of one generation. Their number, extent, position, point to a numerous army of engravers. You may reckon them by thousands, you may follow them for miles. Some reach up the rocks a hundred feet. To execute them there must have been the resources of a settled and fixed population, such as ladders, ropes, platforms, &c. But no people could have settled there without miraculous supplies of food.

The only people answering to this description was Israel at their exodus.

Moreover, the characters employed bear a close affinity to the written language of Egypt. Mr. Forster's work has identified the alphabet employed on these rocks with the Enchorial alphabet of the Rosetta stone, and with characters found in Egyptian quarries, of a date prior to Moses.

Now, having found out the key—thanks to patient, laborious Mr. Forster—we can manage to make out some of these inscriptions. In nearly forty of them, quite enough to peruse at one time, we discover records of the principal events of the exodus.

Somebody has described the passage of the Red Sea, and the destruction of Pharaoh. And here is another inscription, telling us in simple eloquence how the waters of Marah were healed. They have not forgot the smiting of the rock.—No, it was too wonderful to be passed by. And here are narratives of the murmuring at Meribah; of the plague of serpents; of the quails.

Here is not only a history of the battle at Rephidem, but Moses has sat for his portrait. They have actually drawn him with uplifted arms just as the Bible described it. What a wonderful valley!

Sometimes the inscriptions are very pithy. The man with the engraving tool would be very anxious not to take any verbose narratives. Here is one referring to the quails: "The red geese rise from the sea; lusting, the people eat of them."

And here the story of Marah; "The people, with prone mouth, drinketh at the water springs. Touching with a tree the well of bitterness, be heals."

Would you read the history of the smitten rock, it is before you. "The eloquent speaker strikes the rock, flows forth the water, falling down." (Acts 7: 22.)

No general ever had his movements described with more terseness and brevity than had the leader of Israel his. "Prayeth unto God, the prophet, on a great stone, his hands sustaining Aaron, Hur."

For The Crisis.

Lazarus and the Rich Man.

Oh, behold poor, dying Lazarus!
View his sufferings o'er and o'er!
Naked, starving, and afflicted,
Was there ever one so poor!

View him at the rich man's dwelling;
Hark! the humble suppliant's prayer!
Nothing but the crumbs desiring—
No relief for him was there!

None to bind his wounds, all bleeding,
None to pour in oil and wine,
Though the man of wealth sat feasting,
Robed in garments rich and fine.

Dogs, as faithful, good physicians,
Came to Lazarus, licked his sores,
Dumb, yet friendly, docile creatures,
Showed compassion to the poor!

Oh, take courage, blessed children,
Poverty is but a rod;
You shall eat the bread of heaven—
Live by every word of God!

For the Crisis.

"I will bring distress upon men; and they shall walk like blind men." Bible.

By S. S. B.

No. 2.

In my previous article I endeavored to present to the reader the meaning of the expression—"the voice of the day of God"—as being synonymous with, "the days of the voice of the seventh angel." If that be correct, we have been in those days since 1840; consequently when the seventh angel's mission closes, the mystery of God is finished.

"But in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound, the MYSTERY OF GOD SHOULD BE FINISHED, as he hath declared to his servants the prophets."

The Apostle Paul in his Epistle to the Ephesians doubtless refers to the same mystery. Eph. chap. 1: 9—10:

"Having made known unto us the MYSTERY OF his will, according to his good pleasure, which he hath purposed in himself: That in the dispensation of the FULNESS OF TIMES he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth; even in him."

The fulness of times—Barnes, in his notes on this passage, explains it thus:

"When the times were fully completed—when all the periods should have passed by which he had prescribed, or judged necessary to the completion of the object. The period referred to here is that when all things shall be gathered in the Redeemer, at the winding up ot human affairs, or the consummation of all things."

The same time is doubtless referred to in the 3d chap. of Acts, 20—21 verses:

"And he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you: Whom the heaven must receive, until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets, since the world began."

Professor Murdock, in his translation of the Syriac which is esteemed the most correct New Testament version, renders the 21st verse thus: "WHOM THE HEAVENS RETAIN UNTIL THE COMPLETION OF THE TIMES WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF HIS HOLY PROPHETS OF OLD;" consequently when all times are completed, His mediation terminated, the seventh angel sounds. Then he descends from heaven.

Rev. 11: 14—18:

"The second wo is past; and behold, the third wo cometh quickly. And the SEVENTH ANGEL SOUNDED; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever. And the four and twenty elders, which sat before God on their seats, fell upon their faces, and worshipped God, Saying, We give thee thanks, O Lord God Almighty, which art, and wast, and art to come; because thou hast taken to thee thy great power, and hast reigned. And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the TIME OF THE DEAD, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and SHOULDEST DESTROY THEM WHICH DESTROY THE EARTH."

The language of the apostle to the Church at Thessalonica, is strictly in point just here, and harmonizes with the gathering together in one—(In Christ—in His Kingdom—all His saints.)

1st Thess. 4: 13—18:

"But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore, comfort one another with these words."

In the above language the apostle most clearly sets forth the bringing to life of all that sleep in Jesus, and the translation of all that are His AT His second glorious Advent. Hence, in writing to his son Timothy in the Gospel, he declares he "will judge the quick and the dead at His appearing." See 2d Tim. 4: 1:

"I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom."

See also 1st Cor. 15: 51—54,

"Behold, I shew you a mystery: We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed.—For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory."

Again it is declared that he will "be revealed from heaven with His mighty Angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.—Who shall be punished with an everlasting destruction from the presence of God, When he shall come to be glorified in his Saints, and to be admired in all them that believe." Is it not perfectly plain and conclusive, that when He is glorified in one class, the other class is punished with an everlasting destruction? And the parables of our Lord Jesus confirm this. E. g., notice the one in Matt. 13. He there declares the tares and the wheat shall grow together until the harvest, and that the harvest is the end of the world.—And at the harvest He will send His angels to gather the wheat—the children of the kingdom—into the garner and burn up the chaff. So then when the wheat is harvested the tares are also cast into the furnace to be burned. Hence the tares are burned at the close of this age or dispensation; and the next is a field or age WITHOUT TARES.

Matt. 13: 47—50.

"Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a net, that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind: Which, when it was full, they drew to shore, and sat down, and gathered the good into vessels, but cast the bad away. So SHALL IT BE AT THE END OF THE WORLD: THE ANGELS SHALL COME FORTH, AND SEVER THE WICKED FROM AMONG THE JUST, And shall cast them into the furnace of fire: there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth."

When it was full, when the Gospel was preached for a witness unto all nations, then the net was drawn to the shore—the good gathered into the kingdom—the bad cast into the furnace of fire. Mark the 49th verse—"so shall it be in the end of the world."

We will now proceed to view the condition of the world according to the best information we can obtain from the most reliable scources. We will notice very briefly the so called bulwark of Christianity—old Protestant England.

John Cumming, in commenting on the Infidelity of the age, remarks of the City of London:—

"Within a radius of eight miles of St. Paul's cathedral there are about two millions of people—the largest population ever assembled within the limits of a city. If all the churches and chapels—Protestant, Established, Dissenting, Roman Catholic, and Socinian—were as full as they could hold, there would not be within them one-fourth of that mighty population. If I take them at a season when the weather is fine, and the public health good, and every thing is favorable, you will find the average attendance to be each only one-fourth full. If that be the average, the result will be that there are never more in church on one Sunday, in all denominations, than, if I take the largest, about 200,000 people, out of a population of two millions. And how many, do you think, of that number, are communicants?—Startling fact! awful stain upon the missionary zeal—the aggressive efforts of the metropolis! there are scarcely 60,000 who so far profess the gospel as to avail themselves of the opportunity of commemorating the dying love, and receiving the pledges of the second advent of the Lord Jesus Christ. So true is this, that the steamboats and the railways alone carry from the metropolis every Sunday morning a greater population than all the churches and chapels together any one day contain."

He states further, that there are in London, 200,000 Roman Catholics; 12,000 children trained to pick pockets, with the greatest tact, speed and success, or to plunder houses with the best chance of escape; 3000 receivers of stolen property; 4000 are annually committed for crimes; 10,000 gamblers; 20,000 live by begging; 30,000 regular thieves; 150,000 habitual gin-drinkers; 150,000 of both sexes, who lead a life of debauchery and licentiousness. "Thus there is a greater number of ostensibly depraved and abandoned characters in the service of Satan, than there are during Sunday in the house of Prayer."

"This great city sends annually a million of money for the conversion of the ends of the earth, and rightly so,—but alas, there are millions more needed for the conversion of the population at home. And melancholy and painful spectacle! in the midst of this scene of demoralization, ignorance, and crime, the ministers of the everlasting gospel are found quarrelling and disputing with each other about details of discipline and forms of worship."

Such is the condition of the Emporium of the world, after all that has been and is now being done in one of the most enlightened protestant governments on earth. It is truly dark—dark—amid the setting rays of the Gospel of the son of God.

What a mass of moral putrefaction.—It presents a most heart-sickening picture, and this too in Protestant England. Truly the advocates of the temporal Millenium must conclude that it is a dark Harbinger for the dawning of the Millenial Glory!—Add to the above startling facts the testimony of Rob't Atkins of Liverpool. In speaking of the condition of the Church, he has said in an article I have before me:

"Apostasy, apostasy, apostasy, is engraven on the very front of every church; and did they know it, and did they feel it, there might be hope; but, alas! they cry, We are rich, and increased in goods, and stand in need of nothing: and thus blasphemy is added to apostasy."

And now while such a mass of horrid creatures are festering in their slime, amid those dens of deepest and most foul iniquity and the Church so drunk with the riches and pleasures of the world as to be insensible of her danger, this truly Protestant government is now waging war with Russia in order to assist the most licentious government on earth! O what a progression! It is downward; yes, and long has it been so—slow in the beginning, in comparison to the rapid velocity with which it now rushes to the very depths of heaven-daring oppression, cruelty and injustice.

Thus England is spending millions for armies, fleets and engines of death to burn cities, sink vessels and murder and mangle thousands that never did an action to bring such cruel and unmitigated wrath upon them. O turn for one moment to the bodies of the mangled survivors taken, reeking with blood, to the hospitals—hear the groans of the wounded and the dying. O how dark the picture! poor earth is teeming with the curse.

The lazar-house, sad, noisome, dark, wherein
are laid
Numbers of all diseased, all maladies,
Of ghostly spasm, or racking torture, qualms
Of heart-sick agony, all feverous kinds,
Convulsions, epilepsies, fierce catarrhs,
Intestine stone and ulcer, colic pangs,
Demoniac frenzy, moping melancholy,
And moon-struck madness, pining atrophy,
Marasmus, and wide-wasting pestilence,
Dropsies and asthmas, and joint-racking rheums

I will close this article with an extract from the London Quarterly Journal of Prophecy:

"We look for no times of righteousness in these last days. We have been warned to expect evil, and not good—progressive evil, not progressive good—until the Lord come.

"The age of progress is not the present; it is the age to come. In the present there is the development of evil,—in the future, the development of good. Man is now putting forth his power to the utmost in efforts after progress.—Poor progress at the best, yet much boasted of! It is but man's progress; it is but finite development. Man is now put to the proof. He is allowed to do his best, and he is given time to do it in. God will not hinder the attempt, nor hurry him in making it. Full time, ample scope, large opportunity, will be granted. Man ruined a world; it is to be proved whether he can rebuild it. He ruined it in a day; he is given six thousand years to attempt its reconstruction—His downward progress was swift enough; it is to be tried whether his upward progress will be as rapid, or whether there can be such a thing as upward progress at all, when he is left alone. God has been putting him to the proof. He says to him, 'Try to govern the world;' man tries it, but fails. He says to him, 'Try to regenerate a world;' he tries it, and fails. He says to him, 'Fertilize the earth;' he tries it, and fails. He says to him, 'Try to advance—make progress—increase in knowledge;' man tries it, and fails. It will not do. Man's day has been a long one, but it has been a day during which, in all possible circumstances and with all advantages, he has been proved helpless, ignorant, evil; unfit to rule, and unfit to be left without a ruler; unfit to teach, and unwilling to learn; unfit to be intrusted with the care or management of aught within the world's wide circle—from the atom of crumbling dust beneath his feet, up to his own imperishable soul.

"When God has made this proof to the universe of man's utter incapacity; when he has demonstrated man's unworthiness of trust, and inability for any progress, save a downward one, he sets him aside as 'a despised and broken vessel,' in order to bring in the 'greater man,'—ay, the greater than man, even his own eternal Son. The great experiment of 6000 years is now drawing to a close. The vast but awful demonstration is now nearly complete. The case is most manifestly going against man. King, prince, noble, peasant, beggar; statesman, diplomatist, master, parent, child, servant; poet, philosopher, artist, mechanic—all have had their long age of trial, and all have failed. The verdict will soon be given, and the sentence pronounced.

"At this crisis we now stand. At the close of a long series of experiments, made to see what man could do, we find the world as wicked and lawless (to say no more) as at the first. Peace has not spread her reign among the nations, nor misrule departed. Righteousness does not sit on the throne of the nations, nor does holiness beautify the homes of the children of men. Man's merchandise is not consecrated to God, nor his wealth laid at the feet of Jesus. The heart remains still deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked. Oppression, murder, cruelty, selfishness, lust, sedition, strife and hatred, are still uneradicated, unsubdued, unmitigated. Man has found no cure for these maladies. They rage on, but he is powerless. The curse still pervades the earth and poisons the air. Man cannot disinfect it. The thorn and thistle still shoot up their prickly memorials of the primal sin. Man cannot uproot them. Disease still haunts the body, and man says, 'Depart,' in vain. The 'rooted sorrow' still keeps place in memory, scorching health's freshness, and tearing down life remorselessly—man vainly endeavoring to pluck it out. Death still smites down its daily myriads, and man tries in vain to bribe or disarm it. The grave still receives the loved, and preys upon the beautiful—man pleading in vain that it should give back the joy of his heart and the desire of his eyes!

"Such are the fruits of the first Adam's doings, and such the powerlessness of his children to remove so much as one of the ten thousand evils. It has been proved that man can ruin, but not restore, a world. His attempts at restoration have been sad and mischievous failings. His attempts at progress have been abortive; so that progress in evil, progress in alienation from God, is the feature of greatest prominence in his history.

"But this progress in evil has a limit. God has set bounds to it which it cannot overpass.—He will not allow this earth of His to be totally a hell. He will make the sin of man to praise Him, and He will restrain the remainder thereof. A certain amount and a certain duration He will allow, but no more. Neither of these is indefinite; and we seem to be nearing their boundary.

It is well. For then shall the good displace the evil, and the blessing the curse. The second Adam is at hand, and, with him, the kingdom and the glory. He brings the cure. He knits the broken world. He rebukes disease and sorrow. He binds death. He rifles the grave. He delivers creation. He sets up a righteous, peaceful throne. He draws aside the curtain that hid heaven from earth, making them as one—the inner and the outer chamber of the one tabernacle of Jehovah—and setting up the true Jacob's ladder, on which the angels shall be seen ascending and descending, still ministering in holy service to him and to his saints in the day of the kingdom, as heretofore they have done in the day of tribulation and shame.

That is the age of progress! What progress, when God shall set his hand to it! In the light of that ever-widening knowledge, in the blaze of that ever-brightening glory, how vile, shall seem the progress of the dishonored past! Not merely like age's recollection of childhood's trivialities and wasted time, but like morning's remembrance to the drunkard of last night's revelry and lust; like the King of Babylon's remembrance of his seven years' sojourn with the beasts of the field!"

More on the distress of nations in my next if the Lord will.

For the World's Crisis.

Blandford, Nov. 11, 1855.

Dear Bro. Merriam:

The following articles I cut from the "Cincinnati Dollar Times." To me they are highly interesting, and I doubt not, will be to the readers of our "precious Messenger." Indeed, in these days of cavil and infidelity, any confirmation of the Scriptures is, to the Bible student, of deep interest. Reading "Layard's" article brought to my mind the beautiful lines of Lord Byron, entitled

The Destruction of Sennacherib.

"The Assyrian came down, like the wolf o'er the fold,
And his cohorts were gleaming with purple and gold;
The sheen of their spears, was like stars on the sea,
When the blue wave rolls nightly o'er deep Gallilee.

"Like the leaves of the forest, when summer is green,
That host, with their banners, at sunset were seen;
Like the leaves of the forest, when Autumn hath flown,
That host on the morrow, lay withered and strown.

"For the angel of Death, spread his wings on the blast,
And he breathed in the face of the foe as he passed;
The eyes of the sleepers waxed heavy and chill,
Their hearts but once heaved, and forever stood still.

"There lay the steed, with his nostrils all wide,
But through them there rolled not the breath of his pride;
The foam of his gasping lay white on the turf,
And as cold as the spray of the rock-beating surf.

"And there lay the rider, distorted and pale,
With the dew on his brow, and the rust on his mail;
The tents were all silent, the banners alone,
The lances unlifted, the trumpets unblown.

"The widows of Asher, were loud in their wail,
And the Idols were broke in the temple of Baal;
The might of the Gentiles, unsmote by the sword,
Was melted like snow, in the glance of the Lord"

And then the "Written rocks of Syria."—Says Job, "O that my words were now written! that they were graven with an iron pen and lead in the rock forever!" and there, in those rocks, is the history of the wanderings of God's chosen people, engraven "in the rock forever."

Yours, hoping for immortality when our "King comes."

Layard's Confirmation of Scripture.

After all the attention which has been given to Layard's discoveries among the ruins of Nineveh, we doubt whether the public mind in general is fully aware of the nature and extent of the confirmation which they bring to the truth of Scripture history. It may be useful here to set out, in the briefest form, a specimen of some of the general results of these discoveries.

They show, in conformity with the tenor of Scripture, that the earliest ages were not, as many think, barbarous ages; but that the race of men, originally enlightened from a divine source, had, at first, a high degree of general knowledge, which they gradually lost through their defection to idolatry. It has been demonstrated by those excavations, not only that a high state of the arts existed in Nineveh a thousand years before Christ; but also, that in the earliest ages of that city, dating but a few centuries from the flood, their sculptures were the best. In this remarkable result the Egyptian and Assyrian antiquities also agree.

It is also proved, contrary to the general impression, that idolatry was introduced when men had a better knowledge of the true God than afterwards prevailed; that it did not grow up as a religion of nature, by the ineffectual attempts of men to find the true God. But it was introduced as an expedient of men in order to obscure what knowledge of God they possessed, because they did not like to retain God in their knowledge. This is shown in the fact, that the earliest representations of God found in these sculptures are the best, and immeasurably exceed anything of the kind existing in after ages; especially in their approach to the true idea of God. So that idolatry came in not for want of light, but by an abuse of light. Men, knowing God, and yet not willing to glorify him as God, became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened.

The scripture accounts of the great antiquity of Nineveh and the Assyrian Empire agree with these records dug out of the ruins of Nineveh. The Scriptures date the building of the city not long after the flood; and the fact that the same marble materials have been used in successive structures, and that ancient buildings had been placed on the ruins of those still more ancient, and other unmistakable indications, the conclusion is made clear, that the city had all the antiquity which the Scriptures ascribe to it.

Those monuments also bear upon them the record of the fulfillment of prophecy. Nahum prophesied that the city would be plundered of all its treasures, so that none would be left. Layard has found, in all its excavations, nothing in the form of gold or silver; a fact which is remarkable, if the city had not been thoroughly plundered before it was burned. The prophet foretold, that the invaders would obtain easy access to some portions of the city; and that, wherever the inhabitants should resort to the strong holds, these would be burnt. Now the ruins show just this result; that some parts of the city were destroyed by fire, and others escaped.

But a more striking confirmation is found in the fact, that inscriptions, on the ruins of one of the palaces, gives the records of the military career of Sennacherib, with just such a series of conquests, and just such boasting of them, as the Scriptures ascribe to him. For instance, the Bible tells us that Hezekiah rebelled against the King of Assyria; that in the fourteenth year of Hezekiah's reign, Sennacherib came up against all the fenced cities of Judah, and took from Hezekiah three hundred talents of silver and thirty of gold.—Now compare this with the historical inscription on Sennacherib's palace; "Because Hezekiah, King of Judah, did not submit to my yoke, I took, and plundered, forty-six of his strong fenced cities and innumerable smaller towns, but I left him Jerusalem his capital city; and because Hezekiah still refused to pay homage, I attacked and carried off the whole population which dwelt around Jerusalem, with thirty talents of gold and eight hundred talents of silver." This agrees with the Bible account, except in respect to the quantity of silver. As to this, the one account may describe what was delivered by Hezekiah, and the other the whole product of his plunder.

The chamber of Sennacherib's palace presents, in sculptures and inscriptions, the seige of the Jewish city Lachish. The king is sculptured, in royal pomp, on his throne, and over his head is this inscription, "Sennacherib, the mighty king, king of the country of Assyria, sitting on the throne of judgment before the city of Lachish; I give permission for his slaughter." In the Scriptures, the destruction of the city of Lachish is represented to have been his most difficult work; and, of course, it was a victory on which he would most plume himself, as these sculptures show that he did.

Another coincidence appears in this, that in the historical sculptures there are marks of a sudden and final interruption of the work, such as would naturally follow from the violent death of the king as described in the Bible.

In the ruins of Babylon there is no sculptured marble. The city was built all of brick. The bricks often have characters stamped upon them. In one instance a huge palace is formed of brick thus stamped; and the same characters exhibit the name of "Nebuchadnezzar." The prominent characteristic of Nebuchadnezzar was his pride—such as was revealed in that speech: "Is not this great Babylon that I have built, by the might of my power, and for the honor of my majesty?" Now, these ruins of the palace, in every brick of them, give just the echo of that boasted speech. Thus, after so many centuries, God has brought forth, from the ruins of these cities, voices in response to what the inspired penman had recorded so many centuries before.

The written Rocks.

We would call the reader's attention to the remarkable confirmations which have recently been afforded, both of existence and wide spread of Writing, in the Mosaic Age, and of the strict accuracy of Scripture history.

We allude to the Written Rocks of Sinai, on which the researches of Mr. Charles Foster, (besides those of other authors) have thrown considerable light.

Journeying, in through, along the Wady Mokatteb, or Written Valley, we see inscriptions on the rocks around us, which must arrest our attention, and which will awaken within our mind the same deep interest that they have created generally, throughout the known world.

We shall be struck with the height at which many of them are written. So high up those precipitous rocks that we are puzzled to settle how they managed to engrave them there. Were scaffoldings erected, or were ropes and baskets let down from the top of rocks, to give the adventurous artist a somewhat precarious footing?

What a multitude of them there are!—And so, what a number of scribes must have been hard at work digging in those hieroglyphics. They extend so far along the rocks that it will take us an hour, at least, to walk to the end of these profuse carvings.

What a variety of figures are visible! Some are men standing—others men moving. Further on, men evidently in the act of supplication; their hands are raised towards heaven. Here are more men, but they are sitting. And here are camels, horses, mules, and riders upon them armed with spears, swords and shields, fighting, drawing the bow, hunting, &c.

Remark, if you please, that on the whole, these inscriptions are executed in a rude and unskilful manner. They are very far from equalling cotemporary specimens of Egyptian art. The latter must have been executed at leisure, as well as by accomplished skill; and these writings on the rock have evidently been executed in haste, by a large number of willing, but not highly skilled laborers.

Now, as we look at these, we ask what was their origin—their date—their author—their meaning? Those Arabs, seated with their becoming gravity, viewing us with some curiosity, cannot read them for us.

In 1772, a Franciscan monk, with a number of followers, passed through the Written Valley, and tried to decipher them. He could not find the key. Yet he had with him men who understood Arabec, Greek, Hebrew, Syriac, Coptic, Armenian, Turkish; men who could speak Latin, and most modern languages.—None of those linguists had the slightest knowledge of the characters engraved on these rocks. Yet somebody must have inscribed them. And they must represent some language. Who shall ascertain it?

We are in a country where there is nothing to be had either to eat or drink.—It must have been some mighty company of pilgrims, passing through this desert, who left behind them this extensive record of their transit, if we only could read it.

We find that various opinions have been held. Cosmas, an Alexandrian merchant, who lived in the year 585, was the first to announce their discovery, thought they were done by the Israelites. In 1743, a zealous bishop offered £500 to anybody who could copy them. We have not heard of any claimant for this reward; but several of them were afterwards copied. Professor Beer, of Leipsic, thinks they were the work of some pilgrims of the early ages. But this is improbable and impossible. They could neither have had the time or means of executing them. With as great improbability they have been ascribed to the Christians living and shepherding their flocks in that neighborhood.

Forster, however, professed to have solved the enigma. We believe he has done so successfully. He agrees with the thoughtful old merchant of Alexandria. They were, he says, the work of the ancient Israelites, during their forty years wandering in the wilderness.

Look at them again and listen to his reasons. They clearly show that they are the work of one generation. Their number, extent, position, point to a numerous army of engravers. You may reckon them by thousands, you may follow them for miles. Some reach up the rocks a hundred feet. To execute them there must have been the resources of a settled and fixed population, such as ladders, ropes, platforms, &c. But no people could have settled there without miraculous supplies of food.

The only people answering to this description was Israel at their exodus.

Moreover, the characters employed bear a close affinity to the written language of Egypt. Mr. Forster's work has identified the alphabet employed on these rocks with the Enchorial alphabet of the Rosetta stone, and with characters found in Egyptian quarries, of a date prior to Moses.

Now, having found out the key—thanks to patient, laborious Mr. Forster—we can manage to make out some of these inscriptions. In nearly forty of them, quite enough to peruse at one time, we discover records of the principal events of the exodus.

Somebody has described the passage of the Red Sea, and the destruction of Pharaoh. And here is another inscription, telling us in simple eloquence how the waters of Marah were healed. They have not forgot the smiting of the rock.—No; it was too wonderful to be passed by. And here are narratives of the murmuring at Meribah; of the plague of serpents; of the quails.

Here is not only a history of the battle at Rephidem, but Moses has sat for his portrait. They have actually drawn him with uplifted arms just as the Bible described it. What a wonderful valley!

Sometimes the inscriptions are very pithy. The man with the engraving tool would be very anxious not to take any verbose narratives. Here is one referring to the quails: "The red geese rise from the sea; lusting, the people eat of them."

And here the story of Marah: "The people, with prone mouth, drinketh at the water springs. Touching with a tree the well of bitterness, he heals."

Would you read the history of the smitten rock, it is before you. "The eloquent speaker strikes the rock, flows forth the water, falling down." (Acts 7: 22.)

No general ever had his movements described with more terseness and brevity than had the leader of Israel his. "Prayeth unto God, the prophet, on a great stone, his hands sustaining Aaron, Hur."

For The Crisis.

The Flesh and Spirit.

By ELD. F. H. BERICK.

"Be not deceived; God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the spirit, shall of the spirit reap life everlasting."

Some time since in an article which I wrote, I noticed some of the "works of the flesh"; at the same time promised, that subsequently I would speak of the "fruits of the Spirit." I now resume my pen to fulfil my obligation.

The figure that has been selected by the Apostle, is taken from agriculture, and is the same with that in 1 Cor. 15, where the fact of a resurrection is illustrated. He says, "But God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him, and to every seed his own body."

The idea I take from this language is, that God gives to every seed that which appropriately belongs to it; he causes it to produce its kind. He does not cause a stalk of corn to grow from a kernel of wheat; nor of wheat from barley. It is nature's law that like shall produce like. The corn or wheat which is seen growing in the field, is simply a product or fruit of that which was sown, or planted; hence the Apostle says, "He that soweth to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting."

In the 5th chap. this figure is carried out more perfectly; for the Apostle not only refers to, but tells us what the works (fruits) of the flesh and spirit are. The drift of his argument seems to be this; Wicked actions indicate a corrupt heart, and whoever is guilty of the acts there specified, under the denomination of "works of the flesh," is sowing to the flesh; and as such, must in the end reap corruption. On the other hand, right action presupposes that the heart is cleansed from sin; that a heart of flesh is substituted for a heart of stone; and the action of such a heart, is what the Apostle calls sowing to the Spirit—for whoever has that Spirit is prompted to acts of righteousness—and consequently, in the end will "reap life everlasting."

There is no necessity of being mistaken in relation to whether we are sowing to the flesh, or to the Spirit. "Every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit. A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit. Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them." "A good man out of the good treasure of his heart bringeth forth that which is good; and an evil man out of the evil treasure of his heart bringeth forth that which is evil: for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh."

The Apostle Paul, in specifying the "fruits of the Spirit," presents first in order, love. He says, "But the fruit of the spirit is love." In considering this, we may view it under the following heads.

1. Love to God.
2. Love to the brethren.
3. Love to our neighbour.
4. Love to our enemies.

I. OUR LOVE TO GOD.

That it is a duty for men to love God is clear. The Scriptures teach us that we ought to love God. "And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength."

There are many reasons why we should love God.

(1.) He is our Creator. "But now thus saith the Lord that created thee, O Jacob, and he that formed thee, O Israel." "Have we not one Father? hath not one God created us?"

(2.) He is our Preserver. "For in him we live, and move, and have our being." He opens His hand to supply the wants of every living creature, both man and beast. "He is our Life and the length of our days;" if He suspends His influence, or the positive acts of His goodness, we die ourselves.

(3.) He has provided a way of life, by sending His Son into the world. He "hath saved us, and called us with a holy calling, not according to our works, but according to His own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus, before the world began; But is now made manifest by the appearing of our Savior Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel." This is the only means of obtaining life. "This life is in his son." "He is the way, the truth, and the life." "There is no other name under heaven given among men, whereby we can be saved."

(4) We should "love him, because he first loved us." If God has not only so loved, but first loved us; ought not this love to be reciprocal? Should we not love Him in return?

"Oh! for this love let rocks and hills
Their lasting silence break,
And all harmonious human tongues
The Savior's praises speak.

Angels, assist our mighty joys,
Strike all your harps of gold;
But, when you raise your highest notes,
His love can ne'er be told."

In order that we may be induced to love God, the Bible has assured us:

(1.) That He is "able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing that he ever liveth to make intercession for them."

(2.) He is willing to save; hence the invitation, "Come unto me all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest to your souls." His word declares, that He "will have all men to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth."

(3) The sacrifice was for all. Hence the Apostle remarks, "For the love of Christ constraineth us; because we thus judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead." Again; "Who gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time."

And again: "By the which will we are sanctified, through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all."

(4.) We have every reason to hope in Him, inasmuch as His mercy has saved the chief of sinners; consequently, it is sufficient to save us. "This, says Paul, is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners; of whom I am chief." Paul occupied the first rank among sinners. He had taken part in putting the saints to death. This is evidently what is referred to; for he says when speaking of himself, "Who was before a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious, but I obtained mercy, because I did it ignorantly in unbelief."

(5.) We should love Him for in doing this we shall participate in the mansions, that He is preparing for all those that obey Him. Thus it is, that all of the above considerations are held out as inducements for us to love our heavenly Father; and conform, in all things, to His moral likeness.

The evidences of this love, is evinced in a practical faith; hence, every person, as we have before observed, may know whether he loves God or not. Says the Apostle, "and this is love, that we walk after his commands. This is the commandment. That, as ye have heard from the beginning, ye should walk in it."—Again: "For this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments." And again, "Jesus answered and said unto him, if a man love me, he will keep my words."

Thus far, we have stated,

(1.) Some of the reasons why a person should love God.

(2.) The inducements to love Him.

(3) The evidences of such love. No reasonable person can, we think, dispute the evidences connected with a practical faith. "If ye love me," says Jesus, "ye will keep my words." "Let us," says the wise man, "hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man." It is not what men say, but what God says, that we are to heed. It is not in articles drawn up by men, but in the Word of God, that we are to repose our confidence. It is in "doing the commandments of the Lord, that there is a great reward." It is to our own Master, that we stand or fall. There are thousands who are ready to command fire from heaven, if we do not follow them. Their ipsedixit, they would have us believe, is the end of the law; and with them it is, you must believe, or be damned. If they deny to morrow, what they affirmed to-day; the same denunciatory spirit is evinced. It is not said, this appears like truth to me; this in their estimation would be an evidence of backsliding; it would be altogether too mild; but it must be affirmed by a know-so. Now it is best, generally speaking, to treat all such developments with perfect indifference. Let us believe God for ourselves. Not but we should be willing to listen to argument; but after all is said and done, act as single persons before God. To Him we are responsible, and to Him alone. Let us then love Him for ourselves; that, ultimately, we may participate in all the joys which are laid up for His people.

II. LOVE TO THE BRETHREN.

Not only is the fruit of the Spirit love to God, but also love to the brethren, or "brotherly love." The reasons why we should love the brethren, are, (1.) we are commanded to. "This, (says the Savior,) is my commandment, that ye love one another." "But as touching brotherly love, ye need not that I write unto you; for ye yourselves are taught of God to love one another." "For this is the message that ye have heard from the beginning, that we should love one another."—This certainly is plain, positive testimony. It will not admit of a doubt, on the part of one whose heart is filled with faith.

(2.) It evinces the work of grace on our hearts. "We know that we have passed from death unto life because we love the brethren." "He that loveth his brother, abideth in the light, and there is none occasion of stumbling in him." One great reason why there is so much stumbling and backsliding, is, because the above sentiment is not observed.

(3.) It is an evidence to others that we are the disciples of Christ. "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another."—Our love to each other is an incontestible proof of our discipleship. "Behold," said the ancient pagans, "how these (Christians) love one another." Eusebius says of Christians, that "in a time of plague they visited one another, and not only hazarded their lives, but actually lost them in their zeal to preserve the lives of others." What an example! Let us follow it.

The character of this love should be (1.) "without dissimulation." Dissimulation is hypocrisy. The Gospel is opposed to all hypocrisy; hence the Apostle says, "Let love be without dissimulation." A real hypocrite has two characters, a natural and an artificial one. He hides the former, that he may appear in the latter; that he may appear to be that which he is not. He dissembles for a bad end, and with a bad intent; for he hides the snare, that he may be more sure of his prey.

(2.) It should be fervent. "Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently." Our love should be ardent, warm, earnest and animated.

(3.) With the love wherewith Christ loved us. "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another." "Hereby perceive we the love of God, because he laid down his life for us; and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren." We should show this by praying for our brethren, Eph. 6: 18. By bearing one another's burdens, Gal 6: 2. By forbearing one another, Col. 3: 13. By forgiving one another, Gal. 3: 13. By teaching and admonishing one another, Gal. 3: 16. By giving to the needy, Heb. 13: 16. And last, but not least: In dying for our brethren, 1 John, 3: 16. Christ has died for us, and we should be willing to die for the brethren. O may the Lord seal this truth to my heart. This love is not a selfish affair. It does not partake of a sectional or denominational selfishness. It is more exalted, more divine. It respects all that are upright in heart, of whatever name or order. It loves all that love God. It is a love to "all the saints," black and white, bond and free. It is not of the earth, earthy; but it is of heavenly origin. It was conceived in the womb of eternity; its birth is of old, from everlasting; it was brought up in the bosom of the great I AM, and its infinite loveliness was seen in the purpose of God, when He sent His ONLY BEGOTTEN SON to redeem the world, and bring back that which was lost. Blessed be the name of the Lord. We adopt the language of the heavenly choir, and say, "Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory, and honor, and power;" yea, a blessing, and honor, and glory, and power be unto Him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb forever."

III. LOVE TO OUR NEIGHBORS.

Among the definitions given to the term neighbor by lexicographers, we shall notice two; both of which may be found in the Scriptures. (1) It denotes a person who dwells or is seated near to another, 2 Kings, 4: 3, this is its common acceptation. (2.) One who pities and relieves us when in distress. This is the idea in Luke 10th, where the Savior illustrates the principle, by the parable concerning the man that went down from Jerusalem to Jericho, and fell among thieves. The Priest and Levite, who passed by on the other side, might have lived at the next door to the man that fell among thieves; yet, the Savior does not recognize them as neighbors to him, from the fact that they did not administer to his necessity.

But the Samaritan, although despised by both of them, and regarded as a dog, went to the man with a heart full of compassion, and "bound up his wounds, pouring in oil and wine, and set him on his own beast, and brought him to the inn, and took care of him. And on the morrow, when he departed, he took out two pence, and gave them to the host, and said unto him, Take care of him; and whatsoever thou spendest more, when I come again, I will repay thee." "Which of the three, (says the Savior,) thinkest thou, was neighbor unto him that fell among thieves?" The reply is, "HE THAT SHOWED MERCY." This then is the definition of the word neighbor, and a glorious one it is. If all men had the spirit of the good Samaritan, what a world this would be. How changed from what it is now! We would not be understood to say that a compassionate heart constitutes a man a Christian; for a man may have all this, and yet be destitute of vital piety, because destitute of faith, its first principle. But then it is better for a man to have a compassionate heart, than to be utterly unmindful of others' woes, as is the case with thousands who profess to love Christ. How often it is, that the skeptic is put to the blush by the conduct of those, who while they profess to love that God who is all compassion and benevolence, yet develop a disposition of mind extremely covetous and niggardly; and while they think they are on the road to heaven, it is lamentable, but nevertheless true, that the poor, sordid wretches are going down to perdition.

The Savior commands us to love our neighbor as we do ourselves. There is not a person living, but if in a state of distress would desire assistance; do then both to and for others, what you would, if in a state of distress, desire others to do for you. "Give," says the Book, "to him that asketh of thee." This, to be sure, presupposes the person needy who asks; otherwise there would be no propriety in the requisition. If we love our neighbor as we do ourselves, we shall seek his good. "Against a neighbor," says the Scripture, "thou must not bear false witness, Deut. 5: 20; Must not defraud him, Lev. 19: 13; Judge him righteously, Lev. 19: 15; Should not remove our neighbor's landmark, Deut. 19: 14; Should not devise evil against him. Prov. 3: 29; We should not be a witness against him without a cause, Prov. 24: 28. Thus it is written, and thus we must act. These are some of the commands of the Lord, and in observing them we show that we are conforming to the will of God, which is an evidence that we love Him.

Fulfilment of Prophecy.

BY H. PRATT.

No. 2.

Br. Merriam:—Before proceeding to show the fulfilment of prophecy as recorded by Jesus and the Apostles, I thought it might be best to establish more fully, if possible, the fact that ALL prophecy is conditional that relates to nations and peoples, as Jeremiah in his 12th chapter has declared.

Jonah, as a Prophet of the Lord, is sent to predict the overthrow of Nineveh.—This was the word of the Lord to Jonah. He prophesied by the word of the Lord that, "Yet, forty days and Nineveh shall be overthrown." Did it come to pass?—Yes, says one, it was fulfilled in 40 years. But what saith the Scripture? How readest thou? Jonah 3: 10. "And God saw their works that they turned from their evil way, and God repented of the evil that he had said he would do to them, and he did it not."

"But this is an isolated passage; here is one solitary instance." Very well. Is it true? Can we believe this? Let us look again. Isa. 38: 1. "In those days was Hezekiah sick unto death. And Isaiah the Prophet * * came unto him, and said unto him, Set thine house in order, for thou shalt die, and not live. * * And Hezekiah wept sore."

V. 4. "Then came the word of the Lord to Isaiah saying,"

V. 5. "Go and say unto Hezekiah, Thus saith the Lord, the God of David thy father, I have heard thy prayer, I have seen thy tears; behold, I will add unto thy days, fifteen years." Was not this a conditional prophecy?

Again: Micah 1: 1. "The word of the Lord that came to Micah * * which he saw concerning Samaria and Jerusalem."

Micah 3: 12. "Therefore shall Zion for your sake be plowed as a field, and Jerusalem shall become heaps, and the mountain of the house as the high places of the forest." Was this prophecy?—Was it fulfilled? Let Jeremiah answer.

Jer. 26: 18. "Micah the Morasthite PROPHESIED in the days of Hezekiah king of Judah, and spake to all the people of Judah, saying, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Zion shall be plowed as a field, and Jerusalem shall become heaps, and the mountain of the house as the high places of the forest."

V. 19. "Did Hezekiah king of Judah and all Judah put him at all to death?—Did he not fear the Lord, and besought the Lord, and the Lord repented him of the evil which he had pronounced against them?"

Again: Jer. 26: 12. "Then spake Jeremiah unto all the princes, and unto all the people, saying, The Lord sent me to PROPHESY against this house, and against this city, all the words which ye have heard."

V. 13. "Therefore now amend your ways and your doings, and obey the voice of the Lord your God, and the Lord will repent him of the evil he hath pronounced against you." Now read what Jeremiah has spoken in the 19th ch. and onward concerning that city and people, and you cannot fail to see that all prophecy concerning nations and peoples, to build, plant, or pluck up, is conditional.

In my next, I shall proceed to show the fulfilment of prophecy as recorded by the New Testament writers.

Yours for the truth, H. PRATT.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Br. D. W. Spear.

GREENFIELD, Dec. 2d, 1855.

Dear Brn. and Srs., who are looking for, and loving the appearing of our Savior:—I believe the time is drawing very near, when all that love to enter their closets and hold sweet communion with our Heavenly Father will be at rest from all persecutions, whether of the world or nominal Church.

Yes, Brn. and Srs., let us be faithful till the end, then we shall gain the prize.—Yes, we shall enter into that peaceful rest, that blest abode, of which all the Prophets have spoken, for which the Apostle looked.

Can we find any Scriptural proof of its near approach? I think we can. Solomon says, "because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore the hearts of the sons of men is fully set in them to do evil." I believe it is so to-day. Look at the disunion all over the land in our once happy band, and in the nominal Church in the United States.—Oppression and violence seem to rule. Look at the affairs of the nation. Civil war is impending. The South is preparing to meet the North, in the mighty struggle between liberty and slavery.—Europe is marshaling her mighty men—Emperors and kings begin to tremble in view of their future destiny—are not the hearts of men fully set in them to do evil?

Brn. and Srs., we can see all these things increasing day by day, what manner of persons ought we therefore to be, contending earnestly, prayerfully for the faith once delivered to the saints? And while we contend, may we do it in love, and in harmony with the Spirit of God.—Thus our path will grow brighter until we enter the promised land. But our Savior says, "many shall seek to enter in and shall not be able." Is it I? May we all examine ourselves.

Your in hope. D. W. SPEAR.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Sr. C. B. Densmore.

SOUTH WOODSTOCK, VT., Nov. 17th, 1855.

God's Spirit moved in ancient time on the hearts of holy men, and thus they spake to those who dwell on time's last verge. And Angels long desired to know and vainly sought the time and manner of Christ's sufferings and His coming glory But it was sealed. The Son himself knew not the day, nor hour, when He should come to reign, King of kings, and Lord of lords. But He ascends on high, and from His Father learns the depths of His designs, and to His servant John, the loved disciple in His lonely exile, reveals the glory of the coming day, and in awful language paints the scenes in earth's great drama. And now Judah's Lion has prevailed to open the book and to loose the seals thereof—the sun in darkness moves, the moon with shame now hides its paler rays, and stars forsake their place; and way-worn, weary saints rejoice to know that their redemption is nigh!

The wicked scoff and thus increase their crime. The love of many hearts once warm, now waxes cold. While watchmen on the walls cry peace, when sudden death is near—in such an awful hour, our Lord will come.

Dear Brn., are we indeed living in the hour of temptation which should come on all the world to try them who dwell on the earth? If we are, how perilous the situation of the few who by faith are seeking a better country. Many of those who have been expecting before this to have gained that happy land and to have seen the King in His beauty, are sad from hope long deferred, and many from the trials and conflicts which continually beset them. To such I would say, faint not, eternal life is at stake. The crown is before you—the kingdom and glory! Angels wait to welcome you home, "when the work of faith is done."

Jesus has gone to prepare a place for those who love Him. Then endure a little longer as though you saw "him who is invisible." He still leads His people; nor will He suffer them to fall in this wilderness, while they rest on His promise and cling to His word.

It is still a light to the path that leads to rest! O pilgrim, struggle! press on and soon the voice from the throne will be heard, "it is done"

Faint not, then, when there is but an hour to fight. Gird thy armor on, and press forward for the immortal Kingdom, and thy glorious crown!

C. B. DENSMORE.

The World's Crisis.

LOWELL, DEC. 15, 1855.

To our Patrons.

Previous to the suspension of the Crisis, last summer, we stated that the Office was considerably involved, and that in consequence we should be under necessity to to stop the paper until a sufficient number of subscriptions were obtained to warrant us in recommencing the publication, with a fair prospect of being able to pay our bills.

Recently we have been informed that many of our old subscribers to whom the paper has not been sent subsequently to the new arrangement, were not aware of its continuance; we therefore the present week strike off 2000 extra copies that our old subscribers may be apprised of the existence of the Crisis, and that we may have an opportunity respectfully to solicit a renewal of their patronage. Also, inasmuch as they were interested in the enterprise of publishing the paper when the Office became embarrassed to the amount of $200, by sending out so large a number gratuitously, we would invite those who have the ability to assist in relieving the publishing Committee of the burden devolving on them. By one united effort the debt may easily be liquidated. Let each one remember the golden rule to do unto others as we would that they should do unto us in like circumstances, and act in the fear of God.

We presume many more would have subscribed had they been assured the Crisis would have been continued; we therefore forward this number to old patrons that they may be aware of its continuance, and also of the debt which was accumulated while the circulation was gratuitous, in the payment of which the Committee would be greatly obliged if they will lend their assistance.

Terms of subscription will be found at the head of our paper.

Our Position.

I believe that great light has been thrown upon the Scriptures in our day in relation to the prophetic word—that many have run to and fro and that knowledge has been increased—so that the development of this light was like the bursting forth of the Sun, throwing his meridian splendors upon the Church who were in midnight darkness on the great and glorious subject of her Lord's appearing.—This heavenly and soul-enrapturing light thrilled through every fibre of the believer's heart to the divine illumination of his entire being, revolutionizing all the moral elements of his character, bringing him into sweet conformity to the divine mind and will, and causing him to rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory.

O praise the Lord for those outbursts of heavenly radiance which were like life from the dead. There was something so enchanting to the soul, so cheering to the afflicted, down-trodden, sorrow-stricken saint, that the full, overflowing emotions of the heart sought vent in triumphant praises to God and the Lamb. Tongue cannot utter, language would be powerless to express the fulness of unearthly joy, the tide of blissful emotion that rolled in upon the soul, filling it to its utmost capacity, and causing the expectant of that day to feel himself enveloped in a flood of light and an ocean of love.

The reason why we were thus filled to satiety and encircled in a flood of glory was, that we stood at a point where all the prophetic lines seems to converge. It was like having a thousand beams of solar light emanating from different points, and all converging to a focus so radiant that it becomes intensely luminous, and so heated as to ignite any combustible substance upon which its beams may strike. This was the powerful, soul-stirring influence that moved the Church to action, and enabled her to go forth in confident expectation of meeting her dear Savior coming in the glory of His Kingdom.

We traced out the great prophetic lines of the four successive kingdoms that were to bear universal sway over the nations of earth, together with their various developments, their consolidation and disruption into fragmentary kingdoms, we traced the rise, growth and fall of different powers presented in the prophetic symbols, and from every point of view, we saw a blazing glory streaming out from each fulfilled event, establishing the sublime truth, that the Most High ruleth among the inhabitants of this lower world—and giveth the kingdom to whosoever He will. It is indeed an intensely interesting and sublime theme for the mind to dwell upon, to see the unfolding of events foretold by ancient seers for centuries before they began to transpire, and to witness how the prophetic mould was precisely filled, and how event tallied with event in history and prophecy, and to see thorugh this medium the depths of the wisdom and knowledge of God who had foretold the end from the beginning. To perceive such astounding displays of an overruling, all-controlling power was well adapted to confirm, establish, settle us in the faith of a Moral Governor of the universe, and to establish our confidence in the wisdom and faithfulness of God—even the Lord, Jehovah of hosts, whose eye is far-reaching, whose care for His Church has been manifested by pointing out in advance the characteristics of the great anti christian powers, the knowledge of which involved the interests of His people, giving them warning when to look out for danger and also encouragement when to expect deliverance.

In connection with these great, prominent facts that stand out on the page of history as so many beacon lights to show the position of the Church in relation to the order of events that were to transpire during the organization of earthly kingdoms, and prior to God's everlasting reign in the renovated earth, there were measuring lines given to mark off by chronological periods the track over which the Church had advanced toward the realization of her hope. These periods start from given epochs each of which becomes an era of thrilling interest, a radiant point to the Church, which also pours its bright beams upon the position which the Church occupy in the present generation.

Thus the different epochs of the rise of the great anti-christian abomination, and the breaking of its power, the rise of the Mohamedan delusion, the commencement of its career of conquest after the loosing of the four Angels, its humiliation in our day, &c. &c. were all so many points of interest and of light.

Then again the signals hung out from heaven—the Sun at noon-day shrouded in the pall of night—the moon at its period of brightest effulgence covered with the blackness of Egyptian darkness—the meteoric stars filling the entire firmament of heaven with their darting balls of fire—the infraction upon the old established laws of nature by the appearance of blood and fire and pillars of smoke which were unknown to former ages except in higher latitudes of the north—the outbreaking of the popular elements among the nations of Europe which has caused the political earth to reel to and fro and stagger like a drunken man, threatening the disorganization of all social and civil institutions and the subversion of all law and order, which impending evils have caused, a distressing apprehension of calamities about to fall on the earth, or in Scriptural language, "men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things that are coming on the earth"—the startling events occuring inevery department of enterprize—the astounding developements in biblical, moral, scientific and artistic knowledge, such as the world has never seen paralleled—the hurry and bustle and commotion in society—the railroad, nay electric velocity with which every thing moves—all speak forth the dawn of a new and unprecedented era in the history of the world. They are the preparatory scenes to a new order of things, and so far especially as they form a part of the prophetic chain of events that were to precede the coming of the Just One, they all proclaim in thunder tones the great truth that earthly scenes are winding up, and that the kingdoms of this world are soon to "become the Kingdoms of our Lord, and of His Christ; and He (glory to God) shall reign forever and ever."

From this stand-point of observation, wherever we directed the eye, a stream of light met the vision, and all coming in converging lines, and meeting in a concentrated blaze on the position we occupy, how could we otherwise than, as it were, leap for joy, as we felt its over-powering charms, and realized the overwhelming evidence of the immediate coming of our King?

But lest we might be deceived, we cast an anxious eye to the professedly wise and talented of our land who stood out as the bold champions of an opposite view; but they almost without dissenting voice proclaimed the premillenial prophecies to have been fulfilled—the chronological periods drawing to a close—and the dawn of a new era to have appeared. They believed in a different result as "the crowning consummation of all prophetic declarations," but when we had learned from them the confirmation of our prophetic reckoning, and our views in relation to prophetic developments in the history of the nations, we again reverted to our Bibles with a doubly anxious inquiry, what events are to occur at the termination of the prophetic periods, and at the sounding of the seventh trumpet? and the concurrent testimony of the whole Bible was, unequivocally, the literal, personal coming and reign of the blessed & only Potentate, the King whose right it is to reign. There was no evading the conclusion that the end of all things was at hand—that the glorious and sublime scenes of the judgment—the dread tribunal that was to decide the destinies of men was at hand with its tremendous results, so appalling to the transgressor, and so cheering to the saint. O these scenes were so terrific on the one hand, and so transcendently glorious on the other—so mighty in their consequences, so lasting in their result, bringing the final, inexorable condition of destruction to the sinner, and of triumph and glory and immortal life to the humble believer in Jesus, that no one need wonder if it awakened to action every energy of our being; if it transformed and sanctified our natures, and rendered us all over like to those objects of heavenly purity, upon which our eyes were fixed with an anxious gaze.—Thus, as I have said, the light being concentrated on our position in such unparalleled brilliancy and glory, the intensified brightness and warmth kindled a fire of love and desire forthe coming of that day which many waters could not quench nor floods drown.

This heavenly and divine light which accompanied the preaching and reception of the time argument, enstamped the importance and generally truthfulness of the doctrine so deeply and effectually on the mind, that it seems impossible it should ever be erased from the present generation of believers. Indeed the impress seems like the writing of the covenant by the finger of God on tables of stone. Such being the feeling we have had, there appears to be an impassible barrier against returning to our former position of indifference and unbelief in relation to the coming of the Lord; and although in all the points of time we have fixed upon for the blissful period of His revelation in glory, we have been disappointed, yet that divine impress remains indelible. It bears the image and superscription, not of Cæsar, but of Prince Immanuel. We necessarily feel great caution in relinquishing any portion of our faith; and it is like giving up our life to yield any part or parcel of the doctrine which has been to our souls as life from the dead. But when, in the economy of God, the wheel of Providence rolls round, and we come into a position past the period of our expected deliverance, the Lord reveals by His own hand in His providential government of the world, the fact that error was connected with our faith on this subject.

It was no fatal error or intended departure from the right line of truth, but an error in chronological data which led us to believe the periods all ended at a given point. We then are reduced to the necessity of yielding some portion of the theory, and the question comes up what portion is to be given up? To say that the Church was infallible, and nothing to be relinquished, is inconsistent with facts.—The particular point of highest expectation on the part of the Church was in the fall of '54. After the passing of that time many supposed the round number of years had ended, and that previous to the return of the same point in the succeeding year the Lord would come, but the Autumn of '55 having passed, that position could not be correct.

In view, therefore, of the position we occupy at the present time, it seems impossible to recede from the clear light we have had on the prophecies any farther than the passing of time demonstrates the positions we have advocated to be erroneous. It is however evident that the '54 argument, so far as time was concerned was incorrect. What the precise truth is in relation to chronology I am unable to decide, but have been willing that Brn. should express their views in the Crisis, whether they regarded the days as ended or otherwise. In relation to the Midnight Cry, I choose to let infinite wisdom decide the point, and hold myself in readiness to believe as the providence and grace of God shall reveal the truth. I believe it to be far better to enter more cordially and fully into the work of God, and make preparation for the momentous scenes which we expect soon to transpire, than to contend respecting theories relating to our movements in the past. I have mourned and lamented, as did Jeremiah, that our hope has not been realized, but there is infinite wisdom in the economy of God that we cannot fully fathom. I feel safer in sinking into the arms of Jehovah, and submitting to the great Head of the Church, leaving all to be at His disposal, and trusting in Him to vindicate my cause, than in any other position whatever. We are in imminent peril here on either hand. If we endeavor to establish that which is manifestly wrong, we are in danger of indulging in pride of opinion and self-confidence which our Heavenly Father cannot approve; if on the other hand, we relinquish more of our theory than we ought, we are in great danger of plunging into the spirit of the world and finally into darkness and death. I feel a confidence and placid serenity of mind in trusting my all in the hands of God, and endeavoring to do His will to the best of my ability. My desire is that we may not judge one another in respect to different points of faith, but bear with each others' infirmities, laboring with all the energies of our moral being for the upbuilding of the Church, the spread of light and truth, the conversion of sinners, and the salvation of souls

LITERARY NOTICES.

"THE TIME OF THE END:" A Prophetic period, developing, as predicted, an increase of knowledge respecting the prophecies and periods that foretell the end—Illustrated by the history of prophetic interpretation, the expectation of the Church, and the various computations of the times of Daniel and John, by commentators, who generally terminate them between A. We have received from Jewett and Co, (we suppose,) a copy of this work. Its title page, as given, will afford an idea of its contents. The writings of Elliot, Cumming, Wesley, Hitchcock, and others, here reproduced, are very valuable, and the compiler has conferred a favor upon those interested, by furnishing them in this convenient and accessible form. The volume is issued in a rare style of typographical excellence, which is characteristic of the publications of Jewett and Co. We commend it to the notice of our readers who desire information respecting the opinions of noted writers upon the questions that are here discussed

This volume is the latest of J Cumming's numerous volumes, and one of deep interest.—The fact that it is from the pen of the most eloquent preacher in England, the great Protestant champion, is in itself sufficient to invest it with interest, and the significant fact that it treats of a subject of such great importance, is equally interesting. The following are the titles of some of the discourses.

Moral and social signs of the end of the present age.
The drying up of the Euphrates.
The budding of the Fig tree.

For The Crisis.

Reply to Br. Higgins' Interrogations.

BY B. P. HILDRETH.

Dear Brother:—I hasten to answer your inquiries relative to the thousand years of Rev. 20th. As the article on "the Day of Judgment" appears to be unsatisfactory to you, I would lay aside every selfish feeling, and come with meekness to the pure word, which is able to save our souls; and as I have no theory to sustain, I trust that you will be as anxious to harmonize all the passages which relate to the day of Judgment as I am.

If it be true that each of the six days of creation did typify a thousand years, must it not also be true that the seventh day did typify a thousand years?

You quote Heb. 4: 3, and ask, "Did God measure off the seventh day by evening and morning, and commence His labor again the eighth?"

I think He did. If He measured any of the days of creation, as we have abundant testimony that He did, then the seventh must have been measured also; and "the works were finished from the foundation of the world," in the counsels of Him, who saw the end from the begining; and it seems the Apostle here spake of the completion and not the commencement, as the prophets are wont to speak of future things, as though they were in the past

God first created all things in six days and rested the seventh; and on the eighth Adam fell; as appears from Gen 3: 8; and it became necessary for Him to commence the work of new creating and restoring what was so speedily lost, on the eighth day; which He did by an unqualified promise, that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head. The work of redemption began on that day; the work of bruising was performed on the cross; but our redemption will not be completed till Christ comes, and brings us to our long promised inheritance, named by God himself as the purchased possession; which can be no other than the new earth. Eph. 1: 14. "The earnest, (or pledge) of this inheritance," we each received, "when we were sealed by that Holy Spirit of promise;" and this is that rest, or sabbatism, which remains to the just.

You ask, "When we enter on that rest will it not continue forever?"

Most assuredly it will; but that does not meet the analogy; the day must be measured and marked, which we find bounded by the two resurrections, the binding and liberation of Satan, and by the reign of the martyrs and "the second death" of all who are not found written in the book of Life, in that day; and the only type, if it may be called a type, of the future state, after the end of the thousand years, that I can find is the Jubilee; after 7 times 7 years of release.

Again you ask, "Where will Christ and the saints reign during the thousand years?"

I answer, on the new earth. 2 Pet. 3: 13; Rev. 5: 10; Isa. 65: 17-25.

Again, "Where will the wicked receive their perdition after the end of the thousand years?"

I answer, in "the lake of fire." Rev. 20: 15. You seem to think the perdition of ungodly men to be inseparably connected with the burning of the earth. Perdition means destruction; and may, perhaps, as well be applied to those who will fall in the battle of the great day, as to those who suffer the second death; but I find no passage that limits the perdition of ungodly men to this earth

Again you ask, "where is that lake of fire, during the thousand years, so that the the Devil can be cast * * * where the beast and false prophet were? are not the three identified?" If you mean by the word identified, that they are one and the same, I must say, I think not. Satan is an agent of evil, and can symbolize nothing less than the prince of the power of darkness; and though invisible to mortal eye, not so to the eye of Omnipotence. Says the Savior, "I beheld Satan fall as lightning from heaven." Luke 10: 18. He is called 'the prince of the power of the air; the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience," Eph. 2: 2, and if a prince, is he not personal? I think so. The beast and false prophet, symbolize a wicked government, and a corrupt, idolatrous Church; the bodies of which, (or the men that compose them) will fall alive into the lake of fire, at the time of the binding of Satan, Rev. 19th and 20th, which closes the battle of Armageddon, and commences "the day of the Lord." But that we may learn where the lake of fire is, during the thousand years, let us consult Isa. 24th, and especially vs. 6, 12 and 18-23. Here we learn that the "inhabitants of the earth are burned;" "in the city is left desolation and the gate smitten with destruction." "The windows from on high are open, and the foundations of the earth do shake." "The earth is utterly broken down, the earth is clean dissolved the earth is moved exceedingly." "The earth shall reel to and fro like a drunkard, and shall be removed like a cottage; and the transgression thereof shall be heavy upon it, and it shall fall, and not rise again." "And it shall come to pass in that day that the Lord shall punish the host of high ones that are on high, and the kings of the earth upon the earth. And they shall be gathered together, as prisoners are gathered in the pit, and shall be shut up in the prison, and after many days shall they be visited."—Then the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of Hosts shall reign in mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before His ancients gloriously"

If the above passages do not settle your mind relative to the locality of the Kingdom of Christ, and likewise that of the lake of fire, during the thousand years, why then it will be out of my power to do it.

Again, you ask, "How can the wicked receive their perdition in the day of the Lord, when the rest of the dead lived not again till the thousand years were finished?" I answer, the wicked can and will receive their perdition when the heavens depart as a scroll rolled together and every mountain and island are moved out of their places; when the kings of the earth, and the nobles, and the rich, and the commanders, and the strong men, the bond and the free, will call on the rocks and mountains to fall on them and hide them "from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb; for the great day of his wrath is come and who shall be able to stand?"

God says by Malichi, "And ye shall tread down the wicked; and they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet, in the day that I shall do this, saith the Lord of hosts." I have no reason to doubt that the second death of the wicked will occur at the end of the thousand years, and mark the termination of that period; and then "there shall be no more curse, for the throne of God and the Lamb will be in it, and His servants shall serve Him. They shall see His face, and His name shall be in their foreheads. And there shall be no night there, and they need no candle, neither light of the sun; for the Lord God giveth them light, and they shall reign forever and ever."

Again you ask, Is not 2 Pet. 3: 8, thrown in to show that the great work of burning the heavens and the earth, and perdition of ungodly men can be accomplished in one day, referring to Luke 7: 29, 30 "The same day that Lot went out of Sodom it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all.—Even so shall it be in the day when th

Son of man shall be revealed." I answer it was not thrown in for that purpose; but I do not conceive it necessary that all the wicked should suffer, soul and body, during that period, in order to make it "the day of perdition." The living wicked that are on the earth, will be destroyed when Christ comes, 2 Thess. 1: 6–10, the wicked dead resurrected, judged and cast into the lake of fire, which will close the day of Judgment. As it rained fire and brimstone, when Lot left Sodom, so will the Lord rain upon the wicked an overflowing rain, and great hailstones, fire and brimstone, when the saints leave the earth, Ezek. 38: 22. But whether this will be accomplished in the brief space of twenty-four hours, I leave for others to decide. I have no such commandment. "A thousand years (in the sight of God) are but as yesterday, when it is past, and as a watch in the night." Ps. 90: 9.

I think we ought to feel satisfied, and grateful to God, if we are enabled to arrange this class of texts in our minds in such a way as that no one shall clash with another. They are all descriptions of stupendous events and equally concern each individual of the human family; and one thing is certain, the man of sin will continue till Christ comes, and only be destroyed with the brightness of that event. 2 Thess. 2: 1–12. The little horn of Dan. 7: 21, 22, will make war upon the saints and prevail against them, till Christ comes. The wheat and tares grow together till harvest, and "the harvest is the end of the world." Matt. 13: 24–30, and 37–43. The Gospel net continues to gather the good and the bad till the end of the world, when the separation is made, vs. 47–50. The wicked will not be destroyed till he comes "in flaming fire taking vengeance," 2 Thess. 4: 8–12—He will "judge the quick and dead at his appearing and his Kingdom" 2 Tim. 4: 1. Heaven and earth will pass away; but the above words will not pass away.

That day is just upon us; and we are not in darkness, that it should overtake us as a thief. Let us adore our God for "the exceeding greatness of His mighty power, which He wrought in Christ, when He raised Him from the dead, and set Him at his own right hand in the heavenly places; far above all principalities and powers and might and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also that which is to come; and hath put all things under His feet, and gave Him to be Head over all things to the Church, which is His body; the fulness of Him that filleth all in all;" and ever feel that the same power will shortly be put forth on us, if we belong to His family, to change our vile bodies, and make us like himself; which God grant, for Christ's sake.

Yours waiting, B. P. Hildreth.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Br. W. J. Hale.

Collinsville, Nov. 24, 1855.

Dear Br. Merriam:—It is with pleasure that I have received a few numbers of the Crisis, and it does my heart good to read in its columns so many testimonies for Christ and His coming Kingdom; and I bless God it is so near at hand. Yes, thank God, we are almost home. Let us not be weary in well doing; for the crown is but just before us.

Brn. and Srs., let us take the Savior for an example, and try to imitate Him in our daily life, and finally let us look at Him in the garden—before the Jewish Sanhedrim—and on the cross. See Him weighed down in agony under all the guilt of a world! See Him crowned with thorns! See Him buffeted and spit upon! See Him nailed to the cross and pierced in the side! Yes, see Him meekly suffering all for sinful man! What unbounded love for the human race! Is it possible that we can ever turn our backs on such a Savior? Our Savior's love was, I had almost said, the foundation of our salvation. Let us keep His amazing love in view, and lift our hearts and voices in praise and adoration to the name of Jesus.

Let us not think because Christ has died and opened the way of life, that we have nothing to do; but let us gird on the whole armour and fight manfully the good fight of faith, remembering it is through much tribulation that we shall enter into the Kingdom. If we expect to dwell with Christ in the Kingdom, we must follow Him in all trials through life. He was reviled, persecuted and spit upon, and His good name so defamed, that He became of no reputation. Now if we would follow the example of our Savior, and be accepted of Him in the Kingdom, we must suffer all manner of persecution and reproach falsely for His sake, as He has done for us

O may we all work while the day lasts; for soon the night cometh when no man can work.

Reader, let you and I say that we will use all the little influence we have for Christ, and strive to gain an abundant entrance into His everlasting Kingdom.

May God give us grace to endure unto the end of the race. Amen.

Wm. J. Hale.

For The Crisis

Question.

Dear Br. Merriam:—Will you or some one else be good enough to tell me whether the 14th ch. of Zechariah has been fulfilled or not? If not, when will it be fulfilled? and how long a period will it require?

I would also ask, if the Mount of Olives is not the Sanctuary which is to be cleansed, and made holy for a camp of the saints through the reign of Christ?

Yours loving and praying and searching for the truth as for hid treasures,

H. Bishop.

For the Crisis.

Miriam.

"Jehovah hath triumphed, and deep in the waters
Hath Israel's foes, horse and rider sunk down;"
Thus sings the fair leader of Israel's daughters,
And answer in chorus those men of renown;
As the thousands of Israel join their glad voices,
In loud hallelujahs that swell o'er the sea,
She sounds the loud timbrel, and thus she rejoices,
"Jehovah hath triumphed; His people are free!"

And forth to the plain the fair leader advances,
With timbrel in hand, singing praise to the Lord,
While Israel's daughters all follow with dances,
And timbrel, and song, in harmonious accord;
And this is the song which inspires the fair daughters;
"Hath Israel's foes sunk like lead in the sea?"
Again the glad chorus swells loud o'er the waters,
"Jehovah hath triumphed; His people are free!"

Shall the glad song of Moses again be repeated,
In Israel's land, by the hosts of the Lord?
When all His proud foes have at last been defeated,
And swept from the earth by the fire and the sword,
Then the song of the Lamb like the voices of waters,
Shall sound o'er the earth, on the land, on the sea,
And be answered in chorus by Israel's glad daughters,
"Jehovah hath triumphed, His people are free!"

To the Advent Brethren generally.

The time has come when we, the undersigned, feel it to be our duty to appeal to you, dear Brn., and especially to all who have ever been readers of "The Second Advent Watchman," in behalf of Br. J. Turner, on whom has fallen the burden of the debt which the Association owed the office of publication at the time the 'Watchman' was discontinued.

Br. Turner, having been the Editor of the Watchman and the Treasurer of the office, had necessarily assumed responsibilities besides the labor he was performing in the office, to a considerable amount, encouraged to do so by the pledges of the Association, made on the hope that the subscribers could all be induced to pay their dues, so that the debt due him for labor and money paid out, amounted, when the paper was discontinued, to $872, without interest—This debt did not accumulate by a fault of Br. Turner; he had a right to expect it all paid, for there was due the office, from subscribers, at the same time, over $2,100, which, on account of the course of things, has not been paid.

This debt remains unpaid, and Br. Turner is seriously embarrassed for the want of this, his honest due; and we think it is the duty of the brethren who have ever been readers of the Watchman, to unite in an immediate effort to pay this debt by donation. This debt is trifling for the body to pay, and it can be paid by a trifling individual sacrifice; but if not paid by donation, it must be a dead loss to Br. Turner, and to him, a heavy loss.

Br. Turner is really poor, and the want of this money has made him so; and he assures us that, unless he can have this debt paid, he must go into some employment, aside from his calling, to support his family, and pay debts incurred for the Association.

We very much mistake the feelings of Adventists, if they will allow this to be so, after all the labors and sacrifices of Br. Turner for the last twelve years. We feel confident that brethren looking for the Lord, and who desire to do unto others as they would that others should do unto them, will gladly bear a share of this burden, and thus relieve Br. T., who has already suffered under it too long. We believe we shall not appeal to the Church in vain. Brn., let this debt be paid at once; it is Br. Turner's due. Let us not leave this debt unpaid till the judgment; the consequences may be fearful.

1st. Let all who were owing for the Watchman when it stopped, if able, pay their dues immediately, if poor, pay what they can.

2d We invite all preachers who were readers of the Watchman, to present our request to the Churches, and encourage them to assist in paying this debt, and when convenient, where there are those who may wish to give something and yet can give but little, take contributions for this object.

3d. Let every former reader of the Watchman give for this object according to his or her ability—those who have much, can afford to be liberal, and we hope they will be.

Now, Brn., let this business be attended to at once—let there be no delay. All money raised for this object must be directed to Eld. J. Turner, Hartford, Ct., and all money received shall be duly credited in the Reformer and Crisis.

EXPLANATION.

The statistics embodied in the above appeal to the Church have been furnished from my accounts kept with the Association and the office, which accounts have been duly examined, year by year, except the last year of the existence of the Watchman; nevertheless I am responsible for the statistics, and am willing to satisfy any one or more of the correctness of them, who will take the trouble to review my accounts, should any doubt exist.

But, brethren scattered in different places, who have signed, and who still may sign their names to the document, are regarded only as signing the appeal to the church to pay the debt, and not as vouchers for me or my account—that is furnished by myself; and, if it is desired, I am ready to affirm its correctness according to law.

Some may be in doubt in regard to the amount, since quite an effort was once made to pay the debt by donation. These are the facts. At one time, about March, 1854, the debt was reduced to less than five hundred dollars, but soon after that, very many stopped their papers without paying up, and as most of those who did not stop their paper had paid, I was obliged to continue, with trifling receipts, and did so, hoping that all would come right at the end of 1854. So thought the Committee, but as they were disappointed, they ordered the Watchman closed at that time. Thus the debt was increased from a little short of five hundred dollars, to what it now is.

Some have said, send bills to those who are indebted, and demand payment. Brethren, this has been done repeatedly. When the Watchman stopped, we sent bills to all who owed us, and scarcely received enough on them to pay for the trouble.

Dear Brn.—All who contribute to the payment of this debt will indeed be giving, and all you thus give will benefit me; but remember, it is not a gift to me, but to the Association. Every dollar is my just due, but if you give it to the Association, and I get my due, I shall be most grateful to every donor.

I do not wish those who are really poor to give for this debt; I would rather lose it all alone. If other preachers wish to use their influence in the matter, if they will forward their names, they will oblige.

Joseph Turner.

☞ I would add in respect to the above Circular, that I deem it a duty for all who are indebted for the Watchman, to remit funds as soon as practicable for the liquidation of the same. I do feel, that as Christians our business affairs ought to be transacted upon a different principle from that of worldlings; and we ought to hold ourselves as much in readiness to discharge our every debt, when we do not expect the arm of the law to be applied, as if our goods were liable to attatchment. OWE NO MAN ANY THING is written in living characters on the divine record, and no man, if he possess the ability, can be acquitted in the Great Day, without observing the command.

I would further say, that as the Advent body has been so much implicated in this affair, a pressing demand seems to be made upon the benevolence of those who have not become personally pledged for any portion of the amount due. Ed.

EUROPEAN NEWS.

EXTRACTS FROM ENGLISH PAPERS RECEIVED BY THE AMERICA.

Halifax, December, 5. The royal mail steamship America, Capt. Lang, from Liverpool about 10 o'clock A. M., of the 24th ult., arrived at 1.30 A. M., Wednesday, December 5th.

The Eastern War. The Paris correspondent of the ministerial paper, the London Globe, learns that although winter stops field operations in the Crimea, it is intended to bombard the northern side of Sebastopol to permit the fleets to winter in the harbor.

It is reported that the town of Marionopol, on the north coast of the Sea of Azoff, was bombarded by the allies, Oct. 31st. One hundred shells were thrown and the town set on fire, till the Austrian merchants hoisted the Austrian flag over the government warehouse, when the firing ceased.

Spain. Reinforcements of troops are ordered to Saragossa, where further disturbances were apprehended, the local authorities having promised more to the rioters than government will sanction.

The Spanish government is reported to be unanimous in favor of joining the alliance; but the occasion is deferred until Spain can appear as a great nation. At present she has no spare money nor soldiers. Gen. Zavala was desirous to have the command of the contingent, and being discontented that another General was spoken of, will probably retire from the cabinet.

Prussia. The Russian party are triumphant, while the western people dread German treason. They are loudly declaring for peace, or adhesion with Russia, as the alternative.

Turkey. Constantinople correspondence describes a bad state of affairs. Murders and robberies in the open streets are reported, with great and increasing fanaticism against Christians, especially the French. The allies have called upon the Turks to prevent outrages, under a threat of taking the police of the city into their own hands. The loss of the French, killed in the recent riot, was more considerable than at first reported.

Russia. The London Times has an elaborate editorial of calculations, showing that the total available strength of Russia is 83 per 1000, and that she has already used 68, which allows only two months more, at the past ratio, to exhaust her last man, her last cash rouble being already expended.

A general armament of the Russian empire is talked of. The maritime admiralty at Nicolieff is placed under the orders of Gen. Luders, to whom, in this respect, Gortschakoff is to be subordinate, with the object of securing greater unity of operation.

The Czar arrived at St. Petersburgh on the 19th, in good health. He has extended the inducements to poor nobles to enter the army.

Convention with Sweden. The Paris correspondent of the Times says:—"The rumors alluded to yesterday with reference to the mission of General Canrobert to Stockholm are stated on good authority to be well founded, and no doubt appears to be entertained that he has succeeded in his object. The terms of military convention have, it is affirmed, been agreed on, in virtue of which Sweden will furnish a contingent next spring, to act conjointly with us in the event of peace not being made before then, and her gunboats will co-operate with our fleet in the north.

It is also stated that an army, composed of French, English, and Swedes, will be sent to Courland, so that both Austria and Prussia will be forced to declare themselves. The inducement offered to Sweden to take this important step is not positively stated, but there can be no difficulty in believing that the restoration of Finland, so dear to the hearts of the Swedish people, is one of the principal conditions of their joining the alliance. Thus Russia finds herself gradually hemmed in, and if she does not come to terms we may fully expect next year will witness events as great, if not greater, than any that have yet occurred. The effect produced on Poland by an Allied army occupying Courland is not difficult to foresee, and from that moment Austria and Prussia may have quite as much to dread as our present enemy."

On Thursday it was positively stated in Paris that Gen. Canrobert had succeeded in obtaining the signature of the King of Sweden to a convention under which the Swedish army and navy will co-operate with the allies next spring.

On this subject the Times' correspondent writes:—I believe it may at last be positively affirmed that Sweden has engaged to adhere to the alliance of France and England, and not only this, but Denmark has declared that she will follow the example of Sweden.

It is alleged that the success of General Canrobert's mission to Sweden, the promised adhesion of Denmark, the possible occupation of Courland by the Allies, and in case of such an event an anticipated rising in Poland, have thrown the Prussian Court into a wholesome panic, and hence the energetic efforts that Prussia will make for the restoration of peace.

Three magazines belonging to the French Artillery, had blown up near Inkermann, killing 70 soldiers and 2 officers, and wounding 100 soldiers and 10 officers. The magazines contained 30,000 kilogrammes of powder, 600,000 cartridges, and 300 charged shells, all of which were destroyed.

A large quantity of Russian grain had been destroyed on the Gheiskeiman coast.

A terrific fire had occurred at Paris in the government bakery, 28,000 qtls. of corn, and an equal quantity of flour and biscuits, were burned.

The destruction of Russian grain on the coast near Gheiskeiran, was effected by an allied flotilla sent for the purpose. The grain was intended for the Crimean army, and was packed in six tiers which extended two miles along the coast.

State of Affairs in Hungary.

The war, writes another of my correspondents' has, as you may well fancy, a great deal of trouble and espionage over our heads. The gendarmerie rules absolute, and there is no rest from these fellows by day or night. They break into your houses at any time they please, and pretending to have some suspicion about our harboring "agents and emissaries," they search out every corner, unless and until they are bribed to leave us alone, for they are very ready to sell their zeal to who ever will buy their discretion. The fact is that most of us find it to be the best policy to have these men in our pay. The private salary makes them very tractable, and once bought, they make no difficulty to sell their imperial employers. I, for instance, can say that the gendarme ordered to watch me, is my best security against being taken by surprise. Whe ever there is something in the wind he comes to give me an avertissement. He even finds a certain pleasure in thus counteracting the proceedings of his superiors, and it is amusing to hear him talk against meddling with other people's business. Many, however, refuse to pay their watchmen, and such have no rest. A few days ago there was a serious fight between the gendarmes and some cottagers near Eger. The former called on the people to levy taxes already paid. They were shown the receipts, but in vain. They insisted upon being paid. The people refused. The gendarmes tried to make them prisoners. A fight ensued, in which ten gendarmes were killed, and several wounded on the people's side, there being two or three men dead. The affair being at once reported to the military commander, a regiment of infantry was ordered and marched against the "insurgents." The people offered no resistance. Everybody remained quiet, and proffered his grievance in a tone of calm dignity. Some of the "ringleaders," as they are called, were, however, arrested. But we hear that the officers of the gendarmerie have been ordered to Vienna to answer the charges of lawless proceedings, extortion and brutal violence, brought against them. The case was too palpably wrong for the government to pass it over with the approbation of silence usual in similar occurrences. Some time ago we had a number of supposed Honveds let loose over the country. They had their special stories, and told us how they fought under Bem and Damjanics, and by what wonderful means they succeeded to evade the constant vigilance of the police in search of their persons. The people have a warm affection for the very name of Honved, and so these wolves in sheep's skin—for they were but disguised spies to find revolutionary sympathizers—have been received with patriotic good-will and enjoyed the hospitality of many a house, high or low, in all parts of the country. The consequence was that as soon as these spies had sent in their reports, a general razzia was undertaken, and the prisons are filled once more. The eastern war, much as our expectations respecting the consequences of the Anglo-French alliance have become cooled down, is still very popular with us. With no great sympathy for the policy of the Western allies, the Magyars are, nevertheless, highly gratified at Russia's progressing humiliation. It is, indeed, a conviction with the people of Hungary, that the war cannot but be beneficial to the interest of freedom and civilization. The nation receives the news of each Russian defeat with feelings of intense satisfaction, because she knows it is the Hapsburgs who are losing most by the loss of their protectors. It is, indeed, evident, that Russia will never more move a finger to save Austria, and Austria deprived of Cossack protection will fall to pieces by the slightest earthquake in the European political world.

☞ Extract of a Letter from Kossuth published in The Independent:—

The religious orders in Hungary are numerous. Benedictins, Ciscertists, Præmonstratenses, (these three endowed with princely possessions—immensely rich) Misericordians, Piarists, Servists, Franciscans, Capuchins, Dominicans, Minorits, Carmelites. To these now comes the dangerous addition of Jesuits; excluded by law, but re-inducted to the country by the bigoted tyrant by the grace of Russian bayonets. Such has been the provident aversion of the Hungarian nation to this terrible order, that though already for some thirty years they had been reinstated to Austria, and had full influence and sway at the court; with us the Hapsburgs never dared so much as mention the word, "reintroduction of Jesuits" as long as Hungary was allowed to raise a word in its own affairs. But now the laws are dead, the nation groans under the iron rod of cruel despotism, and the word is mute throughout Hungary—and one of the first boons is the—Jesuits. O Lord! what dreadful results may yet pour upon the world (besides the present war) from the fact, that there was no nation on earth—not one, to raise a word of protest against the violation of the laws of nature and of nature's God by the intervention of Russia in 1849.

Now the Jesuits in power again—and all the enumerated monastic orders given without reserve and without control into the hands of the pope; while the education of the youth of Hungary is in the hands of the Jesuits, and of the other monks—I leave you, sir! to reflect whether it would not be wise to lend a brother's hand to the legitimate aspirations of the Hungarian nation—that the glorious land, once the bulwark of Christendom against Mohammedanism—always a bulwark of civilization and liberty against superstition, bigotry, and priestly and worldly despotism—may not become the footstool of power for ambitious papacy, from which it may dare to command halt to the progress of civilization, and another under its somber extinguisher, light, truth, freedom, and liberty of conscience.

The Latest from Kansas. The St. Louis Intelligencer of the 7th inst. has the following dispatches:

Kansas, Dec. 6. The pro-slavery party have encamped on the Waukasussa, and last night, by order of the Governor, they arrested Gen. Pomeroy, who was on his way to Kansas City with important despatches for the east. Some threats have been made to destroy the American Hotel at this place, it being alleged that it was owned by the Emigrant Aid Society of Massachusetts. The citizens have pledged themselves to defend it and prevent its destruction. Four or five hundred men, several pieces of artillery, and probably one thousand muskets, passed through Independence yesterday from the border counties of Missouri, to aid the Sheriff of Douglass county in maintaining order.

Weston, Dec. 6. By an express, which stayed at Lawrence, night before last, we have the following account of matters from the seat of war: They number at Lawrence about 800 men, armed chiefly with Sharp's rifles. They say they can raise 300 more men if necessary. They are willing that Jones should come peaceably and search for the prisoners. They assert that they will not commence a fight, but will act on the defensive to the very last. Men and women are armed with Sharp's rifles. General Pomeroy is now at Lawrence, having escaped from his captors. It is said that on the pro-slavery side they number at Franklin about 300 men, and at Lecompton and Douglas about 200, and are very anxious to obtain more. Jones was to go yesterday to execute his writs on the prisoners in the hands of the Free State party, and if they refuse to deliver them up, he would await further orders from Governor Shannon. It is thought that there will be a fight before the matter can be settled. The U. S. troops at Fort Leavenworth have not yet been ordered out.

☞ Extract of a letter from England:—

England, Nov. 8, 1855.

The topics of the day are embarrassing from their number, and the incalculable magnitude and importance of the interests they involve. First, but not chief, is the recent manifesto of Kossuth, Mazzini and Ledru Rollin, supplemented by the eloquent strictures of Louis Blanc, and the foolish, and worse than foolish utterance of M. Pyatt and other refugees in Jersey. These present a group of facts and suggestions which are as interesting as they are saddening. It is becoming too clear that the closer union of the republican party, desiderated by the three patriots, is not likely to be realized, and that, in Italy, constitutionalists, Piedmontese and Muratists will divide the patriot ranks.

There is another conclusion now beyond dispute. Henceforth the continental struggle will not be for constitutional rights and personal political freedom. Almost everywhere, and even in England, the socialist element is pervading that portion of the masses in which there is mental activity and political aspirations. Everywhere thoughtful men have been brought up to the point that merely political or governmental changes are not sufficient to secure the freedom and happiness of nations. It is significant that the sincere and devout Christian and the red republican and socialist in this are in accord. Surely the merciful Father of all is teaching the nations, and shutting them up to the one great remedy, after trial of many inventions. Something more than republicanism is wanting, argues Louis Blanc; and he arrays irresistible facts in proof. He wants "something more." He would abolish the double slavery of ignorance and misery. He sees the difficulty of the task to be accomplished; but, as the Christian apprehends, he does not see the true and efficient instrumentality by which it is to be effected.

Terrible Conflagration at Memphis. The burning of two splendid steamers at Memphis, on the 6th inst, has been mentioned by the telegraph. From the Memphis papers, we learn that the fire broke out on board the George Collier, which had just arrived from New Orleans, and had landed some four hundred tons of merchandise on the wharf, which was entirely destroyed. All the female passengers were saved, but it is supposed that some ten or twelve of the male passengers and hands lost their lives. The fire extended to the packet Mayflower, which was also entirely destroyed, as was a wharf boat. Neither passengers or officers saved any of their effects. The entire loss is estimated at not less than $250,000.

Hurricane at Messina. Advices from Messina, in Sicily, of Nov. 16, relate that a dreadful hurricane, with thunder and lightning, was experienced on the 15th. It was accompanied by heavy rains, "never experienced in that country, and more awful than in the year 1823. Whole villages have been entirely destroyed, and swept into the sea, with the loss of many lives, the number not yet known; indeed, the scene about Messina for twenty miles or more, is dreadful and lamentable." The lemon gardens, and the greater part of the corn mills have been destroyed and washed away.

Bermuda was visited on the 18th ult., with an autumnal gale of great severity, which uprooted trees, unroofed houses, and inflicted serious injury on the growing crops of potatoes and onions. The Bermudian says the whole face of the country presents a dreary appearance from the effects of this severe tempest.

Obituary.

Died in Madison, Me., Nov. 26th, after a lingering sickness of pulmonary consumption, Sr. Olive R. Colby, aged 27 years and 7 months, the fourth and last sister of a family that has died with the same complaint.

Sr. Colby obtained a hope in the mercy of God three years ago under the labors of Br. Daniel Churchill, in the place where she resided, since which time she has been a constant believer in the speedy Advent of Christ, and though much of the time deprived of the privilege of meeting with the Church on the account of delicate health, she felt that the hope of the Gospel afforded her strong consolation. As she approached the hour of nature's dissolution, faith held with an unyielding grasp the promises of God, and hope was triumphant. She said to a sister who stood by, "weep not for me, our separation is short, we shall soon meet again.—Every earthly tie is severed, all is peace." Thus she closed her eyes in death to all earthly joys and sorrows.

"Peaceful be thy silent slumber,
Peaceful in the grave so low,
Thou no more shalt join our number,"
Where the tears of sorrow flow.

"Yet again we hope to meet thee,
When the day of life is fled,
And in heaven we hope to greet thee,
Where no farewell tear is shed."

have been expecting before this to have gained that happy land and to have seen the King in His beauty, are sad from hope long deferred, and many from the trials and conflicts which continually beset them. To such I would say, faint not, eternal life is at stake. The crown is before you—the kingdom and glory! Angels wait to welcome you home, "when the work of faith is done."

Jesus has gone to prepare a place for those who love Him. Then endure a little longer as though you saw "him who is invisible." He still leads His people; nor will He suffer them to fall in this wilderness, while they rest on His promise and cling to His word.

It is still a light to the path that leads to rest! O pilgrim, struggle! press on and soon the voice from the throne will be heard, "it is done"

Faint not, then, when there is but an hour to fight. Gird thy armor on, and press forward for the immortal Kingdom, and thy glorious crown!

The World's Crisis.

LOWELL, DEC. 15, 1855.

To our Patrons.

Previous to the suspension of the Crisis, last summer, we stated that the Office was considerably involved, and that in consequence we should be under necessity to to stop the paper until a sufficient number of subscriptions were obtained to warrant us in recommencing the publication, with a fair prospect of being able to pay our bills.

Recently we have been informed that many of our old subscribers to whom the paper has not been sent subsequently to the new arrangement, were not aware of its continuance; we therefore the present week strike off 2000 extra copies that our old subscribers may be apprised of the existence of the Crisis, and that we may have an opportunity respectfully to solicit a renewal of their patronage. Also, inasmuch as they were interested in the enterprise of publishing the paper when the Office became embarrassed to the amount of $200, by sending out so large a number gratuitously, we would invite those who have the ability to assist in relieving the publishing Committee of the burden devolving on them. By one united effort the debt may easily be liquidated. Let each one remember the golden rule to do unto others as we would that they should do unto us in like circumstances, and act in the fear of God.

We presume many more would have subscribed had they been assured the Crisis would have been continued; we therefore forward this number to old patrons that they may be aware of its continuance, and also of the debt which was accumulated while the circulation was gratuitous, in the payment of which the Committee would be greatly obliged if they will lend their assistance.

Terms of subscription will be found at the head of our paper.

Our Position.

I believe that great light has been thrown upon the Scriptures in our day in relation to the prophetic word—that many have run to and fro and that knowledge has been increased—so that the development of this light was like the bursting forth of the Sun, throwing his meridian splendors upon the Church who were in midnight darkness on the great and glorious subject of her Lord's appearing.—This heavenly and soul-enrapturing light thrilled through every fibre of the believer's heart to the divine illumination of his entire being, revolutionizing all the moral elements of his character, bringing him into sweet conformity to the divine mind and will, and causing him to rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory.

O praise the Lord for those outbursts of heavenly radiance which were like life from the dead. There was something so enchanting to the soul, so cheering to the afflicted, down-trodden, sorrow-stricken saint, that the full, overflowing emotions of the heart sought vent in triumphant praises to God and the Lamb. Tongue cannot utter, language would be powerless to express the fulness of unearthly joy, the tide of blissful emotion that rolled in upon the soul, filling it to its utmost capacity, and causing the expectant of that day to feel himself enveloped in a flood of light and an ocean of love.

The reason why we were thus filled to satiety and encircled in a flood of glory was, that we stood at a point where all the prophetic lines seems to converge. It was like having a thousand beams of solar light emanating from different points, and all converging to a focus so radiant that it becomes intensely luminous, and so heated as to ignite any combustible substance upon which its beams may strike. This was the powerful, soul-stirring influence that moved the Church to action, and enabled her to go forth in confident expectation of meeting her dear Savior coming in the glory of His Kingdom.

We traced out the great prophetic lines of the four successive kingdoms that were to bear universal sway over the nations of earth, together with their various developments, their consolidation and disruption into fragmentary kingdoms, we traced the rise, growth and fall of different powers presented in the prophetic symbols, and from every point of view, we saw a blazing glory streaming out from each fulfilled event, establishing the sublime truth, that the Most High ruleth among the inhabitants of this lower world—and giveth the kingdom to whosoever He will. It is indeed an intensely interesting and sublime theme for the mind to dwell upon, to see the unfolding of events foretold by ancient seers for centuries before they began to transpire, and to witness how the prophetic mould was precisely filled, and how event tallied with event in history and prophecy, and to see thorugh this medium the depths of the wisdom and knowledge of God who had foretold the end from the beginning. To perceive such astounding displays of an overruling, all-controlling power was well adapted to confirm, establish, settle us in the faith of a Moral Governor of the universe, and to establish our confidence in the wisdom and faithfulness of God—even the Lord, Jehovah of hosts, whose eye is far-reaching, whose care for His Church has been manifested by pointing out in advance the characteristics of the great anti christian powers, the knowledge of which involved the interests of His people, giving them warning when to look out for danger and also encouragement when to expect deliverance.

In connection with these great, prominent facts that stand out on the page of history as so many beacon lights to show the position of the Church in relation to the order of events that were to transpire during the organization of earthly kingdoms, and prior to God's everlasting reign in the renovated earth, there were measuring lines given to mark off by chronological periods the track over which the Church had advanced toward the realization of her hope. These periods start from given epochs each of which becomes an era of thrilling interest, a radiant point to the Church, which also pours its bright beams upon the position which the Church occupy in the present generation.

Thus the different epochs of the rise of the great anti-christian abomination, and the breaking of its power, the rise of the Mohamedan delusion, the commencement of its career of conquest after the loosing of the four Angels, its humiliation in our day, &c. &c. were all so many points of interest and of light.

Then again the signals hung out from heaven—the Sun at noon-day shrouded in the pall of night—the moon at its period of brightest effulgence covered with the blackness of Egyptian darkness—the meteoric stars filling the entire firmament of heaven with their darting balls of fire—the infraction upon the old established laws of nature by the appearance of blood and fire and pillars of smoke which were unknown to former ages except in higher latitudes of the north—the outbreaking of the popular elements among the nations of Europe which has caused the political earth to reel to and fro and stagger like a drunken man, threatening the disorganization of all social and civil institutions and the subversion of all law and order, which impending evils have caused, a distressing apprehension of calamities about to fall on the earth, or in Scriptural language, "men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things that are coming on the earth"—the startling events occuring inevery department of enterprize—the astounding developements in biblical, moral, scientific and artistic knowledge, such as the world has never seen paralleled—the hurry and bustle and commotion in society—the railroad, nay electric velocity with which every thing moves—all speak forth the dawn of a new and unprecedented era in the history of the world. They are the preparatory scenes to a new order of things, and so far especially as they form a part of the prophetic chain of events that were to precede the coming of the Just One, they all proclaim in thunder tones the great truth that earthly scenes are winding up, and that the kingdoms of this world are soon to "become the Kingdoms of our Lord, and of His Christ; and He (glory to God) shall reign forever and ever."

From this stand-point of observation, wherever we directed the eye, a stream of light met the vision, and all coming in converging lines, and meeting in a concentrated blaze on the position we occupy, how could we otherwise than, as it were, leap for joy, as we felt its over-powering charms, and realized the overwhelming evidence of the immediate coming of our King?

But lest we might be deceived, we cast an anxious eye to the professedly wise and talented of our land who stood out as the bold champions of an opposite view; but they almost without dissenting voice proclaimed the premillenial prophecies to have been fulfilled—the chronological periods drawing to a close—and the dawn of a new era to have appeared. They believed in a different result as "the crowning consummation of all prophetic declarations," but when we had learned from them the confirmation of our prophetic reckoning, and our views in relation to prophetic developments in the history of the nations, we again reverted to our Bibles with a doubly anxious inquiry, what events are to occur at the termination of the prophetic periods, and at the sounding of the seventh trumpet? and the concurrent testimony of the whole Bible was, unequivocally, the literal, personal coming and reign of the blessed & only Potentate, the King whose right it is to reign. There was no evading the conclusion that the end of all things was at hand—that the glorious and sublime scenes of the judgment—the dread tribunal that was to decide the destinies of men was at hand with its tremendous results, so appalling to the transgressor, and so cheering to the saint. O these scenes were so terrific on the one hand, and so transcendently glorious on the other—so mighty in their consequences, so lasting in their result, bringing the final, inexorable condition of destruction to the sinner, and of triumph and glory and immortal life to the humble believer in Jesus, that no one need wonder if it awakened to action every energy of our being; if it transformed and sanctified our natures, and rendered us all over like to those objects of heavenly purity, upon which our eyes were fixed with an anxious gaze.—Thus, as I have said, the light being concentrated on our position in such unparalleled brilliancy and glory, the intensified brightness and warmth kindled a fire of love and desire forthe coming of that day which many waters could not quench nor floods drown.

This heavenly and divine light which accompanied the preaching and reception of the time argument, enstamped the importance and generally truthfulness of the doctrine so deeply and effectually on the mind, that it seems impossible it should ever be erased from the present generation of believers. Indeed the impress seems like the writing of the covenant by the finger of God on tables of stone. Such being the feeling we have had, there appears to be an impassible barrier against returning to our former position of indifference and unbelief in relation to the coming of the Lord; and although in all the points of time we have fixed upon for the blissful period of His revelation in glory, we have been disappointed, yet that divine impress remains indelible. It bears the image and superscription, not of Cæsar, but of Prince Immanuel. We necessarily feel great caution in relinquishing any portion of our faith; and it is like giving up our life to yield any part or parcel of the doctrine which has been to our souls as life from the dead. But when, in the economy of God, the wheel of Providence rolls round, and we come into a position past the period of our expected deliverance, the Lord reveals by His own hand in His providential government of the world, the fact that error was connected with our faith on this subject.

It was no fatal error or intended departure from the right line of truth, but an error in chronological data which led us to believe the periods all ended at a given point. We then are reduced to the necessity of yielding some portion of the theory, and the question comes up what portion is to be given up? To say that the Church was infallible, and nothing to be relinquished, is inconsistent with facts.—The particular point of highest expectation on the part of the Church was in the fall of '54. After the passing of that time many supposed the round number of years had ended, and that previous to the return of the same point in the succeeding year the Lord would come, but the Autumn of '55 having passed, that position could not be correct.

In view, therefore, of the position we occupy at the present time, it seems impossible to recede from the clear light we have had on the prophecies any farther than the passing of time demonstrates the positions we have advocated to be erroneous. It is however evident that the '54 argument, so far as time was concerned was incorrect. What the precise truth is in relation to chronology I am unable to decide, but have been willing that Brn. should express their views in the Crisis, whether they regarded the days as ended or otherwise. In relation to the Midnight Cry, I choose to let infinite wisdom decide the point, and hold myself in readiness to believe as the providence and grace of God shall reveal the truth. I believe it to be far better to enter more cordially and fully into the work of God, and make preparation for the momentous scenes which we expect soon to transpire, than to contend respecting theories relating to our movements in the past. I have mourned and lamented, as did Jeremiah, that our hope has not been realized, but there is infinite wisdom in the economy of God that we cannot fully fathom. I feel safer in sinking into the arms of Jehovah, and submitting to the great Head of the Church, leaving all to be at His disposal, and trusting in Him to vindicate my cause, than in any other position whatever. We are in imminent peril here on either hand. If we endeavor to establish that which is manifestly wrong, we are in danger of indulging in pride of opinion and self-confidence which our Heavenly Father cannot approve; if on the other hand, we relinquish more of our theory than we ought, we are in great danger of plunging into the spirit of the world and finally into darkness and death. I feel a confidence and placid serenity of mind in trusting my all in the hands of God, and endeavoring to do His will to the best of my ability. My desire is that we may not judge one another in respect to different points of faith, but bear with each others' infirmities, laboring with all the energies of our moral being for the upbuilding of the Church, the spread of light and truth, the conversion of sinners, and the salvation of souls

LITERARY NOTICES.

"THE TIME OF THE END:" A Prophetic period, developing, as predicted, an increase of knowledge respecting the prophecies and periods that foretell the end—Illustrated by the history of prophetic interpretation, the expectation of the Church, and the various computations of the times of Daniel and John, by commentators, who generally terminate them between A. D. 1830 and 1880. Also, "Our present position in the prophetic calendar," with his "Apocalyptic seven-sealed scroll," by E B. Elliot; Lectures on the nature and nearnese of the Advent, by John Cumming, Lectures on the New Heavens and New Earth, by Dr. Chalmers, Dr. Hitchcock, and John Wesley; and the testimony of more than one hundred witnesses against the modern Whitbyan theory of a millennium before the Advent. By a Congregationalist.

We have received from Jewett and Co, (we suppose,) a copy of this work. Its title page, as given, will afford an idea of its contents. The writings of Elliot, Cumming, Wesley, Hitchcock, and others, here reproduced, are very valuable, and the compiler has conferred a favor upon those interested, by furnishing them in this convenient and accessible form. The volume is issued in a rare style of typographical excellence, which is characteristic of the publications of Jewett and Co. We commend it to the notice of our readers who desire information respecting the opinions of noted writers upon the questions that are here discussed

This volume is the latest of J Cumming's numerous volumes, and one of deep interest.—The fact that it is from the pen of the most eloquent preacher in England, the great Protestant champion, is in itself sufficient to invest it with interest, and the significant fact that it treats of a subject of such great importance, is equally interesting. The following are the titles of some of the discourses.

The Study of Prophecy.

Material Signs of the End.

Moral and social signs of the end of the present age.

The drying up of the Euphrates.

The budding of the Fig tree.

Consumption and ruin of Babylon.

The Russian and Northern Confederacy, &c.

We do not pretend to agree with all the learned author has written, but we think no attentive and candid reader will fail to be interested, instructed and profited by the perusal of it We wish the enterprising publishers success in presenting to the American public a portion of the rich treasures of English Millennarian literature. We may hereafter present our readers with some extracts from it.

☞ For sale wholesale and retail by H. L. Hastings, Peace Dale, R. I Price 75 cts.

☞ In advertising books, such as those of John Cumming and others, it will of course be understood that we do not endorse all the sentiments contained in those volumes As we are all frail and fallible beings, every work issued from the press is liable to error, but those who love to obtain truth, as the bee loves to extract honey, will be willing to receive instruction from authors who may on some important points differ from themselves.

TRACTS AND BOOKS.

☞ I wish to say that I have to pay some bills for tracts, books, &c, very soon, and those who are owing me for books, tracts, &c., will please remit the pay, if convenient.

Brn. wishing to order quantities of my publications, will confer a favor by doing so immediately, as it will be convenient for me to know what are wanted before New Year's.

The poor, and ministers laboring in new fields may send in their orders, and they shall have them as before, without money and without price as long as they last. Let us work while the day lasts, the night cometh.

For The Crisis.

Reply to Br. Higgins' Interrogations.

By B. P. Hildreth.

Dear Brother:—I hasten to answer your inquiries relative to the thousand years of Rev. 20th. As the article on "the Day of Judgment" appears to be unsatisfactory to you, I would lay aside every selfish feeling, and come with meekness to the pure word, which is able to save our souls; and as I have no theory to sustain, I trust that you will be as anxious to harmonize all the passages which relate to the day of Judgment as I am.

If it be true that each of the six days of creation did typify a thousand years, must it not also be true that the seventh day did typify a thousand years?

You quote Heb. 4: 3, and ask, "Did God measure off the seventh day by evening and morning, and commence His labor again the eighth?"

I think He did. If He measured any of the days of creation, as we have abundant testimony that He did, then the seventh must have been measured also; and "the works were finished from the foundation of the world," in the counsels of Him, who saw the end from the beginning; and it seems the Apostle here spake of the completion and not the commencement, as the prophets are wont to speak of future things, as though they were in the past

God first created all things in six days and rested the seventh; and on the eighth Adam fell; as appears from Gen 3: 8; and it became necessary for Him to commence the work of new creating and restoring what was so speedily lost, on the eighth day; which He did by an unqualified promise, that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head. The work of redemption began on that day; the work of bruising was performed on the cross; but our redemption will not be completed till Christ comes, and brings us to our long promised inheritance, named by God himself as the purchased possession; which can be no other than the new earth. Eph. 1: 14. "The earnest, (or pledge) of this inheritance," we each received, "when we were sealed by that Holy Spirit of promise;" and this is that rest, or sabbatism, which remains to the just.

You ask, "When we enter on that rest will it not continue forever?"

Most assuredly it will; but that does not meet the analogy; the day must be measured and marked, which we find bounded by the two resurrections, the binding and liberation of Satan, and by the reign of the martyrs and "the second death" of all who are not found written in the book of Life, in that day; and the only type, if it may be called a type, of the future state, after the end of the thousand years, that I can find is the Jubilee; after 7 times 7 years of release.

Again you ask, "Where will Christ and the saints reign during the thousand years?"

I answer, on the new earth. 2 Pet. 3: 13; Rev. 5: 10; Isa. 65: 17-25.

Again, "Where will the wicked receive their perdition after the end of the thousand years?"

I answer, in "the lake of fire." Rev. 20: 15. You seem to think the perdition of ungodly men to be inseparably connected with the burning of the earth. Perdition means destruction; and may, perhaps, as well be applied to those who will fall in the battle of the great day, as to those who suffer the second death; but I find no passage that limits the perdition of ungodly men to this earth

Again you ask, "where is that lake of fire, during the thousand years, so that the the Devil can be cast * * * where the beast and false prophet were? are not the three identified?" If you mean by the word identified, that they are one and the same, I must say, I think not. Satan is an agent of evil, and can symbolize nothing less than the prince of the power of darkness; and though invisible to mortal eye, not so to the eye of Omnipotence. Says the Savior, "I beheld Satan fall as lightning from heaven." Luke 10: 18. He is called 'the prince of the power of the air; the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience," Eph. 2: 2, and if a prince, is he not personal? I think so. The beast and false prophet, symbolize a wicked government, and a corrupt, idolatrous Church; the bodies of which, (or the men that compose them) will fall alive into the lake of fire, at the time of the binding of Satan, Rev. 19th and 20th, which closes the battle of Armageddon, and commences "the day of the Lord." But that we may learn where the lake of fire is, during the thousand years, let us consult Isa. 24th, and especially vs. 6, 12 and 18–23. Here we learn that the "inhabitants of the earth are burned;" "in the city is left desolation and the gate smitten with destruction." "The windows from on high are open, and the foundations of the earth do shake." "The earth is utterly broken down, the earth is clean dissolved the earth is moved exceedingly." "The earth shall reel to and fro like a drunkard, and shall be removed like a cottage; and the transgression thereof shall be heavy upon it, and it shall fall, and not rise again." "And it shall come to pass in that day that the Lord shall punish the host of high ones that are on high, and the kings of the earth upon the earth. And they shall be gathered together as prisoners are gathered in the pit, and shall be shut up in the prison, and after many days shall they be visited."—Then the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of Hosts shall reign in mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before His ancients gloriously"

If the above passages do not settle your mind relative to the locality of the Kingdom of Christ, and likewise that of the lake of fire, during the thousand years, why then it will be out of my power to do it.

Again, you ask, "How can the wicked receive their perdition in the day of the Lord, when the rest of the dead lived not again till the thousand years were finished?" I answer, the wicked can and will receive their perdition when the heavens depart as a scroll rolled together and every mountain and island are moved out of their places; when the kings of the earth, and the nobles, and the rich, and the commanders, and the strong men, the bond and the free, will call on the rocks and mountains to fall on them and hide them "from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb; for the great day of his wrath is come and who shall be able to stand?"

God says by Malichi, "And ye shall tread down the wicked; and they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet, in the day that I shall do this, saith the Lord of hosts." I have no reason to doubt that the second death of the wicked will occur at the end of the thousand years, and mark the termination of that period; and then "there shall be no more curse, for the throne of God and the Lamb will be in it, and His servants shall serve Him. They shall see His face, and His name shall be in their foreheads. And there shall be no night there, and they need no candle, neither light of the sun; for the Lord God giveth them light, and they shall reign forever and ever."

Again you ask, Is not 2 Pet. 3: 8, thrown in to show that the great work of burning the heavens and the earth, and perdition of ungodly men can be accomplished in one day, referring to Luke 7: 29, 30 "The same day that Lot went out of Sodom it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all.—Even so shall it be in the day when th

Son of man shall be revealed." I answer it was not thrown in for that purpose; but I do not conceive it necessary that all the wicked should suffer, soul and body, during that period, in order to make it "the day of perdition." The living wicked that are on the earth, will be destroyed when Christ comes, 2 Thess. 1: 6–10, the wicked dead resurrected, judged and cast into the lake of fire, which will close the day of Judgment. As it rained fire and brimstone, when Lot left Sodom, so will the Lord rain upon the wicked an overflowing rain, and great hailstones, fire and brimstone, when the saints leave the earth, Ezek. 38: 22. But whether this will be accomplished in the brief space of twenty-four hours, I leave for others to decide. I have no such commandment. "A thousand years (in the sight of God) are but as yesterday, when it is past, and as a watch in the night." Ps. 90: 9.

I think we ought to feel satisfied, and grateful to God, if we are enabled to arrange this class of texts in our minds in such a way as that no one shall clash with another. They are all descriptions of stupendous events and equally concern each individual of the human family; and one thing is certain, the man of sin will continue till Christ comes, and only be destroyed with the brightness of that event. 2 Thess. 2: 1–12. The little horn of Dan. 7: 21, 22, will make war upon the saints and prevail against them, till Christ comes. The wheat and tares grow together till harvest, and "the harvest is the end of the world." Matt. 13: 24–30, and 37–43. The Gospel net continues to gather the good and the bad till the end of the world, when the separation is made, vs. 47–50 The wicked will not be destroyed till he comes "in flaming fire taking vengeance," 2 Thess. 4: 8–12 — He will "judge the quick and dead at his appearing and his Kingdom" 2 Tim. 4: 1. Heaven and earth will pass away; but the above words will not pass away.

That day is just upon us; and we are not in darkness, that it should overtake us as a thief. Let us adore our God for "the exceeding greatness of His mighty power, which He wrought in Christ, when He raised Him from the dead, and set Him at his own right hand in the heavenly places; far above all principalities and powers and might and dominion. and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also that which is to come; and hath put all things under His feet, and gave Him to be Head over all things to the Church, which is His body; the fulness of Him that filleth all in all;" and ever feel that the same power will shortly be put forth on us, if we belong to His family, to change our vile bodies, and make us like himself; which God grant, for Christ's sake.

Yours waiting, B. P. Hildreth.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Br. W. J. Hale.

Collinsville, Nov. 24, 1855.

Dear Br. Merriam:—It is with pleasure that I have received a few numbers of the Crisis, and it does my heart good to read in its columns so many testimonies for Christ and His coming Kingdom; and I bless God it is so near at hand. Yes, thank God, we are almost home. Let us not be weary in well doing; for the crown is but just before us.

Brn. and Srs., let us take the Savior for an example, and try to imitate Him in our daily life, and finally let us look at Him in the garden—before the Jewish Sanhedrim—and on the cross. See Him weighed down in agony under all the guilt of a world! See Him crowned with thorns! See Him buffeted and spit upon! See Him nailed to the cross and pierced in the side! Yes, see Him meekly suffering all for sinful man! What unbounded love for the human race! Is it possible that we can ever turn our backs on such a Savior? Our Savior's love was, I had almost said, the foundation of our salvation. Let us keep His amazing love in view, and lift our hearts and voices in praise and adoration to the name of Jesus.

Let us not think because Christ has died and opened the way of life, that we have nothing to do; but let us gird on the whole armour and fight manfully the good fight of faith, remembering it is through much tribulation that we shall enter into the Kingdom. If we expect to dwell with Christ in the Kingdom, we must follow Him in all trials through life. He was reviled, persecuted and spit upon, and His good name so defamed, that He became of no reputation. Now if we would follow the example of our Savior, and be accepted of Him in the Kingdom, we must suffer all manner of persecution and reproach falsely for His sake, as He has done for us

O may we all work while the day lasts; for soon the night cometh when no man can work.

Reader, let you and I say that we will use all the little influence we have for Christ, and strive to gain an abundant entrance into His everlasting Kingdom.

May God give us grace to endure unto the end of the race. Amen.

Wm. J. Hale.

For The Crisis

Question.

Dear Br. Merriam:—Will you or some one else be good enough to tell me whether the 14th ch. of Zechariah has been fulfilled or not? If not, when will it be fulfilled? and how long a period will it require?

I would also ask, if the Mount of Olives is not the Sanctuary which is to be cleansed, and made holy for a camp of the saints through the reign of Christ?

Yours loving and praying and searching for the truth as for hid treasures,

H. Bishop.

For the Crisis.

Miriam.

"Jehovah hath triumphed, and deep in the waters
Hath Israel's foes, horse and rider sunk down;"
Thus sings the fair leader of Israel's daughters,
And answer in chorus those men of renown;
As the thousands of Israel join their glad voices,
In loud hallelujahs that swell o'er the sea,
She sounds the loud timbrel, and thus she rejoices,
"Jehovah hath triumphed; His people are free!"

And forth to the plain the fair leader advances,
With timbrel in hand, singing praise to the Lord,
While Israel's daughters all follow with dances,
And timbrel, and song, in harmonious accord;
And this is the song which inspires the fair daughters;
"Hath Israel's foes sunk like lead in the sea?"
Again the glad chorus swells loud o'er the waters,
"Jehovah hath triumphed; His people are free!"

Shall the glad song of Moses again be repeated,
In Israel's land, by the hosts of the Lord?
When all His proud foes have at last been defeated,
And swept from the earth by the fire and the sword,
Then the song of the Lamb like the voices of waters,
Shall sound o'er the earth, on the land, on the sea,
And be answered in chorus by Israel's glad daughters,
"Jehovah hath triumphed, His people are free!"

To the Advent Brethren generally.

The time has come, when we, the undersigned, feel it to be our duty to appeal to you, dear Brn., and especially to all who have ever been readers of "The Second Advent Watchman," in behalf of Br. J. Turner, on whom has fallen the burden of the debt which the Association owed the office of publication at the time the 'Watchman" was discontinued.

Br. Turner, having been the Editor of the Watchman and the Treasurer of the office, had necessarily assumed responsibilities besides the labor he was performing in the office, to a considerable amount, encouraged to do so by the pledges of the Association, made on the hope that the subscribers could all be induced to pay their dues, so that the debt due him for labor and money paid out, amounted, when the paper was discontinued, to $872, without interest — This debt did not accumulate by a fault of Br. Turner; he had a right to expect it all paid, for there was due the office, from subscribers, at the same time, over $2,100, which, on account of the course of things, has not been paid.

This debt remains unpaid, and Br. Turner is seriously embarrassed for the want of this, his honest due; and we think it is the duty of the brethren who have ever been readers of the Watchman, to unite in an immediate effort to pay this debt by donation. This debt is trifling for the body to pay, and it can be paid by a trifling individual sacrifice; but if not paid by donation, it must be a dead loss to Br. Turner, and to him, a heavy loss.

Br. Turner is really poor, and the want of this money has made him so; and he assures us that, unless he can have this debt paid, he must go into some employment, aside from his calling, to support his family, and pay debts incurred for the Association.

We very much mistake the feelings of Adventists, if they will allow this to be so, after all the labors and sacrifices of Br. Turner for the last twelve years. We feel confident that brethren looking for the Lord, and who desire to do unto others as they would that others should do unto them, will gladly bear a share of this burden, and thus relieve Br. T., who has already suffered under it too long. We believe we shall not appeal to the Church in vain. Brn., let this debt be paid at once; it is Br. Turner's due. Let us not leave this debt unpaid till the judgment; the consequences may be fearful.

1st. Let all who were owing for the Watchman when it stopped, if able, pay their dues immediately, if poor, pay what they can.

2d We invite all preachers who were readers of the Watchman, to present our request to the Churches, and encourage them to assist in paying this debt, and when convenient, where there are those who may wish to give something and yet can give but little, take contributions for this object.

3d. Let every former reader of the Watchman give for this object according to his or her ability—those who have much, can afford to be liberal, and we hope they will be.

Now, Brn., let this business be attended to at once—let there be no delay All money raised for this object must be directed to Eld. J. Turner, Hartford, Ct., and all money received shall be duly credited in the Reformer and Crisis.

EXPLANATION.

The statistics embodied in the above appeal to the Church have been furnished from my accounts kept with the Association and the office, which accounts have been duly examined, year by year, except the last year of the existence of the Watchman; nevertheless I am responsible for the statistics, and am willing to satisfy any one or more of the correctness of them, who will take the trouble to review my accounts, should any doubt exist.

But, brethren scattered in different places, who have signed, and who still may sign their names to the document, are regarded only as signing the appeal to the church to pay the debt, and not as vouchers for me or my account—that is furnished by myself; and, if it is desired, I am ready to affirm its correctness according to law.

Some may be in doubt in regard to the amount, since quite an effort was once made to pay the debt by donation. These are the facts. At one time, about March, 1854, the debt was reduced to less than five hundred dollars, but soon after that, very many stopped their papers without paying up, and as most of those who did not stop their paper had paid, I was obliged to continue, with trifling receipts, and did so, hoping that all would come right at the end of 1854. So thought the Committee, but as they were disappointed, they ordered the Watchman closed at that time Thus the debt was increased from a little short of five hundred dollars, to what it now is

Some have said, send bills to those who are indebted, and demand payment Brethren, this has been done repeatedly. When the Watchman stopped, we sent bills to all who owed us, and scarcely received enough on them to pay for the trouble.

Dear Brn.—All who contribute to the payment of this debt will indeed be giving, and all you thus give will benefit me; but remember, it is not a gift to me, but to the Association. Every dollar is my just due, but if you give it to the Association, and I get my due, I shall be most grateful to every donor.

I do not wish those who are really poor to give for this debt; I would rather lose it all alone If other preachers wish to use their influence in the matter, if they will forward their names, they will oblige.

Joseph Turner.

☞ I would add in respect to the above Circular, that I deem it a duty for all who are indebted for the Watchman, to remit funds as soon as practicable for the liquidation of the same I do feel, that as Christians our business affairs ought to be transacted upon a different principle from that of worldlings; and we ought to hold ourselves as much in readiness to discharge our every debt, when we do not expect the arm of the law to be applied, as if our goods were liable to attatchment. OWE NO MAN ANY THING is written in living characters on the divine record, and no man, if he possess the ability, can be acquitted in the Great Day, without observing the command.

I would further say, that as the Advent body has been so much implicated in this affair, a pressing demand seems to be made upon the benevolence of those who have not become personally pledged for any portion of the amount due. Ed.

EUROPEAN NEWS.

EXTRACTS FROM ENGLISH PAPERS RECEIVED BY THE AMERICA.

Halifax, December, 5. The royal mail steamship America, Capt. Lang, from Liverpool about 10 o'clock A. M., of the 24th ult., arrived at 1.30 A M., Wednesday, December 5th.

The Eastern War. The Paris correspondent of the ministerial paper, the London Globe, learns that although winter stops field operations in the Crimea, it is intended to bombard the northern side of Sebastopol to permit the fleets to winter in the harbor

It is reported that the town of Marionopol, on the north coast of the Sea of Azoff, was bombarded by the allies, Oct 31st. One hundred shells were thrown and the town set on fire, till the Austrian merchants hoisted the Austrian flag over the government warehouse, when the firing ceased.

Spain. Reinforcements of troops are ordered to Saragossa, where further disturbances were apprehended, the local authorities having promised more to the rioters than government will sanction

The Spanish government is reported to be unanimous in favor of joining the alliance; but the occasion is deferred until Spain can appear as a great nation. At present she has no spare money nor soldiers. Gen. Zavala was desirous to have the command of the contingent, and being discontented that another General was spoken of, will probably retire from the cabinet.

Prussia. The Russian party are triumphant, while the western people dread German treason. They are loudly declaring for peace, or adhesion with Russia, as the alternative.

Turkey. Constantinople correspondence describes a bad state of affairs. Murders and robberies in the open streets are reported, with great and increasing fanaticism against Christians, especially the French. The allies have called upon the Turks to prevent outrages, under a threat of taking the police of the city into their own hands. The loss of the French, killed in the recent riot, was more considerable than at first reported.

Russia. The London Times has an elaborate editorial of calculations, showing that the total available strength of Russia is 83 per 1000, and that she has already used 58, which allows only two months more, at the past ratio, to exhaust her last man, her last cash rouble being already expended.

A general armament of the Russian empire is talked of. The maritime admirality at Nicolieff is placed under the orders of Gen Luders, to whom, in this respect, Gortschakoff is to be subordinate, with the object of securing greater unity of operation.

The Czar arrived at St. Petersburgh on the 19th, in good health. He has extended the inducements to poor nobles to enter the army.

Convention with Sweden The Paris correspondent of the Times says:—"The rumors alluded to yesterday with reference to the mission of General Canrobert to Stockholm are stated on good authority to be well founded, and no doubt appears to be entertained that he has succeeded in his object. The terms of military convention have, it is affirmed, been agreed on, in virtue of which Sweden will furnish a contingent next spring, to act conjointly with us in the event of peace not being made before then, and her gunboats will co-operate with our fleet in the north.

It is also stated that an army, composed of French, English, and Swedes, will be sent to Courland, so that both Austria and Prussia will be forced to declare themselves. The inducement offered to Sweden to take this important step is not positively stated, but there can be no difficulty in believing that the restoration of Finland, so dear to the hearts of the Swedish people, is one of the principal conditions of their joining the alliance. Thus Russia finds herself gradually hemmed in, and if she does not come to terms we may fully expect next year will witness events as great, if not greater, than any that have yet occurred. The effect produced on Poland by an Allied army occupying Courland is not difficult to foresee, and from that moment Austria and Prussia may have quite as much to dread as our present enemy."

On Thursday it was positively stated in Paris that Gen. Canrobert had succeeded in obtaining the signature of the King of Sweden to a convention under which the Swedish army and navy will co-operate with the allies next spring.

On this subject the Times' correspondent writes:—I believe it may at last be positively affirmed that Sweden has engaged to adhere to the alliance of France and England, and not only this, but Denmark has declared that she will follow the example of Sweden.

It is alleged that the success of General Canrobert's mission to Sweden, the promised adhesion of Denmark, the possible occupation of Courland by the Allies, and in case of such an event an anticipated rising in Poland, have thrown the Prussian Court into a wholesome panic, and hence the energetic efforts that Prussia will make for the restoration of peace.

Three magazines belonging to the French Artillery, had blown up near Inkermann, killing 70 soldiers and 2 officers, and wounding 100 soldiers and 10 officers. The magazines contained 30,000 kilogrammes of powder, 600,000 cartridges, and 300 charged shells, all of which were destroyed.

A large quantity of Russian grain had been destroyed on the Gheiskeiman coast.

A terrific fire had occurred at Paris in the government bakery, 28,000 qtls. of corn, and an equal quantity of flour and biscuits, were burned.

The destruction of Russian grain on the coast near Gheiskeiran, was effected by an allied flotilla sent for the purpose. The grain was intended for the Crimean army, and was packed in six tiers which extended two miles along the coast.

State of Affairs in Hungary.

The war, writes another of my correspondents' has, as you may well fancy, a great deal of trouble and espionage over our heads. The gendarmerie rules absolute, and there is no rest from these fellows by day or night They break into your houses at any time they please, and pretending to have some suspicion about our harboring "agents and emissaries," they search out every corner, unless and until they are bribed to leave us alone, for they are very ready to sell their zeal to who ever will buy their discretion The fact is that most of us find it to be the best policy to have these men in our pay. The private salary makes them very tractable, and once bought, they make no difficulty to sell their imperial employers I, for instance, can say that the gendarme ordered to watch me, is my best security against being taken by surprise Who ever there is something in the wind he comes to give me an avertissement. He even finds a certain pleasure in thus counteracting the proceedings of his superiors, and it is amusing to hear him talk against meddling with other people's business. Many, however, refuse to pay their watchmen, and such have no rest. A few days ago there was a serious fight between the gendarmes and some cottagers near Eger. The former called on the people to levy taxes already paid They were shown the receipts, but in vain. They insisted upon being paid. The people refused The gendarmes tried to make them prisoners. A fight ensued, in which ten gendarmes were killed, and several wounded on the people's side, there being two or three men dead. The affair being at once reported to the military commander, a regiment of infantry was ordered and marched against the "insurgents." The people offered no resistance. Everybody remained quiet, and proffered his grievance in a tone of calm dignity Some of the "ringleaders," as they are called, were, however, arrested But we hear that the officers of the gendarmerie have been ordered to Vienna to answer the charges of lawless proceedings, extortion and brutal violence, brought against them. The case was too palpably wrong for the government to pass it over with the approbation of silence usual in similar occurrences. Some time ago we had a number of supposed Honveds let loose over the country. They had their special stories, and told us how they fought under Bem and Damjanies, and by what wonderful means they succeeded to evade the constant vigilance of the police in search of their persons. The people have a warm affection for the very name of Honved, and so these wolves in sheep's skin—for they were but disguised spies to find revolutionary sympathizers—have been received with patriotic good-will and enjoyed the hospitality of many a house, high or low, in all parts of the country The consequence was that as soon as these spies had sent in their reports, a general razzia was undertaken, and the prisons are filled once more. The eastern war, much as our expectations respecting the consequences of the Anglo-French alliance have become cooled down, is still very popular with us. With no great sympathy for the policy of the Western allies, the Magyars are, nevertheless, highly gratified at Russia's progressing humiliation. It is, indeed, a conviction with the people of Hungary, that the war cannot but be beneficial to the interest of freedom and civilization. The nation receives the news of each Russian defeat with feelings of intense satisfaction, because she knows it is the Hapsburgs who are losing most by the loss of their protectors. It, is, indeed, evident, that Russia will never more move a finger to save Austria, and Austria deprived of Cossack protection will fall to pieces by the slightest earthquake in the European political world.

☞ Extract of a Letter from Kossuth published in The Independent:—

The religious orders in Hungary are numerous. Benedictins, Ciscertists, Premonstratenses, (these three endowed with princely possessions—immensely rich) Miscricordians, Piarists, Servists, Franciscans, Capuchins, Dominicans, Minorits, Carmelites. To these now comes the dangerous addition of Jesuits; excluded by law, but re inducted to the country by the bigoted tyrant by the grace of Russian bayonets Such has been the provident aversion of the Hungarian nation to this terrible order, that though already for some thirty years they had been reinstated to Austria, and had full influence and sway at the court; with us the Hapsburgs never dared so much as mention the word, "reintroduction of Jesuits" as long as Hungary was allowed to raise a word in its own affairs. But now the laws are dead, the nation groans under the iron rod of cruel despotism, and the word is mute throughout Hungary—and one of the first boons is the—Jesuits. O Lord! what dreadful results may yet pour upon the world (besides the present war) from the fact, that there was no nation on earth—not one, to raise a word of protest against the violation of the laws of nature and of nature's God by the intervention of Russia in 1849.

Now the Jesuits in power again—and all the enumerated monastic orders given without reserve and without control into the hands of the pope; while the education of the youth of Hungary is in the hands of the Jesuits, and of the other monks—I leave you, sir! to reflect whether it would not be wise to lend a brother's hand to the legitimate aspirations of the Hungarian nation—that the glorious land, once the bulwark of Christendom against Mohammedanism—always a bulwark of civilization and liberty against superstition, bigotry, and priestly and worldly despotism—may not become the footstool of power for ambitious papacy, from which it may dare to command halt to the progress of civilization, and smother under its somber extinguisher, light, truth, freedom, and liberty of conscience.

The Latest from Kansas. The St. Louis Intelligencer of the 7th inst. has the following dispatches:

Kansas, Dec. 6. The pro-slavery party have encamped on the Waukassusa, and last night, by order of the Governor, they arrested Gen. Pomeroy, who was on his way to Kansas City with important despatches for the east. Some threats have been made to destroy the American Hotel at this place, it being alleged that it was owned by the Emigrant Aid Society of Massachusetts. The citizens have pledged themselves to defend it and prevent its destruction. Four or five hundred men, several pieces of artillery, and probably one thousand muskets, passed through Independence yesterday from the border counties of Missouri, to aid the Sheriff of Douglass county in maintaining order.

Weston, Dec. 6. By an express, which stayed at Lawrence, night before last, we have the following account of matters from the seat of war: They number at Lawrence about 800 men, armed chiefly with Sharp's rifles They say they can raise 300 more men if necessary. They are willing that Jones should come peaceably and search for the prisoners. They assert that they will not commence a fight, but will act on the defensive to the very last. Men and women are armed with Sharp's rifles. General Pomeroy is now at Lawrence, having escaped from his captors. It is said that on the pro-slavery side they number at Franklin about 300 men, and at Lecompton and Douglas about 200, and are very anxious to obtain more. Jones was to go yesterday to execute his writs on the prisoners in the hands of the Free State party, and if they refuse to deliver them up, he would await further orders from Governor Shannon It is thought that there will be a fight before the matter can be settled. The U. S. troops at Fort Leavenworth have not yet been ordered out.

☞ Extract of a letter from England:—

England, Nov. 8, 1855.

The topics of the day are embarrassing from their number, and the incalculable magnitude and importance of the interests they involve. First, but not chief, is the recent manifesto of Kossuth, Mazzini and Ledru Rollin, supplemented by the eloquent strictures of Louis Blanc, and the foolish, and worse than foolish utterance of M Pyatt and other refugees in Jersey. These present a group of facts and suggestions which are as interesting as they are saddening. It is becoming too clear that the closer union of the republican party, desiderated by the three patriots, is not likely to be realized, and that, in Italy, constitutionalists, Piedmontese and Muratists will divide the patriot ranks.

There is another conclusion now beyond dispute. Henceforth the continental struggle will not be for constitutional rights and personal political freedom. Almost everywhere, and even in England, the socialist element is pervading that portion of the masses in which there is mental activity and political aspirations. Everywhere thoughtful men have been brought up to the point that merely political or governmental changes are not sufficient to secure the freedom and happiness of nations. It is significant that the sincere and devout Christian and the red republican and socialist in this are in accord. Surely the merciful Father of all is teaching the nations, and shutting them up to the one great remedy, after trial of many inventions. Something more than republicanism is wanting, argues Louis Blanc; and he arrays irresistible facts in proof. He wants "something more." He would abolish the double slavery of ignorance and misery He sees the difficulty of the task to be accomplished; but, as the Christian apprehends, he does not see the true and efficient instrumentality by which it is to be effected.

Terrible Conflagration at Memphis. The burning of two splendid steamers at Memphis, on the 6th inst, has been mentioned by the telegraph From the Memphis papers, we learn that the fire broke out on board the George Collier, which had just arrived from New Orleans, and had landed some four hundred tons of merchandise on the wharf, which was entirely destroyed All the female passengers were saved, but it is supposed that some ten or twelve of the male passengers and hands lost their lives. The fire extended to the packet Mayflower, which was also entirely destroyed, as was a wharf boat Neither passengers or officers saved any of their effects. The entire loss is estimated at not less than $250,000.

Hurricane at Messina Advices from Messina, in Sicily, of Nov. 16, relate that a dreadful hurricane, with thunder and lightning, was experienced on the 15th. It was accompanied by heavy rains, "never experienced in that country, and more awful than in the year 1823. Whole villages have been entirely destroyed, and swept into the sea, with the loss of many lives, the number not yet known; indeed, the scene about Messina for twenty miles or more, is dreadful and lamentable." The lemon gardens, and the greater part of the corn mills have been destroyed and washed away.

Bermuda was visited on the 18th ult, with an autumnal gale of great severity, which uprooted trees, unroofed houses, and inflicted serious injury on the growing crops of potatoes and onions. The Bermudian says the whole face of the country presents a dreary appearance from the effects of this severe tempest.

Obituary.

Died in Madison, Me., Nov. 26th, after a lingering sickness of pulmonary consumption, Sr. Olive R. Colby, aged 27 years and 7 months, the fourth and last sister of a family that has died with the same complaint.

Sr. Colby obtained a hope in the mercy of God three years ago under the labors of Br. Daniel Churchill, in the place where she resided, since which time she has been a constant believer in the speedy Advent of Christ, and though much of the time deprived of the privilege of meeting with the Church on the account of delicate health, she felt that the hope of the Gospel afforded her strong consolation As she approached the hour of nature's dissolution, faith held with an unyielding grasp the promises of God, and hope was triumphant. She said to a sister who stood by, "weep not for me, our separation is short, we shall soon meet again.—Every earthly tie is severed, all is peace." Thus she closed her eyes in death to all earthly joys and sorrows.

"Peaceful be thy silent slumber,
Peaceful in the grave so low,
Thou no more shalt join our number,"
Where the tears of sorrow flow.

"Yet again we hope to meet thee,
When the day of life is fled,
And in heaven we hope to greet thee,
Where no farewell tear is shed."

Abraham.

In the field of Machpelah the patriarch stood,
And bowed himself low to the men of the land;
And communed with them there of how much it was good,
He should give for the field and the cave near at hand.

For he wanted a place where to bury his dead,
Fair Sarah, his wife, once his chiefest delight,
But in peaceful old age her calm spirit had fled,
And now he must bury her out of his sight.

And the men of the land, as with humble respect
They bowed themselves low to the patriarch, said,
"Thou, a prince, and a mighty man, shall we reject?
In the choice of our sepulchres, bury thy dead!"

Oh Abraham, Abraham! where is thy God,
Who hath said all this land should be given to thee?
And now hath He left thee no claim to the sod?
Nor remembered His promise? O say, where is He?

Hast thou not a foot of inheritance here,
In this land where the nations of Amorites live?
But must buy it with money? then dost thou not fear
That His promise will fail thee? Say, canst thou believe?

Yes; the word of Jehovah forever shall stand,
Though heaven and earth shall in flame pass away;
A glorious city—a heavenly land,
Shall the promised inheritance be in that day!

By faith I behold afar off the glad time
Then He who is promised shall surely appear,
And redeem from the curse every country and clime,
And waken the sleeping ones sepulchered here.

Mhen the Archangel's voice shall convulse the deep cave,
And Sarah and I shall spring forth from the dust,
And join the glad army redeemed from the grave,
To inherit this country, the home of the just.

And is Abraham's God still the Lord of the heaven,
And hath He grown slack to remember His word?
No! though ages have rolled by since first it was given,
That promise stands sure to-day. Praise ye the Lord!

Moral Courage.

"They are slaves who fear to speak
For the fallen and the weak;
They are slaves, who will not choose
Hatred, suffering, and abuse,
Rather than in silence shrink
From the truth they needs must think;
They are slaves, who dare not be
In the right with two or three."

For The Crisis.

"Be of Good Cheer!"

BY SR. B. MATHEWSON.

In the sentence preceeding this short command, the Savior assures His disciples they shall experience tribulation while in this world. He gives this timely warning to those whom He recognizes as Friends, that they may not be surprised, when overtaken by afflictions, distresses, and vexations of different kinds—but expect this as a part of their legacy, while on their pilgrimage through an enemy's land—away from home—their citizenship vested in another clime! their manners and customs differing so widely from the people of this world that they are considered a "peculiar people." They are not to marvel if the world do hate them! remembering the carnal heart is as much opposed to the law of God and those who adhere to it in the 19th Century as it was 1800 years ago.

Yes, the disciples of the humble Nazarene must expect Paul's assertion in 2 Tim. 3: 12, that "All that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution," will remain true until "the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him."

But the Blessed Shepherd, who is ever exercising a vigilant care over "the little flock," purchased with His blood, has kindly apprised us of this, that when these things occur we may not faint with despondency, or think "some strange thing has happened," when tried with fiery trials. There is positive assurance, interspersed throughout the Sacred Volume that God's little flock shall experience sorrow and chastisements that will be "grievous," at least "for the present." But [illegible] to be done amid these multitudi[illegible] and temptations?

[illegible] nous [illegible] hang our heads in sorrow

Are we [illegible] to droop in depres[illegible] and allow our [illegible] The Master says in [illegible] sion? Nay verily! "Good Cheer!" view of all this "Be of the future That is, the blessed hope of should so elate us that we should be gladsome and happy while experiencing tribulation.

Especially should those lift up their heads with rejoicing that have witnessed the signs of the near coming Bridegroom! Luke 21: 28. The momentary duration of these trials should be fixed on the mind, so that we may reckon with Paul, "that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us." Rom. 8: 18. This great Apostle of the Gentiles shows us by example, as well as precept, there is sufficient efficacy in living faith to so overcome every evil incident to this life as to make him exceeding joyful in all his tribulations when "troubled on every side." He says "without were fightings, within were fears." What if the world do frown upon and leave us?—They have left our Savior to. "It is enough that the servant be as his master." Did our Divine Leader set us an example of enjoying this world's riches, honor, or ease? Nay, "He made himself of no reputation," and "had not where to lay His head"—collected a little from the mouth of the fish to pay the demands of government! And as to ease, He was among us as one that serveth—"A man of sorrows," &c. But who ever heard a murmur escape His lips relative to His own sufferings? We are informed, the joys of the future stimulated Him to endure all with a cheerful acquiesence in the Father's will.

Beloved Pilgrims; thus it should be with us; amid all the sorrows of this groaning earth we should "be of good cheer," in view of the joys set before us! In the 84 Ps. the Prophet David expresses the same ideas relative to maintaining a cheerful and happy deportment, even while occupying sorrow's vale. In the 5th and 6th vs. he says, "Blessed is the man whose strength is in thee; in whose heart are the ways of them, Who passing through the valley of Baca made it a well; the rain also filleth the pools."—Here the word of God pronounces the individual blessed that possesses certain ways. And who is it? He whose journeyings lead through a land well watered and like Eden? He who possesses health, honor, large possessions, exempt from trouble? Nay! By understanding what the name Baca signifies we shall see this is not the class who are to receive the promised blessing. The name, "Baca," signifies weeping, and was the dry, desolate, and gloomy valley through which the children of God passed in their journey to the house of God." What then are the "ways" of those passing through Baca? Ans. The anticipation of appearing before God and engaging in the delightful worship of the Temple of God so animated them, they minded not the dreariness of the way, but passed through Baca with songs of gladness, stimulated with the hope of entering the house of God. Animated with these anticipations, this dry and desolate valley appeared as if filled with perennial waters and blessed with frequent and abundant rains. Please read the whole of Ps. 84.

"Blessed is the man—(not who is exempt from trouble, but)—whose strength is in thee; in whose heart are the ways of them: Who passing through the valley of Baca, make it a well:" This spring of happiness in the heart is CONFIDENCE in God. And does He not assure us that afflictions will work for us? And shall we not "be of good cheer" while a kind and benevolent Parent is employing agencies to accomplish the very work so desirable above all others, viz., the perfecting of our heavenly education—the fitting us to enter into the New Jerusalem!!—Every child of God knows that perfect confidence in Him greatly mitigates the sorrows of this groaning earth, and makes the "valley of Baca" quite tolerable in view of appearing personally in the tabernacle of God—even "the City that Abraham looked for," &c.

Dear reader, suffer me to enquire whether you possess the "ways" of that company that journeyed through Baca?—Does the anticipation of future rest and glory cause you to be of good cheer amid the gloom of this groaning creation?—Come, ye disconsolate, languish no more, but fervently pour forth all your sorrows and anguish into the ear of our faithful and sympathetic High Priest, for "He careth for you." And He it is who has the skill of administering the balm of consolation—binding up the broken heart, and wiping the last trickling tear that shall ever course its way on mortal visage!

With this High Priest and Judge to be your Friend and Brother, proffering you an heirship with Himself, can you not obey His injunction to "be of good cheer?"

Many facts of recent date might be adduced to prove

"Earth has no sorrow that heaven cannot heal."

That of the late Uriah Ambler of Norwalk, Ct., proves the practicability of obeying this command even in the deepest part of Baca's valley. His brief history, for which I am indebted to another, I will here insert.

"I knew a man, a young man, smitten with sickness, all his earthly plans blasted, all his earthly hopes laid low; while yet a helpless family was around him, dependent on his exertions for their daily bread. Eight long years passed away, and each passing year only added to the apparent misery of his condition. Distressing pains unjointed his very limbs, and drew together the extremities of his tortured body. For six long years he lay in total darkness. All seemed to think that life must be to him a burden. "Oh no, (said he,) it is sweet." Often have I heard him recount his mercies; but never did I hear him utter one murmuring or impatient word. "I feel, (said he,) that my afflictions are good for my soul. I might have forgotten God. I did not know my mercies. I was unthankful." Often his neighbors heard him giving songs in the night. He drank from "the upper springs;" from the "nether springs."

Nor is this an isolated case; within three miles from this, lives a female whose bodily sufferings have been extreme for over twenty years—her parents very aged, and becoming almost helpless—and all dependent on public charity. And yet her very countenance expresses what her language often confirms, that she has confidence in God, that all is well; and though, as she says, she does not now know why, but expects to afterward. See John 19: 7. Blessed be the name of the Lord that He has provided means by which even the valley of Baca may be made a well—and the heart of the lonely pilgrim be made "of good cheer."

My dear Brn. and Srs., I am confident we shall have to travel but little further ere we reach the House of God, where we shall engage in delightful worship with the white-vested Elders—where the voice of every being in existence will be tuned to praise—not a jarring note—not a sorrowful emotion shall ever be experienced—there our desires for the good and the beautiful shall be forever satiated.

In view of this, and Eternal Life, shall we not "be of good cheer?" Though we have suffered disappointment of our fondest hopes, even of seeing Jesus in his beauty, yet we have the assurance that God is with us still, and blessed be His Name, I expect He will be to the end.—Let us pray for each other, and especially for our dear Editor, that God would continue to assist him in his arduous labors, and make the paper just what God would have it to be. I do prize this little sheet, and I do pray that Our Father may continue the supervision of the Crisis.

Should one Christless soul peruse this little communication, allow me to commiserate your case—for yours is a pitiable one whether you realize it or not. You with us are appointed "unto trouble as the sparks fly upward." Alas! to pass through the "valley of Baca" with no hope of being welcomed into the New Jerusalem is a sorrowful situation—expecting to suffer the pains of the second death.

O fly while mercy lingers, and treat not your birthright with contempt longer.

For The Crisis.

The wicked not immortal; or the immortality of the soul disproved by Bible truth.

A lecture delivered by P. Tandy, Sept. 30, at Mill Village, Goshen N. H.

"To the law, and to the testimony."—For the Scripture assures us, "He was made a curse for us; for it is written, cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree." And again, "Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree." 1 Pet. 2: 24. And again, "For as much as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, He also himself likewise took part of the same, that through death He might destroy him that had the power of death, that is the devil." Heb. 2: 14. Again, "Without the shedding of blood there is no remission" of sin.—Hence the life of the Savior was offered instead of that of the transgressor; this is all simple and plain. Truth is always clear when in God's light we see light.—But we have been so traditionated to believe there is something in man called soul which survives the death of the body, that the question will come up repeatedly; is there not some immortal principle connected with his natural organization? If so, where is it to be found? Is it in the soul, or spirit, (breath of life?) Prof. Bush, in his highly classical work on the Resurrection frankly acknowledges there is nothing in the original word rendered soul, which necessarily implies that it is immortal; for the same word is applied to beasts as well as to men. I can say calmly, but positively, with the Editor of the Crisis, that "The Bible nowhere intimates that man is endowed with an immortal spirit," &c. As mere assertions prove nothing; so in this case, I do not ask, or expect any one to believe a thing because I do; I am heartily opposed to such a principle. Therefore we ask you to take nothing but Bible testimony upon his, or any other point; and there is abundance of it.

Turn, if you please, to Job 33: 4.—"The Spirit of God hath made me, and the breath of the Almighty hath given me life." Ch, 34: 14, 15. "If He set His heart upon man, if He gather unto himself his Spirit and his breath, all flesh shall perish together, and man shall turn again to dust."

Does this not appear plain; that man is not immortal? If he were immortal, how could he (man) turn again unto dust?—Hence, it is not as tradition asserts, that by taking away his breath, his body turns again to dust; and by taking away his spirit, it ascends immediately to glory; no, no; but the Scriptural sentiment is, by taking his spirit and breath man perishes and returns again to dust. How plain and unequivocal this view becomes, presented in the simple light of divine truth.

Read Job 14: 5–15, and also the 21st v. of this same ch., and you will find the light on this subject, if possible, still clearer. The Prophet here represents the entire destruction of man by a striking similitude, viz. that there is less hope of surviving in the case of man, than of the fallen tree; for the stump of the tree may possibly have some offshoots that will spring forth into life; but for man there is no hope till the Resurrection. While man is under the dominion of death, he is like a flood of waters, which evaporate and are not to be found. What could be more expressive of man's real condition after death! Now mark the 21st verse; "HIS SONS come to honor, and he knoweth it not; and they are brought low, but he perceiveth it not of them." This seems to put an end forever to all the superstitious folly about apparitions and haunted houses, &c. with which the world is deceived.

Read also Job 3d ch Here we find him saying, if he had died in infancy, he would have been at rest; and not in heaven, according to the current theology. Had Job died in infancy, then according to the dominant faith of our day, he must have gone directly to the realms of glory; but if this were his firm belief, how can it be that he should talk so very differently from most of our modern theologians? Why did he not refer to the blessedness of heaven? and to the choir of angelic harpers, and to the radiant glories of the celestial land! We inquire again, why did he not describe the scenery of the enchanting landscape? or the bursting splendors of unclouded day, instead of presenting the dark and gloomy picture of the tomb? Why delight to linger in his imagination in the recesses of the grave, amid all the horrors of unbroken silence in the dormitories of the dead? Why present a picture so revolting to human nature—so repulsive to every sensibility of the human soul; and present it too as a matter of vehement desire, and self congratulation? Oh how triumphantly a modern author would have exulted over the charnel house—bounding away from earth, and mounting on wings of joy; till he reached the promised land, there regaling himself with the crystal weters, and the ambrosial fruit, and basking amid the sunbeams of an immortal paradise, communing with the célestial hosts!! True, this is all very delightful to the natural senses; but it lacks one very essential element, and that is a Bible foundation!

In connection with this idea, comes up the thought, why did not good old Samuel complain that his celestial joys were interrupted, and that he was annoyed by being recalled from the glories and songs of heaven, when raised by the witch of Endor? But no, not an intimation of the kind. But says he, why hast thou disturbed my repose in the grave, or brought me UP (not down) from my resting place? Now, if the enchanting melodies of Paradise had suddenly ceased to ravish his ear and the glories of everlasting day had been suddenly extinguished from his enraptured vision, is it very likely he would have forgotten it all, and thought of nothing but the decaying elements of the cast off clog? nay, my friends!

Again, when Rachel was comforted concerning her beloved offspring, why did not the Prophet of the Lord cite her to the immortal joys of the redeemed, to which these innocent ones had now attained, instead of directing her to the end of this dispensation, when the flock, (or all the redeemed,) would be gathered, and sing in the height of Zion. Then she had the promise that her children would emerge from their dark prison-house—be delivered from the enemy death—and be brought out of his dominion the grave, from thence to the heavenly Canaan.

In Jer. 31st, we have a particular account of the true Israel of God coming from the land of the enemy, death.

Once more: when St. Paul was presenting consolation to the bereaved brethren and sisters of the Thessalonian Church, and offering reasons why they should not sorrow as those who have no hope, how very singular that he did not remind them that their beloved friends at their decease, had been ushered into the presence of their adorable Redeemer—the object of their hope—the centre of their desires—and the fountain of all their future joys!!!—Do you suppose he had forgotten the golden harps, the immortal vestments, and the radiant crowns? But not a word of this. The holy Apostle consoled them by telling them that as Jesus rose again, so all those who sleep in Jesus Christ shall God bring with him. And lest his meaning should not be understood, he goes on to say that the living saints will not have the pre-eminence in receiving the inheritance, but their endeared friends whose loss they deplored, would rise on the descent of their blessed Lord! "Wherefore (says he,) comfort one another with these words."

Contrary to Bible teaching, the theology of our times gives retribution both to saints and sinners at death. But Jesus told His disciples that they should "be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." Luke 14: 14. And in Rev. we have the following language:—"Behold, I come quickly, and my reward is with me."—Job wished to be laid in the grave until the appointed time, when his change to immortality would come; and David expected to be satisfied, when he awoke in Christ's likeness; and the dying thief also desired to be remembered when Christ should come "into his kingdom;" and Paul expected the crown "in that day," and he told the Thessalonian brethren they would be established in holiness "at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."—Peter told the elders they would receive a crown of glory "when the chief Shepherd should appear;" and Paul brings in his testimony again, and declares that the saints will find rest when Jesus is revealed and the wiched are "punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and the glory of his power."

Now friends, I feel assured no candid person can examine this subject without seeing the difference between human and divine teachings.

(To be concluded in our next)

For The Crisis.

Letter from Br. J. Morison.

NEW GLASGOW, C. E., Nov. 28th, 1855.

Dearly beloved Pilgrims, heirs of the promised land:—soon, we shall receive the end of our faith, even the salvation of our souls. We are on the verge of the revelation of the Son of God from heaven to judge the world in righteousness. The last notes of mercy are sounding, the spirit gradually withdrawing from the world. The signs of the coming of Christ are all in the past—the sun, moon, stars, the shaking of the nations and the Midnight Cry, have told us that the Judge was at the door. Every sign of the Lord's coming makes the heart of the pilgrim dance for joy. The news from distant lands, the waking up of the angry nations, all confirm God's faithful word, and proclaim that the return of the Nobleman from the far country to receive the kingdom, is near, even at the door. And now the Church, the Lamb's wife, is loving, looking, waiting and praying for the appearing of her long absent Lord. Making ready for the marriage, washing her robes, and making them white in the blood of the Lamb.

"So shall the king greatly desire thy beauty, for he is thy Lord, and worship thou him." Ps. 45: 11.

Thank God, that we are not left to grope in Laodicea. We are now walking by the light of prophetic time, shining, as it were, from behind us. The long night of persecution to the Church is in the past, the clouds disperse, the shadows flee away, and the day has dawned, soon will be seen the bright and morning Star. And the desire of all nations shall come, when the Sun of righteousness shall arise with healing in his wings. O, ravishing thought! Shall we so soon see the King in his beauty? Yes, we may, like Paul, Acts 28: 15, thank God and take courage. Soon we shall see our Brn. the excellent of all the earth, shining "as the brightness of the firmament, and as stars for ever and ever," and our elder Brother, Him whom our souls love. "Blessed be the Lord God, the God of Israel, who only doeth wondrous things. And blessed be his glorious name for ever, and let the whole earth be filled with his glory." "Then the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reign in mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously." Is. 24: 23.

Then we shall inherit the land for ever. Then the Lord shall be our everlasting light, and the days of our mourning shall be ended. "A little one shall become a thousand, and a small one a strong nation (born from the grave in one day;) I the Lord will hasten it in his time." Is. 60: 22. He which testifieth these things saith, Surely I come quickly. Amen, Even so, come Lord Jesus.

For The Crisis.

Letter from Br. I. Worden.

SYRACUSE, Nov. 27th, 1855.

Br. Merriam:—I wish to address a few lines to the Brn. and Srs. of like precious faith, to inform them that there are a few in Syracuse, who are not sleeping, but looking and waiting for the King in His glory to come. It cheers my heart to think we are almost home. Likewise I am cheered on in my pilgrimage by reading the Crisis. It is a welcome visitor.—Then, oh Brn. and Srs. in Christ, do not give up your hope; for the promise is safe. Yes, we soon shall have the promised inheritance, glory to God. The prospect of our speedy redemption brightens. It is astonishing to see so many who have started for the promised land turn back to destruction. But so it is.

The day of earth's doom is near at hand. No time to sleep or slumber.—Let us have our Lamps not only trimmed but burning, that we may enter into rest.

Yours waiting for redemption.

I. WORDEN.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Sr. P. Marden.

NORTH PALERMO, Nov. 25, '55.

Dear Br. Merriam:—I think for some time the Spirit of God has been prompting me to write a few lines for the Crisis.

I have ever thought my inability and unworthiness, and the extreme weakness of my nervous system an excuse. But is this a sufficient reason? is a question in my mind, when there are so many great and precious promises in the word of God. Likewise the Spirit helpeth our infirmities, and He is more willing to give the Holy Spirit to them who ask Him than earthly parents are to give good gifts unto their children. Earnestly praying for its assistance, I will make an attempt to write.

From the circumstance of my being made acquainted with the Crisis (which doubtless you will recollect.) I commenced reading it together with the Bible, with great desire to know if these things were so It resulted in removing much mysticism and darkness from the Scriptures, and the true light shone into my understanding.

I thank God that He ever called me from darkness to light, and that He used such means to bring me to himself. One year ago, last July, I trust I gave all for Christ, obtained forgiveness of my sins, and followed Him in His commands. I have had no desire to turn back, neither do I regret the course I have taken, though I have passed through many dark and trying scenes: the word of God sustains me, especially the promise that if He went away He would come again. I think He has given us signs that we may know when His coming is near. Many I fear will be unprepared for that day, but I must forbear, I cannot dwell on this.

I have an interest in the resurrection. My dear Mother sleeps in Jesus, one who has prayed for me, and watched over me in long protracted and painful sickness.—She will be there. How glad she will be to see me,

"Where sin and sorrow pain and death
Are felt and feared no more."

"O I long to be there where no sorrow or care
Can disturb that sweet Heavenly Rest."

I hope your health will be preserved, that you may be able to send us the paper as long as we may need such a messenger, for I do hail its weekly comings with joy. I look at the signatures, some whose communications have so cheered my heart, and as I do not find them, I inquire, where are they? Though I have never seen them, yet I love all those who manifest the spirit of our dear Redeemer. While I thus write I am not unmindful of the many excellent letters that have been published of late. I hope all will write who feel a "Thus saith the Lord." Let me have your prayers though I am the least and most unworthy, and undeserving a name among the children of God.

The Flesh and Spirit.

By ELD. F. H. BERICK.

"Be not deceived; God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting."

IV. LOVE TO OUR ENEMIES.

The Savior in instructing the multitude on the mountain, remarked, "ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbor, and hate thine enemy: But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you." Man in his natural state cannot love an enemy. The heart must undergo a radical change, before this can be done. It is just as natural for a person to resent an injury, as it is for him to breathe. And for a man to be abused, and still love; for him to be cursed, and still bless: for him to do good, and yet be hated for doing it; and last, but not least; for him, when he has received the most despiteful usage, to go into his closet, and pray fervently for God to bless his enemy, is certainly a miracle. The Savior manifested this spirit of kindness, when he hung upon the cross. In His last agonies, He said, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." This is the spirit breathed throughout the Gospel of Christ and His Apostles. "If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink; for in so doing, thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head. Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." May the Lord enable us to follow hard after His commandments, and manifest the spirit of love to all of our fellow men.

Not only do we read of love as being a fruit of the Spirit, but also, joy; which is next in order.

Joy is a delight of the mind, arising from the present consideration of a present or future good. "When it is moderate, it is called gladness; when raised on a sudden to the highest degree, it is then exultation, or transport; when we limit our desires by our possessions, it is contentment; when our desires are raised high, and yet accomplished, this is called satisfaction; when our joy is derived from some comical occasion or amusement, it is mirth; if it arise from considerable opposition that is vanquished in the good we desire, it is then called triumph; when joy has so long possessed the mind that it is settled into a temper, we call it cheerfulness," &c., &c.

This joy which is the fruit of the Spirit is, however, only possessed by those who love Christ. David speaks of this class, as "those that put their trust in the Lord." "But let all those that put their trust in thee rejoice; let them ever shout for joy, because thou defendest them; let them also that love thy name be joyful in thee." He calls them upright in heart.—"Be glad in the Lord, and rejoice, ye righteous; and shout for joy all ye that are upright in heart." The same class are denominated saints. "Let thy priests be clothed with righteousness; and let thy saints shout for joy."

This joy is by the Apostle called the "joy of faith." Phil. 1: 25. The same idea is expressed by Paul in Rom. 15: 13, when he says, "Now the God of hope fill you with al joy and peace in believing," or for that joy which is produced by believing: this seems to be the idea. The Apostle speaks of holding "fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end." The Gospel hope is a rejoicing hope; a hope that is full of joy.—Not only is there a joy of faith, and a hope full of joy; but there is a joyful sound, "Blessed are the people that know the joyful sound." There are many sounds which are joyful. It was a joyful sound to those who heard the earth ring with the shouts of those who witnessed the consumption of the sacrifice by the fire that came out from the Lord. Lev. 9: 24.

It was a joyful sound to the Hebrews when on passing around Jericho for the last time, the priests blew their trumpets, and the "people shouted with a great shout." It was a joyful sound to Israel who, after having met with a defeat from their enemies, the Philistines, sent to Shiloh and brought the ark of the covenant of the Lord, at the sight of which they "shouted with a great shout, so that the earth rang again." 1 Sam. 4: 5. It was a joyful sound, when Saul the son of Kish was anointed king of Israel, "And all the people shouted and said, God save the king." But perhaps the most joyful sound, or at least one of the most joyful was, the trumpet's sound, at the commencement of the Jubilee year, or year of release. Hundreds and thousands had been in bondage to their brethren for years; they had lost at least for a time, their lands; had become poor, and consequently were dependent upon others for a livelihood; but now the sound of release, the joyful sound is heard; and every man returns to his possessions, and to his home. But what are all these sounds, when compared to the sound of saving grace? the sound of Calvary? The first introduction of this heavenly sound, was heard on Bethlehem's plains; when the Angel of the Lord came down, and thus addressed the trembling shepherds; "Fear not: for behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people;" and so joyful was this sound that the heavenly retinue burst forth into a shout of praise, "saying, glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, and good will to men."—But as joyful as was this sound of heavenly voices, it does not compare with the sweet accents of his voice, who spoke as man or angel never spake. It was indeed a joyful sound, when in the synagogue at Nazareth, on the Sabbath, there was seen standing before the people, the Son of Jesse reading from the prophecy of Isaiah, "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the Gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised. To preach the acceptable year of the Lord." His was indeed a joyful proclamation and a joyful sound. This sound has been heard for eighteen hundred years past, by those who have been preaching the "Gospel of peace, which contains glad tidings of good things!"—Through the instrumentality of these embassadors of Christ, millions have heard "the joyful sound." How many heathen, who for years were shrouded in darkness, have been made to hear the joyful sound; and in hearing, have thrown away their gods of wood and stone; and with hearts glowing with love to God, and hands opened, have clasped the Bible, the Book of Books; from which the light has emanated—to give them "the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." But it has not been confined to heathen. Europe, Asia, Africa and America have heard, and are still hearing "the joyful sound."

But after all is said, this proclamation of the Gospel by the missionaries of the cross, is only a kind of interlude.—The scene opened at Calvary, "the joyful sound" was then heard by hundreds and thousands for the first time. Since then, the Chief Actor has been absent; but He is to reappear, not in or with the habiliments in which He appeared at the first, when the scene was opened; but clad with the panoply of heaven; the glory of the Father, the angels, and His own glory; and then, but not until then, shall we have the after piece. It will not be the Man of Calvary, but the King of kings, and Lord of Lords; together with the innumerable company out of all nations; "ten-thousand times ten-thousand, and thousands of thousands, saying with a loud voice—O what a joyful sound—"Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing." Then blessed, thrice blessed will those be who know by experience, "THE JOYFUL SOUND."

OBJECTS OF THIS JOY.

The objects of this joy are,

(1.) God. David says, "Then will I go unto the altar of God, unto God my exceeding joy." "Fear thou not, says the Lord; for I am with thee; be not dismayed; for I am thy God; I will strengthen thee; yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness." Isa. 41: 10.

(2.) Christ. "Whom having not seen ye love; in whom, though now ye see him not, yet believing, ye rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory."

(3) The Word of God. "Thy testimonies have I taken as an heritage forever; for they are the rejoicing of my heart." "Thy words were found, and I did eat them; and thy word was unto me the joy and rejoicing of my heart." Jer. 15: 16.

(4.) The glory of the world to come. The Apostle, in Rom. 5: 2, says, "By whom also we have access by faith into this grace wherein ye stand, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God."

NATURE OF THIS JOY.

This joy is (1) constant. "Rejoice in the Lord always: and again I say, rejoice." (2) Unspeakable. "Ye rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory." (3) Durable. "And ye now therefore have sorrow; but I will see you again, and your heart shall rejoice, and your joy no man taketh from yo" Again:—"These things have I spoken unto you, that my joy might remain in you." It is the privilege of God's people ever to have this joy, the joy of Christ fulfilled in themselves. It matters not what the condition may be, so far as this world is concerned, if one have a contented mind, it "is a continual feast." "Count it all joy, (says the Apostle,) when ye fall into divers temptations." The Apostle Paul was exceeding joyful in all of his tribulations.—The disciples anciently participated with the Apostles in their sufferings, "and took joyfully the spoiling of their goods."—While they suffered for the truth, they had his promise, "Blessed are ye when men shall hate you, and when they shall separate you from their company, and shall reproach you, and cast out your name as evil, for the Son of man's sake. Rejoice ye in that day, and leap for joy; for behold, your reward is great in heaven."—For a man to rejoice "in afflictions, in necessities, in distresses, in stripes, in imprisonments, in tumults, in labors, in watchings and in fastings," he must have that joy of which the wise man speaks when he says, "And a stranger doth not intermeddle with his joy." It is a joy and a love "shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Ghost."

But this joy is something realized here in this state. There is a future joy called the joy of the Lord into which believers are to enter at the end of time. It is called the joy of the Lord, (1) because He obtained it by His sufferings. "Who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God." (2) He was the first to participate. He is the "firstborn from the dead." He was the first that could sing, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"

THE TIME WHEN THE JOY IS TO BE GIVEN.

"In his favor is life; weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning."

THE PLACE WHERE THIS JOY IS TO BE REALIZED.

"Thou wilt show me the path of life; in thy presence is fulness of joy; at thy right hand there are pleasures forevermore." The Kingdom of God will be a Kingdom of joy; and all that dwell there will have a joy that is full and eternal.—Earth shall yet sound again as when the "morning stars together sang," and "all the sons of God shouted for joy."—Then, "The wilderness and solitary place shall be glad;" "and the desert shall rejoice, and blossom as the rose. It shall blossom abundantly, and shall rejoice even with joy and singing; the glory of Lebanon shall be given unto it, the excellency of Carmel and Sharon; and they shall see the glory of the Lord, and the excellency of our God." "And the ransomed of the Lord shall return—from the land of the enemy—and come to Zion with songs, and everlasting joy upon their heads; they shall obtain joy and gladness and sorrow and sighing shall flee away."

"But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace," &c., &c.

Peace then, is the next in order after joy, and consequently, the next for us to consider.

Peace is, "In a general sense, a state of quiet, or tranquility; freedom from disturbance or agitation; applicable to society, to individuals, or to the temper of the mind."

In a scriptural point of view, it refers,

1. To reconciliation with God through Christ. "But now, in Christ Jesus, ye who sometimes were afar off, are made nigh by the blood of Christ. For he is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us." This state of reconciliation, is a state of peace; it is effected by the blood of Christ. There are three things required of him who is the Mediator of this reconciliation. (1) He must make intercession for the offender; this, Christ did. "Therefore, (says the Prophet,) will I divide him a portion with the strong; because he hath poured out his soul unto death; and he was numbered with transgressors; and he bare the sins of many, and made intercession for transgressors." (2) He must satisfy the offended party for the wrong done. This He did by His death on the cross; by virtue of which, He reconciled, both (Jew and Gentile) unto God. "And having slain the enmity thereby," he did (3) provide that the offender should offend no more. "For by one offering he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified."

It is then, by virtue of this work of reconciliation, that Christ came and preached peace to them "which were afar off, and to them which were nigh." And this preaching of peace, the authority of which was imparted to the Apostles just before Christ left the earth, is by the Apostle Paul called the ministry of reconciliation. He says, "And all things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given unto us the ministry of reconciliation."

II. It has reference to our peace of conscience.

The Apostle says, "And the peace of God which passeth all understanding, shall keep yonr hearts and minds through Christ Jesus." "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you." John 14: 27.—Again: "These things I have spoken unto you, that in me ye might have peace." In order to secure this peace, we must (1) Be justified, Rom. 5: 1. (2) Have good works, Rom. 2: 10. (3) Must be spiritually minded, Rom. 8: 6. (4) Must believe, Rom. 15: 13. (5) Be in Christ, 1 Pet. 5: 14.

III. Mutual agreement between man and man.

(1) To man in general. "Follow peace with all men." "As much as in you lieth, live peaceably with all men."

(2) To the followers of Christ. "Have salt in yourselves, and have peace with one another." Again: "Be at peace among yourselves." Wherever this peace abounds, there unity dwells.. "Behold, (says David,) how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!" What a mighty influence does the Church have upon the world, wherever the peace of God reigns. No doubt all have seen more or less the effect of its operation. Let us then endeavor to "keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." If we are the children of God, inasmuch as He is the Author of peace, let us "follow peace." Inasmuch as Christ is the Prince of Peace, let us love and cherish it. And inasmuch as the covenant into which we have entered, is a covenant of peace, let us be at peace among ourselves evermore.

II. The joys of heaven.

God's people have the promise of inheriting the earth, and of having the abundance of peace, Ps. 33: 11. Their end is peace, quietness, and assurance forever. God grant that this may be our lot.

"LONG-SUFFERING."

"Long-suffering conveys the idea of patient endurance, forbearance. It is opposed to haste; to passionate expressions and thoughts, and to irritability. It denotes the state of mind that can BEAR LONG when oppressed, provoked, calumniated; and when one seeks to injure us."—It is used in relation to God in consequence of that temper of mind which He manifests toward his creatures. Hence the Apostle says, "Or despisest thou the riches of his goodness and forbearance and long-suffering; not knowing that the goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance?" Again, "What if God, willing to show His wrath, and to make His power known, endured with much long-suffering the vessels of wrath fitted to destruction?"

As God manifests His patient endurance toward us, so we are required to be long-suffering towards others. This is agreeable to the Apostle's entreaty, "I therefore, the prisoner of the Lord, beseech you that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called. With all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering forbearing one another in love." Patience, Bible patience must be displayed under provocations. "Knowing that tribulation worketh patience; and patience experience." "So that we ourselves glory in you in the Churches of God, for your patience and faith in all of your persecutions and tribulations that ye endure." God requires us to be patient. We have His example, His commandments and the inducements of His word held out to us. We have also, the example of Christ; who, when He hung upon the cross, prayed: "Father forgive, them, for they know not what they do." The example of Stephen, when he was stoned; who prayed, "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge." Here are examples of patience worthy of our imitation.

GENTLENESS.

"Softness of manners; mildness of temper; sweetness of disposition; meekness."

This passage, or rather this word is rendered kindness in 2 Cor. 6: 6. "The word means goodness, kindness, benignity; and is opposed to a harsh, crabbed, crooked temper."

The Spirit's operation on our hearts is calculated to soften our natural dispositions; to eradicate all moroseness from our hearts; and bring us into a lamblike state of mind. The religion of Christ is a complete correction of manners. How many thousands have been led to say with David, "Thy gentleness hath made me great." Paul beseeches his brethren by the gentleness of Christ. He also declares to the Thessalonians, that he was gentle toward them, "even as a nurse cherisheth her children." While the wisdom of this world is said to be "foolishness with God;" it is declared that, that which comes from above is "pure, peaceable, gentle and easy to be entreated."

While however the Bible requires the servant of the Lord to be mild and gentle; he must look well to himself that his mildness does not degenerate into a passive tameness of spirit, which leads him to a compliance with the manners of others. That unresisting submission to every encroachment of custom; or, to the violent and assuming, forms no part of a Christian's duty. It is the spirit of the age to bow and scrape; but not the spirit of Christianity. Hence we are to distinguish between the spirit of gentleness, and the mean spirit of a coward; between that mildness of temper and sweetness of disposition, and sycophantic meanness which is a characteristic of the 19th century.—True gentleness of mind is associated with firmness of soul; its ear is closed to obsequious flattery and mean adulation.

For The Crisis

Letter from Sr. R. Warren.

HOLYOKE, Dec. 7th, 1855.

Dear Brn. and Srs., of like precious faith:—Though a stranger to most of you, yet I trust I have been brought nigh to God, by the blood of Christ, and with you am still looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ. Notwithstanding I have been disappointed, yet I trust in the Lord, knowing the foundation of God standeth sure: and whatever He has promised that He is able also to perform. Yes, thank God, we have a hope which is like an anchor to the soul, sure and steadfast, and reaches beyond this vale of tears—a hope of soon seeing Jesus. O let us who profess to have this hope see to it, that we purify ourselves even as Christ is pure, striving to keep the commands of God, and the faith of Jesus, holding fast the profession of our faith, without wavering, firm unto the end; Not forgetting to assemble ourselves together, as the manner of some is, but exhorting one another, and so much the more as we see the day approaching. I feel sad, when I realize the responsibility that rests upon us as Adventists, and see how little we are doing in comparison to what we might do, for Him who has done so much for us. Let us get on the whole armor, and face boldly the enemy of all righteousness, endure hardness, as good soldiers of the Cross of Christ, fight valiantly under the blood-stained banner of Prince Emmanuel, and wear the Crown—a Crown of never fading glory promised to all those, that love His appearing.

O Brn. and Srs., I do feel that I am a pilgrim and stranger, that I have given all for Christ and surely He is my all. And my desire is to glorify Him in all I do or say. I want to be entirely consecrated to Him so that I may follow Him through evil report as well as good; for. "many are the afflictions of the righteous; but the Lord delivereth them out of them all."

His arm will well sustain
The children of His love;
The ground on which their safety stands,
No earthly power can move.

For The Crisis

Letter from Br. H. P. Chase.

BRIDGEWATER, Nov. 1st, 1855.

It is with pleasure that I write a few lines to my heavenly Father's family. I can say that I love my dear Savior still! praise His holy name, and that I am determined to serve Him while here on earth I stay, so that He may own me for one of His children when Jesus comes to earth again; and I do sincerely pray, "thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven." O that the Lord would make us perfect even as our Father which is in heaven is perfect!—Then when our Savior comes, we shall have a crown that fades not away—a home with all the saints of God. The sound of that home, and meeting our friends to part no more, is blessed to my soul.

But we must be pure and holy without one spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing. Except we deny ourselves and take up our cross, we cannot be His disciples.—He will not own any one that is ashamed to own Him here. The Savior has told us to love our enemies and pray for them that despitefully use us and persecute us, not rendering evil for evil, but good for evil.

The willing and obedient shall eat the good of the land, and walk the golden streets, and reap life everlasting. Oh that blessed inheritance, that is promised to the faithful! I feel, for one, that my few remaining days shall be spent in doing my blessed Saviour's will, that I may at last come off conqueror and more than conqueror through Him that loved us.

The World's Crisis.

LOWELL, DEC. 22, 1855.

Explanation.

I have thought an inquiry might be made why the Crisis was involved in debt to so large an amount prior to its suspension. It may perhaps not be understood that our expenses while the circulation was gratuitous ranged from about $75 to $130 per week. The bare material of paper while we sent out 8,000 copies, was $40 per week. Though at the time we stopped, our circulation was reduced to 3,500, yet the expense of setting type, Office-rent and many other expenditures continued just the same. There seemed to be such an intense desire for the continuation of the Crisis, that we did not deem it advisable to stop until circumstances absolutely demanded it. In three weeks our bills would have overrun the amount of the debt incurred, so that when funds ceased, in some measure, to come in, the debt rapidly accumulated, and we found it necessary to stop.

The only way we could continue the publication of the Crisis was by subscription; we therefore commenced on this principle, and shall be under necessity, agreeably to the directions of the Committee, of striking from our list the names of such as do not pay their subscription.—The reason why the Committee require payment in advance is, because unless it be so paid, we have nothing to meet our current expenses, and therefore could not carry on operations.

Our first quarter expired with the thirteenth number. We have struck off eighteen numbers, and some who have paid for the first quarter have neglected to forward further payments. If unable to pay, we would desire to be apprized of it, that we may not be reduced to the unpleasant necessity of discontinuing their papers. And we trust all who have the ability, and wish to receive the paper will remit funds soon as may be convenient.

Those who receive their papers gratuitously, because they have not the means of paying, we shall continue to serve with as much pleasure as any others, and we wish such to feel that our labors in their behalf are regarded as a pleasure and privilege instead of a task; and for myself, I feel willing to devote not merely a trifle, but ALL I HAVE to this object, provided I may subserve the interests of the little flock, and be instrumental of comforting their hearts while passing through this "hour of temptation which has come on all the world to try them."

☞ The following report of the General Conference holden in Maine, which we publish by request, would have appeared before; but was accidentally overlooked.

General Conference of Adventists in Maine, Nov. 2d, 3d, and 4th.

According to the appointment, the Conference convened in Richmond, Friday, A. M., Nov. 2d. The day was spent by the few present, in prayer and exhortation, to our mutual consolation and edification. The Lord seemed to crown our first interview with His special blessing, and we all felt that it was good to be there. In the evening a discourse was given by Elder I. C. Wellcome, from 2 Tim. 3: 10–12, and attentively listened to.

Saturday morning, Nov. 3d. At 9 o'clock met for prayer. At half past 10 o'clock Br. Himes arrived rather unexpectedly, but very opportunely, as several others of our ministers had not yet arrived, and although not invited to attend, being impressed that it was duty to be with us, he came, and was gladly received by us. We were refreshed and strengthened by his visit, from the fact that he came "filled with the blessing of the Gospel of Christ." He preached first from Mark 14: 8. "She hath done what she could." It caused us to feel truly, that we had done but very little of what we could.

P. M. Preaching by Br. Himes, from Luke 11: 13, on the necessity of the Holy Spirit, the duty of prayer, and of faith in prayer. The word preached presented deep, profitable, and we hope, lasting lessons of instruction. At 4 o'clock the business Conference was called to order by the chairman, Dr. N. Smith.

On motion being made, it was voted that Br. Smith continue to occupy the chair, and Elder S. K. Partridge be secretary. Business being called for, it was then moved that a committee of three be chosen to prepare business for the action of the Conference, and to write a circular letter addressed to all our Brn. in the Advent faith in Maine, to be published with the doings of the Conference. Elders I. C. Wellcome, S. K. Partridge, and Dr. N. Smith, were chosen to fill that committee. The time being too short to hear reports from the different parts of the country, it was not attempted.

The ministers who had now arrived, in sympathy with the call and object of the meeting, were N. Smith, I. C. Wellcome, S. K. Partridge, Jesse Partridge, T. J. Dudley. Letters were received also from Brn. R. R. York and Tho. Smith, by Br. I. C. Wellcome, assuring us of their sympathies, prayers and co operation, though not permitted to attend. Br. A. Ross also wrote of his intention to attend with us, but duties elsewhere prevented. He assured us of his interest, and expressed his prayer, that "the great Head of the Church might preside over us, and knit our hearts together in love" These letters came too late to be read in the Conference. Of lay Brn. present, Richmond, J. Umberhind, L. Curtis, D. Robinson, J. Bailey, F. Bates, Z. Harmon, Wm. C. Hall; Litchfield, S. Mitchell, Ezra Dorrs, Wm. Parsons, C. H. Robinson; Bowdoinham, C. Densmore, E Hatch, Br. Graves; Topsham, Geo. Howland; Damariscotta, John Campbell; Newcastle, Ralph Harley, Thomas Harley; Edgcomb, Br. Greenough; Hallowell, H. Bailey. The Brn and Srs. evinced a deep interest, in the truths which give us our present position, and a fixed determination to hold fast the blessed hope until the end comes, notwithstanding the disappointments of the past. Adjourned to meet on Sunday, A. M. 9 o'clock.

Evening. Br. Himes preached an able discourse from Dan. 12: 4, on "the time of the end." The testimony presented, we deem not only conclusive that we live in the time of the end, but very near the end of the Gospel dispensation.

Sunday 4th, A. M. 9 o'clock. Conference met, and after prayer, a call was made for the committee to report, whereupon the following was submitted.

Report.

Forasmuch as we who believe in the immediate coming of our Lord in glory and in judgment, feel called upon as members of His household, to use all judicious and scriptural measures to promote the interest of His cause, both for our own prosperity and the salvation of sinners, by publishing abroad the glorious Gospel of the Kingdom of God, and the evidences of its near approach, and thus let our light shine while knowledge is increasing. And forasmuch as there is at present a great want of Bible order, unity and system among us, to accomplish the work to which God has called us, caused by the imperfections of human wisdom, and improper instructions, which has led to confusion, division, and want of confidence and unity in co-operation, thus producing instability and weakness. We therefore deem it our duty (being assembled in Conference, to deliberate on duty) to say to all our Brn. scattered abroad in Maine, that we believe it incumbent on you, and ourselves, to take immediate measures to institute Gospel order in all our congregations of believers, that they may be careful to observe the institutions and teachings of the Gospel and have its discipline carefully administered. And also to co-operate with such men as will labor to promote these objects, and to build up the Church by "sound words" and wholesome discipline, and who manifest a general interest in all the flock of God. We therefore Resolve, That we will unitedly labor to carry out the above designs, by our combined efforts, and mutual fellowship with all who give evidence of love for our Lord Jesus Christ, and that we believe it duty for our people to prove the professed teachers of the Gospel who come among them, before being governed by their doctrine, or bidding them God speed. And also to "avoid" the instructions and influence of all who labor to pervert Gospel order, or to evade Gospel discipline. And as we mean to "keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace," we cordially extend the invitation to all brethren who sympathize with our object, to become members of our Conference by sending in their names to the Secretary.

This report was accepted by the Conference, and after some discussion on its merits, it was finally unanimously adopted, and ordered to be published in connection with the doings of the Conference, together with a circular letter to all the brethren. The Conference then adjourned to meet again at the call of the chairman and secretary, at such place as they may advise.

At 10 o'clock, Elder Himes preached from Luke 12: 56, "But how is it that ye do not discern this time?" The evidences and arguments of this discourse were well calculated to convince every candid mind that the day of the Lord is emphatically at hand. At 2 o'clock, preaching again by Br. Himes from Dan. 12: 8–10, in which he gave us a summary of the conclusions of the principal writers on the prophetic chronology, and the prophetic numbers, with their attendant events, during the last three hundred years; thus by presenting the light of all on the great theme of the coming and kingdom of God, we were constrained to say, that truly "the path of the just shineth more and more."

Evening. Preaching by Br. Jesse Partridge, from 2 Pet. 3: 14, in which he gave us a good stirring discourse on the signs of the times, the things looked for, and the duty of diligent labor to be ready for an inheritance on the new earth.

Thus closed our Conference, which was one of the most harmonious, peaceful, and we trust profitable gatherings we have recently had. It was large, not in numbers, but in love, union, and interest for the success of the blessed cause in which we are engaged. The disheartened and discouraged ones seemed revived in hope, and deeply and seriously impressed with their duty to return to God and His work. May the Lord enable them so to do.

Nicholas Smith, Chairman.
S. K. Partridge, Secretary.

For The Crisis.

Thoughts suggested by reading "The Analogy of the First and Second Advents. By Wm. Shepherd."

"And he that overcometh, and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations; (and he shall rule them with a rod of iron; as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers) even as I received of my Father. And I will give him the morning Star." Rev 2: 26–28.

A promise is given by Jesus Christ according to v. 18. "These things saith the Son of God, who hath His eyes like unto a flame of fire, and His feet are like fine brass;" and also the expression, "Even as I have received of my Father." Recorded Ps. 2: 7–9. "I will declare the decree: The Lord hath said unto me, Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten thee. Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession. Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel." If such a person makes a promise, it is one that is worthy of himself. We value a promise according to the character who makes it. We estimate a thing by the price paid to purchase it.—How often I should throw myself away as an altogether worthless thing if there was no remembrance of the price paid—hope clings to the cross—faith takes hold of the atonement—peace fills the mind—joy draws forth the exclamation, "Jesus is mine and I am His."

The promise is made to a specified character.

"He that overcometh," it implies a conflict, a struggle, a warfare There are three great enemies, the world, the flesh, and the Devil. The Apostle John inquires, "Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God? This is the victory that overcometh the world even our faith." The Apostle says, "Though we walk in the flesh, we do not war after the flesh.—For the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God, to the pulling down of strong holds, casting down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience, of Christ; and having in a readiness to revenge all disobedience, when your obedience is fulfilled." "Keepeth my works unto the end."

Something is to be done. How vain to claim this promise unless we know what the works are, and not only do them but keep doing them unto the end. Jesus says, "Whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple." Again, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed, and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." He also said to His disciples a little before He was crucified, "Ye are they who have continued with me in my temptations, and I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me; that ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and sit on thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." All who sustain the same character will have the same privilege.—Though Jesus is absent to receive the Kingdom, all who believe on Him, continue in His word, and keep His works unto the end, will be subjected to the same treatment that the Son of God received in this world. What are the works?—"When He cometh into the world He saith, "Lo I come to do thy will, O God." Again, I seek not my own will, but the will of the Father who sent me." To know the will of God and do it, is the sum of the whole matter. How shall we know what His will is? Jesus said "I seek"—"Seek and ye shall find." Paul writes to his Ephesian brethren, "Wherefore be ye not unwise, but understanding what the will of the Lord is." But what if we mistake His will and sin? "If any man sin we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous." And whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth."

Like our Master we must be made perfect through suffering. The Lord says by Isaiah, "Behold I have refined thee, but not with silver; I have chosen thee in the furnace of affliction." "If we endure chastening God dealeth with us as with sons." "The servant abideth not in the house forever, but the Son abideth ever." Such have their sins go to judgment beforehand, and will be prepared to have them "blotted out when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord," when all who have refused to have their treacherous and supplanting disposition corrected by affliction, will then drink the bitter cup, which constitutes Jacob's trouble, and be reigned over forever by the Son of the Highest, and those who sit with Him on His throne. How many despise the chastening of the Lord! O affliction! thou art the richest part of our Father's legacy in this militant state.—How the stony heart dissolves beneath thy influence; the will yields, till lost in His whose right hand sustains; the Spirit cries, Let the furnace burn on till the likeness of Jesus, the friend of sinners, become visible. No wonder, Moses chose rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season. No wonder, those holy women would not accept deliverance from torture, while hoping thereby to obtain a better resurrection. O let me tread the path that Jesus trod. "He says I am the way, no man can come to the Father but by me."

He was sometimes followed by a multitude—then in a little while left alone.—Sometimes many disciples became identified with Him, till some new truth offended them and they went no more with Him, and He inquires of the twelve "will ye also go away?" At length they all forsook Him and fled, and in His dying agonies His Father hides His face—the direst, bitterest of it all. The crown of thorns, the nails, the spear, the cup of vinegar mingled with gall, have done their best to agonize the Lamb of God. All were borne with meekness, without a murmur, without a question, till the Father forsakes.

The Son of God lived by faith. Paul lived by the faith of the Son of God.—Faith is not knowledge. It seems the last item in His sufferings was not previously understood by Him. Had He known that the Father would forsake Him, and the reason, He would not have asked, why hast thou forsaken me? Soul, stir up thyself to take hold of the strength of Jehovah. Art thou able to drink such a bitter cup? No shadow but the Almighty can screen thee in the day of evil—no habitation but the Most High will exempt thee from the snare and pestilence, and destruction. The more I study the Scriptures, the more I understand the magnitude of Christian character.

The nature of the promise.

Power over the nations to rule them. "When the Son of man shall come in His glory and all the holy Angels with Him, He shall sit upon the throne of His glory." Will He sit alone? Not according to what the Spirit saith unto the Laodicean Church. Rev. 3: 21. "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame and am sit down with my Father in His throne" If children then heirs: heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ. Joint heirs have equal claims and equal rights.

By the eye of faith, we behold Jesus on His throne of glory, with associate Kings and Priests, swaying the sceptre of righteousness over the nations, which are gathered before Him. As they (the nations) have ruled with a rod of iron (laws of their own liking), so they must be ruled in the same manner. The principle of dashing to pieces, in order to build themselves up, has been prominent in all the nations of the earth: and what remains when Christ comes, will have executed upon them the judgment written. What is written? An eye for an eye, and repeated by Christ, "with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged; and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again."

Those who sit with Christ in His throne are those whose sins have been open beforehand, going to judgment, and other men's sins follow after, and will receive a full reward. It is one thing to reign over, and another to be reigned over. Gabriel told Mary that her son Jesus should reign over the house of Jacob forever. Those who are faithful over a few things (in this life) shall be made rulers over many things in the day of reckoning. The vessels of a potter when broken to pieces are entirely useless, so will be all national honors and agrandizements, and divisions or unions, when the King of Glory comes to establish the Kingdom given Him by His Father.

"And I will give Him the Morning Star."

What a precious privilege we have, in coming to the great store-house of truth, and getting an expression interpreted.

We read of Day Star and Morning Star. Doubtless both the same thing.—Rev. 22: 16. "I Jesus * * * am the Bright and Morning Star." 2 Peter 1: 19. "We have also a more sure word of prophecy, whereunto ye do well, that ye take heed as unto a light that shineth in a dark place," (how long?) "Until the Day dawn, and the Day Star arise in your hearts." The dawn and morning Star are harbingers of the coming day. According to the nature of the language, when the dawn and day Star arise in the heart, the Church has received something that supercedes the necessity of giving heed to the sure word of prophecy. Is there any thing in Scripture that will settle the point? John, in writing to his little children, says: "Ye have an Unction from the Holy One, and ye know all things."—When persons know all that a book contains, they no longer study that book; when this is enjoyed by the Church, the prayer of Jesus is answered. John 17: 21–23. "I in them and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in One."—These are the elect of God called to be saints who "shall judge the world."—"This honor have all the saints." Will all the saints be perfected together? Heb. 11: 39, 40. Then those who have died in faith, must be raised to life and with the living saints be made like Christ, or one with Him and the Father. This is the spiritual Zion whom the Lord has said by Zech. that He would save first, (first always implies a second) being the first fruits unto God and the Lamb." "And I will give him the Morning Star—myself—my likeness — oneness with the Father and the Son. And the world shall know that the Father loves them as He loves the Son. Amen, Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly.

Fulfilment of Prophecy.

By H. Pratt.

No. 3.

We often might mistake in the fulfilment of prophecy concerning events in our age, did we not have the testimony of inspiration to settle this matter.

In writing upon this important subject, especially at this time, I do pray for the Spirit of truth, and if I am guided by it, I shall be led into the truth; and this may be determined by comparing or weighing by the Scriptures of truth.

In order to present the subjects of which I shall write in a clear light, I purpose to present the prophecy and its fulfilment side by side; and when Jesus and the Apostles say, "this is that spoken of by the prophet," it will be our privilege to say, "it is truth.

The ushering in of the Gospel was a subject of much importance. It was preached to Abraham—sung in varied strains by the conqueror of Goliah—and predicted in its many phases by most of the inspired seers of olden time.

1. We will begin with the promise made to Abraham, Gen. 12: 1–3.

Prophecy.

"Now the Lord had said unto Abram, Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will shew thee And I will make of thee a great nation and I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing; And I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee: and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed."

Gen. 18: 17, 18. "And the Lord said, Shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do? Seeing that Abraham shall surely become a great and mighty nation, and all the nations of the earth shall be blessed in him?

Next, he shows that this promise is to be fulfilled in his seed.

Gen. 22: 15–18. "And the angel of the Lord called unto Abraham out of heaven the second time, And said, By myself have I sworn, saith the Lord, for because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son; That in blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thy seed as the stars of the heaven, and as the sand which is upon the sea shore; and thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies; And in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed, because thou hast obeyed my voice."

Promise renewed to Isaac.

Gen. 26: 1–5. "And there was a famine in the land, besides the first famine that was in the days of Abraham.—And Isaac went unto Abimilech king of the Philistines unto Gerar. And the Lord appeared unto him, and said, Go not down into Egypt: dwell in the land which I shall tell thee of. Sojourn in this land, and I will be with thee, and will bless thee: for unto thee and unto thy seed I will give all these countries, and I will perform the oath which I sware unto Abraham thy father; And I will make thy seed to multiply as the stars of heaven, and will give unto thy seed all these countries: and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed. Because that Abraham obeyed my voice, and kept my charge, my commandments, my statutes, and my laws."

The Psalmist shews this seed to be Christ, for speaking of Him he says:

Ps. 72: 17. "His name shall endure forever: his name shall be continued as long as the sun: and men shall be blessed in him: all nations shall call him blessed."

Fulfilment.

Peter, in the Acts of the Apostles, when this promised blessing came, says:

Acts 3: 22–26. "For Moses truly said unto the fathers, A Prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you, of your brethren, like unto me; him shall ye hear in all things, whatsoever he shall say unto you And it shall come to pass, that every soul which will not hear that Prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people. Yea, and all the prophets from Samuel, and those that follow after, as many as have spoken, have likewise foretold of these days. Ye are the children of the prophets, and of the covenant which God made with our fathers, saying unto Abraham, And in thy seed shall all the kindreds of the earth be blessed. Unto you FIRST, God having raised up his Son Jesus, sent him to bless you, in turning away every one of you from his iniquities."

Rom. 1: 16. "For I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth: to the Jew FIRST, and also to the Greek."

Acts 13: 32 33, 38, 39. "And we declare unto you glad tidings, how that the promise which was made unto the fathers, God hath fulfilled the same unto us their children, in that he hath raised up Jesus again; as it is also written in the second psalm, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee. Be it known unto you therefore, men and brethren, that through this man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins; And by him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses"

This blessing came upon the Jews first and then upon the Gentiles.

"Then Paul and Barnabas waxed bold, and said, It was necessary that the word of God should first have been spoken to you; but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles."

Now to prove that this promised blessing to all nations was fulfilled by the proffer of salvation to all through faith, I quote you Paul's own application of the prophecy which settles the matter perfectly.

Gal. 3: 1–9. "O foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you, that ye should not obey the truth, before whose eyes Jesus Christ hath been evidently set forth, crucified among you? This only would I learn of you, Received ye the Spirit by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith? Are ye so foolish? having begun in the Spirit, are ye now made perfect by the flesh? Have ye suffered so many things in vain? if it be yet in vain. He therefore that ministereth to you the Spirit, and worketh miracles among you, doeth he it by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith? Even as Abraham believed God, and it was accounted to him for righteousness. Know ye therefore, that they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham. And the scripture, forseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed. So then they which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham."

Letter from Br. W. Sheldon.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Dec. 17th, 1855.

Dear Br. Merriam:—The kingdom of God never looked more desirable to me than it now does. Oh! the importance of faithfully preaching the Gospel of the Kingdom! I wonder how any dare take a retrograde step at this period of the Church's history. My whole soul is anxious to go onward to the kingdom.

I have enjoyed many heavenly seasons of late, in spreading the light of salvation among the children of men, with pleasing success. Not long since I assisted in a public debate upon the life and death theme, in a new place, which resulted in the advancement of the truth.

Yours, in the Gospel hope,

W. SHELDON.

PARTICULAR NOTICE.

☞ The Advent people in Springfield have procured the Hall in Spring Street, formerly known as Currier's Hall, for the worship of God; and whereas heretofore the cause which we have espoused has suffered on account of the conflicting views which have been held forth in our meetings, causing strife and contention, we do pledge ourselves to withhold presenting views which will have a tendency to cause strife, and thus destroy the peace of our meetings; and we will, by the help of God, worship God in the beauty of holiness, and maintain order in the house of God, seeking above all things for that preparation which is necessary for us to have in order to obtain an abundant entrance into the everlasting Kingdom.

In behalf of the Advent Church in Springfield.

P. S. Will some of the ministering Brn. please continue to send in their appointments to the Crisis?

To the Advent Brethren generally.

The time has come, when we, the undersigned, feel it to be our duty to appeal to you, dear Brn., and especially to all who have ever been readers of "The Second Advent Watchman," in behalf of Br. J. Turner, on whom has fallen the burden of the debt which the Association owed the office of publication at the time the "Watchman" was discontinued.

Br. Turner, having been the Editor of the Watchman and the Treasurer of the office, had necessarily assumed responsibilities besides the labor he was performing in the office, to a considerable amount, encouraged to do so by the pledges of the Association, made on the hope that the subscribers could all be induced to pay their dues, so that the debt due him for labor and money paid out, amounted, when the paper was discontinued, to $872, without interest—This debt did not accumulate by a fault of Br. Turner; he had a right to expect it all paid, for there was due the office, from subscribers, at the same time, over $2,100, which, on account of the course of things, has not been paid.

This debt remains unpaid, and Br. Turner is seriously embarrassed for the want of this, his honest due; and we think it is the duty of the brethren who have ever been readers of the Watchman, to unite in an immediate effort to pay this debt by donation. This debt is trifling for the body to pay, and it can be paid by a trifling individual sacrifice; but if not paid by donation, it must be a dead loss to Br. Turner, and to him, a heavy loss.

Br. Turner is really poor, and the want of this money has made him so; and he assures us that, unless he can have this debt paid, he must go into some employment, aside from his calling, to support his family, and pay debts incurred for the Association.

We very much mistake the feelings of Adventists, if they will allow this to be so, after all the labors and sacrifices of Br. Turner for the last twelve years. We feel confident that brethren looking for the Lord, and who desire to do unto others as they would that others should do unto them, will gladly bear a share of this burden, and thus relieve Br. T., who has already suffered under it too long. We believe we shall not appeal to the Church in vain Brn., let this debt be paid at once; it is Br. Turner's due. Let us not leave this debt unpaid till the judgment; the consequences may be fearful.

1st. Let all who were owing for the Watchman when it stopped, if able, pay their dues immediately; if poor, pay what they can.

2d. We invite all preachers who were readers of the Watchman, to present our request to the Churches, and encourage them to assist in paying this debt, and when convenient, where there are those who may wish to give something and yet can give but little, take contributions for this object.

3d. Let every former reader of the Watchman give for this object according to his or her ability—those who have much, can afford to be liberal, and we hope they will be.

Now, Brn., let this business be attended to at once—let there be no delay. All money raised for this object must be directed to Eld. J. Turner, Hartford, Ct., and all money received shall be duly credited in the Reformer and Crisis.

EXPLANATION.

The statistics embodied in the above appeal to the Church have been furnished from my accounts kept with the Association and the office, which accounts have been duly examined, year by year, except the last year of the existence of the Watchman; nevertheless I am responsible for the statistics, and am willing to satisfy any one or more of the correctness of them, who will take the trouble to review my accounts, should any doubt exist.

But, brethren scattered in different places, who have signed, and who still may sign their names to the document, are regarded only as signing the appeal to the church to pay the debt, and not as vouchers for me or my account—that is furnished by myself; and, if it is desired, I am ready to affirm its correctness according to law.

Some may be in doubt in regard to the amount, since quite an effort was once made to pay the debt by donation. These are the facts. At one time, about March, 1854, the debt was reduced to less than five hundred dollars, but soon after that, very many stopped their papers without paying up, and as most of those who did not stop their paper had paid, I was obliged to continue, with trifling receipts, and did so, hoping that all would come right at the end of 1854. So thought the Committee, but as they were disappointed, they ordered the Watchman closed at that time. Thus the debt was increased from a little short of five hundred dollars, to what it now is.

Some have said, send bills to those who are indebted, and demand payment. Brethren, this has been done repeatedly. When the Watchman stopped, we sent bills to all who owed us, and scarcely received enough on them to pay for the trouble.

Dear Brn.—All who contribute to the payment of this debt will indeed be giving, and all you thus give will benefit me; but remember, it is not a gift to ME, but to the Association. Every dollar is my just due, but if you give it to the Association, and I get my due, I shall be most grateful to every donor.

I do not wish those who are really poor to give for this debt; I would rather lose it all alone. If other preachers wish to use their influence in the matter, if they will forward their names, they will oblige.

JOSEPH TURNER.

☞ I would add in respect to the above Circular, that I deem it a duty for all who are indebted for the Watchman, to remit funds as soon as practicable for the liquidation of the same. I do feel, that as Christians our business affairs ought to be transacted upon a different principle from that of worldlings; and we ought to hold ourselves as much in readiness to discharge our every debt, when we do not expect the arm of the law to be applied, as if our goods were liable to attachment. OWE NO MAN ANY THING is written in living characters on the divine record, and no man, if he possess the ability, can be acquitted in the Great Day, without observing the command.

I would further say, that as the Advent body has been so much implicated in this affair, a pressing demand seems to be made upon the benevolence of those who have not become personally pledged for any portion of the amount due. ED.

Austria and the War. The Times' Paris correspondent writes, on Wednesday evening—"Some three or four days ago, an observation fell from a person who is occasionally well informed on German affairs, that the French Government appeared to be very well satisfied with the conduct of Austria. All I can assure you for the present is, that the impression is very strong in the quarter I allude to, that the move made by Austria will considerably advance the prospects of peace, and bring them nearer to realization than is supposed. I am unwilling to offer any conjectures on the subject, as they cannot, for the present, be otherwise than vague. But I am pretty confident that the action of Austria will soon be felt in a manner not unacceptable to this Government and that of England, and, above all, involving no sacrifice of honor or consistency on the governments who have taken up arms in a just cause. Whether it be that Austria is desirous of emulating Prussia in her efforts to bring Russia to listen to reason, or that she is apprehensive her rival will be beforehand with her, I know not, but the fact that she is doing much, cautiously, but steadily, with the view of persuading, or, it may be, compelling Russia to come to terms, I believe is certain."

Advices from Constantinople of the 22d instant announce the arrival there of a portion of the English fleet from the Black Sea, and the arrival of the American squadron from the Mediterranean. The cholera was carrying off many men of the Anglo-German legion. The French were recruiting on a grand scale for their foreign legion. The Tunisian troops are gone to Batoum.

The Moniteur de la Flotte contains a letter from Kamiesch of the 11th, stating that three officers of the garrison of Kinburn—a midshipman, an officer of the administration, and a surgeon-major of the Vatour—had been taken prisoners by the Russians. They were walking on the isthmus which connects Kinburn with the main land, and had advanced much beyond the line of outposts, deceived no doubt by a fog which prevailed with some intensity, when they fell in with a patrol of Cossacks, who pounced upon them and carried them off.

Public Feeling in Russia. A letter from St. Petersburg, of the 19th November, contains the following: "There reigns at court here a dead silence, and the Emperor is reputed to be extremely discouraged. It cannot be explained why a few days ago the minister of war, Dolgoroukoff, summoned by telegraph, left for Moscow, accompanied by his secretary and the director of roads, Tschettkine. The reports were that it was intended to fortify Moscow. That suffices to show how alarmed are the minds here. Never was peace more desired, or were its necessities more fully exposed to the eyes of the Czar than in his late journey to the south. Whenever deputations from the different provinces were allowed to approach him, their language was constantly pacific. At Moscow, the nobility, whilst protesting their profound devotedness, have drawn up with the commercial classes a report which displays the ruin of Russian commerce and industry. At Twer, a town which promises to rival Moscow as the centre of industry, an incident was communicated to the Emperor which must have caused him to reflect. One of the greatest cotton thread manufactories of Twer, worked by Messrs. Kauline and Salaguine, in 1853, employed 44,000 spindles and 1400 workmen. Since the war it has not worked above 11,000 spindles, and has produced, instead of 360 pouds (7200 kilos.) the 24 hours, only 85 pouds. This is a single instance of the disastrous influence of the war, as also of the efforts made by Russia to become an industrial power. I will not speak to you of other manufactories of Twer, such as Messrs. Meyer and Co's. Twer appeared destined to become the Lyons or Birmingham of Russia. Enormous establishments had been erected for raising silkworms, but to-day all are shut, and industry has vanished."

Want at Kars. Constantinople, Nov. 15. Letters from Kars to the 26th ult. have been received. A correspondent of the Herald says: "Here we are, as closely invested by the Russians as ever. Their cavalry in the plains have succeeded in cutting off all our supplies, and we are very badly off for provisions, I assure you. The troops are on quarter rations now, and are obliged to go out salad-gathering every day. I wonder whether we shall have to eat our boots—at all events, even the latter are not so plentiful as one may suppose. Are we to be starved out like obnoxious rats? What use are honors, grades, and thanks, when starvation stares us in the face? We want bread and meat, and not empty compliments."

Anti war Feeling in London. The London correspondent of the Commercial Advertiser says:

"An anti-war feeling is springing up throughout England, and although the peace party are yet in the minority, there is nevertheless a growing feeling among the upper and middle classes, that the object for which the war was commenced, namely, the rendering of Russia powerless against Turkey, has been attained, and that to go on in a career of destruction of life and property for mere revenge, is unworthy a great nation like Great Britain. There is also an opinion prevalent that the expenses of this war against Russia are a serious drain upon the finances of the country.

Another section of the peace party are clamoring against the non-effective character of the campaign, for it is now a settled fact that the Russians are determined to remain in the Crimea to the last moment. According to the Times correspondent they have a splendid position, notwithstanding all the maps may say, and they will not believe their communications are cut off, until the fact is so. Their hope is, probably, that by next season the Crimea will be a vast camp, and that they will be in force enough to hem the Allies in at Eupatoria, to defend the coast wherever the Allies make a descent, to hold Perekop, and to paralyze the allied army before Sebastopol so that it cannot move on Kherson or Nicolaieff."

The Allied fleets in the harbors of Kamiesch and Kasatch have been tried by a novel enemy. The keels of the ships are attacked by large worms that gnaw the wood, and cause far more mischief than the Russians have done. It seems that these worms are peculiar to their shores, and that this eighth plague of Egypt extends all along the coast of the Crimea as far as Nicolaieff.

A letter from Naples of the 22d says:—"A most serious misfortune befell Messina on the 14th inst., by a terrible inundation, occasioned, it is supposed, by a water-spout; the whole country about Messina was laid under water, trees were rooted up, houses, gardens, furniture, and cattle destroyed, and many persons drowned. Much damage has also been done in the city itself. The total loss is said to exceed two millions of ounces, or one and a quarter million sterling. In Palermo the cholera is very bad, deaths being from 70 to 100 per day. In Naples from 30 to 40 deaths per day are occasioned by this fatal malady."

We gather from our foreign files that an edict has been issued for the utter razing of Sebastopol, and the work of demolition is already in active progress. Austria, as well as Prussia, is said to be putting forth endeavors to induce Russia to conclude a peace. The Czar, however, is evidently preparing for the most determined and obstinate resistance, and even Moscow, so far in the interior of the country, is being put into a state of defence. Cholera has broken out amongst the foreign legion at Scutari; and the American Mediterranean squadron have reached Constantinople. Kars still holds out, but the garrison is reduced to great extremity, each soldier having only five ounces of bad biscuit a day for his support.

In Russia it is now positively reaffirmed that the whole of the militia forces are to be drafted into the regular army. A telegraphic despatch from Berlin intimates that the Russian population is terrified at seeing preparations made for internal defence. Even Moscow, it is said, is to be fortified.

The King of Prussia, in opening the chambers in person, congratulated the nation upon having maintained an "imposing neutrality." The Government of Prussia hoped to continue in this attitude, assisted by Austria and all Germany.

The Cologne Gazette states that several persons have lately been arrested in different parts of the Austrian monarchy, for presuming to blame the recently-concluded concordat.

Sailors and engineers are occupied in destroying the Russian vessels sunk in the harbor of Sebastopol, in order, no doubt, to enable the gun-boats and floating batteries to enter. It is only when these vessels can be got in that the northern forts can be attacked with success.

A dispatch from Marseilles states that on the 15th the Russian batteries on the north of Sebastopol commenced firing red-hot shot, to which the allies replied.

According to the last accounts received from Kars by the Ottoman Government (to the 29th October), the Russians, far from having any idea of retreating, were strengthening their position round the town. All the communications were interrupted, and, in order to aid the garrison with men or provisions, it would be necessary to force a passage. Hopes were, however, entertained that the advance of Omar Pacha on Kutais would cause General Mouravieff to change his plans and raise the seige.

A letter from Boulogne, France, Nov. 26, says,—"We are making great preparations here for the coming spring, orders have been received to prepare accommodation for 100,000 men; 900 new huts are to be erected which will receive at least 12,000 men, at the old camps of Honvault, Vimereux, Ambletense, and Equihen. Besides these an encampment is to be prepared at Mont Lambert for cavalry, 20,000 at least."

The Explosion of Magazines in the Camp of the Allies in Inkermann.

Detailed accounts are given in the papers of the frightful explosion of ammunition in shells which took place on the 15th of November. A correspondent of one of the London papers gives a graphic description of the scene. He says:—

Shortly after three o'clock on Thursday afternoon the whole camp from Inkermann to far beyond Cathcart's Hill was literally shaken throughout every square foot of its area, by the most tremendous explosion that has ever echoed through these Crimean hills—many as they have listened to during the past twelve thundering months. To say that it equalled in violence the combined salvoes of a thousand parks of artillery might seem extravagant; and yet the simile would but feebly convey an idea of the volume of thundering sound that shook the earth for miles around, tearing down the most substantial masonry and wooden huts, and levelling tents, as by the sweep of some invisible giant arm. Over an area of nearly half-a-mile from the spot of its occurrence, the air was one huge column of powder smoke and cast-up earth, up into or athwart which ignited or exploding shells and rockets ever and anon darted and flashed by hundreds, spreading destruction to everything animate and inanimate within a radius of more than a thousand yards. Heavy siege guns were wrenched from their carriages and thrown many perches from where they had been standing, whilst the carriages themselves, torn asunder, as a strong man might rend birdcages, were flung high into the air, and fell in scattered fragments, far away amongst the surrounding tents. It seemed, also, as if whole piles of round shot and grape were similarly caught up into the air and showered far and near, for I can personally testify that, more than 500 yards from the scene of the explosion, they and pieces of burst shell fell and ploughed up the earth nearly as thickly as if all the Russian batteries on the north side had been transferred to Inkermann, and brought into random play against the light division at the time. In instantaneous succession to the first grand explosion of the French magazine, followed the minor ones of their and our own detached packets of small arm ammunition and piles of live shell, with all the rapid regularity of musketry filefiring, succeeded in their turn by the thundering echoes of the whole rolling down in a vast storm of sound through the ravine to Sebastopol—a right musical roulade to our brave foes across the harbor.

Perches off from this burning centre, little patches of flame showed where tents had been set fire to by the sparks and scattered pieces of burning wood, and in every such instance wholesale destruction of the thickly clustering canvas tenements around was only escaped by tearing down those nearest the one on fire. This, however, was done in only a few cases; as, after the concussion of the first great shock was recovered from, all fled for very life beyond the reach of further harm, leaving tents, arms, furniture, clothing, and everything else to take their chance. As a consequence, many a square perch—among the French especially—was burnt as naked as any piece of far-western savannah by the desolating tide of a prairie fire. Immediately after the first great explosion, however, when it was ascertained that the windmill itself—which forms our main magazine in this part of the camp, and contains some hundred and eighty tons of powder—had escaped, General Straubenzee, who commands the brigade, hurried up to the tents of the 7th fusiliers and asked if any of the men would volunteer to mount the wall of the mill and cover the roof with wet tarpaulins and blankets as a protection against the thickly flying sparks and burning wood. The concussion had literally thrown the roof off the old building.

As it is, our casualties are heavy enough. It rises to about eighty killed and wounded, of whom the former make nearly a third. Not a hut was left standing and scarcely a tent; those that the concussion did not at once level with the ground were soon destroyed by fragments of bursting shell, and how a single individual of their occupants came off alive is, as I have said, little short of a miracle. Some of the escapes were, as may be imagined, indeed hairbreadth; but that of Major Strange, who had only just stepped out of the door of his hut, when two 13-inch shells dropped through the roof and exploded on the very chair he had been occupying, is one of the most remarkable. Another, which occurred in the 88th regiment, distant nearly half a mile from the spot, was scarcely less so. A shell passed through the roof of the canteen, knocked a bottle out of the hand of the canteen man's wife, and, rolling off a yard or two, burst and destroyed the whole concern, without seriously wounding any one.

But among all the distressing objects around, none perhaps was more melancholy, more calculated to excite feelings of pity, than an artilleryman who had been, either by the concussion or by sudden alarm, rendered idiotic. He attracted general attention as he was led by, bareheaded, between two of his comrades, uttering silly exclamations, and quite lost to consciousness of all that was passing around him. He seemed to be possessed by a feeling that he was in England for all his rambling remarks referred to home; while a smile on his face, vacant and unmeaning as was its expression, seemed to show that he had at least as much satisfaction as he was any longer capable of enjoying.

Whilst our loss, however, has been what I state, that of the French, both in men and material, far transcends it. Of their large hospital, and its adjacent huts, not one stick is left standing on another. They confess to having lost 130 men, but the general impression is that this figure may be fairly trebled. With their usual activity, the Russian batteries beyond the ravine of the Tchernaya, as soon as their men heard the explosion, and saw groups of French gathering along the side of the Inkermann heights to gaze upon the ruin it had occasioned, opened a brisk fire, and in a few minutes killed a captain of artillery and ten men of our allies.

The steamship Asia arrived at Halifax Tuesday, Dec. 18, bringing seven days later news from Europe. Her news is not important. We copy the following:

Some undertake to say that plans will be arranged between Napoleon and the King of Sardinia, with respect to Italy, that will render peace impossible for years to come. Others say that Napoleon is tired of the expenses of the war, and really desires peace. Meanwhile continued preparations on a large scale go forward for the spring campaign. Private letters from St Petersburg indicate no pressure for peace. The profits of the overland trade keeps general business to a more favorable point than was anticipated. Government paper is not much deteriorated, and money abundant at Moscow at seven per cent.

The St. Petersburg Northern Bee has an editorial headed "The War is Only Beginning," and declares that Russia has ample resources to continue the war for years. The London Times has a reply to the Bee, asserting that this boasting merely betrays weakness.

Italy. It is announced for the second time that France and England mediation has adjusted the difficulties between Sardinia and Tuscany.

The Tunnel Fight. The party of North Adams citizens who got into the fight with the Irish, employed on the tunnel in Florida, have been arrested to the number of fourteen, charged with assault with deadly weapons and with threatening to kill. Among those thus arrested is a lawyer and justice of the peace and a deputy sheriff. Their examination is to take place next Monday. There were sixteen in all in the party. The one who broke in the skull of the Irish boy, who has since died, has left town. The funeral of the boy was attended at North Adams, and two to three hundred Irish people made an imposing demonstration on the occasion. There is much excitement about the affair in North Adams, Florida and adjoining towns. The people of Florida sympathize with the Irishmen.—[Springfield Republican.

Another Outrage in Kansas. The Cleveland Leader of Dec 6, says:

"We have just learned that the Kansas Tribune has been suspended. Mr Joseph L. Speer, one of its editors, was lately assaulted by a gang of Missouri cut-throats, and most shockingly beaten. His face and head were horribly mangled; his face was cut open from mouth to ear, and his neck was partially cut off. He was rescued before he was quite killed. We have learned no further particulars. Mr Speer was formerly a resident of this city. How much longer will the North tolerate these things?

Important from Kansas. A letter from Lawrence, K. T., of Dec. 3, in the New York Post says:—

"Since my last, announcing the opening of the war, circumstances have gradually arranged them so that a collision seems inevitable. The free State men have gathered in from the country to the number of about five hundred, and are still coming. Our force is under constant drill; and to-night we throw up entrenchments to protect our riflemen from the artillery of the enemy, for such they assume to be. It is now one week since preparations on both sides commenced, and they are still going on with a vigor and thoroughness that show they mean no boys' play. All the principal men in the territory are here, to try and effect a reconciliation, but, upon the terms proposed by the other side, that can never be done.

They demand to hold the town responsible for the acts of a few individuals, and also for their delivery up to officers. These persons have not been seen here for more than four days, and no one seems to know where they are.—They also say they will demand of Lawrence a pledge that they will allow no more infractions of the hated law, and that they give up their Sharp's rifles. This being their ultimatum, of course we fight, and the fighting spirit is fully up. The great difficulty is to restrain our men from making a sally upon the camp on Waharu-sa. Thus far the committee of direction, to whom I before alluded, have been able to conduct the thing so that our record shows not a blot.

Obituary.

Died in Raymond, Me., Aug. 20th, 1855, Br. George W. Dingley, aged 39 years.

Our dear Br. died in blessed hope of immortality. Although his sickness was long and distressing, yet he bore it with patient resignation.

He has left a wife and three children who will mourn the loss of a kind father, and deeply affectionate husband.

Our dear Br. was ever ready with heart and hand to help on the glorious proclamation of the coming Kingdom. The Church deeply feel his loss.

We commend our dear sister with her little ones into the hands of the widow's God, who alone can soothe her sorrows, and give her the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness.

A discourse was delivered by the writer to an attentive audience of friends and relatives from Rom. 8: 22. O thank God, the whole creation with the sons of God will soon come into glorious liberty.

"Fly swift around, ye wheels of time,
And bring the welcome day."
Amen. L. L. HOWARD.

Died in Clarksburgh Mass. Dec. 6th, Lucy Wade, aged 65 years.

Sr. Wade has left a companion and three children to mourn their loss, yet they mourn not as those without hope; for the deceased has been a bright and shining light in the Church of God for more than fifty years. Still her health was very infirm most of the time.

Sr. Wade was a strong and consistent believer in the personal coming of the Lord as revealed in His holy word, and was greatly disappointed with many others of God's dear children on the 19th of May, but she has fallen asleep in Jesus to wait the morn of the resurrection of the just.

Sermon by the writer, from Ps. 17; 15. "Then shall I be satisfied, when I awake with thy likeness."

ISAAC BLANCHAD.

"Sadness reigneth in our dwelling,
And anguish pains the heart;
From sorrow's cup we've drained the dregs,
How keen the bitter smart!

But Christ will soon in glory come,
And bid the sleepers rise,
Then will she leave her narrow home,
To meet Him in the skies.

She'll range the plains of Paradise,
With golden harp in hand,
And free from sorrow, pain and death,
She'll join the Angel band.

Let us refrain from weeping more,
For she will live again;
Let us prepare to dwell with her,
Where peace and joy will reign.

Hymns.

Rev. 22: 20.

The Church has waited long,
Her absent Lord to see;
And still in loneliness she waits—
A friendless stranger, she.
Age after age has gone,
Sun after sun has set,
And still in weeds of widowhood,
She weeps, a mourner, yet.
Come, then, Lord Jesus, come!

Saint after saint on earth,
Has lived, and wept, and died,
And as they left us one by one,
We laid them side by side;
We laid them down to sleep,
But not in hope forlorn,
We laid them down to rest in peace,
Till the last glorious morn!
Come, then, Lord Jesus, come!

The serpent's brood increase,
The powers of hell grow bold;
The conflict thickens, faith is low,
And love is waxing cold.
How long, O Lord our God!
Holy, and just, and good,
Wilt thou not judge thy suffering Church,
Her sighs, and tears, and blood?
Come, then, Lord Jesus, come!

We long to hear thy voice,
To see thee face to face;
To share thy crown of glory then,
As now we share thy grace.
Should not the loving Bride
The absent Bridegroom mourn?
Should she not wear the weeds of grief
Until her Lord return?
Come, then, Lord Jesus, come!

The whole creation groans,
And waits to hear that voice
That shall restore her comeliness,
And make her wastes rejoice.
Come, Lord, and wipe away
The curse, the sin, the stain,
And make this blighted world of ours,
Thine own fair world again.
Come, then, Lord Jesus, come!

How happy are the saints who share
The meek and lowly Savior's care,
And trust the Lord above.
Faithful they walk this world of woe,
But soon to glory they will go,
To dwell with Him they love.

O may we to the cross repair,
For Jesus loves to answer prayer,
The weakest saint can pray.
Then let us come and ask for grace,
To walk before our Savior's face,
In this rebellious day.

The glorious time is drawing near,
Soon will our mighty King appear,
Then let us watch and pray.
O may we now for wisdom seek,
And be remembered with the meek,
In that eventful day.

"I will bring distress upon men; and they shall walk like blind men." Bible.

By S. S. B.

No. 3.

In my second article, I endeavoured to show:—First, that the present dispensation was the last—the closing-up dispensation—and that at its termination God would sum up all the past, and the times would be completed.

Secondly. That at the end of this, the Harvest would take place, when Christ would descend, Judge the quick and the dead, and gather out of His Kingdom all things that offend and do iniquity. "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the Kingdom of their Father."

In the Third place, that the tares would exist until the end of the age, dispensation, or world.

We will now proceed to notice the present distress and perplexity.

First. The Almighty declared He would bring distress upon men—that they shall walk like blind men, because they have sinned against the Lord. And in my previous articles I presented the degraded condition of the lower classes of the metropolis of the British kingdom, and also the condition of the Mother Church. Thorp, in his dissertations on the British Empire, has said that the heathen consecrate in one single temple at the shrine of their God a greater amount of money than all the Christians of England for missionary purposes. Millions for Moloch, and pence for Emmanuel, fleets and legions to butcher and destroy their fellow men, and Bishops to say prayers and offer thanks for victory obtained over their enemies. I recollect reading, when a young man, that one of the Turkish officers taken on board of an English vessel after the battle of Navarino, and seeing the English surgeons performing their operations and administering aid to the wounded Turks, remarked: "You Christians are singular people: you mangle and bruise, and then labour to perpetuate misery; but we mangle and bruise to kill."

What a teeming population of sinners compose the present generation! In an article before me taken from a London paper, the writer states:—

"There are in the world about 600,000,000 of souls. Of these Christianity is professed by

Roman Catholicks,	80,000,000
Protestants,	70,000,000
Greek Church,	50,000,000
	200,000,000

2d. There are who never heard the Gospel, Jews blinded by unbelief, 5,000,000

Mohammedans deluded by the false Prophet, 140,000,000.

Pagans sunk in Idolatry and superstition, 450,000,000.

3d. There are amongst these 600,000,000, about 1400 Protestant ministers independent of native catechists and schoolmasters, and including those of America, Great Britain and the Continent of Europe, or one missionary to every 428–571 persons.

4th, The entire sum of money raised by the Churches of Great Britian for missionary purposes is about £350,000, and by those of America, £150,000, making together £500,000—a sum equal to the annual gifts of idolators at Kales Temple at Calcutta.

5th. If every Sabbath School scholar in Great Britain would collect only one penny per week for Chistian missions, it would raise £433,333 6s 8d per year, which divided amongst the different Missionary Societies, would enable them to print twice as many books, establish twice as many schools, support twice as many missionaries, and occupy twice as many stations.

6th. Of the heathen world,
30,000,000 die every year.
82,000 die every day.
3,417 die every hour.
56 die every minute.

At this rate, 36,860,000,000 have died during the Christian Era, and 6,540,000,000 since the Reformation. [London Paper.

Prof. Seager stated in a missionary address at N. Y.: "After all that Christianity has achieved, there remain 600,000,000 in the darkness of idolatry. Myriads of human beings are hastening to the bar of God. Alas! their heathenish ignorance will afford no passport, and will ensure them no protection against Eternal wrath. And in spite of all we are doing, heathenism is gaining ground in the world by the natural increase of population which far exceeds the conversions to Christianity.

These, dear Reader, are melancholly facts to contemplate; and on the ever running stream of time rushes, bearing this great harvest of tares to the great day of wrath and perdition of ungodly men. But we will take a brief view of things nearer home. Most strikingly has Cotton Mather, who died in Feb. 1527, remarked: that a little before the burning day, the nominal Church would "be like a dead, putrid carcase. A writer in the Christian Era stated some time since:—

"The men who lead in the Church, who are prominent in all the offices of Zion, seem to have entered into the service of the Devil with all their souls."

Another, remarking on the change that has come over Methodism during the last quarter of a century, states: "Home religion among the Methodists is no longer what it once was. Family praise is almost abandoned."

The Congregational Journal has said; "But now there are no awakenings—no conversions—not much apparent growth in grace in professors—and none come to my study to converse about the salvation of their souls. With the increase of business, and brightening prospects of commerce and manufactures, there is an increase of worldly-mindedness. Thus it is with all denominations." The above remarks were by Albert Barnes, the author of "Notes on the Gospels."

The Christian Palladium for May 15th 1844, remarks:—"In every direction we hear the dolorous sound, wafting upon every breeze of heaven, chilling as the blasts from the icebergs of the north, settling like an incubus on the breasts of the timid, and drinking up the energies of the weak, that lukewarmness, division, anarchy and desolation are distressing the borders of Zion."

Says Dr. Griffin:—"The world! the world! the world! This is the object which engrosses every care; this is the supreme deity that is adored. Buy and sell, and get gain—out with the thoughts of death—away with judgment and heaven—my farms, my merchandise, I will have them, though the earth trembles under my feet, and heaven weeps blood upon my head."

Charles Beecher, in his "Bible a sufficient creed," utters the following weighty testimony:—

"Oh, woful day! Oh, unhappy Church of Christ! Fast rushing round and round the fatal circle of absorbing ruin! Thou sayest, I am rich, and increased in goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art poor, and miserable, and blind, and naked!

Thus are the ministry of the evangelical Protestant denominations, not only formed all the way up, under a tremendous pressure of merely human fear, but they live, and move, and breathe, in a state of things radically corrupt, and appealing every hour to every baser element of their nature to hush up the truth, and bow the knee to the power of apostasy.

Dimly does every one now and then see that things are going wrong. With sighs does every true heart confess that rottenness is somewhere, but ah! it is hopeless of reform. We all pass on, and the tide rolls down to night."

I will close up the testimony on this point with the following from the Religious Telescope of Circleville, Ohio.

"Great Spiritual Dearth. It is a lamentable fact from which we cannot shut our eyes, that the Churches of this country are now suffering severely on account of the great dearth almost universally complained of. We have never witnessed such a general declension of religion as at the present. Truly the Church should awake and search into the cause of this affliction, as every one that loves Zion must view it. When we call to mind how few and far between, cases of true conversion are, and the almost unparalleled impertinence and hardness of sinners, we almost involuntarily exclaim, has God forgotten to be gracious? or is the door of mercy closed?

"Look again and behold the spirit of the world—how it prevails in the Church! Where is the pious man who has not been made to sigh on account of these abominations in the midst of us? Who is that man in the political crowd, whose voice is heard above the rest, and who is foremost in carrying torch lights, bellowing at the top of his voice? O, that is a Christian, perhaps a class-leader, or an exhorter.—Who is that lady dressed in the most ridiculous fashion, as if nature had deformed her? O, she is a follower and imitator of the humble Jesus. O shame! where is thy blush! This is no uncommon picture, I assure you. Would to God it was. My heart is pained within me as I write."

Truly there is distress and perplexity among nominal Christians on account of the few accessions to their different organizations, and the withdrawal of so many from them.

Many are the instances of perplexity caused by pride in erecting costly places of worship to attract the fashionable to their houses. When it becomes a somewhat common place concern, they leave; a heavy debt is contracted, and means must be resorted to in order to liquidate the demand. Church feasts, fairs, and festivals must be resorted to; in order to make these interesting to a promiscuous multitude, the lottery—the grab bag—a refined system of gambling—or in other words the Devil's sugar coated pills—and the deceptive post office, in which, if they have not learned before, the first rudiments of lying are there taught.

O how can a professed minister of Jesus come before God the next Sunday after such a religious frolic, and ask His blessing, until he has confessed such an abomination in the name of religion?—Truly would the Prophet cry out as he did to a backslidden Church in olden time, "Ah sinful nation, a people laden with iniquity, a seed of evil doers, children that are corrupters: they have forsaken the Lord, they have provoked the Holy One of Israel unto anger, they are gone away backward. To what purpose is the multitude of your sacrifices unto me? saith the Lord: I am full of the burnt offerings of rams, and the fat of fed beasts; and I delight not in the blood of bullocks, or of lambs, or of she goats. When ye come to appear before me, who hath required this at your hand, to tread my courts?—Bring no more vain oblations; incense is an abomination unto me; the new moons and Sabbaths, the calling of assemblies, I cannot away with; it is iniquity, even the solemn meeting. Your new moons and your appointed feasts my soul hateth; they are a trouble unto me; I am weary to bear them. And when ye spread forth your hands, I will hide mine eyes from you; yea, when ye make many prayers, I will not hear: your hands are full of blood.—Wash you, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil."

Most bitterly to be lamented is such a low condition of professed Christianity!! The christian sojourner is deeply afflicted with such mockery; he retires to weep in secret places in view of the abominations that are done in the land.

There is no necessity for resorting to such unholy means. There are now hundreds of thousands of dollars heaped together by miserly Christians, whose gold will eat as doth a canker. But as Jude declared there should be mockers in the last times, we see a mock ministry, a mock Gospel, a mock profession. Well, one thing is certain; if we may reason from Scripture, we are nearing a point when God's long-suffering in the present, as in the days of Noah and Lot, will cease to be a virtue.

The end—the end is near, and the professed Church is blind. God declared by the Prophet that He would bring distress upon men, and they should walk like blind men because they have sinned against the Lord.

Letter from Br. W. S. Campbell.

Moline, Ill., Nov. 26, 1855.

Dear Br. Merriam:—Calling upon my old fellow laborer, Br. W. Pratt, who resides in this place, to rest from the journeyings and labors of the Gospel in this distant and amplified field, how vast! As the great prairie—an ocean of land bounded in some instances only by the horizon—is a wide, unlimited waste, compared to a little, well cultivated patch, east, so this great valley is an illimitable moral conflict ground, waiting for the "breaking up" engine—rich in the soil, whose elements may well supply and sustain numerous Churches upon her still desolate bosom—view it beside the worn-out plain of Gospel cultivation in the New England States—and contrast the breadth—the interests—the effort needed—the thousands who have not yet heard—and who will longer argue the necessity of the over-preached churches among them preventing the herald of salvation from coming here.

I came to rest; but I find no rest. Labor shall be my rest. Have preached two Sundays here, and four evenings during the week. Found Br Moses Chandler, whose labors have been abundant and extensive in the cause of the Lord and in promoting the expectation of Christ's coming and kingdom. I received from him a hearty welcome to this place and this work. We have had a good hearing on the immediate coming of the Lord.—The Brn., some of whom I have known east, begin to take hold.

Br. Pratt, not having been able at first to obtain a tenement, and time being requisite to get his family settled, I have enjoyed an interesting visit with him; we have "pulled in the same harness" as heretofore—he has got out the Messenger in Br. Morgan's absence, and will soon leave for his contemplated "base-line of operations"—and I must for the present bid farewell to my long-tried friends—to this infant Church, beside the broad and majestic river of rivers—to scenery whose vastitude is its sublimity—whose grandeur inspires admiration and love of the wonder-working energy of its production—the wisdom of its design—inciting the harmonized and subdued affections to "wonder and praise." I leave; and offer

An Appeal

To those who are interested in spreading light, in sounding the alarm to a ruined world, in proclaiming the coming judgment, the passing away of the governments of earth, the end of the present world, the flinging out to human view the glorious halo of the divine rule of Jesus under the whole heaven! to such I call; to consider the condition of the cause of the Gospel of the kingdom in the Prairie States.

The growth of the Western States is proverbial. The rise of cities and towns is a mystery. We have distances here—we have communities scattered around—which we must visit—a paper to publish—ministers to support. We have cities in which to preach, and villages upon a vast plain, and what do we need? We need men to preach, men strong, men faithful to the work, men of virtue, endurance, fortitude. We must have men who can sacrifice, and persevere in the work. What will ever be done by those who have some limited, sectional interest to secure? Whose object is to aid, merely, an established ecclesiastical institution of the East? Are we to preach the Gospel? Must we have men who can declare the whole counsel of God to a perishing world? If then, the Lord has a field, and a work, and wants men to go at it, let us pray Him to send them out, and act in accordance with our petition.

Let the servants of Christ come, who feel that the West has people, people who will hear, will believe, will desire the whole word of God, will be saved. And let those come who feel that they have the word of God to communicate—the living oracles of truth to give, from the pure, gushing fountain of life.

Men must come who will not be scared, if they do not have a Church to back the promise of God, before they start from their pleasant homes in the East.

The Apostolic plan may have to be adopted with many. They will be compelled to work with their hands upon the land, if they can get it, or at a trade as Paul did—but all the while work for God. And will they come? None of your delicate, "fancy gentry" speakers, not your "kid-gloved, high-cravatted" smooth-toned, eastern parish man, to have his place and his notes, his people, pulpit and prayers, all in stereotype. Men of sterner stuff! If they come, they must take the rough of life, and look for glory hereafter.

Are there such men to come? Will you, Brn., help such to come? Some there are, who would come if they had only their expenses met. Some might need more. The friends East have done well—can they do still more? Is it not a light thing to stay at home, amid all the comforts of your New England life, and contribute something—something handsome—and continue to do so, while others will willingly leave eastern friends and home for the toils and privations of this great field—readily engage to bring men to the knowledge of God I will say nothing of any sacrifices that might be made, that, may be left to another monitor.

"Brethren pray for us:" pray from the heart! A most important work, in aiding us in preaching the word! I have often thought of that old Apostle, rushing into the thickest fight of the great truth-battle—falling back upon Christian sympathy, saying "Pray for us!" An Apostle—and his brethren—in the dubious hour of strife, praying, and heaven hearing—a great door and effectual opening, victory coming—faith gaining—Churches rising—Pray for us!

Will you subscribe for a paper, printed in the West? Help in that way! Take a number of copies, each of you who are able—send a donation—we want to give the light—give us a lift! Look at it!

Send men—contribute—pray—give us aid!

Yours truly, W. S. Campbell.

For The Crisis.

Letter from Br. J. W.

Dear Br. Merriam:—Some one asked several weeks ago, through the Crisis, if Abraham had ever received the land promised him, in Gen. 13: 14. "And the Lord said unto Abram, after that Lot was separated from him, lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art, northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward: For all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed forever."

Abraham never had any of this land. "And he gave him none inheritance in it, no, not so much as to set his foot on."—Acts 7: 5.

Abraham did not expect the promise to be fulfilled, until the resurrection, and in the new earth. Heb. 11: 8–17.

Did Abraham's seed ever have any of that land promised? No. Gal. 3: 16. "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, and to seeds, as of many; but as of one, and to thy seed, which is Christ."

Did Christ, even, have that land? Matt. 8: 20. "And Jesus said unto him, The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests: but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head."

The Israelites, the lineal descendants of Abraham, never had any of that land.—Lev. 25: 23. "The land shall not be sold forever: for the land is mine; and ye are strangers and sojourners with me."

How much land was promised to Abraham and to his seed? The whole world. Rom. 4: 13.

So that the promise is yet unfulfilled.—Yet God will fulfil His promise and oath. Amen.

Why are we interested in this? Gal. 3: 29. "And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise."

Bless the Lord: "The meek shall inherit the earth."

"The Kingdom and dominion and the greatness of the Kingdom, under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High."

In a few short weeks, at most, God will fulfil His promise. Children be humble, watchful, prayerful. Keep your lamps trimmed and burning—Jesus is soon coming. J. W.

For The Crisis.

Letter from Br. D. Newton.

Holden, Mass., Nov. 18th, '55.

Thank the Lord, Br. Merriam, for our blessed hope of soon seeing Jesus with all the blood-washed company, to sing hallelujah and praise to God and the Lamb for ever and ever. Rev. 22: 12. "And behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give to every man according as his work shall be." Rev. 11: 15. "And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven saying, the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign for ever and ever." Cor. 15: 51, 52. "Behold I shew you a mystery; we shall not all sleep but we shall all be changed. In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed." Now what Scripture have we to call the day of the Lord a thousand years long? and what Scripture have we for two judgments?

I understand by these texts and others, that the seventh trumpet is to awake the dead, but if there is a thousand years between the resurrection of the righteous and the wicked, I wish some Br. or Sr. would inform me what trumpet is to awake the wicked? I want to understand the truth and be delivered from error; for truth alone will stand. O may the Lord direct us all more and more concerning His coming kingdom. I believe we are almost there.

Brn. and Srs., hold on a little longer, the promise is sure, glory be to God.

Dana Newton.

For The Crisis.

Letter from Br. D. C. Hast.

Willimansett, Dec. 17th, 1855.

Dear Brn. and Srs.—As the wind is whistling around my humble dwelling, I thought I would take my pen and write a few lines to the poor pilgrims scattered abroad, to cheer their drooping hearts in these last moments of time.

As I look over the Crisis, I find a good deal of meat in due season. Christ says, Blessed are they who are found giving meat in due season; that is what the poor pilgrims want, in these perilous times.—Bless God, Brn. and Srs., we are on the right track, let us press onward, and if faithful, in a few days, or months, at most, we shall be where the wicked cease from troubling.

I praise God that I was ever permitted to leave this wicked world with all its pleasures, and turn and live for my Savior, so that I may have an abundant entrance into His everlasting Kingdom, where all the saints of God are. I have never felt like going back to the beggarly elements of this wicked world. I desire to be found when Christ comes, without spot and blameless, ready to enter into that everlasting Kingdom, to go no more out forever.

I have a dear mother sleeping in the dust, waiting for the last trump to awake her from her silent slumber. Brn. and Srs., it is comforting to us poor pilgrims, to know that in a little while we shall meet the little flock, and part no more.

We do not have any meetings here. I wish some good Br. would come and give us meat in due season. We are commanded to comfort one another with these words.

From your Br. waiting for that blessed hope.

Daniel C. Hart.

Letter from Sr. S. B. Titcomb.

Holyoke, Mass.

"Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another: and the Lord hearkened, and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name."

Dear Brn. and Sisters:—how solemn and yet how glorious the thought—that the great God of heaven listens to all we say. How it becomes us to strive to glorify Him in all we do or say. If we are the true children of God we shall love to speak of the glory of His Kingdom and talk of His power.

O what a glorious thought, that God's everlasting Kingdom is soon to be established under the whole heavens, and the saints of the Most High will possess it forever and ever.

I do bless God for the great light that shines in these last days.

Dear Brn. and Srs., are we doing all in our power for Him who hath done so much for us? My heart is made sad when I see those who profess to be looking for the Lord—loving the riches of the world—and forgetting the command to love their neighbor as themselves.

Sarah B. Titcomb.

An Old Saying Amended. "You are rather late this morning, William," said good Mr. Risewiththesun, to a laggard apprentice who came at a late hour. "Yes, sir; but 'better late than never,' is an old saying," replied William. "Better never late" said the master, "is an axiom of far more worth, though it may not be so old."

The Flesh and Spirit.

By ELD. F. H. BERICK.

(Concluded.)

"Be not deceived; God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting."

FAITH.

"But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace; long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith."

Faith is here reckoned as the fruit of the Spirit, and as such, is one of the most important principles brought to view in the New Testament. Faith is by theologians divided as follows:—"Divine faith," "Human faith," "Historical faith," "The faith of miracles," "A temporary faith," "Faith in respect to futurity," and "Faith in Christ." But these divisions are, to my mind, more theological than Scriptural. It seems to me that faith is one, but the objects on which faith rests, are various. "Faith is that assent which we give to a proposition advanced by another, the truth of which we do not immediately perceive, from our own reason and experience; or it is a judgment, an assent of the mind, the motive whereof is not any intrinsic evidence, but the authority or testimony of some other who reveals or relates." Now if faith consists in assenting to, or believing in testimony, the action of the mind by which that assent or belief is effected, is called faith: the nature of which is the same, whether it rests on divine or human testimony; consequently, we may look upon faith as being in kind, one; but in object, many.

The term faith in Gal. 1: 23, is used by the Apostle to designate the object of faith. He says, "But they had heard only, that he which persecuted us in times past, now preached the faith, (viz., the system of truth,) which once he destroyed."

Faith being one of the fruits of the Spirit, it must have reference to a belief of the Scriptures—a belief of all that God has revealed. We must not only believe what God hath said, but because He hath said it. It is easier for a person to believe what man says, than what the Lord says; to give credence to human rather than divine testimony. It is difficult for the human mind to bow in submission to the will of God. "The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked."—Man, in order to believe God's word, must see a consistency and importance in its requisitions; and in order for him to see, his eyes must be anointed with eye-salve, and the fallow ground of his herat broken up. How is this to be effected but by the Spirit of God? Said the Savior, "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me." How does He draw men? is it not by His Spirit and grace? The Spirit reproves "of sin, of righteousness, and of a judgment to come." The Spirit of God must make the heart impressible; otherwise, it would be like a piece of the nether millstone." Now that work of softening the heart, we say, is the work of the Spirit of God; hence faith, which is the result of such softening, is reckoned as a fruit of the Spirit.

Faith is spoken of in the Bible as being infinitely important. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." "Without faith, it is impossible to please God;" hence without it, a person cannot be a Christian. He may be moral, but morality is not Christianity. He may possess every virtue; but if he lack faith, the first — the basis principle, he cannot please God. "He that cometh to God must believe that He is;" i. e., that He exists. A man will not act for God, unless he believe in the existence of a God. Hence, the first thing is to believe in God; in His existence; His power; His willingness to save all that come unto Him through Jesus Christ. When this matter is once settled in the heart understandingly, genuinely, then the second step can be taken, which is to comply with all that His word requires. Faith is not genuine unless it be of a lively character. For "faith without works is dead, being alone." It must show signs of life the very moment it takes possession of the heart, otherwise it is not a fruit of the Spirit. If a man may have faith—genuine faith, without works, then there is no way by which we can distinguish a child of God; but on the other hand, if certain characteristic works are the evidences of faith, then wherever such evidences are found, there we are assured the principle dwells. This, if I am not mistaken, is agreeable to the teachings of Christ, who said, "By their fruits ye shall know them." Nor is there any danger of being mistaken, if we abide by the principle, and weigh matters in the scale of truth. If we judge persons by their weeping, or their words, or the number of their prayers, we must not think strange if we occasionally find ourselves mistaken. If we raise a standard ourselves, and endeavor to bring people to our requirements, we shall find ourselves in trouble quite often; but if we keep a little back, and let God speak, say not so much ourselves, and let the word of the Lord say a little more; not be so fast to judge people off to perdition, but mind our own business, and let the Lord take care of His own work, it will be better for us, and more to the glory of our heavenly Father. We need not fear but that every body will work out what is uppermost in their hearts. "Men, (said the Savior,) do not gather grapes of thorns, nor figs of thistles. A good tree bringeth forth good fruit; and a corrupt tree bringeth forth corrupt fruit. A good man out of the good treasure of his heart, bringeth forth that which is good; and an evil man out of the evil treasure of his heart, bringeth forth that which is evil. For out of the abundance of the heart, the mouth speaketh."

Faith then is a living principle, a principle that dwells in the hearts of all that love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity and in truth. It is simple; so much so, that all, both learned and unlearned, may understand its true nature.

While writing upon the subject, I am reminded of a remark made by an old Scottish lady to her pastor: the circumstance occurred in this State. The minister had been preaching on the subject of faith; and after meeting he was met by the aged sister, who calling him by name remarked as follows: said she, "You may preach upon faith until you are as gray as a rat, but I tell you, faith is taking God at His word." This is a truthful definition.

There are thousands, who, while they are willing to believe creeds, know nothing of a faith in God. They have been made to believe, that faith was something that could not possibly be comprehended. Men have darkened the subject, with words without knowledge. Not having understood it practically themselves, it has been impossible for them to make others understand; hence the darkness on the subject. Another reason that we may urge perhaps why people do not understand is, they have been made to believe that God does not mean what He says—what the Bible represents Him as saying. The Book to be sure says, "Whatsoever ye ask in faith believing, it shall be granted;" but then, it does not mean so. Now who is responsible for this unbelief and infidelity in the Church and world? Is it not traceable, in a great degree, to those who have professed to teach the people? That people have and do ask for many things and yet do not receive, is admitted; but this does not alter the truthfulness of Christ's declaration. Many persons "ask, and receive not;" because they ask amiss; and they ask amiss, because they ask to "consume it upon their lusts."

If a man wants his prayers answered, he must live in a justified state. "For if our heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things. But if our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence toward God. And whatsoever we ask, we receive of Him, because we keep His commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight."—Here then is the principle on which the Lord pledges himself to hear prayer, and on this alone. We say in the language of the man anciently who was healed; "God heareth not sinners." A man's heart must be pure; his motive must be pure; he must keep the commandments of the Lord, and then if he ask aright, God has obligated himself to hear his prayer.

Faith being a fruit of the Spirit, it is fair to presume that whatever that Spirit has revealed, will be believed by those who love the Lord. For an illustration: The Bible, we say, is the word of God; the work of the Spirit of God; "For holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." Now a genuine faith receives it; it is the object on which faith rests; and the very source from which the man learns what to do and how to act. Mark, it is not the question whether he understand all that the Bible contains, but is it the word of God? Being satisfied of its authenticity, he embraces it as the revelation of heaven; as a production of the Holy Spirit of God.

Having embraced it as comprising the will of God; his business is to learn what the nature of the principles are which it contains; and as the truth developes itself to his understanding, and shines upon his mind, and he conforms to its requirements, it becomes of a practical character; and consequently, is a practical faith.

Again: a genuine faith has no choice in relation to the portion of truth to be believed. It will not be influenced by the customs of the age, nor by the denominational, or sectarian prejudices, or prepossessions of bigots. The question is not what will this or that man say? but what does the Lord require? not whether my relatives believe this way or not, but is this in keeping with the Bible? Hence a person who possesses the Spirit of the Lord, is as ready to believe an unpopular truth as any other. Show me the truth, he cries, that I may believe. Such a person as this, when he comes in contact with those who differ from him, is not ashamed of his faith. He may not impose it upon others, or judge them to perdition because they do not believe as soon, or as much as he does; but then he will not be ashamed of what he does believe. His heart burns with love to God; he has a zeal according to knowledge; he is always ready to "give to every man that asketh" him a reason of the hope that is within him with "meekness and fear" — fear, not of man; but of, or toward God—a holy fear.

We say then, that one great reason why there is not more done by the Church for mankind, is because there is not enough of this vital principle in the body. Look to the history of the past, and see it exemplified in the case of Noah. Who "Being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house; by the which he condemned the world, and became heir of the righteousness which is by faith.' What a developement of this vital principle of faith! Living as he did, in an age of the world, when the thoughts of the heart of man were "only evil continually;" when the earth was "corrupt, and filled with violence; sin of the deepest dye was seen in every quarter defacing the works of God; and he, a man of God, yea more, the only one (Gen. 7: 1,) before God in that generation. Think of that, poor soul, who because you live in the 19th century,] in the year 1855, when the "love of many has waxed cold;" when evil men and seducers are waxing worse and worse, are groaning and repining; and almost giving up the ghost because of your troubles.—Think of this, you poor black-slider, who assign your backsliding to follies of others. You who say, I could not serve God because I was surrounded by sin and sinners. Think of this, ye professed ministers of Christ, who refuse to declare the whole truth because men will not believe.

Instances of faith are numerous, too numerous to mention at this time. We say with Paul, the "Time would fail me to tell of Gideon, and of Barak, and of Sampson, and of Jephthah, of David also, and Samuel, and of the prophets; who through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions, quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, out of weakness were made strong, waxed valiant in fight, turned to flight the armies of the aliens. Women received their dead raised to life again; and others were tortured, not accepting deliverance; that they might obtain a better resurrection; and others had trials of cruel mockings and scourgings, yea, moreover of bonds and imprisonment. They were stoned, they were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword; they wandered about in sheep skins and goat-skins; being destitute, afflicted, tormented; (Of whom the world was not worthy:) they wandered in deserts, and in mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth."

Is not the above catalogue sufficient to illustrate the workings of this vital principle? Do not our trials look meagre, when compared with those of the Church who have gone before? If those, who like Paul, after being smitten and stoned and persecuted from city to city, could adopt the language, and say in relation to their trials, This "light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory;" what shall we say to ours? If theirs were light, ours certainly are lighter than vanity. We must remember that a living faith lay at the bottom of all these trials. This was not only why they suffered, but the very cause of their suffering. A dead faith never causes persecution.—Devils believe and tremble, but we do not read that their belief was a cause of their suffering. A dead faith pleases the Devil and the world. But a faith which works by love, and purifies the heart, is always hated by the world, and those who have apostitized from the truth. "All that will live godly in Christ Jesus, shall suffer persecution." To suffer with Christ and for His sake, is the lot of all who love God.

We may remark in the next place, that the importance of faith may be seen in the nature and character of the work effected on the heart of a Christian. It purifies the heart. Acts 15: 9. Look at the man who, by nature, is without hope and without God in the world; a poor, swearing, miserable creature; lost to holiness, morality and God. The grace of God takes possession of his heart, eradicates sin and wickedness; and makes him a "new creature in Christ Jesus." It also justifies, Rom. 5: 1. Having had his heart cleansed from defilement, God justifies him from all the iniquity he has ever committed. How peaceful his mind! how serene his soul! Who that loves the Lord cannot adopt the language of the Poet, and in reference to the time when he was justified of the Lord, say,

"He took all the load
From my conscience away?"

Faith enables us to overcome the world. "For this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." We by faith overcome its temptations; and being dead to both censure and applause, we can easily "deny ourselves, take up the cross and follow Christ." Faith constitutes us children of God, Gal. 3: 26. It is by faith we walk, 2 Cor. 5. Faith is our shield to "quench all the fiery darts of the wicked" in the day of trial. A principle that will do all that we have enumerated, and a great deal more, must surely be a fruit of the Spirit. In fact we must attribute all that there is about us which is in any way commendable, to the grace and Spirit of God. And if faith has enabled men to do what the Scriptures represent, and we do not doubt it, how important for us to have that faith ———"That will not shrink,

Though pressed by many a foe;
That will not tremble on the brink
Of poverty or woe;

That will not murmur or complain
Beneath the chastening rod,
But in the hour of grief or pain,
Can lean upon its God!"

Without enumerating any more of the fruits of the Spirit, we shall draw this article to a close; being assured that he that "soweth to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." The promise is, "To them who by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory and honor and immortality, eternal life." We need have no misgiving in relation to this matter; as we sow we shall reap; as we live in this world, so we shall be found at the judgment of the great day. We cannot step aside, but He who numbers the very hairs of our head is sure to know it; all things are naked and open unto the eyes of Him with whom we have to do.—Let us then not be deceived, neither let us be "weary in well doing; for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not."

For The Crisis.

Letter from Br. W. E. Graham.

WINDHAM, Dec. 2d, 1855.

Br. Merriam:—Permit me to say through your paper to the saints of God scattered abroad through this waste, howling wilderness, that I am still in the faith and hope of the Gospel, and very thankful to my Heavenly Master that I have been able to earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered to the saints.

There had been no Advent preaching in this place where I now live, until I began to proclaim the coming of Jesus, the resurrection and the end of the world, near at hand. Very soon an anxious inquiry was made by what authority I preached such strange doctrines. Some made light of it; others were willing to look at the great Gospel truths, and believe the same.

I have had the pleasure of baptizing some into Christ—their living Head—and like the eunuch, they are on their way to the kingdom of God, rejoicing in hope of soon seeing Jesus in the clouds of heaven.

Br. Merriam, I am glad to see the Crisis filled with so much Gospel truth, and I humbly trust conducted in the spirit of Christ. Hope that it may meet with that continued support which it merits. May its columns be consecrated to the furtherance of the Gospel, and the glory of the Church of God—glow with and radiate the light of the Gospel of the ever blessed Redeemer—illuminating the minds of its readers who may not fully understand the hope of their calling, and the riches of God's grace concerning them. And may it find its way to the home of the weary pilgrim, and be a source of enjoyment to him in these trying hours. We hope it may fall under the eye of some thoughtless and unbelieving ones, and be the means of leading them to the fountain of salvation, that they may drink of the waters of everlasting life, and be prepared for the day of the Lord; so that when Jesus shall appear they shall appear with Him in glory. That God may render the Crisis such an instrumentality, is the prayer of your brother.

May you receive strength to sustain your arduous labors, and grace to endure to the end, that you may receive a righteous man's reward at the resurrection of the just, is the prayer of your Br. in Christ, looking for the Lord from heaven soon, to gather the slumbering dust, and change the living ones. So shall we be forever with the Lord. Amen.

WM. E. GRAHAM.

Selected For the Crisis.

By L. S.

An Exhortation.

"If you have already a "good hope through grace," consider if there is not some way in which you may promote more extensively, the glory of God and the good of mankind. Did you ever hear of one that, on his death bed, was sorry for having actively served the Lord?

The more the light of eternity breaks upon us, the more clearly we perceive the value of those opportunities of usefulness which are put into our hands. The nearer we approach the great tribunal, the more distinctly we hear the words of that sentence: "Cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." If, therefore, you are a luke-warm, inactive professor, mark well this imprecation:—"Curse ye Meroz, (said the Angel of the Lord,) curse ye bitterly the inhabitants thereof; because they came not to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty."

If you have hitherto lived unconcerned, oh reflect—the time is short—your days are fast spending and wasting. You are killing time. We expect a resurrection of the dead; but when will there be a resurrection of dead time? Ah, time slain in folly will return no more, except in its remembrance, as a swift witness against those who killed it! You cannot call back an hour or a moment. The sun once stood still upon Gibeon, but time did not stand still. The sun once returned ten degrees on the dial of Ahaz, but time proceeded on his journey with unremitted speed. Time is rapidly hasting onward, and rapidly bearing you to the everlasting state. Your all, your eternal all is at hazard. You can make one experiment, and if that fail, you are undone forever.—Therefore, by the dread authority of the great God—by the terrors of death and the great rising day—by the joys of life and the dread of death—I entreat, I charge, I adjure you, to awake out of your security, and improve the gracious moments of life. This world is dying all around you. Can you rest easy in such a world, while unprepared for eternity?—Awake to righteousness, before you hear the alarm of the last trumpet.

"Now the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, that you may abound in hope, through the power of the Holy Ghost." Farewell.

For The Crisis.

Letter from Br. T. Wilkins.

DORCHESTER, Dec. 16th, 1855.

Dear Br. Merriam:—I have often thought of sending a few lines to you expressive of the pleasure I feel and the profit I derive in reading the Crisis from week to week. I have been a subscriber from the commencement, and love the quiet, gentle spirit in which it is conducted. How much better it is for persona comfort, to cultivate a Christian temper, than to indulge a contentious spirit. Let all that name the name of Jesus be careful to exemplify the spirit of the Gospel.

I thank the Lord I was ever led to look at, and believe the truths of His Word, concerning His second coming. Although we have not yet realized our hopes, it has been the means of cutting us loose from the fashionable Churches and popular teachings of the day. I feel very thankful for the light that shines from the word of the Lord on the subject of the sleep of the saints and the destruction of the wicked. How glorious the resurrection appears with a Bible view of the sleep of the saints! and what a safeguard against modern spiritualism that delusion of the Devil—how clear it is that "the dead know not any thing." Even their sons may "come to honor and they know it not." Job. 14: 21.

Yours in the bonds of Christian love.

THOMAS WILKINS.

PEACE IN BELIEVING. "I am most thoroughly of opinion," says Dr. Chalmers, "and it is an opinion founded on experience, that on the system of 'Do this and live,' no peace, and even no true and worthy obedience, can ever be attained. It is 'Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved.' When this belief enters the heart, joy and confidence enter along with it. The righteousness which we try to work out for ourselves eludes our impotent grasp, and never can a soul arrive at true or permanent rest in pursuit of this object. The righteousness which, by faith, we put on, secures our acceptance with God and our interest in his promises, and gives us a part in those sanctifying influences, by which we are enabled to do, with aid from on high, what we never can do without it. We look to God in a new light; we see Him as a reconciled Father; that love to Him which terror scares away re-enters the heart, and with a new principle, and a new power, we become new creatures in Jesus Christ."

The World's Crisis.

LOWELL, DEC. 29, 1855.

For The Crisis.

'I will bring distress upon men; and they shall walk like blind men.' Bible.'

By S. S. B.

No. 4.

We will take up the subject as laid down in my last article, and proceed with the present state of the Church and world.

The Law of God declares "thou shalt not kill." The law of Cæsar declares you shall. An article now before me, taken some time since from a paper in the state of Maine, reads as follows:—

"A report of the committee of the East Maine Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church on peace, adopted at its late session at Rockland.

1st. Resolved, That 'if it be possible, as much as lieth in us,' it is our duty to 'live peacably with all men.'

2d. "Resolved, That whenever it becomes necessary for nations to take up arms in the defence or assumption of their just rights, their warfare should be conducted upon Christian principles, and with an eye single to the glory of God."

If political combination deems it necessary to take up arms in defence of their rights as belonging to this world, they, according to the law of nations, are justified in so doing: but how a follower, or imitator of the meek and lowly Jesus can do it with an eye single to the glory of God, it will take the spirit of a knowing one working prodigies to explain. When the President of the United States called for volunteers for the Mexican war, professed Christians and some with the title of Rev. led on their Brn. to carry out probably their warfare with an eye single to the glory of God. Read the Apostle James on this subject. "From whence come wars and fightings among you?—come they not hence, even of your lusts that war in your members? Ye lust and have not: ye kill, and desire to have, and cannot obtain: ye fight and war, yet ye have not, because ye ask not. Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss, that you may consume it upon your lusts. Ye adulterers and adulteresses, know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God."

At the commencement of hostilities, The Charter Oak, a paper in Hartford, Ct. published the following sarcastic item.

"A recruiting officer in Mass. advertizes for a drummer. A Chaplain for the army advertizes for bibles, and adds that as soon as the stars and stripes are unfurled over the walls of Monterey, they are ready to plant the banner of the cross beside them. Government in the mean time is ordering bombs and balls and powder for the same destination. So the Chaplin with his Bibles, and the drummer with his drum, and the soldier with his cannon, his powder, ball and bomb, will form a kind of Gospel corps, to help our modern Zion convert the stubborn Mexicans by the sword of truth—and iron.

"Are we not a Christian people? Heavens! since they are going the same way, why not take your Bibles for wadding, and send them quicker to the hearts of men? and make gun cotton of your banner of the cross, to drive the sermon on the Mount into their hardened bosoms with an ounce or two of lead to make it sink deep.

"Bibles and bombshells—guns and gospel! O shame, what a category! If this nation is not a pack of the greatest hypocrites in the world, it is because she wants a few years of the start that the old [illegible] for the very father of all lies [illegible] a graver knack at the trade!"

Such a truth, although presented in a caustic manner. We see the Protestant is as fierce for war when it comes to the point in hand, as Greek, Roman, or Turk. The mild, non-resistant spirit of the Man of Sorrows has no attribute that can take sides with or countenance such an amphibious spirit as the above; nor any affinity with the following, taken from the Edinburgh Witness.

"Meeting of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, May 21st, 1842.

"About 12 o'clock proceeded to the high Church in the following order of procession. Detachment of dragoons.—Magistrates of Canongate in their robes. Town Councillors of the city in their robes. The Magistrates and Treasurer of the city in their robes. Carriage with city Mace and Sword. The Right Honorable the Lord Provost in his robes.—Band of the 53d Regiment. Enniskillen Dragoons. A part of the city Police, in full dress. Six Trumpeters in state dress. Carriage and pair with Ushers. His Grace's State Carriage, drawn by four horses, with Pages and Mace-bearer. Yeomen of the Scottish Guard. Enniskillen Dragoons. His Grace the Lord High Commissioner, attended by His Pursebearer and chaplain, in the Royalcarriage drawn by six horses. Yeomen of the Scottish Guard. Party of the City Police. Enniskillen Dragoons. His Grace's private Carriage. Then followed the carriages of the nobility and gentry, with several carriages of private gentlemen, amounting in all to between forty and fifty. A detachment of dragoons lined the High Street, from whence as far as High School the road was kept by the 53d regiment.—The whole line of procession was crowded—in some parts to excess—far surpassing the attendance on any former occasion. The Rev. Dr. Gordon, Moderator of last General Assembly, preached a suitable discourse from Matt. 5: 13, 'Ye are the salt of the earth,' to a numerous and attentive audience. Divine service having been concluded, his Grace the Commissioner proceeded to His State Carriage, up the High-street, down Bank-street, the Mound, up South Hanover-street to St. Andrew's church, which has been given again for the accommodation of the Assembly. The Assembly being convened and constituted by a solemnizing prayer from Dr. Gordon, the clerk called over the roll of the members."

Such is the condition of the so called Protestant Churches, according to the testimony of their leading ministers and periodicals.

O how has the fine gold become dim! Take, for one moment, a retrospective view of the Church. We see her in the days of the Apostles espoused as a chaste virgin to Christ—rejecting the honors and titles of the world—brought out and separated—bearing the distinguishing marks of their Leader and Commander—"ye are not of this world," and in return responding, "I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me, by whom I am crucified to the world, and the world to me"—building on the declaration of the word: "All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: That the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works."

Leaving her now in the heaven-originated position of a city set on an hill—clothed with the panoply of Christ's righteousness, as the Apostle draws near the closing moments of his eventful life, we hear him delivering his apostolic warning in the following admonitory language. "Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood. For I know this, that after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock. Also of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them."

We look at the once happy family of loved disciples knit together in the bonds of the Gospel, all of one mind, bearing each other's burbens, weeping with those who were called to weep, sharing each other's mutual joys and sorrows, anxious to console, help, and support as duty required—now broken, scattered, fallen, a mere skeleton, dead, twice dead, plucked up by the roots. "Walk about Zion, examine her towers—Ichabod is graven thereon. Mark well her bulwarks—her glory is departed; and in place of one Church, one Faith, one inspired dicipline, we have, in the language of the man among the tombs, a legion; for they are many.

Thus we see the declaration of the martyred Apostle fully developed. Men have arisen speaking perverse things to draw away disciples after them, until we have all sorts of names substituted for their separate creeds and man-made organizations.

O how dark the picture! standing on the confines of the great day of judgment, as the present state of society rolls up before the eye of faith, look at it for a moment. The professed Christian Church—so stupidly ignorant of their own condition, and the proximity of the judgment, that they are feasting and reveling amid luxury and frivolity, as blind as Belshazzar on the eve of his impious banquet, as he was about to sip the last cup to his religion and his God.

I will close my remarks on this part of the subject under consideration with the following lines.

The serpent,s brood increase,
The powers of hell grow bold,
The conflict thickens,
Faith is low,
And love is growing cold.

(To be Continued.)

For The Crisis.

"For I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek." Rom. I: 16.

By J. W. Crabtree.

This passage expresses a confidence that the Apostle had in this Gospel, although he had been considered apostate by the Jews, and by the learned of the Gentiles had had his name cast out as evil, and had been despised, and persecuted, and driven from place to place, and been made as the filth of the world. 1st Cor. 4: 13. But for all this, he had such an unshaken confidence in it, and had experienced so much of its efficacy, that so far from being ashamed of this Gospel, he declared it to be the power of God unto salvation. Men should be, and are ashamed of their folly and wickedness, when they come to reflect upon their life and character. And well they might be; for a life spent in folly and wickedness, when reflected upon, always brings condemnation: and in their sleepless hours they many times exclaim, "Oh! that I were a better man!" But that man who lives a life of virtue, and spends the short time allotted him in seeking after those things that pertain to his everlasting good, and that please God and benefit his fellow men, such an one is not under necessity at any time to say, "I am ashamed of myself and of the Gospel." It is true that many who profess Christ are ashamed of him and His words before the world, (and the Savior says, "whosoever therefore shall be ashamed of me and of my word in this adulterous and sinful generation, of him also shall the Son of man be ashamed when he cometh in the glory of his Father with the holy Angels," Mark 8: 38.)—Even in these last moments of time, many who profess Christ, fear to confess [illegible] name before a lost and perishing world.—How often have we neglected to speak to those who do not profess to love the Savior, nor regard His cause! How often have we softened our voices before a perishing world! Let us remember faithful Daniel, who when he knew the writing was signed, was not moved for fear of man; but sent up his petition in faith to the God of heaven. He did not stop to see if the windows were all shut, and the door closed, Dan. 6: 10. Let us also remember the result of that prayer.

How often have we lowered our voices when we were standing in some public place, talking with a Br. about the Gospel and the coming kingdom! How often have we feared lest some passer-by would hear the good news fall from our lips!—God forgive us all! If we ever have such thoughts, let us remember the faithful Apostle, Rom. 1: 15.

It is one of Paul's favorite doctrines that those who believe on Christ should not be ashamed. Rom. 10: 11; 2 Cor. 7: 14; 2 Tim. 1: 8; 1 John 2: 28.—They are never ashamed of that Gospel that brings to light a power to forgive sin, to heal the sick, and raise the dead. Neither are they ashamed when it promises a coming Savior, a resurrection of the dead and an earth restored to Eden beauty. Is there the least reason why we should be ashamed of such a Gospel as this—such as the Apostle says is "the power of God unto salvation?" It is not a feeble and ineffectual instrumentality; but mighty to the pulling down of strong holds. 2 Cor. 10: 4, 5. It has shown its power applicable to every degree of sin. It has gone against the powers of darkness, and evinced its power to save sinners of every grade. Is it not then truly the power of God? James 23: 28, 29. The Apostle says it is the power of God unto salvation. Without doubt this salvation implies eternal life—a complete deliverance from sin and all its effects.

If a man should believe, and then fall away, he could not, in the correct sense of the word, be said to be saved; and hence the Apostle says, it is "the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth." It implies that believers are kept by this power "through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time." (See 1 Pet. 1: 5, compare Mark 16: 16, 17.) Here we have the condition, or terms, on which this salvation is given, and the Giver is no respecter of persons, but gives freely to all who confide in him, and comply with the terms here mentioned. It was not given to the Jew only; hence the Apostle Paul says, "to the Jew first, and also to the Greek, or Gentile." Not but that the Gospel was as well adapted to one as the other, but to the Jews had been committed the oracles of God. They had the Law—the Temple—and the service; but all this did not effect the purpose of the Gospel. The Gospel was intended to be first preached to them. This is the order according to which the Gospel was preached to the world; first to the Jew, then to the Gentile or Greek. (See Luke 24: 29; Acts 13: 46.) The Apostle says, "and also to the Greek:" that is, to all the world—to those who had not the law—the temple—the service, &c. He had preached the Gospel to the Jews, and they rejected it. He then says, "lo we turn to the Gentiles," and our call aud invitation is to all that will hear and come. (See Isa. 55: 1, 3: Rev. 22: 17.) Thank God, the call is not alone to him that is dressed in scarlet and fine linin, but to all that will come and live. The terms are easy—the price low; so that all the poor, the lame, the blind can come and gain that blessed Kingdom; even those who feel that they are the chief of sinners, all are invited to the supper of the Lamb.

Come, Brn., come Srs., let us arise and buckle on the whole armor. Come, sinner, come, backlider, let all say, as for me, I will arise and go to my Father's house, and to the supper of the Lamb. Listen while the Father calls. Come, sinner, while time lingers; come, while mercy is to be found; for soon the Master of the house will arise and shut to the door.—Then hope will have fled forever! Then the doom of all that obeyed not the Gospel will be sealed, and they must hear him say, "depart," &c. But bless and praise God who giveth us the victory; for He will say unto us, "come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world."

God help me and all to be among those that shall inherit the new earth; for then we shall be sick no more, and die no more. Thank the Lord for such a Gospel, that brings deliverance from all the effects of sin consequent upon the fall of man.

"Ashamed of Jesus! that dear Friend
On whom my hopes of heaven depend!
No! when I blush be this my shame,
That I no more revere his name!

Ashamed of Jesus! yes, I may,
When I've no guilt to wash away,
No tears to wipe, no good to crave,
No fears to quell, no soul to save!"

J. W. Crabtree.

Boston, Dec. 14, 1855.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Sr. A. Mussey.

Manchester, Dec. 18, 1855.

"And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband."

As the golden rays of the sun are shining in at my window, brilliantly illuminating my room, I cast my eye upward to see from whence proceeds such glorious light to warm the earth and cheer the heart of man; and while I gaze, the towering spires of the city rise before me, bringing to mind the holy city—the new Jerusalem. How great the contrast! A train of reflections has passed through my mind causing my heart to rejoice that this is not my rest—that an earth more bright and glorious is promised in his word. "And the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it; for the glory of God did lighten it, and the lamb is the light thereof. And there shall be no night there, and they need no candle, neither light of the sun, for the Lord God giveth them light, and they shall reign forever and ever."

Here we have need of the sun to enlighten the city by day—there we shall need it no more; here we have night, and need the light of the moon, and artificial light to illuminate our streets and dwellings—there will be no night there, and they need neither moon nor lamps, for the Lord shall be their everlasting light, and their God their glory; here the city is built of combustible materials, and our ears are often saluted with the alarm of fire—there the building of the wall is of jasper, and the city is of pure gold. The foundations of the wall of that city are garnished with all manner of precious stones, and no fire can devour it, no floods can overflow it, no winds can demolish it, thanks to our sovereign Lord—the God of the whole earth—let every thing that hath breath praise the Lord.

"The city so holy and clean,
No sorrow can breathe in the air,
No gloom of affliction or sin,
No shadow of evil is there."

Here we walk on streets of stone and clay—there we shall walk upon burnished gold, like unto clear glass; here is rich and costly jewelry, gold, silver and precious stones, but it cannot be compared to the resplendent jewelry of heaven. "And the kings of the earth shall bring their glory and honor into it," "and they shall hunger no more, neither shall the sun light on them or any heat;"—here we see the pale countenance, the emaciated frame, the weeping eye; there "the tabernacle of God shall be with men, and he will dwell among them, and they shall be his people; And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes," and "the inhabitant shall not say I am sick;"—here are wicked men and iniquity abounds—there all will be righteous; here at almost every turn we see the rum shop, the gambling saloon, the museum, the ball, the pic-nic, the levee, and shows of every kind to please the eye and ear, to plunge mankind into sin, and drown them in perdition. The eye will never be satisfied with seeing, nor the ear with hearing—why spend your money for that which is not bread, and for that which satisfieth not?—In the city of God, the capitol of the great King, will be no gratification of our personal appetites, but on every thing will be written "Holiness to to the Lord."

Here the people of God are divided into sects and parties, a multitude of shepherds crying, some one thing, and some another; one saying this is the way to Mount Zion, and another that is the way; Lo, here, and lo there; "there shall be one fold and one Shepherd. They follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth—perfect peace, perfect harmony, perfect union, perfect love, and perfect happiness—blessed be God. "Fly, lingering moments, fly, O, fly, I thirst, I pant, I long to try Angelic's Joys to prove."

Hark! what do I hear? It is the sound of music. I listen— louder and still louder it swells upon my ear—nearer and yet nearer it approaches I raise my window—the sounds vibrates through my whole soul. My eye glances along the street, and what do I behold? Ah! it is a funeral procession. Death is stalking abroad among us. A young man in the bloom of life has passed away, and is being buried with military honors. First in the train appears the band of musicians with their muffled drum and various instruments, playing their funeral dirge as they slowly move towards the cemetery. Never did the sound of music strike my ear with greater solemnity. Next in succession was the city Guard in martial array—then the gloomy hearse with its sable curtains conveying the deceased to the place of interment. Thus is a fellow-traveller borne to the silent prison house, there to sleep until the Archangel's trump shall wake the dead, and summon him to the tribunal of God. Last in the train was a company of bereaved friends weeping over his untimely death.

Surely, thought I, the grave is a gloomy abode; but there is a rainbow of hope suspended over the tomb. If a man die shall he live again?

Yes; that God who brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus Christ, will awake the sleeping millions under ground, at the last trump; "for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible and we shall be changed." Yea, the time is coming, and that speedily, when "all that are in their graves shall come forth; they that have done good at the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil at the resurrection of damnation;" may both the writer and the reader have part in the first resurrection, for on such the second death shall have no power.

Then among all the ills and evils of this life we are subject to death. Yes: sickness, pain and death is the common lot of all mankind; but in the world to come "there will be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying; neither shall there be any more pain, for the former things are passed away." "And he that sat upon the throne said, behold I make all things new. And he said unto me, Write; for these words are true and faithful." No sick or dying there—no sad hearts or weeping eyes—no graves or cemeteries there—for they that attain to that world are "like the Angels of God, neither shall they die any more."

For the Crisis.

Deliverence will come.

I am still holding on to the hope of the Gospel; because I can find nothing better. Because it is a "blessed hope."—Because it far exceeds not only all the good of this world, but even our own liveliest and highest anticipations of future blessedness and glory. Because in its consummation we shall realize the fulfilment of all the "great and precious promises" of God to His Church." Such is the language of one who has for many years been waiting—waiting [illegible] God from heaven—waiting f[illegible] of Him who said, "Surely I come quickly"—waiting "for the grace that is to be brought unto us at the revelation of Jesus Christ." Such a confession indicates that he who makes it is possessed of the right spirit. "I am still holding on." This is what the Apostle exhorts, 1 Cor. 15: 58. "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord." James 5: 7, 8. "Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold, the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain. Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts: for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh."

How different this from the spirit manifested by those who have cast away their confidence. As in the case of the disciples, when their Master uttered in their hearing some unpalatable truths, not being possessed of this faithful, patient spirit, many of them "went back, and walked no more with him," John 6: 65, so, these seem to haveforgotten the Scripture which saith, "many shall be purified, and made white, and tried." And also, that which forewarns the Church, "For ye have need of patience, that, after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise" Heb. 10: 36. They have cut the cable—faith, which was attached to the anchor—hope—and are, some drifting on the shifting waves of uncertain speculation; driven about with every wind of doctrine: and others, it is to be feared have drawn "back to perdition."

Dear Brn. and Srs., "Cast not away therefore your confidence, which hath great recompence of reward. * * * For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry. Now the just shall live by faith."

Is not the promise sure—"I will come again?" Are we not "kept by the power of God?" Are we not begotten to a hope of life, and "to an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away?" Do we not realize that this "is the last time? and that salvation is ready to be revealed?" And can we not therein "greatly rejoice, though now for a season (if need be) we are in heaviness through manifold temptations?" And O, ye tried and faithful souls, will not "the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, be found unto praise, and honor, and glory, at the appearing of Jesus Christ?"

O Thou "desire of nations"—thou heavenly Bridegroom, thou Great Deliverer, come!! Even so, come, Lord Jesus." Amen. R. W.

"Take heed and beware of covetousness."—Jesus.

The above is a solemn admonition of the Lord Jesus to beware of the soul-damning sin that should be very prominent in the last days. See what an association of kindred spirits the baptized miser is identified with. 2 Tim. 3: 1–8.

What is covetousness?

Answer: It is a strong and inordinate desire to possess, retain and hold with an avaricious heart and hand.

"Beware of covetousness, which is idolatry." Col. 3: 5.

"Nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God." 1 Cor. 6: 10.

"Nor covetous man, who is an idolator, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of God." Eph. 5: 5.

"An heart they have exercised with covetous practices, cursed children."—2 Pet. 11: 14.

Amid the perils of these last days, probably there is scarcely any single one that now, at this very crisis, so strikingly manifests itself, as covetousness.

While there is a nobleness of soul on the part of many all through our past history, until their patience and means are almost exhausted, there has been and now is manifested by the class referred to in 2 Pet. 2: 14, that meanness which is in strict conformity with the puny hearts of covetous, baptized misers.

Covetousness is condemned by the word of God on the part of the recipient as truly as on the part of the donor. All conversation should be without covetousness. Hear the Apostle speak in his Second Epistle to the Corinthians. 9: 5. (Turn to your Testaments and read it for yourselves.)

My heart has again and again been pained, sickened and disgusted to see the pinching meanness on the part of some that are able to aid in the matter that the Apostle refers to in the above Church order. They are so far in advance of the Gospel, that they don't believe in the advice of the Apostle to his brethren. See 1 Cor. 16: 2.

"Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store as God has prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come."

No, I don't believe in this making a show of what a man does—neither does God want you to. And, for fear of making a show, don't take out of your abundance of bank notes a bill on Saturday night, and get it so reduced to small coin, that when you want to find that five-cent piece—having left the rest at home—you have to fumble some time to find it. That is the practice of a covetous child. No danger of much show from such a penurious source.

How would such a money-worshipper feel in his mind if he had to go, with a woe on him, to benefit his fellow men, and after spending Saturday, Sunday and Monday to accomplish his mission, he received a few 3 and 5 cent pieces. How would he feel to return to his wife and children with such scanty means to pay his fare, clothe himself and family, pay rent, purchase provisions, fuel, &c. O, ye covetous sons and daughters! wedded to your god, Mammon! neither you nor your idol god will ever enter the kingdom. "No covetous man who is an idolator."

Covetousness is an abomination in the sight of God, either in preacher or people. Let the preacher be free from it, and then warn the people.

Let me say a word to the poor worn and weary pilgrim, toiling from place to place, bearing precious seed, with a burdened heart, for his fellow men. Remember that God appreciates your sacrifice.—He hears that groan that bursts involuntarily from thy heavy heart. He sees those warm tears that leap so freely from that grief-troubled fountain. Thy prayers are all in the golden vial full of odor.

Be not discouraged if thy pretended Br. neglects thy pressing wants. Don't envy his ability to aid, and his unwillingness to do it. He cannot, in the nature of things, retain his darling lucre but a very little longer. And, praise the Lord, you cannot suffer want much longer.—You shall possess durable riches.

To all that feel disposed to indulge in the above sin, let me say, do not deceive yourself. You are the only one in the deception. Your Brn. know your meanness. Your poor ministering Brn. and their families know and feel it. God looks on you in the light of the above Scriptures. Change your name or change your conduct at once—now, while you have an opportunity. The cause of God demands it. All that is lovely demands it. If you neglect, God will demand an account of you. O, be wise in time! The cause you know not; search it out. The only remedy for the God-dishonoring sin of covetousness is to present your body a living sacrifice, in sincerity and in reality, and lay your means on the altar with it, and keep the altar smoking. Come! cut your purse strings—open your hand, and that little soul that is almost dried up within your body will begin to expand, and you will feel like a new creature. Try it, and keep trying; do it, and keep doing it, and it will cure you of the last days' moral putrefaction—baptized, narrow-souled covetousness.

Letter from Br. S. S. Brewer.

LAWRENCE, Mass.

We are still striving in this place to hold up the Banner of the Cross to perishing mortals, amid the last glimmering rays of the Gospel dispensation. Since the opening of the new place of worship, the Church has been favored with the labors of Br. Hastings and Br. E. Burnham; and they truly came laden with the burden of the blessings of the Gospel of peace. The word preached, I can say for myself, did me much good. I have not slept it away, nor given it away; but have, by an application of the truths they presented to myself, received benefit from the same.

I am perfectly satisfied that we are now on the solemn confines of the judgment; and happy those whose sins are now forgiven. Happy—thrice happy they who keep their garments unspotted from self and the world. "Blessed is the man that walketh not in the council of the ungodly." Blessed is he that keepeth from murmuring and complaining.

O, I would to God I could find language to convey my feelings at this moment to the reader, and impress his or her mind with a sense of the perils that surround us. Fly! Fly! to Jesus, if you are not ready. Time will soon be at an end.—Ask your own heart on your knees, in secret before God, how the matters stand. And what you do, do it for eternity. For your soul's sake do not defer it; no, not for another day. A delay of one day may prove fatal. The Judge is at the door, the end of all things is at hand.

The world is in turmoil—the nations angry—the Church asleep—destruction upon destruction cried—the Harvest ripe—and, here and there, a poor pilgrim in secret crying over the wastes of Zion, and sighing for the abominations done in the land. O come, Lord Jesus. Even so, come, Amen and Amen. My soul cries Amen.

Thy Br. in the bonds of the Gospel of love, peace, purity and the Kingdom.

S. S. BREWER.

Take Care of your Thoughts.—Sin begins in the heart. If you can keep your thoughts pure, your life will be blameless. The indulgence of sinful thoughts and desires produces sinfulness. When lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin. The pleasurable contemplation of a sinful deed is usually followed by its commission.—Never allow yourself to pause and consider the pleasure or profit you might derive from this or that sin. Close your mind against the suggestion at once, as you would lock and bolt your doors against a robber. If Eve had not stood parleying with the devil, and admiring the beautiful fruit, the earth might have yet been a paradise. No one becomes a thief, fornicator or a murderer at once. The mind must be corrupted. The wicked suggestion must be indulged and revolved in the thoughts, until it loses its henious deformity, and the anticipated gain or pleasure comes to outweigh the evils of the transgression.

Your imagination is apt to paint forbidden pleasure in gay and dazzling colors. It is the serpent's charm. Gaze not upon the picture. Suffer not the intruder to get a lodgment. Meet the enemy at the threshhold and drive it from your heart. As a rule, the more familiar you become with sin the less hateful it appears, so that the more completely you preserve your mind from unholy and wicked thoughts, the better. Avoid the society where obscenity or blasphemy is heard. Cultivate the society of the virtuous. Read nothing that is unchaste or immoral. Make a covenant with your eyes. Familiarize not your mind with the lothsome disease of crime. Never harbor malicious or evenious thoughts. Direct your thoughts towards pure and holy subjects. Contemplate the character of the spotless and perfect Son of God. Keep your spirits untainted, your thoughts uncontaminated, so shall your life be virtuous. As a man thinketh, so he is. Take care of the thoughts, and the actions will take care of themselves.

EUROPEAN NEWS.

EXTRACTS FROM ENGLISH PAPERS RECEIVED BY THE ASIA.

India and China. The dispatches in advance of the Overland Mail contain news from India and China of the following dates: Calcutta, Oct. 22; Bombay, Nov. 2; and China, Oct. 15. The intelligence now received is more than usually interesting. The Santhal insurrection had revived again, and there appeared no hope of its suppression save through the instrumentality of martial law. The rebels had, however, been pretty roughly handled in the Bheerbhoom districts by the advanced detachments, especially by two from the 63d Native Infantry, under the command of Captains Pester and Phillips. On one occasion the insurgents mustered up courage to attack the latter officer's troops, and suffered severely for their temerity, for they consisted of 600 men, of whom one-half were killed or wounded, while the Sepoys did not lose a man. The troops also set fire to their villages in every direction, and did irreparable damage.

The news from China is important. The rebels had re-appeared in the south of Kwang-si, near Canton, when the imperial government sent a body of troops against them. The rebels, however, by a cunning stratagem, managed to disperse them, at the same time taking many prisoners, among whom were several of the principal officers. At Shanghae the country around was tranquil, and trade was flourishing. The Bittern and the Paoushun had had a severe encounter with the pirates of Chapoo, who possessed twenty-three heavily armed west coast junks, which the Bittern destroyed, and killed about 1200 men. She had 19 men wounded, and Mr. Turner, her master, was killed on board the Paoushen. At Canton the new teas had advanced 20 per cent. over the prices of previous seasons.

Rumored Evacuation of the Crimea. The Paris correspondent of the New York Post says:

"Marshall Pelissier demands permission to evacuate the Crimea forthwith. He declares that it is impossible to continue operations there, on account of the want of water for the horses of the army. The Russians have poisoned the wells, and he asks, what is the use of keeping an army of 160,000 men shut up in their intrenchments? It will be sufficient to leave garrisons at four or five points, but there is much fear here in regard to the moral effects of an evacuation of the Crimea. The matter is still undecided. It is probable, however, that the advice of Marshal Pelissier will be adopted. It is also said that England wishes next spring to undertake alone the maritime expedition against Cronstadt, reserving to herself, however, the privilege of demanding the aid of an army for disembarkation in case of necessity."

Energetic War Preparations in Russia. A corps of 10,000 men occupied Kaffa. 10,000 more have just arrived at Conla; and there are still about 20,000 Russians on the Circassian coast. The Berlin correspondent of the Times asserts that the Emperor Alexander is understood to have brought with him, from the South, anything but a lukewarm determination to prosecute the war. All correspondence from Russia that is spoken of at Berlin, as coming from well-informed sources, expresses astonishment at the rumors of pacific overtures current in the press. Everything points to energetic preparations for a renewal of the war in the Spring.—They talk of the Crimea being supplied by that time with a force of 300,000 men, and of Kertch being wrested from the Allies as soon as the Sea of Azoff is frozen over. Great efforts are making to increase the flotilla of row boats at Cronstadt and Sweaborg.

Council of War at St. Petersburgh. Intelligence from St. Petersburgh, dated the 4th inst., states that the grand council of war was to be held in the Russian capital, to which the General-in-Chief of the army in the Crimea, and Generals Crabbe, Pant, Amitin, Rudiger, and the Russian admirals were summoned to attend.

From Kertch. The Paris correspondent of the Morning Herald says: "Letters from the Sea of Azoff announce that the English at Kertch have obtained a brilliant success, with the troops of the Turkish contingent. They attacked a Russian division 4,000 strong, who were guarding a very large depot of forage.—The Russians were put to the rout and all the stacks destroyed by fire. The Turks only lost a few men in the affair. The loss of the enemy is said to have been very great.

Miscellaneous. The London papers speak of a ball of fire, which, on the evening of the 30th ult., appeared in mid air, and darted along in a strait line over about a third of the sphere, leaving behind it a comet-like trail. It then burst like a rocket, but without noise, falling in a shower of sparks, which, however, instantly disappeared.

"A very melancholy event has just taken place in the Black Sea. The Sardinia, a Sardinian war steamer, which was bringing to Constantinople a great number of sick from the ambulances of Balaklava, has foundered, and all on board perished."

Destitution in Italy. The correspondent of the Newark Advertiser, writing from Rome, Oct. 26, says:

"The vintage and harvest have failed again this year, and the government has therefore interdicted the exportation of oil, wine and grain. It has also established public bake-houses in the chief cities, to supply the poor at cost prices, and thus prevent extortion by the bakers. Public depots of oil have been established for the same purpose. As to wine, there is next to none in the country, the old stock having been nearly or quite consumed during the three years failure of the vine. The grape has been cut off again all over the peninsula, and the people are drinking various vile decoctions and compositions, for they will not take water with their chestnuts and beans, the sole food of thousands of families. Those who can afford polenta, a sort of pudding made of Indian meal, fare sumptuously. The almond-tasted kernels in the cones of the pine tree are also reckoned a great luxury in the mountains."

Selected for the Crisis.

Napoleon's Revenge—Humiliation of England.

(From the New Orleans Picayune.)

The Corsican vendetta is nearly accomplished, for the humiliation of England approached its consummation when Queen Victoria stood reverentially before the tomb of her country's mortal enemy in the wierd torchlight which flickered along the walls of the Invalides. She stood there as the dependent of his nephew—a suppliant to the mercy of the Napoleonic race, which knows no mercy for its foe—a Queen in name beside an Emperor in fact. Did the spirit of Sir Hudson Lowe hover around the scene? Did the laugh of the "old guard" which, according to the German legend, attends the nightly le petit corporal on the dreary shore of St. Helena, ring, scornfully through the sombre walls? No; it was but fancy, but the vengeance of the Napoleons was a reality.

The visit of Queen Victoria to Paris was little more than a conqueror's pageant, in which she acted the part of a distinguished captive, which could not be endured by her for a moment, if a single drop of Boadicea's blood remained in the veins of modern royalty. She was received with a magnificence which threw her efforts at display on the occasion of Napoleon's visit to London into the shade, and showed, as Sterne says, that "they do these things better in France;" but the cheers with which the Emperor was greeted in London were not bestowed upon the Queen in Paris, and she passed onward to St. Cloud, a spectacle to be gazed at, and not a guest to be honored.

Some years ago this same Victoria refused to permit a distinguished English actress to appear at the private theatricals in Windsor Palace, because her character was not without reproach, and yet she was compelled to accept the companionship during her ten days' sojourn in Paris of the Emperor's cousin—the notorious Mathilde, who is the Ninon de Enclos, the most brilliant and brazen courtesan of the present day. Mathilde is divorced from her husband on account of her innumerable infidelities, and is living in open adultery with a "fast" attache of the court. In the same carriage with her the prudish Victoria rode to the Grand Opera and beheld Albert—somewhat noted for his susceptibility—exposed to all her witchery and fascination, while beside her sat her superior and her master—the "madman of Boulogne," who was one of her special constables in 1848! Who says that truth is not stranger than fiction? Who hints, after this, that History is not a greater romance maker than Walter Scott or Alexander Dumas?

"I noticed," says a correspondent of the London Press, "that while the Emperor conversed with the Queen in the Royal box at the Opera, a sinister smile, half of triumph and half of sarcasm, parted his lips occasionally and flickered over his inscrutable countenance." What did that smile mean? It was a faint revelation of the proud thoughts which were swelling within his heart. It said, St. Helena is avenged.

The Parvenu is the master of the hereditary sovereign. The triumph of France is almost complete. The houseless wanderer, the madman of former years, the prisoner at Ham, the dependent of Mrs. Howard, the special constable of London, is the ruler of France to-day, and France is the ruler of England. Craft has done the work of the sword—but the final retribution—the grand denouement of the drama has not arrived yet—not yet. Oh, Destiny!—not yet.—It advances, however, darkly and steadily "as the shadow of the gnomon." Gaze on, poor gilded puppet of the pantomime on the stage, and dream not of the tragedy which awaits your country and yourself. So said that smile. Such was the meaning of the faint revelation of the secrets of that hitherto inscrutable countenance.

Victoria has returned to England amid the congratulations of the London press. But what has she learned during her visit? That France has a magnificent army on her own soil, while England has scarcely a single soldier; that the French people are aroused and invigorated by the Eastern war, while the English are crushed and depressed; that the birthright of genius is more potent than the birthright of blood; that she is a mere pawn, though wearing a royal crown, on the chessboard of European politics, in the hands of the most skillful and masterly player of his time. Such is the bitter lesson she must have learned, unless the imbecility of George the III. be inheritable with his crown.

Portents in Italy.

There are tokens of a coming change in the social, political and religious condition of Italy.

The people have grown weary of the despotism of kings, emperors and popes, and are only waiting for a favorable conjuncture of circumstances, to rend their chains, and to crush their tyrants. A silent, and for the most part secret, but very general movement is in progress towards this end. It is of a complex character, partly political and partly religious.

The democratic element, of which the exiled Mazzini and his coadjutors are the representatives, is widely diffused; and it is said, by those who have the means of being correctly informed, that the republicans are so affiliated and banded together, that an outbreak in any portion of Italy would be the signal for a general rising throughout its entire extent. The tyrants have taken the alarm. The Emperor of Austria is strengthening his armies in Venice and Lombardy. The King of Naples instructs his agents of police to keep the most careful watch over all suspected persons,—to note and report their habits, their conversation, their correspondence, the newspapers they read, and the persons with whom they are connected or have intercourse,—and if any one of them wears a singular dress, or a hat of unusual shape, or a long beard, or if he does or says any thing contrary to the will of the Government, he is to be seized and subjected to the bastinado. And the Pope, it need scarcely be added, is equally vigilant, and ready to repress the first manifestation of a longing for freedom. But the combined power of these despots, although it may have the effect to keep the popular movement out of sight, cannot arrest it. The land is a political volcano. The smouldered fires burn on, and at any moment may burst forth in violent eruption.

Combined with this yearning after civil enfranchisement in the popular Italian heart, is an unuttered, but profoundly earnest, protest against the spiritual corruptions of Popery; and, to some extent, a demand for a purer faith and worship. The Italian Doctor Achilli, in an interesting lecture recently delivered in this city, referred to his own experience as a type, in all that is essential, of the experience of many other Italians. He was formerly a priest and teacher of theology at Rome. Having occasion to defend, among other dogmas, that of transubstantiation, he sought scriptural authority for it, but failed to find it. Skepticism upon this point led to the examination of others, and he soon found himself a disbeliever of his own teachings. He could not entirely conceal the change that was passing within him, and was imprisoned in the Inquisition. This affliction he accepted at the hand of God, as a rebuke of his tardiness in avowing his new faith, and became more decided than before. Our readers are aware, that, after a second imprisonment in the Inquisition, he escaped and fled from Italy to England.

What was true in his case, he believed to be true in many other cases. Many copies of the scriptures had been distributed in Italy, and were carefully read. The Spirit of God was moving the hearts of the people to receive and obey the truth. They were examining the claims of the papal religion, and making the discovery that it was without scriptural foundation. Persecution, instead of discouraging these investigations, would cause them to be the more diligently prosecuted; and he had no doubt, that, in the very dungeons of the Inquisition, the work of God might thus be going forward. We understood him to say that a translation or revision of the Scriptures in Italian had been completed; that an edition of the New Testament designed for the supply of the Italian population in this country, had been printed in New York; and that measures were in train to provide a supply, either in New York or in Piedmont, for the demand in Italy itself. The Doctor's English was imperfect, and we may have failed to get the precise idea he designed to express.

We pretend to no skill in determining the times and seasons when the fulfilment of particular prophecies may be expected; but the facts here noted may, we think, be regarded as significant portents, to a Power which we are assured the Lord will consume with the spirit of his mouth, and destroy with the brightness of his coming.—[The American Baptist.

☞ We extract the following interesting remarks from the Cross and Crown:

Tracts—Their Circulation.

BY H. L. HASTINGS.

For sometime past it is known that I have been actively engaged in circulating tracts, pamphlets, and books, for the purpose of diffusing the truth of God, enlightening the minds of the ignorant, and so preparing men for the coming of the kingdom of God.

I have engaged in this work solely from a sense of duty and necessity, and I think God has blessed me in doing it. I have seen some good resulting from efforts made in this direction, and I hope to see more in that day which shall declare every man's work.

The necessity for this particular kind of work is this.—First: there is a great scarcity of living laborers to work in the harvest field. There are many preachers, but few laborers; and though the number engaged in the work is actually quite large, yet the state of the cause, the breadth of the field, and the hosts of calls that come like the Macedonian cry, all demand that we should make use of every efficient means for the diffusion of truth among the people. Besides, the wear and tear of health and constitution involved in extensive personal labor is tremendous, and many are breaking down beneath it. Again the expense of lengthy journeys is great and can not always be conveniently borne even by those who are willing to make sacrifices for the truth's sake, the number of whom are comparatively few.

~~In these circumstances~~ there ~~was~~ needed some cheap and effectual means ~~of supplying these necessities and of~~ scattering the truth farther than living preachers can possibly do. This is not to supersede preaching, but to precede, and to follow it, and to supply as far as possible its place when that cannot be had.

That agent which can most effectually perform this work is the Tract. Many who will not hear, will read, many who cannot hear, can read. The following remarks from an unknown writer will illustrate in some degree their use and importance.

"Tracts can go everywhere. Tracts know no fear. Tracts never tire. Tracts never die.—Tracts can be multiplied without end by the press. Tracts can travel at little expense.—They run up and down like the angels of God, blessing all, giving to all, and asking no gift in return. You can print tracts of all sizes, on all subjects, in all places, and at all hours. And they talk to one as well as to a multitude; and to a multitude as well as to one. They require no public room to tell their story in; they can tell it in the kitchen or the shop, the parlor or the closet—in the railway carriage, or in the omnibus, or the broad highway, or in the foot-path through the fields. They take no note of scoffs, or jeers, or taunts. No one can betray them into hasty or random expressions."

These are some of the advantages of tracts. Paul wrote tracts. Peter wrote tracts. The "general epistles" were tracts for general circulation. They produced them by slow and tedious manual labor. Now we have the press and can print more tracts in one room, in one day, than Paul ever saw or read in all his life. We should improve our greater advantages for the glory of God and the good of man.

Yesterday I received a letter from a student in B—— Theological Seminary, dated Oct. 22d, which will illustrate the working of the matter. He writes:

"Mr Hastings—Dear Sir—having read a book written by yourself, called "Pauline Theology," I can but agree with you in most if not all of your conclusions. You do not put forth mere unfounded assertions, but everything advanced is supported by Scripture. I am a searcher for truth, and having had my mind much perplexed by the doctrine of future punishment as held by our Evangelical denominations, I should like to read some other works you publish. I think these works are destined to prove formidable to Sceptics, Universalists, and others who scoff at the truth. There is a great call at the present day for active christian effort. We must trust in God."

With this was enclosed a list of tracts which he wished and which have been forwarded to him. May they scatter increasing light, and cause fruit to abound to the glory of our blessed Lord and Life-Giver Jesus Christ.

The following extract is from a letter written by a Clergyman of considerable literary reputation, whom I have never seen. He says:—

"Dear Sir, I have just read your remarkable tract "Pauline Theology" which was suggested to me by—Mrs —— —— of P——. Will you please send me 50 cents worth of the Pauline Theology, which I wish to distribute among my friends of the clergy, and 50 cents worth of others such as you choose.

"I think you cannot be refuted. And I think you have satisfactorily reconciled the jarring theories of ages upon this gloomy subject. I shall send one tract to my uncle—Dr. ——, President of —— College, to get his opinion, as he is a profounder Theologian than I can claim to be."

Spiritualism. Mr John F. Whitney, the editor of the New York Pathfinder, who represented himself as having for months past been "at the head of the most extensive establishment in existence for the investigation of the phenomena, publishing one of the leading journals devoted entirely to the cause, and employing about the premises no less than eight mediums, for public sittings, for investigation and instructions, and this establishment being carried on at an expense of over two hundred dollars a week," has published a strong article, in which he unsparingly denounces the miserable delusion of modern spiritualism. Still entertaining belief in the "undeniable evidences of the existence of disembodied spirits," these manifestations are regarded as inflicting incalculable evil wherever their influence is felt. Mr Whitney remarks:

"Now, after a long and constant watchfulness, seeing for months and years its progress and its practical working upon its devotees, its believers, and its mediums, we are compelled to speak our honest conviction, which is, that the manifestations coming through the acknowledged mediums, who are designated as Rapping, Tipping, Writing and Entranced Mediums, has a baneful influence upon its believers, and create discord and confusion; that the generality of these teachings inculcate false ideas, approve of selfish individual acts, and endorse theories and principles which, when carried out, debase and make man but a little better than the brute creation. These are among the fruits of modern spiritualism, and we do not hesitate to say, that we believe if these manifestations are continued to be received, and to be as little understood as they are, and have been, since they first made their appearance at Rochester, and mortals are to be deceived by their false, fascinating, and snake-like charming powers which go with them, the day will come when the world will require the appearance of another Savior to redeem the world by its departing from Christ's warning to his followers to beware of wolves in sheep's clothing, and to try what manner of spirits ye were of."

And again he says:

"Seeing, as we have, the gradual progress it makes with its believers, particularly its mediums, from lives of morality to that of sensuality and immorality, gradually and cautiously undermining the foundation of good principles, we look back with amazement to the radical changes which a few months will bring about in individuals, for its tendencies are to approve and endorse each individual act and character, however good or bad those acts may be."

The article from which these extracts are made, concludes as follows:

"We desire to send forth our warning voice, and if our humble position, as the head of a public journal, our known advocacy of Spiritualism, our experience, and the conspicuous part we have played among its believers, the honesty and fearlessness with which we have defended the subject, will weigh anything in our favor, we desire that our opinions may be received, and those who are moving passively down the rushing rapids to destruction, should pause, ere it be too late, and save themselves from the blasting influence which these manifestations are causing."

Such developments and confessions from a source so high in spiritual humbuggery, must tell disastrously upon the "establishments," "circles," and other machinery employed in carrying forward this destructive delusion.

BEAUTIFUL AND TRUE. In an article in a recent number of Frazer's Magazine, this brief but beautiful passage occurs.

"Education does not commence with the alphabet. It begins with a mother's look—with a father's smile of approbation or a sign of reproof—with a sister's gentle pressure of the hand, or a brother's noble act of forbearance—with handsful of flowers in green and daisy meadow—with bird's nests admired, but not touched—with creeping ants, and almost imperceivable emmets—with humming bees and glass beehives—with pleasant walks in shady lanes, and with thoughts directed in sweet and kindly tones, and words to mature to acts of benevolence, to deeds of virtue, and to the source of all good, to God himself.

Obituary.

Died in Clarksburg, Nov. 28th, Br. John Crapo, aged 45 years.

He was one of the official members of the Advent Church in this place: and though poor in this world's goods, was beloved and respected by all who knew him. In his death the Church suffers the loss of one of her brightest ornaments, and his afflicted family a kind husband, and an affectionate father; but, we trust, that when the archangel's trump shall wake the sleeping saints, we shall meet where parting scenes will be known no more.

For The Crisis.

I am weary.

I am weary now, and I fain would rest
Where the lowly of earth are not oppressed;
Where the vile tongue of slander has ceased to be heard,
And the tear-drop ne'er starts at a sad parting word.

I sought for repose from the sorrows of life,
In nature's fair bower with music rife,
But the warbling birds all seemed to say,
Every thing earthly is born to decay.

I selected from Flora her rarest and best,
I saw them expand in bright colors dress'd,
I watched them a season, but saw them decay,
And learned all things earthly are passing away.

My books cannot wither—to them I will look
For the comfort denied me in floweret and nook;
But my heart grew sick as day after day
I read all things earthly are born to decay.

I opened the Bible, its love-tones rose,
And bade me in Jesus to seek for repose;
To cast all my sorrow on Him who can save
From death's meagre grasp, and the cold, lonely grave.

I have long been a pilgrim, I'm striving to gain
Fair Zion's high, delectable plain;
My hope like an anchor in Jesus is cast,
Soon trials and wintry storms will be past.

But I'm weary now, and I long to rest
Where the children of God are no longer oppressed;
Where the flowers never wither, nor birds
seem to say,
Every thing earthly is born to decay.

For the Crisis.

Come, Lord Jesus.

My God, I groan, I sigh, oh come!
I've wandered long unblest;
Come, take thine exiled children home,
And give the weary rest.

Mercy, though wide as boundless space,
Hath not our frailties slain,
Oh, send thy Son to earth's drear face,
To purify and reign.

Jesus has died a cruel death
On Calvary's dreadful tree,
But rose triumphant from the grave,
And took death's icy key.

Dear Lord, since thou hast suffered thus,
And canst our trials see,
Come, loose the prison doors of death,
And set the captives free.

The Image of the Beast.

By Dr. A. Decker.

Having shown in a previous article, that France was the "two-horned beast," that ascended out of the bottomless pit at the end of 1260 days or years, it is that nation, therefore, that was to "make an image to the beast, which had the wound by the sword and did live."

This beast which had the wound by the sword was the leopard beast, as we have before shown, which symbolized the Greek or eastern Roman empire. Now, as that government thus symbolized, was an imperial government, so must the "image beast" government be of the same character; and which, also, must sustain the same relation to the Woman—the Church of Rome. Now let it be remembered, that it is not the Woman, that the two-horned beast was to make an image to; but to the beast which had the wound by the sword and did live. Let this be kept in mind, and there will be no difficulty in understanding this part of this (13th) ch. After the Greek government became too weak to protect the interests of the Church; she, through her agents, contracted an alliance with the French government, and the Pope placed the crown of the Cæsars upon the heads of its emperors; which descended through the line of the German emperors, and is worn, at this time, by the emperor of Austria—the seventh head of the leopard beast, and also the head that was wounded and healed.

This image beast of course must profess the doctrines of the Roman Church; or else, it would be an image to the Dragon, instead of the leopard beast; for this is the great distinguishing mark, since they are to worship the image, as they did the beast, to which the image was made, for "he caused them to receive the mark, or the name, or the number of his (the beast's) name." Let the readers turn and read ch. 15: 2, and 16: 2, and they will see the beast, which had the mark and the number, was the leopard beast, the one to which the image was made. That the image beast symbolized an imperial government, is sufficiently proved from the fact, that no other government could exercise the authority attributed to him in the prophecy: "That the image of the beast should both speak, and cause that as many as would not worship the image of the beast, should be killed."—No one, but an emperor, could exercise such unlimited power and authority. All must see from what we have already stated, that the Roman empire, as established by the French nation, under Napoleon Bonaparte, its first emperor, was the image of the beast, in every sense of the word.

The French nation overturned the house of Orleans and Bourbons in 1793. Napoleon Bonaparte, who was of no imperial family, received the command of the French arms in 1796; and it was by means of those military wonders, "which he had power to do," that he "deceived them that dwell on the earth"—(The French people,) and caused them to make an image to the beast, which had the wound by the sword, by placing upon his head the crown of the Cæsars; and thus establishing a new Roman empire. This scenery, according to the law of this book, is represented as being in heaven. Napoleon Bonaparte, at this time, was at the head of the military power in France, and virtually the ruler of the nation.—Hence by his great military miracles or prodigies, that so astonished the world, he is represented as causing fire to come down from heaven on the earth, in the sight of men; by which he deceived them, and caused them to make an image to the beast; or to establish a new Roman empire, under his imperial authority. The French nation, a little before, had overthrown their legitimate kings, and had declared their determination to have nothing but a republican form of government, but in this they were deceived, and caused to turn about, and establish one of the most powerful and despotic governments, that ever existed. Napoleon Bonaparte was crowned by the Pope of Rome, in 1804, (who had also crowned the emperors of the leopard beast) with the crown, not of the Bourbons and Orleans, but, as before remarked, with the crown of the Cæsars. Napoleon was so successful in deceiving the French people, that the whole nation voted to place the crown of the Cæsars upon his head. Thus did the beast give power to the image of the beast (leopard) that the image of the beast should both speak, and cause that as many as would not worship the image of the beast should be killed.

The following extract will show the fulfilment of this part of the prophecy.

"He, (Napoleon Bonaparte,) became the adopted child of the republic; and with a parricidal ingratitude, on the ruins—both of the throne and Tribune, he reared the throne of his despotism. A professed Catholic, he imprisoned the Pope: a pretended patriot, he impoverished the country; and in the name of Brutus, he grasped without remorse, and wore without shame, the DIADEM OF THE CÆSARS! Through this pantomime of policy, fortune played the clown to his caprices. At his touch crowns crumbled, beggars reigned, systems vanished, the wildest theories took the color of his whim, and all that was venerable, and all that was novel, changed places with the rapidity of a dream. Every apparent defeat assumed the appearance of victory—his flight from Egypt confirmed his destiny—ruin itself only elevated him to empire. But if his fortune was great, his genius was transcendent; decision flashed upon his councils; it was the same to decide and to perform. * * * Nature had no obstacles that he did not surmount, space no opposition that he did not spurn; and whether amid Alpine rocks, Arabian sands, or Polar snows, he seemed proof agains peril, and endowed with ubiquity! The whole continent trembled at beholding the audacity of his designs, and the miracle of their execution! Scepticism bowed to the prodigies of his performance; romance assumed the air of history; nor was there aught too incredible for belief, or too awful for expectation, when the world saw a subaltern of Corsica waving his imperial flag over her most ancient capitals. All the visions of antiquity became common places in his contemplation; kings were his people, nations were his outposts, and he disposed of courts, and crowns, and camps, and churches, and cabinets, as if they were titular digintaries of the chess-board! Amid all these changes, he stood as immutable as adamant." [Philips.

Thus history shows, in a very striking manner, the fulfilment of this prophecy; and even uses the very same terms in describing the great military MIRACLES of Napoleon Bonaparte. He erected eight prisons in France, and all that were at all suspected of treasonable designs, or did not worship, or acknowledge in him the authority of the Cæsars, were thrown into prison, and slain, or disposed of in any other way that he saw fit. And not only so, but he went forth with vast armies, and slew hundreds and thousands, until he humbled all Europe at his feet; and compelled them to submit to his decrees, and obey his will. Austria ar this time, legitimately won the Roman crown; hence the Napoleon empire could not become the beast, but it could become its image, by virtue of Napoleon's being crowned emperor by the Pope, with the Roman crown, also. And thus we have from the crowning of Napoleon, two lineages of Emperors, running parallel with each other, of the same mark, name, and number; since they both wear the Roman crown from the hand of the Pope. We have from this era, therefore, two Roman empires, the one represented by the beast, and the other by its image. The latter empire did not succeed to the dominion of the leopard beast, but was a new power, made by virtue of the power of the French nation. The fulfilment of this prophecy has been very much obscured, by supposing the leopard beast did not exist after the 1260 years. But this is sufficiently proved to be erroneous, from the fact that the leopard beast is in existence under the pouring out of the sixth vial. Hence, the two-horned beast in making an image to him, is represented as doing it in his sight. Austria, the seventh head of the leopard beast, began to be wounded in 1797, which work was completed in 1809. But his wound was healed in 1815, when Austria was again restored to its dominion, and has thus continued to the present time. For the fulfilment of vs. 16th and 17th, for brevity, we refer the reader to Banes' History of the French Revolution, vol. 2, pp. 151, 152, where the fulfilment of these verses is so plainly shown, that no one can fail to understand them. These verses also prove beyond contrcversy, that the empire established by the French nation under the imperial authority of Bonapart is the image of the beast; for no other power in modern Europe, ever had the same name, and number of the beast, or in other words, wore the Latin, or Roman Crown.

As the image of the beast, caused them to worship him (the image) and to receive the mark, name, or number of the beast (leopard,) it is sufficient proof that both have the same appellation, and the number of the name is given in the last verse, to prevent any danger of mistaking the image of the beast; and also, to show that they were both Latin or Roman kingdoms.

In regard to the number of the name, we think Dr. Adam Clark is entirely correct; and we therefore take the following from his commentary. "We have already observed that the beast is the Latin kingdom or empire; therefore if this observation be correct, the Greek word signifying The Latin kingdom must have this number. The most concise method of expressing this among the Greeks was as follows: E Latine Basileia, which is thus numbered.

No other kingdom on earth (says Dr. Clark) can be found to contain 666.—This is quite sufficient; and proves that from the time that the image beast was made, there were to be two Latin kingdoms, one the beast, and the other its image.—No nation but France and the Latin empire established by that nation, can fulfil the 13th ch. from the 11th verse. No "Holy alliance" of separate nations, each one wearing a separate crown, can be an image to the beast: and especially so, since the beast itself, to which the image was to be made, formed one of the alliance. The present Louis Napoleon wears the same Roman, or Latin crown of Bonaparte, and therefore belongs to the image of the beast. After the image of the beast was made, it became, as it were, the mouth of the "two horned beast"—the French nation. For it is through the emperors of the image beast, that the nation speaks; or, in other words, the image beast exercises all the power of the beast that made him. "For he (the two-horned beast) had power to give life unto the image of the beast, that the image of the beast should both speak," &c. This is all we think necessary to say on the fulfilment of this part of the prophecy.

☞ Love is the password of the Christian, and the entering signal of the brother's affections. Love is the mark of a Christian; and Christians should love one another.

For The Crisis.

Sunshine and Shadows.

Human existence is indeed a strange commingling of opposites and extremes. From infancy to age, the way is marked variously with sunbeams and clouds. All, while lingering in mortality, have each their share in those life changes which seem to be the common apportionment of humanity.

Nature has its night and day—its thunder-cloud and rainbow—its tempest and calm,—its wintry sleet and summer's fragrant dews. From season to season—from year to year—her changes afford a beautiful and striking type of the present pilgrimage of man. The natural day is the season for light and labor—the night for rest and repose—which to the laboring man is sweet.

Thus life is but a day from the cradle to the tomb—and yet the appointed interval for man's progress and continued efforts, in striving to attain unto the future hopes and glories—the duration of which attracts him, and indeed becomes an incentive to his diligence and exertion.—His day of labor is not all sunny—neither is it all beclouded; hopes and fears—joys and disappointments—blessings and deprivations—friendships and solitudes—beauty and decay—the true and the false—the living and the dying—make up the complement of mutability in his life's sojourn

Life is the season for constant activity, and engagedness in all those higher duties which man owes to Him who overruleth all. Life is man's day of hope and confidence and love—the boundary for usefulness—the grand trial state for an after appearance before the scrutinizing tribunal of the Holy One. But "the night cometh when no man can work." Death follows life—and the season which should be one of labor and effectiveness, is succeeded by repose—for the grave soon hushes to a dreamless slumber alike the laborer and the prodigal of a life-time.—But this is not an eternal repose—death's shade may not forever wrap its victims within its mantlings—for the Heavenly Victor who once trod its shadowy portals, holds the keys—and in the heavens awaits the time appointed when earth's vast charnel house shall by Him be unlocked, and its captives forever released.

Blessed be His name who wrought the great salvation! and who to the toils and bitterness of human life, shall cause to succeed that glorious day of ransom and delight.

Since the first great fatal error committed in the bowers of Eden, the elements in nature as well as in the heart of man, have been sadly disarranged and perverted. As the confusion and terror which attend the thunderings of the surcharged clouds above us in the summer's sky, is followed by serenity and delight as we view the rainbow spanning the eastern gloom—so the tempest-tossed and almost despairing soul, when battling with adverse influences—contending with evil within and without—suffering the chills of affliction, disappointment, and trial—may but seize by the eye of faith some of those exceeding great and precious promises of heavenly birth, and full of truth—the tempests terrify no more—the discordant elements are controlled, and hope maintains the peaceful conquest of the soul.

There may be darkness, but with Jesus near, our pathway is illumined with a blessed light—the sunshine of His presence chases away the obscuring shadows of doubt and fear; for we remember the words—"Lo I am with you always, even to the end of the world."

"There's a bow in the cloud when the Savior is near us,
More beautiful far, and eternally bright;
'Tis a bow uncreated, which ever will cheer us,
Through clouds and through sunshine, through darkness and light.
Like dews of the morning, or gentle spring
showers,
He waters the soul with His plentiful grace.
And sure the rapt spirit may welcome the hours,
When beauty celestial beams bright from His face."

The heart of the Christian should not indulge in feelings of despondency or distrustfulness. It ill becomes an heir of heaven to grieve and repine over untoward circumstances and misinterpreted providences, which may be his lot to suffer, or his error to commit.

When he considers the unspeakable joys in reversion for him if found faithful at last, with the promised rest from toil and weariness and strife, in a "better country"—the kingdom of his God—the tabernacle which shall abide forever—the re-unions—the circling hosts of angelic and redeemed ones—with the Lamb in their midst, whose praise is their endless theme—when faith and hope whisper of these, how can the heart be sad?

True there is enough in this vain world and in the ungodliness of man—to occasion grief and sadness for them—while at the same time the Christian's heart is a well-spring of peace and joy—when doing good to those around him—pointing out the way of faith and life—alloviating as much as in him lies the physical and moral sufferings of his race. Thus he retains the consciousness of effecting the good, rather than mourning and sighing, uselessly, over the evil.

His joy on beholding the dawning of that eternal morning, will be commensurate, with his faithfulness and prolonged endeavors for human good. He has not time to waste in undue grief or repining, and his heart forbids it; the radiant brightness of the future even now is encircling him, and he endures, "as seeing Him who is invisible." And when he shall have gained the blessed home and glory, which now inspires his heart with confidence and endurance, in the words of a sainted one: "then, shall he see life and sorrow to be less than one step or stride from a prison to a glory, and that his little inch of time—suffering is not worthy of his first night's welcome home to heaven."

Through all the thickening shadows which sin and consequent misery, gloomily cast about us here—the light of divine truth sheds its brilliant rays, piercing with its searching brightness the labyrinths of skepticism and infidelity. Falsity and error, love not companionship with truth and light; they may never become assimilated—they are as unlike as the meridian light and midnight gloom.

The enemies of virtue and religion—"whose way is a way of darkness," seem, at the present time, to have thrown open the flood gates of mysticism and corruption, and boldly with impious tread seek the destruction of those principles loved and cherished by the pure and upright, yet, "there is light sown for the righteous and gladness for the upright in heart." "Unto the upright there ariseth light in darkness." "And the path of the just is as the shining light, which shineth more and more unto the perfect day."

There are gathering clouds and stormy winds blending with the beauty of the day, and voyage, of life: And who would prove himself, and learn well the great lesson of life, must brave the tempest—as well as enjoy the calm; difficulties must be grappled with—discipline and chastisement experienced—the will subdued—the heart subjected—and although our heart's cry may often be, like Job's in his great distress; "He hath fenced up my way that I cannot pass and he hath set darkness in my paths, he hath put my brethren far from me, and mine acquaintance are verily estranged from me," &c., it is ours to learn to count all these, but "light afflictions," which are momentary as our life; and be able to exclaim with the believing Job, "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that He shall stand at the latter day upon the earth; and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God, whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold and not another."

The bright and the beautiful are around us—and also the passing-away—paths of love and sweet communings with dear ones, we may often tread, but their sweetness, alas! too often proves the nearness of the thorns and briers. Seasons of unmixed peace and heavenly light, we often bless our Father for—but still unsatisfied, it is their continuance we crave Associations, hallowed by many a tie of love and tenderness, entwine about our hearts; but in the shadows of this valley of death how many of the objects of those ties, we hide away. Mutability—passing away—is the inscription on the earth's wide tablature. Immortality dwells not here, as yet, but all nature awaits in sweet expectancy, with us, when it shall be brought at the revelation of Jesus Christ, when the face of Creation shall be changed, and immutability be the impress made by God.

The pious saint thirsts and pants for the living streams—the gushing fulness—at the fountain head, he longs to awake and be satisfied—for the earnests, which his soul posseses here, beget an ardent desire for those enjoyments and that glory of which the promise speaks.

The brilliance of the rising of the Sun of Righteousness, with healing in his wings, forever scatters the gloom of sin and death, bringing light and life to the vale of graves—where the blessed ones sleep, waking them from their slumbers, and crowning them with glory, honor and immortality, in those realms of light and life and love. Eternal, then shall be the joys, the unions, the associations of the soul. Shadows and tears will flee forever, before the effulgent beamings of the city of light, and the illuminating presence of the Lord God and the Lamb; when Zion shall be all glorious and her sons and daughters, "the redeemed of the Lord."

The prayers and sighs of this mort[al] strife, shall be exchanged for outgushing of praise and hallelujahs, when the son[g] of Moses and the Lamb, the triumphan[t] song of redemption, shall be sung by the glorified hosts, whom no man can number the swellings of which song shall be a[s] the voice of mighty thunderings. The[n] shall this present fitful scene of life b[e] past, the eternal day succeed the weary watches of the tedious night.

May that morning quickly come! Di[s]perse, O long expected One, the shadow[s] deepening around us, and haste to eart[h] again! that thy waiting people may re[-]joice in the celestial light of thy counten[-]ance, and in thine immediate presence know the fulness of perfect joy.

Mary.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Sr. Clara Gi-rlow.

Macon, Nov. 9th, 1855.

Dear Br. Merriam:—I have so many Advent friends who would be glad to hea[r] from me, that I have concluded to addres[s] them through the Crisis.

Dear Brn. and Srs.—It is with a sa[d] heart I seat myself to address you at thi[s] time. I arrived here on the 17th of Oc[t.] last, with my two children, found my hus[-]band well, and my children, who had al[-]ways been delicate, improved rapidly i[n] health.

After boarding for a few days, my hu[s]band commenced a school, and we ... to house keeping. He was immedi... attacked with the climate fever, and ha[s] been very ill ever since. We have con[-]sidered him often at the point of deat[h] and although he is somewhat better to-da[y] I doubt whether he has long to stay her[e] even if the Lord should not come soon.

One week ago to morrow, the 4th inst[.] my dear little Edward, (Neddy, as w[e] called him,) apparently in the bloom [of] health, was seized with congestion of t[he] brain, and died in 12 hours! Realiz[e] my dear friends, that it was a sad mome[nt] when I looked for the last time, on th[e] dearest, the sweetest treasure I ever po[s-]sessed on earth. And then to consig[n] him to a lonely grave in this land [of] strangers, far away from my kindred, a[nd] those of like precious faith. Oh, it was [a] solemn scene indeed! But it now seem[s] as if an Angel from the better lan[d] were sent to comfort and to strengthe[n] me. Yet, like a weary dove, I long [to] soar away and be at rest. I look forwa[rd] to the future inheritance of the saints—t[he] new earth blooming in immortal beau[ty] whose inhabitants shall never say "I a[m] sick"—where the dear objects of our lo[ve] will never more faint or die. And o[h] how I wish to be there! Tell me, oh t[ell] me, ye watchmen upon the walls of Zio[n] what of the night? Do the bright bea[ms] of the Sun of righteousness begin to gi[ld] the eastern horizon? Do you hear in t[he] distance, the rumbling of the char[iot] wheels of the King of kings, and Lord [of] lords? or have we been following cu[n]ningly devised fables? Write me, ... who can, and cheer my aching heart. And oh, remember me at the throne [of] grace, that I may be supported in this ho[ur] of trial, and fully prepared to meet ... Judge in heaven.

How I long to see you all once mo[re] before mortality is swallowed up of l[ife]. I would be glad to return to the nor[th] but I am in the hands of One who is [too] wise to err, to be disposed of as He thi[nks] best. I hope very soon to meet you, d[ear] friends of Lowell and New Bedford ... part no more forever. I find friends h[ere] who are both astonished and pleased wi[th] my faith. It is new to them. Will ... some of the watchmen come into t[his] great field?

Finally, Brn and Srs. farewell, for ... present. If you have any tracts on ... times, that would be of interest, ple[ase] forward them to me. Br H. V. Da... will you not write me? Srs. Thurs... Moulton, may I not hear from you? ... French of Lowell, and others there, wh... I trust feel to sympathize with me in ... afflictions, will not you also remember ... write me?

I sometimes think that we have co[me] into the hour of temptation that is to co[me] upon all the world to try them. Is it ... Then our sorrows will soon be ended, ... our tears be wiped away. Oh, I fee[l to] rejoice in the midst of grief for the p[ros]pect that is before us. By the grace [of] God I hope to sing with you the conqu[er]or's song—"Hallelujah, for the Lord G[od] Omnipotent reigneth!"

God bless you all is my prayer.

Clara Gierlow.
